

©

Flower Power

RECORD GUIDE

THE ULTIMATE GUIDE TO ALTERNATIVE MUSIC

"An indispensable encyclopedia of alternative albums, mini-albums, CDs and cassettes." —Billboard

EDITED BY IRA A. ROBBINS

THE TROUSER PRESS RECORD GUIDE

Fourth Edition

IRA A. ROBBINS, Editor

COLLIER BOOKS

Macmillan Publishing Company • New York

Maxwell Macmillan Canada • Toronto

Maxwell Macmillan International

New York • Oxford • Singapore • Sydney

Copyright © 1985, 1989 by Ira A. Robbins
Copyright © 1983 by Trans-Oceanic Trouser Press, Inc.

Copyright © 1991 by Ira A. Robbins

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without permission in writing from the Publisher.

Collier Books	Maxwell Macmillan Canada, Inc.
Macmillan Publishing Company	1200 Eglinton Avenue East
866 Third Avenue	Suite 200
New York, NY 10022	Don Mills, Ontario M3C 3N1

Macmillan Publishing Company is part of the Maxwell Communication Group of Companies.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data
The Trouser Press record guide/Ira A. Robbins, editor.—4th ed., 1st Collier Books ed.

p. cm.

Rev. ed. of: The New Trouser Press record guide. 3rd ed., Rev. ed.
c1989.

Includes bibliographical references.

ISBN 0-02-036361-3

1. Popular music—Discography. 2. Sound recordings—Reviews.

I. Robbins, Ira A. II. New Trouser Press record guide.

ML156.4.P6T76 1991

91-18564 CIP

016.78164'026'6—dc20

MN

Revised edition of The Trouser Press Guide to New Wave Records and The New Trouser Press Record Guide

Macmillan books are available at special discounts for bulk purchases for sales promotions, premiums, fund-raising, or educational use. For details, contact:

Special Sales Director
Macmillan Publishing Company
866 Third Avenue
New York, NY 10022

First Collier Books Edition 1991

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

Printed in the United States of America

CONTENTS

Preface	vii
Introduction	xi
Acknowledgments	xv
Bands	1
Sources	761

PREFACE

This book began as an almost-successful attempt to review all of the significant albums with a direct connection to new wave music—records that either directly led to or resulted from the 1976–’77 upheaval spearheaded by the Sex Pistols, Clash, Ramones, Television, Blondie, etc. (Although it came to be—and remains—a derisive designation for watered-down bands who affected hip style but were bland enough for American pop radio, “new wave” was originally a general and non-judgmental description of bands upsetting the norm in the late ’70s.)

The first edition, published by Scribners in 1983 as The Trouser Press Guide to New Wave Records, was a logical outgrowth of Trouser Press magazine. Armed with a well-established anti-mainstream editorial stance, it was easy to map out the book’s contents by simply including anything that was adventurous, rebellious, esoteric or simply uncommercial, in any idiom that could be considered rock-based. As a result, the original book was fairly parochial in scope, essentially reviewing every American or imported rock album we could get ahold of that had some connection—even plainly superficial or fraudulent—to a genre that was then fairly well circumscribed and not that densely populated.

The first book was fine for what it was, but the ceaseless development and cross-fertilization of styles (not to mention the proliferation of independent label releases) quickly rendered the focus unduly narrow and the central theme rather outdated. By the time of the second edition, times had changed. For one thing, Trouser Press had ceased publishing. For another, the music that had once been considered anti-commercial in this country was being given enormous exposure by MTV, where a colorful image and a good spiel was all it took to reach a new and growing “new music” audience.

The second edition (Scribners, 1985) broadened the essential concept and abandoned the by-then-outmoded notion of new wave for a more general slice of the musical hemisphere, one that extrapolated stylistically (and genealogically) from the groups covered in the original book. This book was bigger and more far-reaching, but it lacked an easily definable aesthetic basis. (It also lacked, for reasons of space, the compilation section that had appeared in the first edition. An effort to include it in the third edition was fruitless as well; by this point it’s almost a book in and of itself.) As no better title emerged, the book was published as The New Trouser Press Record Guide.

A revised version of the book was published in the United Kingdom in late 1987 as The New Music Record & Tape Guide (Omnibus). It updated and expanded on the 1985 edition, but deleted a lot of internationally obscure bands on American independent labels. In exchange, substantial coverage of reggae, rap, hardcore and African artists was added. That edition has never been distributed in the US and isn’t counted in the American numbering.

Building on all of the previous versions, the book’s third edition (Collier, February 1989) caught up with new releases through the spring of 1988 while increasing and extending the scope of bands and records covered. Most of what was excised for the British book was restored, and a smattering of indie metal records and new folk music was added, resulting in an eclectic 654-page volume. For the first time, information on compact discs was included.

By both plan and circumstances, this fourth edition (for statisticians, the final count is 1,600 entries covering 2,500 artists and about 9,500 records) wound up being very different from the others. There were several goals at the outset: to add entries on a number of really major artists of quality and influence, to improve or replace existing entries where needed, to deepen the coverage of obscure but significant bands and to cope with rap's format shift from 12-inch singles (which are outside the book's scope) to full-length albums. A major effort was made to rectify past shortcomings by covering relevant bands that had been overlooked, adding EPs to both discographies and text, reviewing records that had previously been listed but not covered and correcting errors both tiny and glaring. Although it meant accepting a varied set of critical sensibilities, a passel of new writers with expertise in specific areas were invited to provide more informed and artistically sympathetic coverage of genres—metal, industrial, goth, dance, hardcore—that had previously been given short aesthetic shrift. (While it would have been great to include substantial world music coverage, that idea proved to be logistically out of the question.) Writers were encouraged to be as detailed as possible, to suggest and cover bands they felt were essential and to follow family trees through solo projects and offshoots. Compounding such journalist profligacy with the unexpectedly huge number of records released over the past three years that had to be reviewed as updates, the net result was a text that initially came in around 800,000 words, roughly double the size of the last edition and about a hundred pages beyond what was publishable.

That meant a lot had to come out. This edition cuts a number of old entries that would have simply been repeated unchanged from the 1989 book. On the principle that new material is better than old, I took the opportunity to prune entries that now seem trivial or hopelessly irrelevant, and to excise those in which I felt the writing, coverage and/or discographies were substandard. It was a difficult decision-making process, but I don't think many of the deleted entries will be much missed, and then only by those who can refer to the previous edition.

The new entries on George Clinton, Faust, Bob Marley, Sky Saxon, Tom Waits, and Neil Young were overdue; for reasons beyond our control, planned coverage of Frank Zappa and John Zorn didn't happen. (As a pre-emptive reply to those who can't understand omissions of clearly deserving artists, the following would have been included had circumstances (meaning records, writers, knowledge and time) allowed: African Head Charge And Also the Trees, Band of Holy Joy, Cassandra Complex, Chrysanthemums, Death in June, Deep Freeze Mice, Drowning Pool, Etron Fou, Fourwaycross, Front Line Assembly, Lemon Kittens, Magma, Youssou N'Dour, Rhythm Pigs, Rose of Avalanche, Salt'n'Pepa, 7 Seconds, Peter Stampfel and the Bottlecaps, Subhumans, Tail Gators, Theatre of Hate, 3 Mustaphas 3. Oh well.)

Although opinion will undoubtedly be split on the subject, I think rap music fully fits the book's context and criteria. In this edition, I've attempted to cover as many noteworthy rap (but not other African-American pop styles, like new jack swing or house) artists as possible, omitting the blandest and least distinguished figures but including a couple of commercial titans whose work demands critical examination. Following the classic rebel template of an autonomous and self-willed form created by and for a young, alienated segment of society, the hip-hop explosion is one of pop music's most profound upheavals and very much a conceptual echo of the late '70s punk/new wave era. Despite a difference of social and cultural values, there are a lot of points at which the only essential difference between hip-hop and rock records is the beat.

While dance music has, in the past, fallen outside the stylistic framework of this book, there's no getting around its current dominance—so much more so now than during the disco era—of the pop life. In light of the Manchester rave scene, the rise of DJ-performers, industrial music and, of course, hip-hop, the '80s proved that rock'n'roll and dance music can't escape each other. Following the disco-sucks era when bitter rock fans felt disenfranchised by the commercial dominance of unpalatable records that denied the primacy of song and artist, musical innovators set about crafting hybrids that would make disco—in all its crass, simplistic, dance-oriented glory—enticing to a wider musical audience by appealing to familiar sensibilities. “New romantics” recycled glam-rock sensibilities and art-rock trappings; industrial noise purveyors harnessed punk's brutality to danceable rhythms; techno-pop got heavier and funkier and moved from rock clubs to dance clubs. Ultimately, it became obvious that too much criss-crossing of stylistic boundaries is going on to count bands in or out solely on the basis of a rhythm.

Partially as a result of that development, the book's longstanding (I can't bring myself to claim tradition at this early juncture) criteria—bands and artists who favor experimentation, radicalism, innovation and self-expression, those who embrace music as something beyond its potential financial or ego-massaging rewards—don't really apply to some of the bands here. Finding myself out on this stylistic limb, I tried to concoct some editorial guidelines as I went along, but wound up just winging it.

Looking over this edition, I think the heart of what the book now covers is eccentricity: from mild intellectual dabblings to bizarre religious statements to full-blown screeching insanity. If that means pop with a twist, rock with a different kind of roll, ear-splitting noise, amateurish home-brew dabblings or bizarre tape manipulations, it's all part of a shared belief that music need not be ordinary, and that—despite what the charts say—defiance of the established order is still a highly prized element to many music lovers. As long as The Trouser Press Record Guide can help support and encourage risk-taking and rule-breaking in a wide variety of styles, it will uphold the spirit that originally inspired its creation.

INTRODUCTION

The format is straightforward: entries are arranged purely alphabetically by the last name of individuals and the first word of group names, with no precedence given to acronyms, abbreviations, numerals, etc. Groups who have taken their collective name from an actual member (even a pseudonymous one) are alphabetized as if an individual; fabricated group names that don't refer to a person within the group are treated as band names. (For instance: Brinsley Schwarz is in "S" and Ed Hall is in "E.")

Articles are ignored and omitted from headings unless considered an actual and essential part of a name. Bands that get to keep their articles are alphabetized by them (A Flock of Seagulls, Thee Hypnotics, The Scene Is Now). English-language groups with non-English names (Das Damen, Die Kreuzen) are alphabetized by their articles; groups who use their own language (Die Haut, Les Thugs) aren't. One-letter surnames are ignored in favor of first names (Simon F is under S), and rappers are filed by first letter (including titular designations like MC, DJ or Queen) unless there's a clearly understood surname (Big Daddy Kane is under K) that suggests a more appropriate location.

Groups that have gone under more than one name (including solo efforts and side projects) are listed under all the recording names (and cross-referenced as such), but alphabetized under the most recent and/or significant. This edition does more ganging up of related families, with location being a compromise between chronological comprehension and best-known name. Every attempt has been made to make it easy and logical to find things quickly, but if an artist isn't listed where you where you expect, keep looking.

Each heading includes as-complete-as-possible album listings (US, UK or whatever else applies without being redundant; general geographical precedence is domestic, British and then everywhere else) through March 1991, with a smattering of listings of scheduled releases as late as June. Reviews run up through early-'91 releases (the end of '90 for imports), with the absolute cut-off being the end of April. Some records that were received too late—or not located at all—are merely listed in the headings without being discussed in the text. Discographies do not reflect current availability of records (i.e., deletions are not deleted) and indicate cassette releases only when other formats are not available.

In the interests of reference completeness, discographies occasionally include second-hand information gleaned from catalogue listings, reviews or advertising. Those records are, of course, not reviewed in this work, merely listed and mentioned in the text if there's reliable info regarding content (compilations, concerts, outtakes, etc.). However, release dates and exact titles of such records are sometimes impossible to determine or confirm. In cases of severe dubiousness, listings are omitted to avoid sending fans on wild-goose chases; in the absence of a firm release date, a "c." indication precedes the year to acknowledge the possibility of error. Every effort was made to resolve such questions, but in some cases we were unable to do so. Any corrections brought to our attention will be incorporated into the next edition.

Albums that have been released on compact disc are noted with a bullet (●) at the end of the heading line. However, the ● indication does not mean that a domestic (US) CD exists or that the CD was issued by the record's original album label, merely that the title has been issued somewhere by someone in the format. (Admittedly, coverage of Japanese CD releases is very sketchy, and there are undoubtedly records that have been issued on CD there and not acknowledged here.) Differences between US, UK, European and Pacific CD releases are covered when such information is available, but don't assume that the lack of such discussion means they're all the same. Every effort has been made to note differences between album, CD and cassette releases, although there are undoubtedly plenty that were overlooked.

CD-only releases are indicated as [CD] between title and label; for consistent scannability, a ● follows such listings as well. In cases where one CD incorporates another listed piece of vinyl, both are marked ● regardless of whether a compact disc was issued under that title: if it's on CD, it's on CD. (The exception to that rule is when a CD issued under a unique title includes several records; it would be too confusing if the individual records were also marked ●.)

The increasing unavailability of vinyl has complicated format matters considerably. While the new ϕ designation indicates that a record was released only on tape and CD, that doesn't quite nail down this hellishly confusing situation. As of 1991, most British and European record companies continue to issue vinyl on a lot of releases, and some American labels who don't still do limited vinyl runs for college radio. With the legal roadblocks to imports preventing a British band's vinyl from being distributed in America even if the group's American label has decided against a three-format release, it's fairly pointless to acknowledge foreign vinyl issue. As a result, records marked ϕ may indeed be available somewhere—but not, most likely, in your local record store—on vinyl. And with retail distribution making it nearly impossible to find vinyl releases even when they exist, such knowledge may be virtually useless to traditionalists.

Records that have been issued in the US will note only the US label. UK releases are given as (nr/Label). However, records issued in different countries under alternate titles or with substantially different contents may be listed twice. Records that have not been released in the US or the UK include a country of origin before the label name: (Fr. New Rose), (Aus. Au-go-go). One exception: Canadian releases sometimes take precedence over British, so a Canadian label may be indicated on a record that indeed has had a British release. Label names are given as accurately as possible, although several space-saving adaptations must be noted: IRS is listed without periods, Les Disques du Crépuscule is reduced to Crépuscule, and the words International and Communications are abbreviated.

In previous editions, the year given in headings was the earliest release date the album was originally issued, anywhere. An effort was made to note both American release dates and foreign releases in a prior year for records added to this edition, but it was generally impossible to go back and correct this for earlier releases. (This occasionally results in confusing anomalies. A record released in the UK in 1985 and in the US a year later will have the US company but the UK date. An effort has been made to treat lengthy gaps as reissues, but consistency in this regard is not guaranteed.)

Succeeding issues and reissues are noted by a second date (and new label information, for those records not reissued by the original label). CD releases of old records are not considered reissues and the ● CD notation does not indicate a year of such release. Reissues that don't improve on geographical precedence are excluded unless the reissue is far more likely to be found or there are notable differences from the original.

The “[tape]” notation signifies a cassette-only release. (Tapes listed without label information are home-brew self-releases that are/were commercially available to some degree but don't carry a company name.) The “EP” designation covers everything from a three-song 7-inch to a six-song mini-album, regardless of how a record is billed. There are a few exceptions. Albums with six or fewer long tracks that are clearly full-length LPs are considered as such; 7-inches with eight or ten tracks are, by the same logic, not albums.

Otherwise, anything with six or fewer tracks is an EP here; a 12-inch record or a CD with seven or more is an album. CD singles are ignored unless they contain four different songs (remixes excluded), but the converse is not necessarily true. A major effort was made to expand the book's EP coverage this time, and a lot more items were reviewed and/or listed, including many from the mid-'80s.

With one or two exceptions, promo-only releases, bootlegs and interview records are omitted. Although every effort has been made to precisely list record titles as they appear—with all weird spellings, made-up words and odd punctuation preserved—quotation marks around complete titles are generally removed in order to minimize confusion with the handful of singles that are listed. The final right to resolve inconsistencies (when the front cover, spine and label don't agree) rests with the judges.

Confusion of another sort may be unavoidable: In the spring of 1990, a Warner Bros.-related record company named Giant was launched and the company that had been called Giant up till then switched its name to Rockville; the discographies have not been retroactively corrected. Furthermore, England and America each has unaffiliated labels called Jungle and Link.

Because many entries have been updated or revised by people other than the original reviewers, there are multiple bylines. (Bylines appear as lower-case initials in brackets at the end of each entry. Refer to the list of contributors to decode names.) Cross-references at the bottom of entries (greatly expanded this time) provide direction to other related entries of interest that may not be obvious; the text of an entry may suggest other artists worth investigating.

Political note: Music critics often refer to "black music" and "white music" as if skin color determined the sound of music one is obliged to make. In the hopes of avoiding the patent racism inherent in such simpleminded generalizing, when those phrases are used here, they're in quotes to stress that a musical style, not a performer's race, is being addressed.

Comments, criticisms, corrections, quibbles, quarrels and kudos are gladly accepted. Please address all correspondence to:

The Trouser Press Record Guide
c/o Collier Books—21st floor
866 Third Avenue
New York NY 10022

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book could not have been created without the enthusiasm and efforts of many people. First and foremost, my thanks go to all the contributors (past and present), who did great work for lousy money, some coming through with fine work despite major life-type obstacles. Special mention goes to those who shouldered more than their part of the undertaking and those who did much more than just what was asked of them: Jem Aswad, Art Black, Doug Brod, Harold DeMuir, Greg Fasolino, Glenn Kenny, Jack Rabid, Andrea 'Enthal, Dave Sprague and Wif Stenger. The official Trouser Press cabal—Jim Green, Dave Schulpes and Scott Isler—and honorary member David Sheridan not only contributed reviews, but provided significant input to the direction of this edition.

Many people provided records and information, but Alan Fielding set new standards for being really fantastic and assisted in hundreds of ways for which he will never be adequately compensated. Ron Decker was amazingly helpful on a number of fronts, as were many other publicists and friends: Bill Ashton, Cary Baker, Ron Bally, Rich Bauer, Danny Beard, Beth Bellis, Debbie Bennet, Janet Billig, Mark Brennan, Joanne Brown, Sophia Chang, Irwin Chusid, Jason Cohen, Ron Coleman, Neil Cooper, Tom Cording, Crypt, Nick Cucci, Steve Daly, Joshua Davis, Nick DeBenedetto, Monica Dee, Fran DeFeo, Fred Dellar, Sue Drew, Bruce Duff, Alan Duffy, Andy Dunkley, Alvin Eng, Lisa Fancher, Delores Fernandez, Jill Fonaas, Pete Frame, Jack Frank, Kathy Gillis, Scott Givens, Kenn Goodman, Milhan Gorkey, Lisa Gotthiel, Huw Gower, Michelle Gutenstein, Robert Haber, Daniel Haesen, Michael Hafitz, Chryste Hall, Dave Hall, Lisa Hayes, Jerry Jaffe, Chris Kamatani, Steve Karas, Kenyatta, Peter Koepke, Kramer, Michael Krumper, Maggie Krupka, Arthur Levy, Miriam Linna, Marilyn Lipsius, Sharon Liveten, Jocelynn Loebi, Marty Maidenberg, Mary Marcus, Sue Marcus, Lisa Markowitz, J.D. Martignon, Steve Martin, Patrick Mathé, Jill McLean, Mary Melia, Joe Metcalfe, Brett Milano, Billy Miller, Tracey Miller, Luigia Minichiello, Andrea Mulrain, Pat Naylor, Bo Orloff, Deborah Orr, Dino Ostacinni, Dino Paredes, Sue Patel, Anne Patteson, Robert Perlman, Lisa Pollan, Jonathan Poneman, Albert Ragusa, Cindy Redmond, Bettina Richards, Raymond Rodriguez, Melani Rogers, Scott Schinder, Andy Schwartz, Camille Sciara, Kevin Sharp, Greg Shaw, John Silva, Gary Stewart, Carrie Ann Svingen, Tom Timony, Eileen Treacy, Leyla Turkan, Michel Vidal, Robert Vodicka, Ken Weinstein, Meryl Wheeler, Vicky Wheeler, Peter Wright, Howard Wuelfing, Lauren Zelisko.

I'd also like to acknowledge the publications that yielded the largest amounts of essential discographical and background information: Option, CMJ New Music Report, Bucketfull of Brains, Q, New Musical Express, Melody Maker, Billboard, Spin, Forced Exposure, Catalogue, Entertainment Weekly, The Music Master Record Catalogue, Schwann Spectrum, The Random House Dictionary, The Essential Guide to Rock Records, Christgau's Record Guide, Rolling Stone Record Guide, Pete Frame's Rock Family Trees, International Discography of the New Wave, New Rock Record, The Rolling Stone Encyclopedia of Rock & Roll, The New Rock 'n' Roll, The Illustrated Encyclopedia of Black Music, Harmony Illustrated Encyclopedia of Rock, Hachette Guide to Great Britain, Rock Movers & Shakers and The Guinness Book of British Hit Albums. And kudos to Maxum computers and Xywrite word processing, both of which smoothed the technical path this time.

Thanks to everyone—especially Robert Christgau and Greg Sandow—whose generous and encouraging comments originally helped me undertake another edition and who stayed in my thoughts throughout the project, providing a jolt of resolve when my own wavered. I'd also like to acknowledge the unique contributions of Wendy Harte on behalf of the last edition as well as this one.

Most of all, I'd like to express my deepest gratitude to my wife, Regina Joskow, for her role in this enterprise. I have no doubt that I could not (and most assuredly would not) have done it without her.

I dedicate this book to my extraordinary parents, Louis and Estelle Robbins, who provided me with all the tools anyone ever needed for a successful life, are always there when the going gets rough and have never asked me when I'm going to get a real job.

Ira A. Robbins
New York City
1 May 1991

THE TROUSER PRESS RECORD GUIDE

Fourth Edition

THE CONTRIBUTORS

ab Art Black ag Altricia Gethers aw Amy Wachtel bc Byron Coley bk Bud Kliment
cpl Charles P. Lamey
db Doug Brod
df David Fricke
dgs David Sheridan
ds Dave Schulps
dss David Sprague
'e Andrea 'Enthal
ep Elizabeth Phillip gef Greg Fasolino
gf Graham Flashner
gk Glenn Kenny hd Harold DeMuir
i Ira Robbins
icm Ian McCaleb
ja Jem Aswad
jg Jim Green
jl John Leland jr Jack Rabid jw John Walker jy Jon Young
kh Kathy Haight
kl Kate Lewis
ks Karen Schlosberg
kss Karen Schoemer mf Mark Fleischmann mg Marlene Goldman mp Michael Pietsch pn Paul Nash
rg Richard Gehr rj Regina Joskow rnp Robert Payes
rs Rich Shupe sg Steven Grant si Scott Isler
sk Steve Korté sl Scott Lewis
sm Scott McCaughey
tf Tony Fletcher
tr Terry Rompers
wk Wayne King
ws Wif Stenger

ABBREVIATIONS

●: available on compact disc
Φ: available only on CD and cassette
[CD]: CD-only release
[tape]: cassette-only release
EP: maxi-single, extended-play single, mini-album (up to six songs) nr: not released
c.: circa
DIY: do-it-yourself aka: also known as b/w: backed with
Comm.: Communications
Int'l: International
Aus.: Australian
Bel.: Belgian
Braz.: Brazilian
Can.: Canadian Dan.: Danish
Fin.: Finnish
Fr.: French
Ger.: German
Gr.: Greek
Hol.: Dutch
Ice.: Icelandic
It.: Italian
Jam.: Jamaican
Jap.: Japanese
Nor.: Norwegian
NZ: New Zealand
Port.: Portuguese
Sp.: Spanish
Sw.: Swiss
Swed.: Swedish
UK: British
US: American

A A A A A A A

ABC

The Lexicon of Love (Mercury) 1982 ●
Beauty Stab (Mercury) 1983 ●
How to Be a ... Zillionaire! (Mercury) 1985 ●
Alphabet City (Mercury) 1987 ●
King Without a Crown EP (nr/Neutron) 1988 ●
The Real Thing EP (nr/Neutron) 1989 ●
Up (Mercury) 1989 ●
Absolutely (Mercury) 1990 ◊

ABC revolves around the talented but often misguided Martin Fry, a onetime fanzine editor whose detailed notions of style include, on the Sheffield band's first album, setting his own Ferry/Bowiesque vocals in lustrous pop production (by Trevor Horn) laden with keyboards and strings, mostly to a supple techno-soul disco pulse. He succeeds admirably with "Poison Arrow" and "The Look of Love," but an entire album on the same subject—Fry is struck in the lexicon's lack-of/loss-of love section—can be a strain. Taken in toto, the melodies seem like retreads, and his attempts at urbane metaphoric wit seem forced.

Fry unexpectedly converted ABC into a rock band for Beauty Stab, making guitar the main instrument on most tracks. Fielding the same core lineup as latter-day Roxy Music (vocals, guitar, sax) and, coincidentally (?), joined by the session bassist and drummer (Alan Spenner and Andy Newmark) used on Flesh + Blood, ABC offers a remarkable impression (discounting Fry's usual howler lyrics) of that band on "That Was Then but This Is Now." ABC makes additional overtures towards Roxyish guitar rock but with little aptitude in direction, identity or grace. Quotes from Bo Diddley, the Move and other rock icons abound, but ABC has no idea how to use them.

By then reduced to a duo of Fry and guitarist/keyboardist Mark White, ABC took a long hiatus as Fry overcame a serious illness. In '85, the group re-emerged with Zillionaire!, a mixed bag of sarcasm ("So Hip It Hurts," "Vanity Kills," "How to Be a Millionaire") and sweetness ("Be Near Me") on which the prime new influence is American hip-hop. (Sugar Hill techno-rhythm vet Keith LeBlanc figures prominently on the record.)

ABC returned to its (adopted) roots on Alphabet City, a confident modern soul record which draws from various contemporary genres but basks from start to finish in a soothing wash of strings, horns and heavenly background vocals. Fry and White have clearly matured, dropping the arch lyrical humor and selfconscious stylistic adventures to concentrate on painstaking pop craft. The clear highlight is "When Smokey Sings," a touching and slyly tributary ode to William Robinson, but the remainder of the record is as easily enjoyable.

If Alphabet City put the band back on track, Up sent ABC down the home stretch, completing the stylistic oval interrupted by the second album. Returning to glibly clever techno-soul with a prominent and persistent beat, Fry and White use the peppy dance rhythms and irritating lyrics of their youth, lending the economical-sounding LP a similarity to Bowie's Philadelphia period. Fry's singing is deeper and more sincerely emotional than ever before; if the idealistically romantic songwriting wasn't so overdone, the likable Up would have been a dandy.

Absolutely samples the band's five albums for such ABC essentials as "Poison Arrow," "The Look of Love," "That Was Then but This Is Now," "Be Near Me" and "When Smokey Sings." The CD and tape contain bonus tracks. [jg/i]

A-BONES

See Zantees.

ABOVE THE LAW

Livin' Like Hustlers (Ruthless-Epic) 1990 ●

Over handsome tracks constructed from '70s soul classics as well as live guitar, bass and keyboards, these belligerent (in content, not delivery) self-styled LA hustlers—Cold 187um (Gregory Hutchinson), KM.G the Illustrator (Kevin Dulle), Go Mack (Arthur Goodman) and Total K-oss (Anthony Stewart)—rhyme about cold-blooded violence on the Mega Side and cold-hearted sex (and other topics) on the Rancing Side. Capable but not especially clever and certainly not entertaining, these would-be gangsters (joined, on "The Last Song," by label boss Eazy-E) are less intimidating than unpleasant. [I]

ABSOLUTE GREY

Green House (Earring) 1984 (Midnight) 1986
What Remains (Midnight) 1986
Painted Post EP (Midnight) 1987
A Journey Thru the Past (Greek Di-Di Music) 1988
Sand Down the Moon (Greek Di-Di Music) 1989

PAT THOMAS

Pat Thomas (Heyday) 1988

Long before self-reflective female singers became the hip trend on the alternative music scene, Beth Brown of Rochester, NY's Absolute Grey was writing and singing about loneliness and the challenge of independence. What Brown lacked in vocal range, she more than made up for in guts and naked emotion. Green House (six studio tracks and a pair of live numbers, including the Velvet Underground's "Beginning to See the Light") defines the quartet's garage-pop approach, with the bass carrying most of the melodies and the guitar adding color with Peter Buck-ish arpeggios.

The denser, darker What Remains, produced by Tim Lee of the Windbreakers, is a humble masterpiece in which Brown alternately deplores her weakness and musters up strength in the face of a failing relationship. The performances are crude, and drummer Pat Thomas sometimes sounds as though he's being piped in from a different state, but neither can suffocate the album's intrinsic dignity.

Abtuse Grey pared down to a two-piece for most of the Painted Post EP; the four songs on which Brown is accompanied only by Mitch Rasor on bass and acoustic guitar are frighteningly beautiful. Without the competition of a full rhythm section, her voice can be softer and more expressive, and her lyrics articulate pain without ever stooping to self-pity. "Closer Apart," "Sylvia" and "Abandon Waltz" are touching little adventures into her soul.

A Journey Thru the Past is a live album (recorded in Rochester in 1984) containing all previously unreleased material. In the summer of '87, all four original members reformed briefly and cut another studio record, Sand Down the Moon. Thomas' solo album finds the drummer instead singing and playing acoustic guitar.

[kss]

ACCELERATORS

Leave My Heart (Dolphin) 1983

The Accelerators (Profile) 1987 •

Drum Train (Profile) 1991 ◊

One of numerous Southeastern bands nurtured in the Mitch Easter/Don Dixon pop bosom (both play on the quartet's first album; Dixon produced the first and two cuts on the second), North Carolina's Accelerators blend crisp, energetic, well-mannered rock with a little 'billy and some mild R&B to give Leave My Heart just enough grit and soul to make it both memorable and charming. Guitarist/songwriter Gerald Duncan sings pleasantly enough (although more punk would be an asset); simplicity and restraint make Doug Welch's drumming noticeably good.

There's even better-sounding guitar rock on The Accelerators' dozen uneven cuts, including a remake of the tuneful "Two Girls in Love" from Leave My Heart. Duncan and Welch are the lineup's only holdovers; new lead guitarist Brad Rice adds excitement and extra vocals to strong, melodic numbers like "Radio," "(Why You) Hang Up on Me" and "Tears." Unfortunately, the band's lyrics are often simpleminded, and a fiery guitar solo can't salvage the ill-conceived funeral-speed cover of "Black Slacks." (A version of the Box Tops' "The Letter" flies at a brisk clip, but gets them nowhere.) The Accelerators has its fine qualities, but still leaves plenty of room for improvement. [i]

A CERTAIN RATIO

The Graveyard and the Ballroom [tape] (nr/Factory)
1979 + 1985

Do the Du EP (Factory) 1980

Blown Away EP (nr/Factory) 1980

To Each . . . (nr/Factory) 1981

Sextet (nr/Factory) 1981

I'd Like to See You Again (nr/Factory) 1982

The Old and the New (nr/Factory) 1985

Force (nr/Factory) 1986 •

A Certain Ratio—Live in America (nr/Dojo) 1986 •

Good Together (nr/A&M) 1989 •

MCR (nr/A&M) 1990 •

Manchester's A Certain Ratio (ACR) were one of the first new wave-era outfits to use horns and other instruments to play a soulful brand of contemporary music that defied prevalent trends but proved significantly influential. The Graveyard cassette compiles '79 material—half studio work produced by Martin Hannett, the rest live from their hometown's famed Electric Ballroom. With the subsequent Do the Du, an exciting and original post-punk dance record that does ACR proud (check out "Shack Up" for the decay of modern social values), it seemed certain that ACR would quickly join Public Image in the vanguard of the new rock left.

The studied tedium of To Each . . ., however, snuffed the early promise, as the band buried itself in dreary rhythms and astonishing self-indulgence. Leader Simon Topping—he of the free-form trumpet that stamped songs like "The Fox" (here on a subdued remake from Do the Du)—evidently believed that ACR would fill the gap left by Joy Division. Unfortunately, while Joy Division was at least lyrical in its despair, A Certain Ratio is merely monotonous. Blown Away is a three-song 12-inch of non-LP blasts of horns and rhythms.

ACR relocated their energy on Sextet, but didn't apply it in the right places. There's no real focus to the discoid beats and wailing female vocals (Martha Tilson); ACR don't seem especially motivated by the music they're making. I'd Like to See You Again suffers from Tilson's absence, and stumbles about, evincing self-consciousness and conservatism in place of the previously aggressive experimental attitude.

The Old and the New is a compilation, originally released with a bonus 45 of "Shack Up."

ACR maintained a low profile after the early '80s, but continued releasing new records. Force follows in the footsteps of I'd Like to See You Again, abandoning the raw, stark and chilling sound of the band's seminal work. Professionally executed but completely boring and devoid of spontaneity, there's little here that Chuck Mangione fans might not enjoy. Occasional sonic experimentation isn't enough; the backwards bass on "Bootsy" and the odd drones of "Take Me Down" can't mask the fact that the songs go nowhere.

Live in America is a basic greatest-hits run-through. The sound quality is amazingly good, but it has all the soul of a conservatory jazz ensemble playing from sheet music. The inclusion of cuts that sounded so great just half a decade earlier ("Shack Up," "Knife Slits Water") now only serves to degrade ACR's reputation even further. Yawn. [gf/dgs]

A CONFEDERACY OF DUNCES

Tsk Tsk Tsk [CD] (Old School) 1989 •

Although its name comes from a novel about New Orleans, this charming Queens, New York pop quartet takes its basic stylistic cues from Village Green-era Kinks. Singing in a plain but pleasant voice, John Dunbar (also the band's songwriter, guitarist and pianist) displays a keen traditional melodic sense (hindered a bit by imperfectly pitched background vocals) and a certain ear for social observation that makes him something of an American Glenn Tilbrook. From a rueful critique of modern music ("The Filler Years") to well-drawn portraits of common people ("Live for Lotto," "She Hates Good Looking Guys," "Ophelia"), Dunbar and the Dunces bring a realistic modern outlook to old-fashioned musical virtues. [i]

ACOUSTINAUTS

Inhale Einstein (PopLlama Products) 1987

It's easy to imagine this offbeat quartet, guitars in hand, striding through the streets of Seattle, regaling the local folks—even those backing away in confused fear—with their intelligently loopy songs. Keeping things light and folksy, the vocal foursome comes on like Devo's hick cousins on the semi-amusing Inhale Einstein, playing unaffected country ("Don't You Dare Walk Out of My Life (Without Me)," "Strangers When We Met") and singing about weird science ("Inhale Einstein"), weird religion ("Children of Macedonia") and weird romance ("Big Sexin'"). [i]

ACT

Too Late at 20 (Hannibal) 1981

Impeccable production gives singer/songwriter Nick Laird-Clowes' controlled passion and the band's tight, tasteful playing a clearly deserved chance to be heard. Elvis Costello and Tom Petty appear to be the Act's major influences (there are also nods to the Byrds and Springsteen) but the quartet rises above derivation, giving such songs as "Touch and Go" and "The Long Island Sound" indelible emotional authenticity. [mf] See also Dream Academy.

ADAM AND THE ANTS

Dirk Wears White Socks (nr/Do It) 1979 (Epic) 1983

Kings of the Wild Frontier (Epic) 1980 •

Prince Charming (Epic) 1981 •

Antmusic EP (nr/Do It) 1982

Peel Sessions (Strange Fruit-Dutch East India) 1991 ♪

ADAM ANT

Friend or Foe (Epic) 1982 •

Strip (Epic) 1983 •

Vive le Rock (Epic) 1985 •

Hits (nr/CBS) 1986 •

Manners & Physique (MCA) 1989 •

Antics in the Forbidden Zone (Epic) 1990 ♪

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Jubilee (nr/Polydor) 1978

When London art-school escapee Adam (Stuart Goddard) turned up with the Ants on the awful Jubilee movie soundtrack in 1978, you'd never have guessed he'd amount to anything. Like much of the record, his two cuts were just ordinary meatgrinder punk. Nor was the ambitious Dirk Wears White Socks all that encouraging, despite the considerable effort Adam obviously expended on it. The self-produced LP's word-heavy tunes examine sexual excess ("Cleopatra"), bizarre visions ("Day I Met God"), alienation ("Digital Tenderness") and the like. Adam's dour, uncomfortable vocals find compatible backing from his band, which sounds nearly dead and far too slow. It's as if the nastiest portion of Ziggy Stardust had come to life full-blown. After he'd made it big, Adam obtained the rights to the record, remixed and resequenced the tracks—replacing "Catholic Day" and "Day I Met God" (is there a theme to this revisionism?) with "Zerox" and "Kick" (from 45s) and exchanging the album's "Cartrouble (Parts 1 & 2)" for the far better second version—and had it reissued with a new cover.

Adam's old Ants subsequently left for the employ of Malcolm McLaren, transmuted (more or less) into Bow Wow Wow. In their place, Adam teamed up with guitarist Marco Pirroni (who proved to be a significant collaborator) and recruited drummer/producer Chris Hughes (aka Merrick). A re-recorded single of Dirk's "Cartrouble" b/w "Kick" got Adam's new era off the ground in the mid-'80. (The exploitatively titled Antmusic EP, issued by Do It to cash in on Adam's success elsewhere, contains remixes of the original two-part "Cartrouble," an outtake of "Kick" and two other early rarities.)

Adam found his groove with Kings of the Wild Frontier. Goodbye heaviness and failure, hello hit parade. Dressed in flamboyant pirate gear, Adam and his merry crew bounce through a delightful program of modern bubblegum with shrewd underpinnings. "Dog Eat Dog" uses the rampaging pseudo-tribal drums Adam picked up from McLaren. "Antmusic" shamelessly self-promotes (as do many of Adam's early lyrics) to the accompaniment of an irresistible stop-start melody. The sourness of Dirk survives on Kings, but there's so much exuberant fun on the surface that it's hard not to have a good time.

Prince Charming is a letdown. "Stand and Deliver" offers more percussive entertainment à la "Dog Eat Dog," and the title track is florid melodrama, but much of the LP seems forced, ill-tempered and silly. Adam hits bottom on "Ant Rap," an embarrassing stab at rap filled with braggadocio.

After dumping all the Ants except for Marco, Adam went solo and came up with the neat Friend or Foe, an LP with energy and plenty of variety. Adam and Marco try a little of everything—soul, rockabilly, his usual weightless pop—with convincingly joyful results. Highlights include "Goody Two Shoes" (a spirited, cheeky self-defense) and the Doors' "Hello, I Love You." This may be junk, but it's classy junk.

After that triumph, time for another bad album? No problem! Strip is pathetic. Adam's attempt to grow up was recorded at Abba's state-of-the-art studio in Stockholm and features two cuts produced by Phil Collins. (Richard Burgess, Adam and Marco co-produced the remainder.) By taking a less sensational approach, Adam exposes the weakness of his melodies and the inherent silliness of his sleazoid attitudes. Best suited for emotionally stunted Playboy readers.

Adam pulled in his horns and, with the production suss of Tony Visconti, made a big-league pop album even a mother could endure. Vive le Rock's spirited title track is a perfect send-up of ELO's Dave Edmunds phase; "Rip Down" likewise recalls Marc Bolan. Other songs ("Razor Keen," "Miss Thing") proffer Bolanesque lyrics but suffer from characterless backing. "Apollo 9," a wonderfully gimmicky single (also included in an a cappella version), proves that the old boy's still got it, whatever it may be. "Yabba yabba ding ding," indeed!

Monsieur Ant spent a few years concentrating his energies on an acting career. His best role was in 1987's stylish Slamdance, but he also appeared in Trust Me (1989) and Nomads (1986) as well as on television and in the theater. In the meantime, his British label issued Hits, a compilation of his biggest singles, from "Kings of the Wild Frontier" through "Vive le Rock."

In 1990, Adam resurfaced in Los Angeles with the confident and entertaining Manners & Physique, diving into electronic dance music without drowning in synthesized rubbish. Marco contributed to the songwriting (as did ex-Dexys leader Kevin Rowland, surprisingly enough) and plays guitar; producer/co-writer André Cymone did everything else but sing. Walloping techno beats and monotonous funk-rock grooves occasionally dislocate the album's pop spine, but Adam's melodic vocals and ridiculous lyrics remain a reassuring constant.

Drawing five tracks from Kings of the Wild Frontier and selecting notable tracks from each of Adam's group and solo albums prior to Manners & Physique (plus "Beat My Guest," from the B-side of "Stand and Deliver"), Antics in the Forbidden Zone compiles 21 tunes with few serious lapses in taste. (Four songs from the American Dirk is, however, at least two too many.)

Historically interesting if not exactly entertaining, the ten-song Peel Sessions documents the Dirk-era band (which included future Monochrome Set bassist Andy Warren) in January and July of 1978 and March 1979, doing "Animals and Men" and "Never Trust a Man (With Egg on His Face)" from the LP, along with "Zerox," "You're So Physical" (later a B-side) and otherwise unwaxed material. [jy/i/kl]

See also Bow Wow Wow, Monochrome Set, Wide Boy Awake, Wolfgang Press.

ADAMSKI

Liveandirect (MCA) 1989 •

Doctor Adamski's Musical Pharmacy (MCA) 1990 ◊

At a time when it seemed Britain's "rave" culture of vast warehouse and outdoor acid house parties might cultivate a generation oblivious to the concept of live performance, the then-teenage Adamski hauled his synthesizers up onstage alongside the star DJs and reintroduced the notion. This novel approach made him an overnight star, the catchy debut single "N-R-G" immediately became an anthem and his debut album, recorded live at various raves and full of short, sharp snippets of interchangeable acid melodies and techno beats, serves as a valuable souvenir of an important flashpoint in British musical history. While it may not improve with age, Liveandirect will hold up better than the efforts of such Adamski imitators as Guru Josh.

Adamski's good fortunes continued when a young vocalist called Seal added a melancholic plea for racial harmony to an otherwise unspectacular instrumental, and the resulting "Killer" took up residence at the top of the UK singles charts. Adamski ran off to Los Angeles to record the rest of Doctor Adamski's Musical Pharmacy, and it's been downhill from there. "Killer" and the occasional serviceable instrumental fail to redeem his efforts as a vocalist, particularly on the disastrous cover versions of "All Shook Up" (reworked as "Space Jungle") and "Soul Kitchen." [tf]

OLETA ADAMS

See Tears for Fears.

BARRY ADAMSON

The Man with the Golden Arm EP (nr/Mute) 1988 •

Moss Side Story (Mute-Restless) 1989 •

The Taming of the Shrewd EP (nr/Mute) 1989 •

Delusion (Mute) 1991 ◊

Best known for his tenures in Magazine and the Bad Seeds, bassist Adamson proves himself an adept composer and arranger on his own records, which are more orchestral works than conventional solo discs. Beatniky jazz, surf-rock and industrial sturm und drang are just a few of the manifold genres he enters to produce rich aural tableaux.

"Directed and produced by Barry Adamson," the 54-minute Moss Side Story is an exquisite soundtrack to a nonexistent film noir. Sampled newscasts, period sound effects and a great, throbbing version of Elmer Bernstein's "The Man with the Golden Arm" (pre-viewed on a four-song 1988 EP) imbue the album with a strong aura of '60s mod London. A stellar cast of performers (including the Fall's Marcia Schofield, possessed diva Diamanda Galas and assorted Bad Seeds) contribute to this odd and inventive project, which surely has no correlative in most "alternative" record collections. (Perhaps as a result, Adamson got the nod to score a real film, the thriller Delusion, in 1991.)

Limited to EP length, the four fascinating new pieces on Taming of the Shrewd are nowhere near as cohesive or satisfying as the LP. With twangy guitar and thick polyrhythms dominating one side and full-bodied bebop on the other, Adamson teases with stylistic complexity that deserves to be fleshed out in a full-length effort. [db]

KING SUNNY ADÉ AND HIS AFRICAN BEATS

Juju Music (Mango) 1982 •

Synchro System (Mango) 1983 •

Aura (Island) 1984 •

The Return of the Juju King (Mercury) 1988 •

Live Live Juju (Rykodisc) 1988 •

Following a decade spent establishing himself as one of Africa's most prolific and successful pop artists, Nigeria's King Sunny Adé (Sunday Adeniyi) came to prominence in Europe and the US in 1982. Almost unanimously embraced by critics (if not consumers), he plays juju, a flowing, sonorous musical style which has its origins in the Yoruba people of Nigeria. Adé has made around 50 albums; only a handful have been released in the US.

The music is almost as formulaic as it is intoxicating; Adé's long songs (often filling an entire side on African releases) contain some of the most irresistible grooves anywhere. As many as a half-dozen guitarists and an equal number of percussionists playing simple figures collectively weave an intricate web that serves as background for call-and-response vocals. Within this framework, Adé—borrowing from many other cultures—adds his own touches. Juju Music, culled from several prior LPs, relies heavily on synthesizers,

Hawaiian steel guitars and reggae dub techniques. It is the densest of the first three domestic releases: ghostlike guitars float through one another with near-vocal textures for perhaps as organic a sound as can be produced with electric instruments.

Synchro System is more melodically stripped-down. Percussion dominates, especially the bubbling sound of the talking drum, an African instrument of variable pitch. On Aura, Adé sets his pan-cultural sights even further, and the rhythm tracks are almost pure beatbox in style. The vocal harmonies in his work have a distinctive Latin feel.

After it became clear that Adé was not to inherit the late Bob Marley's role as preeminent Third World musical/cultural ambassador, he returned to being just a Nigerian national treasure. The Return of the Juju King compiles tracks from three mid-'80s albums released on his own Atom Park label. Shaking off his failure to win Western hearts, Adé sounds like a happy man again; the joyous juju reaffirms his status as one of the most captivating and important musical talents anywhere in the world today.

As it turns out, Adé's major contribution in the West has been to open doors for others. Not having appeared on records by platinum-selling yuppie faves (as Yousou N'Dour and Ladysmith Black Mambazo have), Adé has had to watch as "world beat" became a hip way for white people to assuage their guilt and/or impress their friends. Regardless, he has continued to produce quality work; one noteworthy release is Live Live Juju, recorded in Seattle in 1987.

As much as Adé's music flows in the studio, it is really meant to be heard live. Songs are allowed to go on longer, and the interaction between his many band members (and the audience) is far more playful and intricate. In concert, the emphasis is shifted away from the synthesizers and steel guitars and towards the real roots of juju: drums, rhythm guitars and massed voices. Live Live Juju reprises material from previous US albums, but most of the songs are new (or at least previously unissued in the US). The recording quality is excellent, and the liner notes, concerning Adé as well as the social and cultural history of Nigerian pop music, are very informative. [dgs]

HASIL ADKINS

Out to Hunch (Norton) 1986

The Wild Man (Norton) 1987

Peanut Butter Rock and Roll (Norton) 1990

Moon Over Madison (Norton) 1990

Granted that rockabilly is a musical form with few rules, Hasil Adkins still comes on like a crazed lunatic; by comparison, Gene Vincent resembles Herbert von Karajan. Then again, West Virginian Adkins has rarely played by the rules. His recordings—the bulk of them dating from the late '50s/early '60s—are homemade one-man-band affairs, originally released, if at all, as singles on tiny and/or private labels. With literally no one to answer to, he has created one of the most idiosyncratic soundscapes to be shoehorned into the category of "popular music": a Bizarro-world of uncertain meters, irregular phrases, grungy guitar and wacked-out, overmodulated vocals on even more wacked-out songs.

Out to Hunch collects Adkins' best-known (if that's the right term) songs: "She Said" (later recorded by the Cramps), two not-quite-dance-crazes ("The Hunch" and "Chicken Walk"), the grisly "No More Hot Dogs" and its Guignolish spinoffs "We Got a Date" and "I Need Your Head." But with genius of this sort, inspiration can strike anywhere. "Come on Along" (on Peanut Butter Rock and Roll) features a chirping female voice mindlessly repeating the title phrase in the background. Moon Over Madison, a concept album spotlighting Adkins' quieter side, displays his authentic vocal twang on some affecting, moody originals.

But for the title track on Moon Over Madison, those three albums were all assembled from vintage recordings. The Wild Man, recorded in 1986, finds the 49-year-old as vital as ever. Whether exhorting hordes to "Do the Scalp" or turning wistful on "Still Missing You," Adkins—and a truly inimitable electric guitar—confirms that he's an American original. You'll never wrench these sounds from a synthesizer. [si]

ADOLESCENTS

Adolescents (Frontier) 1981 •

Brats in Battalions (S.O.S.) 1987 •

Balboa Fun*Zone (Triple X) 1988 •

Live 1981 and 1986 (Triple X) 1989 •

RIKK AGNEW

All by Myself (Frontier) 1982

RIKK AGNEW'S YARD SALE

Emotional Vomit (Triple X) 1990 •

Adolescents is one of the better longplayers to come out of the early Southern California hardcore punk scene. With the legendary Rikk Agnew on guitar, the first album by this high-energy Orange County quintet (drawing some of its teenaged membership from Agent Orange and Social Distortion) has a crisp, metallic guitar sound and clear, comprehensible vocals.

The group fell apart soon after the first album, but Rikk, singer Tony Montana (né Cadena) and bassist Steve Soto put it back together in 1986, leading the first of several revolving lineups. The self-released Brats in Battalions, a hard-hitting but sloppy rush of punk, rock, demi-metal and speedskating near-core, credits six members (including guitarist Alfie Agnew standing in for his older brother, Frank) and contains covers of "House of the Rising Sun" and "I Got a Right." (The fragmentary "Do the Freddy," however, is an original.)

With Montana and two Agnew siblings gone, Rikk and Soto co-wrote the songs and share the vocals on Balboa Fun*Zone, a lyrically provocative rock record of substantial merit. Agnew sings "Alone Against the World," a strongly cautionary tale about heroin addiction; Soto takes charge on "It's Tattoo Time," a paean to the epidermal art. Even an uncalled-for version of "Instant Karma" receives reverent, intelligent treatment. Topped off with crisp production of the quartet's thick guitar sound, the green-vinyl Balboa is an impressively mature record. (The cassette appends "Surf Yogi"; the CD adds that song plus two more.)

The crappy-sounding but nonetheless exciting Live 1981 and 1986 (apparently a side of each, although the notes don't specify who-where-when) features three different Agnews singing and playing guitar in classic garage thrash. The sixteen cuts (eighteen on cassette; 21 on CD) cover most of the first album's material, giving such high-school concerns as "L.A. Girl," "No Friends" and "Word Attack" full-throttle stagings complete with bratty joke introductions. ("Hi, we're the Bangles . . .")

Between the Adolescents' two lives (and a stint in Christian Death), Rikk Agnew made a nifty one-man solo album of enjoyable loud pop and demi-punk songs played with spunk and variety. Despite clumsy lyrics and rudimentary production, All by Myself proves that Agnew's budding abilities were not likely to be restrained by any simple genre formula.

Following the Adolescents' final (?) farewell in '89, Agnew began the new decade with another solo outing. Except that yesterday's punk now favors mildly metalized hard rock and has access to better production, Emotional Vomit has many of the same qualities as All by Myself. Brothers Alfie and Frank are among the few guests on this uneven collection of originals (plus a steely cover of Depeche Mode's "Never Let Me Down Again"). [cpl/i]

See also Christian Death.

ADRENALIN O.D.

Let's Barbeque with Adrenalin O.D. EP (Buy Our) 1983
The Wacky Hi-Jinks of . . . Adrenalin O.D. (Buy Our) 1984 •

Humungousfungusamongus (Buy Our) 1986 •
Cruisin' with Elvis in Bigfoot's U.F.O. (Buy Our) 1988
Ishtar (Restless) 1990 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

4 Bands That Could Change the World! (Gasatanka) 1987

It's always nice to encounter punks with a sense of humor. Although A.O.D. got off to a slow start on Let's Barbeque—six songs on seven inches recorded in fifteen minutes—these New Jerseyites have grown into a far better band. The first record's sound is barrel-bottom, but the playing has a nice industrial buzz; creative use of spoken and shouted vocals punctuates the drone.

"Middle-aged Whore" on Wacky Hi-Jinks was, as noted on the back cover, "recorded in our underwear." Musically, however, A.O.D. is no joke, a fact immediately apparent from "A.O.D. vs Godzilla," the killer stun-guitar instrumental that opens the album. Unfortunately, muddy production buries mediocre vocals spewing funny, satiric lyrics in fuzzy speedrock, leaving incisive numbers like "White Hassle" (alienation at the Castle) and the sketchy "Rock & Roll Gas Station" half of what they might have been.

The improved studio sound of Humungousfungusamongus, which opens with another monster movie instrumental ("A.O.D. vs. Son of Godzilla"), allows the warp-speed quartet to vent their wits and expanding musical imagination with greater clarity than ever before. "Fishin' Musician," "Pope on a Rope," "Bugs" and "The Nice Song (In the Key of D)" all put a full-frontal guitar assault to semi-clever lyrics. But A.O.D. has other ideas: "Masterpiece" gives punks their own version of the theme music from PBS's Masterpiece The- atre (composed in 1729 by J.J. Mouret!), while "Pizzan-Beer" changes gears entirely for all-percussion instrumentation. Above-average hardcore for suburban smartasses. (The CD also contains Wacky Hi-Jinks.)

On 4 Bands That Could Change the World, a goofy concept platter shared with 7 Seconds, White Flag and F. A.O.D. whips off three rockingly entertaining covers (Bay City Rollers, Sex Pistols and Kiss) and "Rock & Roll Gas Station."

Teaming up with guitarist/producer Daniel Rey (Shrapnel, Ramones), A.O.D. then made an enormous musical leap into the punk-pop mainstream. A neat pre-LP 12-inch ("Theme from an Imaginary Midget Western" b/w "Coffin Cruiser" and Kiss' "Detroit Rock City") revealed the band's new direction—towards clear, medium-speed rock'n'roll—with conviction. Well-played and almost tuneful, the post-hardcore Cruisin' with Elvis contains "Theme" and other deadly potshots ("Something About . . . Amy Carter," "Bulemic Food Fight," "Flipside Unclassified") that thunder along with concise energy and the group's typical whimsy.

Despite a change of label and producer (Andy Shernoff, the ex-Dictator now in Manitoba's Wild Kingdom), A.O.D. are still their jocular rocking selves on Ishtar. Unfortunately, they're running low on inspiration: the mildly sarcastic lyrics aren't very clever and the music is utterly routine. After an auspicious beginning with the brief "My Achin' Back" and "Twenty Dollar Bill" (a melodic tune about finding money on the street), Ishtar downshifts into a terrible rendition of Queen's "Sheer Heart Attack" and slides sideways from there. Better luck next time. [i]

ADULT NET

Take Me EP (nr/Fontana) 1989 •

The Honey Tangle (Fontana-PolyGram) 1989 •

American guitarist/singer Brix Smith originally formed the Adult Net in 1985 as a flower-powery side project to the Fall, recording singles with a flexible lineup drawn from past/present members of the Fall and Smiths. Take Me has a great rendition of the Strawberry Alarm Clock's "Incense and Peppermints" and three originals, two of which take a pointless country turn.

Having ended her marriage to Mark E. in early '89, Brix left the Fall shortly after the release of The Honey Tangle that summer. Ex-Blondie drummer Clem Burke, erstwhile Smiths guitarist Craig Gannon and bassist James Eller back her on this catchy power-folk-pop collection that sounds like a flashback to 1981 Los Angeles. Polished by Craig Leon's mild paisley production, Smith's songs (plus a joyous cover of P.F. Sloan's "Where Were You (When I Needed You)") and wispy vocals recycle classic styles to no special effect, but the familiar setting helps sell the tuneful material. The American CD and cassette include four bonus tracks, including "Incense and Peppermints." [i]

See also Fall.

ADVENTURES

Theodore and Friends (nr/Chrysalis) 1985 •

The Adventures (Chrysalis) 1985

The Sea of Love (Elektra) 1988 •

Trading Secrets with the Moon (nr/Elektra) 1989 (Elektra) 1990 •

Vocalist Terry Sharpe and guitarist Pat Gribben began the sophisticated harmony-pop Adventures in London after their former group, Belfast's spunky Starjets, split up in 1980. On its classy if overproduced debut, the quintet—boasting three singers (including Gribben's wife, Eileen) and no on-board drummer—crafts crisp, commercial guitar/keyboards music distinguished by attractive melodies and striking harmonies. Slickly mainstream without being hollow or obnoxious (despite a stack of guest synthesists), Theodore and Friends (issued in the US as The Adventures) has a couple of great songs—the sweeping “Send My Heart” (which sounds like it was written for a synth-pop band) and the falsetto-sung African-accented “Another Silent Day”—plus pleasantly diverting also-rans.

Adding a drummer and adopting a warmer, semi-acoustic adult-rock sound, the Adventures essayed The Sea of Love with less artistic success. The songs aren't as good (Gribben's lyrical pretensions are such that he can base a song here on The Trip to Bountiful), and the performances lack the first LP's instrumental sparkle.

Stemming a drift towards becoming a bookish Abba, the again-drummerless Adventures engaged producers Clive Langer and Alan Winstanley, who gave Trading Secrets with the Moon an intimate sound colored with bits of fiddle, organ, horns, pedal steel and traditional Irish instruments. Unfortunately, the tasteful arrangements also minimize the band's backing vocals, leaving Gribben alone in the spotlight to sing his bland poetry. Lloyd Cole co-wrote one song, the countryish “Desert Rose.” [i]

ADVERTISING

Jingles (nr/EMI) 1978

Britain's Advertising was a clever young pop quartet with a penchant for quirky but catchy tunes, punny teenager lyrics and the color pink. They had a near brush with UK chart success via a 45 called “Lipstick” (included on Jingles); failure to win a large following caused an early breakup. This album (produced separately by Andy Arthurs and Kenny Laguna) is chock-a-block with engaging numbers, cheery vocals and snappy, clean playing; the songs (written by guitarists Tot Taylor and Simon Boswell) are literate and charming. Since leaving Advertising, Tot Taylor has recorded under his own name, while Boswell became a producer and formed Live Wire. [i]

See also Live Wire, Tot Taylor.

ADVERTS

Crossing the Red Sea with the Adverts (nr/Bright) 1978

(nr/Butt) 1982 (nr/Link Classics) 1990 •

Cast of Thousands (nr/RCA) 1979

The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1987

Live at the Roxy Club (nr/Receiver) 1990 •

When the four Adverts (including female bassist Gaye Advert) debuted on a 1977 Stiff 45 with “One Chord Wonders,” the young Londoners could barely play their instruments, but that didn't keep vocalist Tim (T.V.) Smith's song from offering a witty commentary on earnest incompetence. By the time they re-recorded the tune for their first LP, the Adverts had acquired just enough proficiency to make a positive difference.

In its own way, Red Sea is the equal of the first Sex Pistols or Clash LP, a hasty statement that captures an exciting time. Smith's tunes almost all offer a new wrinkle on issues of the day, when they fall into a rut, as in “Bored Teenagers,” his breathy, urgent vocals compensate. It's too bad the original album didn't include the ghoulishly funny “Gary Gilmore's Eyes,” a wicked single about a blind person who receives a transplant from you-know-(but-may-not-remember)-who. (That omission was rectified on the 1982 reissue but then repeated when a pressing boo-boo left it off the vinyl version of the '90 reissue. The CD, however, does contain that tricky little item.)

Oddly, Cast of Thousands is as feeble as Red Sea is vital. Fatigue and depression permeate the LP, suggesting that Smith's muse had made a hasty exit. One need only read the back-cover quote from 1 John 2:15 to get the picture: “Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world.” Pretty punky, huh?

The Adverts' John Peel broadcast session EP was recorded in early 1977 and contains live-in-the-studio run-throughs of all the aforementioned songs plus two others. For a full-length live Adverts album, try the Roxy record, a '77 show that reviews the group's repertoire with appropriately raunchy sound. [j/y/i]

See also T.V. Smith's Explorers.

AFGHAN WHIGS

Big Top Halloween (Ultrasuede) 1988

Up in It (Sub Pop) 1990

There's a surprising amount of subtlety—sophistication, even—rustling beneath the boozy, gutter-rat surface of this Cincinnati quartet's debut. While Greg Dulli's desperate, breathless rasp recalls Hootenanny-era Paul Westerberg (as does his uncommon wordsmithery: check out the bittersweet “Here Comes Jesus”), the rest of the band stirs '70s rock—from punk to pomp—into an aural hurricane with one hypnotic eye. An altogether terrific debut.

Typically gauzy Jack Endino production instantly brands Up in It as a Sub Pop issue. And while the increased volume (and hair length) are requisite, the Whigs still wax more lyrical than their thrash'n'burn labelmates. There's more implied in the affecting “I Know Your Little Secret” and the disjointed country swing of “Son of the South” than mere sonic overkill, an effect somewhat reflected in the sleeve art's understated creepiness. Repeated listens reveal a creeping Heartbreakers (as in J. Thunders) fixation, which might not be a bad thing to cultivate. [dss]

A FLOCK OF SEAGULLS

Modern Love Is Automatic/Telecommunication EP

(Jive-Arista) 1981

A Flock of Seagulls (Jive-Arista) 1982 (Jive-RCA) 1986 •

Listen (Jive-Arista) 1983 (Jive-RCA) 1986

The Story of a Young Heart (Jive-Arista) 1984 •

Dream Come True (Jive-Arista) 1986 (Jive-RCA) 1986

Best of A Flock of Seagulls (Jive-RCA) 1987 •

Amid all the talented and adventurous bands of the second Liverpool explosion, A Flock of Seagulls was ironically the first to snag a gold record in the US. Led by singer/keyboardist/guitarist Mike Score (he of the ludicrous hairdo) and including his brother Ali on drums, the quartet's first break came when Bill Nelson produced a single for them and released it on his Coc-teau label.

The five-song Telecommunication EP has a catchy tune or two, but it wasn't until AFOS entered the studio to make A Flock of Seagulls with producer Mike Howlett that they developed a style of their own. Relying on guitarist Paul Reynolds' U2-influenced textural wash, distended strains of synthesizer and some fancy studio maneuvers, the band's inadequacies (mainly dumb lyrics and limited conceptual range) fade into the background on their debut LP, overtaken by listenable, danceable techno-rock that proved to have broad commercial appeal.

Attempting to follow that hugely successful album, the Seagulls recorded Listen with Howlett (except for one cut) and hit some real highs. Retreating from gimmicky sci-fi themes (notwithstanding the circuit-board cover), they found an affecting path in the lushly pretty, languid "Wishing (If I Had a Photograph of You)" and the understated "Nightmares," but fouled out on several boring tracks and "What Am I Supposed to Do," which starts well but winds up repeating the title endlessly. Score does the same thing on "It's Not Me) Talking," but a propulsive synth-dance-beat and some neat sonic maneuvers keep it exciting.

Made without Howlett, The Story of a Young Heart is decidedly inferior. The bland romantic ballads on the first side lack character, have tedious vocals and point up the group's finite songwriting skill "The More You Live, The More You Love" comes closest to creative merit but is plodding and forgettable. The rockier songs on the flipside are marginally better, but can't carry the record alone. A vain attempt at artistic maturity and sophistication, the real story here is one of ambition at odds with ability.

Reynolds left and AFOS made their next record as a trio (augmented by half a dozen different guitarists), with Mike Score in charge of production. Although somewhat short on personality, the almost modestly appointed Dream Come True is reasonably listenable, a collection of simpliminded romantic numbers led by "Heartbeat Like a Drum."

The ten-song compilation leans heavily on the first ("Telecommunication," "Space Age Love Song," the Top 10 "I Ran") and second ("Wishing," "Nightmares," "(It's Not Me) Talking") albums, with nothing later than 1985's "Who's That Girl (She's Got It)." The CD adds a nine-minute remix of "Wishing" and the third LP's title track.

In 1989, a new version of AFOS—with only Mike Score remaining from the original band—launched a vain comeback try, touring the US in support of a hopeless new single, "Magic." [i]

AFRIKA KORPS

Music to Kill By (Iron Cross) 1977
God It's Them Again! (Fr. New Rose) 1987

Fielding a five-man wedge of rhythm guitarists, the Afrika Korps was a casually constituted underground supergroup whose fifteen-person lineup included fanzine writers, Slickee Boys and other assorted Washington DC-area garagepunks. Music to Kill By boasts 22 songs (including the Slickee Boys' "Jailbat Janet," covers of the Kinks and Yardbirds, and such culturally profound outpourings as "Iggy," "Death to Disko!" and "N.Y. Punk."). Although badly recorded and mastered—the guitar army often sounds more like one kid playing through a Pignose amp—the band's unflinching musical integrity and enthusiasm make this a significant memento of punk's early independent label surge.

Reuniting on a smaller scale five years later, the Korps roared back into action with a punchy second album. Solomon Gruberger (who does a pretty good Joey Ramone imitation on "Tonight") shares lead vocal duties on the half-dozen songs with ex-Slickee Boys singer Martha Hull and SB guitarist Kim Kane. The clear production is certainly welcome, but the energetic performances are squandered on weak original material.

See also Slickee Boys.

[i]

AFROS

See Run-DMC.

AGENT ORANGE

Living in Darkness (Posh Boy) 1981 •
Bitchin' Summer EP (Posh Boy) 1982 •
When You Least Expect It ... EP (Enigma) 1984
(Aoki-Restless) 1987 •
This Is the Voice (Enigma) 1986 •

Picture a band that combines the best elements of the Sex Pistols, the Ventures and early Blue Öyster Cult. Got that? Then you've got Agent Orange, a Fullerton, California trio who hybridized surf-twang sounds, smart-metal chops and punky drive. Living in Darkness is a short, concise collection of seven originals (like "Bloodstains") plus an appropriate memory-tweaker: the instrumental classic "Miserlou." Bitchin' Summer contains three previously released guitar instrumentals and a new song. (Both records are contained on one CD.)

The four songs on the 1984 EP display relative restraint, subordinating Mike Palm's guitar in favor of his echoed vocals on the pop "It's Up to Me and You." The two instrumentals are likewise less inflamed, although that doesn't stop "Out of Limits" from being great. A tepid cover of the Jefferson Airplane's "Somebody to Love," however, is a total mistake.

Established high enough in the skate-rock pantheon to offer an official band board for sale, Agent Orange issued This Is the Voice, a dynamic collection of high-energy vocal numbers that benefit greatly from (ex-Berlin) Daniel Van Patten's crisp electric production. The echo on Palm's strong voice, the lush guitar roar and the stiff-backed power drumming collectively suggest a slight '60s/'80s mod influence, but this impressive outing has a sound all its own. The record steers clear of punk overdrive to stand as Agent Orange's finest and most popular-sounding release. [mp/i]

AGE OF CHANCE

Crush Collision EP (Virgin) 1987

One Thousand Years of Trouble (Virgin) 1987 •

Mecca (Charisma) 1990 ◊

Age of Chance dresses up harsh British beatbox-metal-pop with colorful, vaguely apocalyptic sloganeering. Despite all the shouting, the Leeds quartet's biggest problem is the lack of a cohesive identity to match their records' careening sonic stew. The six-track Crush Collision is generally shrill and undistinguished, but it does include a pretty decent cover of Prince's "Kiss" (as well as a really awful one of the Tramp's "Disco Inferno").

One Thousand Years of Trouble benefits from being more gimmicky and over-the-top, with lots more sampling; even so, an album's worth of this stuff is pretty grating. You'd be better off going no further than Side Two, song one: the insistent "Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Noise?," which was a small UK hit.

With a fairly soulful new singer (Charles Hutchinson) and more polished songwriting, Mecca is a better focused, more listenable album which, in its own modest way, comes closer than its predecessors to realizing Age of Chance's idealized sonic melting pot. A more conventional effort, but a more enjoyable one. [hd]

AGITPOP

Feast of the Sunfish (Community 3) 1985 •

Back at the Plain of Jars (Community 3-Rough Trade) 1986 •

Open Seasons (Twin/Tone) 1988

Stick It! (Twin/Tone) 1989 •

Po-Town Tea Party EP (Twin/Tone) 1989

The Comm3 Sessions [CD] (Community 3) 1990 •

For the past seven years, this Poughkeepsie, NY-spawned trio has been hacking up exceedingly dense hairballs of frat-boy-cum-trade-unionist fusion-punk. Heavily indebted to, if slightly to the right of (aesthetically) the Minutemen and Gang of Four, Agitpop operates on the age-old principle of "free your ass and your mind will follow." The thing is, unlike the bulk of their boho brethren, Agitpop navigate those hip joints as though they were doctors of chiropractic.

Feast of the Sunfish makes the most of the band's strengths; a love of open space, an aggressively jazzy rhythm section and a frontman, John DeVries, who's not altogether crazy about being in the spotlight. DeVries is choosy about where to spray his terse, atonal guitar leads (rhythm is almost totally absent) and he buries his pointed lyrics with the glee of someone sending pals off on a killer scavenger hunt. Make particular effort to exhume the contents of "Loaded with Blanks" and the chilling (no pun intended) "Icicles."

Back at the Plain of Jars is palpably riper. The sympathetically austere production (by Comm3 honcho Albert Garzon) adds a sinister edge to the odd instruments (wind chimes, squeeze toys, kiddie xylophones) all three members wield with exponentially increased dexterity. Not as twee as Pianosaurus, songs like "Snowdrift Over 4 Feet Tall" and the clever anti-Reagan jab "His Worst Movie Ever" verge on the sweet bad-seed menace of The Little Girl Who Lives Down the Lane.

For some reason, inking to Minneapolis' Twin Tone label invested Agitpop with a yen for janglepop—after a fashion. Open Seasons grafts more florid playing onto their stolid Minutemen roots and ends up making you pine for what FIREHOSE could have been had the right third hand stirred the soup. Stick It, unfortunately, could be FROMOHIO outtakes; a monotonous landscape (most obviously the flat remake of Sunfish's "On the Hudson") with precious few surprises, although "Crack in Her Heart" is a spry mod nugget.

The four-song Po-Town Tea Party contains a bracing cover of Gang of Four's "Not Great Men" and a rather hazy take on Cream's "Badge." The Comm3 Sessions combines the first two LPs on a single CD, adding a pair of extra tracks. Agitpop broke up in late '90. [dss]

RIKK AGNEW

See Adolescents.

AGNOSTIC FRONT

Victim in Pain (RatCage) 1984 (Combat Core) 1986 •

Cause for Alarm (Combat Core) 1986 •

Liberty & Justice For ... (Combat) 1987 •

Live at CBGB (In Effect-Relativity) 1989 •

MADBALL

Ball of Destruction EP (In Effect-Relativity) 1989

This pioneering skinhead outfit which has been on the New York hardcore scene since the early '80s debuted (following a 1982 EP entitled United Blood) with an album of standard-issue punk—fast and blurry, but not absurdly so—and well-intentioned, if simple-minded, lyrics about unity, authority and justice. Roger Miret is an adequate run-of-the-mill shouter; like him, little about Victim in Pain, beyond its embossed all-black cover, is especially distinguished. (Remastering the LP for its 1986 reissue doesn't clear things up much; one CD contains both Victim in Pain and Cause for Alarm.)

Agnostic Front's demi-metal second album has a relentless kick-drum sound and a pernicious right-wing outlook. Songs about Bernhard Goetz ("Shoot His Load") and racist resentment of welfare recipients ("Public Assistance") join typical bonehead musings about killing, war, youth and the failings of the public education system. The one random moment of lucidity is "Toxic Shock," a protest against dioxin pollution.

A lineup change that retained only Miret and guitarist Vinnie Stigma then enlarged the quartet into a five-piece. With drums and guitars filling up every nanosecond, Liberty & Justice is a dull, onrushing storm of flailing limbs and incinerating transistors. Bottom-heavy and routine to the max, the music is utterly disposable; Miret's vocals dissolve in an incomprehensible hysterical gurgle. Even worse are the vague religious references.

The live record, cut with a new bassist in August 1988, strikes a balance between the energy and discipline of punk to deliver a taut, clear rock barrage that gallops and moshes along in close formation. The nineteen-song selection pretty much covers AF's high (and low) career points; the strangest moment is when Miret leads the audience in reciting the Pledge of Allegiance.

Madball is a side project in which members of Agnostic Front back Roger's kid brother, Freddie. On the 7-inch Ball of Destruction, the younger Miret barks out eight indistinguishable shardcore tunes in under a minute each. You'd never know it from listening to this overcompressed buzz, but the program includes a couple of AF songs and the Animals' "It's My Life." [i]

A HOUSE

On Our Big Fat Merry-Go-Round (Sire-Reprise) 1988 •
I Want Too Much (Sire-Reprise) 1990 •

Ireland's A House will probably never attain the stadium status of U2, nor influence as many bands as the Undertones. But that's not to say the Dublin quartet's contribution to the history of shamrock'n'roll will be insubstantial. The first LP is a sprightly collection of literate guitar rock, made all the more endearing by Dave Couse's melodramatic (and often hilariously off-key) vocals. The joyous, charging "Call Me Blue" and the torchy "My Little Lighthouse" introduce an ideal-filled band that isn't afraid to wear its heart (among other organs) on its sleeve.

I Want Too Much inadvertently answers the burning musical question, "What if the Violent Femmes aspired to be an honest-to-goodness electric rock group and not a jumped-up jug band?" An oversimplification, perhaps, but this is one amazing record. From the gentle folksy strum of the opening "13 Wonderful Love Songs" to the thesaurus-busting "Small Talk," I Want Too Much reveals a band with an uncanny knack for writing witty pop tunes that actually mean something. Songs like "The Patron Saint of Mediocrity" and "I Think I'm Going Mad" provide a fair idea of the mindset at work here. [db]

JANE AIRE AND THE BELVEDERES

Jane Aire and the Belvederes (nr/Virgin) 1979

EDGE

Square One (nr/Hurricane) 1980
Complete Works of the Edge (nr/Presets) 1987

Another talented singer from Akron, Ohio whose career really got started outside her homeland. Accompanied here by a sharp four-piece English band otherwise known as the Edge, Aire works confidently through a solid set of tunes that includes the oft-recorded "Breaking Down the Walls of Heartache," Pearl Harbor's "Driving," Holland-Dozier-Holland's "Come See About Me," plus some of producer Liam Sternberg's better original compositions.

The Edge (the group) came about when guitarist Lu Edmonds and drummer Jon Moss (formerly of punk slouches London) left a brief and unrecorded incarnation of the Damned in 1978. With the addition of keyboardist Gavin Povey (who had played with Lew Lewis) and bassist Glyn Havard (whose long career has included stints with the Yachts and, er, Jade Warrior), the Edge fell together. They played behind Jane Aire as the Belvederes on her LP and appeared, nearly intact, on Kirsty MacColl's first album. Subsequent to the Edge, Lu has worked in a number of bands, including Shriekback, the Spizzles and Public Image Ltd., while Jon Moss went on to temporary fame and fortune in Culture Club. Povey has done some additional recording with MacColl.

Oh yeah—about the music on Square One. Never quite blending into any particular style, the Edge's eclectic, melodic rock has flashes of the Jam, Boomtown Rats, Deep Purple, Police and Stranglers—all united by the satirical outlook of amusing lyrics [i]

AJAX

Mind the Gap EP (Wax Trax!) 1989
One World EP (Wax Trax!) 1990
Ajax (Wax Trax!) 1990 •

Among the bands who purvey industrial house music, this New York trio goes about it with a lighter, more accessible sensibility than most. Rather than concentrating on noisy ways to overpower a synthesized beat, Ajax uses natural-sounding percussion, open-air production (by Ajax and bigtime DJ Mark Kamins), busy bass lines and intriguing stylistic ingredients to dress up its starkly functional dance accompaniment. Unfortunately, numbingly monotonous repetition, routine found-sound samples and the songs' skimpy content render Ajax's records pretty useless outside the club environment.

The title tracks of the two 12-inch EPs (which otherwise contain remixes and filler) both appear on the band's full-length album, alongside several similar rhythmic workouts and a couple of genuine song-type things. While Mitchel (who's generally prone to shouts) does a bit of wispy singing in "Fast Cars," she really goes to town on "Haze" and "B Box," which actually boast lyrics (!) and melodies (!!). More promising than genuinely entertaining, Ajax suggests the group won't stay in the limited move'n groove world forever. (Quality control footnotes: One World is marked as 33 but plays at 45 rpm, and Ajax's track listing is completely out of order on the cover and inner sleeve.) [i]

ALARM

The Alarm EP (IRS) 1983 •
Declaration (IRS) 1984 •
Strength (IRS) 1985 •
Eye of the Hurricane (IRS) 1987 •
Presence of Love EP (nr/IRS) 1988
Compact Hits EP [CD] (A&M) 1988 •
Electric Folklore Live EP (IRS) 1988 •
Change. (IRS) 1989 •
Newid. (nr/IRS) 1989 •
A New South Wales EP (nr/IRS) 1989 •
Standards (IRS) 1990 •
Raw (IRS) 1991 •

If these four young Welshmen weren't so studiously intense, the Alarm might be able to drop the Clash/U2 pretensions and use their evident talent to make enjoyable records. Singer Mike Peters and bassist Eddie MacDonald write catchy, anthemic songs, but the tireless exhortations are tiring and, worse, can become ludicrous.

The Alarm compiles pre-LP UK singles: "The Stand," the first (but not last) pop song based on a

Stephen King novel, "Marching On" and three more slices of roughed-up folk-rock. Declaration further exploits the pose (and the big haircuts) with a batch of memorable tunes ("Sixty Eight Guns," "Blaze of Glory," "Where Were You Hiding When the Storm Broke?"), all smeared with Peters' melodramatic bawling. The Alarm's got an excess of passion, what they lack is the subtlety that keeps U2 from becoming histrionic.

Mike Howlett produced Strength and managed to rein in some of the Alarm's brassiness, slowing them down, focusing Peters' vocals and opening up the sound with dynamics and silence. Keyboards and stronger songs also contribute to the overall improvement, but it's still an Alarm LP. Highlights: the title track, which rips off Billy Idol to amusing effect, and "Spirit of '76," a Springsteenish crypto-ballad about the group's punk roots. Other tracks sound like old Gen X and Mott the Hoople. Weird but encouraging.

U2's ascendancy to global domination did not pass unnoticed in the Alarm camp, and the dull and disappointing Eye of the Hurricane has its share of echoed guitars and sweeping vocal theatrics. (Although, to be fair, most of the songs have too little personality—of any sort—to warrant comparison.) "Rain in the Summertime," an energetic dance-rocker with a catchy melody, is the album's standout; the oddest piece of inanity here is "Shelter," which mixes Pete Townshend's riff from "The Good's Gone" with lyrics lifted (in part) from various Stones songs.

The six-song, 42-minute Electric Folklore Live (in Boston, April '88) captures the most sanctimonious excesses of the Alarm's live show, not to mention those of the band's unaccountably fawning devotees. The overall effect is a bit ghoulish.

The Tony Visconti-produced Change was supposedly intended as a poignant lament on the dying Welsh language, but the Alarm lacks the lyrical subtlety or musical finesse to pull off such an ambitious conceit. Instead, the band sounds more desperately derivative than ever, taking half-cocked stabs at techno-glam ("Sold Me Down the River"), blue-collar wisdom ("Devolution Workin' Man Blues") and powerballadry ("Love Don't Come Easy") amidst the usual barrage of mock-messianic boot-stomping. Oddly, Change's only affecting track is also its most over-the-top: the heartfelt choir-and-orchestra-accompanied "A New South Wales." (In a commendably unusual move, the Alarm also released Newid., a complete Welsh-language version of the album.)

The pompously titled Standards collects thirteen (fifteen on the CD) of the band's near-hits plus three new recordings: the self-aggrandizing and self-explanatory "The Road," a slick remake of an early single ("Unsafe Building") and a pointless run-through of John Lennon's "Happy Christmas (War Is Over)." The CD bonus tracks are "Marching On" and "Blaze of Glory." [i/hd]

WILLIE ALEXANDER AND THE BOOM BOOM BAND

Willie Alexander and the Boom Boom Band (MCA) 1978
Meanwhile ... Back in the States (MCA) 1979

WILLIE ALEXANDER

Solo Loco (Bomp!) 1981

Tap Dancing on My Piano (Fr. New Rose) 1986

WILLIE LOCO ALEXANDER & THE CONFESSIONS

Autre Chose (Fr. New Rose) 1982

A Girl Like You (Fr. New Rose) 1982

WILLIE "LOCO" ALEXANDER

Taxi-Stand Diane EP (Fr. New Rose) 1984

Greatest Hits (nr/New Rose) 1985

The Dragons Are Still Out (Fr. New Rose) 1988

Long-time Boston scene patriarch Alexander is an intriguing figure whose redoubtable three-decade résumé includes such groups as the Lost, Bagatelle, Grass Menagerie—even a stint in the post-Lou Reed Velvet Underground. With countless club gigs under his belt, Alexander's credentials are impressive; unfortunately, his inconsistent records aren't. (The appellation is a tribute to Latin pianist Joe Loco.)

Willie Alexander and the Boom Boom Band is dedicated to Jack Kerouac, and includes Alexander's tributary "Kerouac," a cult hit when it first appeared on a 1975 independent single. The song's a heartfelt stand-out; the rest of the record is routine bar-band rubbish, wanting for both songs and style. Meanwhile follows the same path, but is notably better, thanks to Alexander's looser singing. For him, sloppiness is definitely an asset.

Willie left the Boom Boom Band behind for Solo Loco, relying instead on his own keyboards and percussion, with some outside guitar assistance. The record is a real departure, using occasional synthesizers to support extended, moody numbers that refer back to his earliest recorded work, and a voice that seems at once weary and sanguine. The material is uneven; when it's good, the record shines brightly. (Solo Loco was originally released on French New Rose; the American version is slightly different.)

Autre Chose—two disques of live Willie—was recorded in France during a March/April 1982 tour with a new backing trio. The choice of material is eclectic, beginning with "Tennessee [sic] Waltz" performed a cappella and including all of his best-(known) songs, plus some new things.

The Confessions on A Girl Like You (recorded in an American studio but unreleased outside France) include a saxophonist, the same bassist and guitarist from the live LP, but no drummer; Willie (a qualified percussion practitioner) picks up the sticks for this effort. Like a low-key version of a '70s Rolling Stones album, there's a little rock'n'roll, a blues number, lots of sex, a few choice covers and some good times. A career high-water mark, A Girl Like You (dedicated to The-Nonion Monk) shows various sides of this mature—if limited—performer.

Continuing along his odd Boston-and-Paris path, Alexander recorded a spare album that excludes guitar and rock in favor of keyboards for a bluesy, late-night sound: Tap Dancing on My Piano has the loose, funky feel of old friends tinkering in the studio. Basically, Willie accompanies himself on piano with varying amounts of harmonica, sax and drums thrown in for accent. There's nothing here you would call arranged: even the busiest tracks sound like a first rehearsal. The boozy, seemingly extemporaneous "I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry" is a heartwarming highlight; the rest varies from Randy Newmanesque ("The Ballad of Bobby Bear," named after a drummer of Willie's acquaintance who does spell it that way) to the bizarre ("Me & Stravinsky Now"). A modest and appealing slice of sincerity.

The Dragons Are Still Out finds Alexander back to rocking with a full-strength rock trio, horns, co-producer/co-writer Erik Lindgren on keyboards and even a cellist. Fearlessly covering a wide range of styles—from a unique interpretation of "Slippin' and Slidin'" to the improvised weird-piano autobiography of "Me and Dick V." and the inadvisable (but not completely embarrassing) "WA Rap"—as well as more typical (and more exotic) fare. The Dragons proves that this old-timer is neither out of touch nor out of tricks. [i]

ALGEBRA SUICIDE

Algebra Suicide EP (Buzzerama) 1982

An Explanation for That Flock of Crows EP (Buzzerama) 1984

Big Skin [tape] (Cause & Effect) 1986 (Buzzerama) 1988

The Secret Like Crazy (RRR-DOM) 1988

Real Numbers [CD] (Ger. Pursuit of Market Share) 1989 •

Alpha Cue (Bel. Body) 1990

Of the many vocalist/instrumentalist duos to emerge in and around the new wave, this Chicago team is quite unique, a fascinating marriage of Don Hedeker's music and Lydia Tomkiw's poetry. Over the course of its career, Algebra Suicide has flirted with pop forms and occasionally shared stylistic ground with both Laurie Anderson and the Velvet Underground but never wavered from its own individual path.

The eponymous debut—a four-song 7-inch—puts a sketchy but atmospheric mix of guitar and rhythm box behind Tomkiw's coolly intoned short texts, which include the haunting "True Romance at the World's Fair." That Flock of Crows, also a 7-inch EP, adds bass, better sound and new vocal inflections (Tomkiw nearly sings "Tonight") to the recitation of four more pieces made accessible—even catchy—through tangible, occasionally narrative ideas and strong internal tempos. Algebra Suicide isn't rock'n'roll, but even those with an aversion to poetry should try the pair's concise records.

Issued on cassette with a lyric booklet, Big Skin introduces piano and simple synthesizers to Hedeker's increasingly complex and dynamic musical contributions. The duo stumbles in several efforts to synchronize the verbal/instrumental rhythms, but both the song-form music and the lyrical content (like a fascinating, wry discussion of death entitled "Little Dead Body Poem," also released on a contemporaneous single with two other Big Skin selections) are typically engrossing.

The Secret Like Crazy is a generous compilation, containing three tracks from each EP, half of Big Skin and four items from various sources and three new cuts. The German CD-only Real Numbers is a convivial live album, recorded (with tapes supplementing Hedeker's onstage guitar work) in Chicago in April 1988. Premiering new material and revisiting more than a dozen oldies

(all with the benefit of new backings, presentations and Tomkiw's brief introductions), Real Numbers is a significant addition to the Algebra Suicide catalogue.

The couple's first full-fledged studio album, Alpha Cue, is their most ambitious production to date (And the first to employ a guest musician, who plays bass and piano on two numbers.) Except for the robotic electronic drumming, Hedeker's carefully formed tracks have a credible band sound and enough chordal structure to easily support melodies; additionally, some of Tomkiw's multi-tracked vocals resemble tune-shy singing a lot more than recitation. Is Algebra Suicide on the verge of finding a way to infiltrate the pop mainstream? [i]

ALICE DONUT

Donut Comes Alive (Alternative Tentacles) 1988

Bucketfuls of Sickness and Horror in an Otherwise

Meaningless Life (Alternative Tentacles) 1989

Mule (Alternative Tentacles) 1990 •

Revenge Fantasies of the Impotent (Alternative Tentacles) 1991 •

Although this New York quintet writes and plays punky junk-culture pop with considerable skill, singer Tomas Antona has one of those hate-it-or-leave-it voices, an obnoxious high-register wheedle that could earn him the understudy role in Jane's Addiction. (The writer who described his singing as Jello Biafra on helium pretty much nailed it.) A belated East Coast response to the Dickies and Redd Kross, the crude but funny Donut Comes Alive boasts mean-spirited songs about Tipper Gore, three different child stars (Linda Blair, Mason Reese and Joan of Arc) and a noisy rewrite of Donovan's "Sunshine Superman."

When the inconsistent production of Bucketfuls of Sickness and Horror falters, the sloppy guitar smear obscures everything but Antona's voice. (As on the first LP, bassist Ted Houghton sings a couple of numbers, but his inoffensive strivings in that department aren't much of an improvement.) Rather than target specific icons (with the exception of the intelligently critical "Sinead O'Connor on MTV"), the lyrics take broader aim at groups like celebrities, jocks, shoppers, etc.

With Mule, Alice Donut sheds its juvenile skin to reveal tight, bracing musical intricacy and intelligently incisive social commentary. Tomas' discovery of more listenable ways to express himself, coupled with the band's vastly improved playing, makes the record challenging and invigorating. The dark vision running through provocative songs about death, religion, menial labor, urban anomie and man-induced genetic plague is powerful stuff, and the sturdy music backs it up with authority. [i]

ALICE IN CHAINS

Facelift (Columbia) 1990 •

Alice in Chains might as well be Seattle's 999, a second-wave also-ran in the mighty Northwest's late-'80s surge of grungy, woolly bands. While the scene was pretty well along by the time of Facelift, Alice in Chains' clever combination of balls and hooks adds a distinct twist to the genre. Although the songs do tend to sound similar, Dave Jerden's excellent production and the quartet's ability to loft lasting melodies above the craggy power-crunch riffs make Facelift (and especially the single "We Die Young") one of the better in its breed. [ja]

ALIEN SEX FIEND

Who's Been Sleeping in My Brain? (Relativity) 1983 •
Acid Bath (Epitaph) 1984 (Chameleon) 1988 •
Liquid Head in Tokyo (nr/Anagram) 1985
Maximum Security (nr/Anagram) 1985
I Walk the Line EP (nr/Flicknife) 1986
"It" the Album (nr/Plague-Anagram) 1986
"It" the Album/Maximum Security [tape] (nr/Plague-Anagram) 1986
The Impossible Mission Mini L.P. (PVC) 1987
Here Cum Germs (PVC) 1987 •
The First A.S.F. CD [CD] (nr/Plague-Anagram) 1987 •
All Our Yesterdays (nr/Plague-Anagram) 1988 •
Another Planet (Caroline) 1988 •
Too Much Acid? (nr/Plague-Anagram) 1989 •
A.S.F. Box (nr/Plague-Anagram-Windsong) 1990
Curse (Sinclair) 1990 •

Although they came out of England's early-'80s Batcave movement, Alien Sex Fiend were (and are) a far cry from the era's typical gothicism. "Ignore the Machine," the band's debut single, established their unique sound, as ghoulish frontman Nik Fiend's creepy Cockney-accented ravings meld to the pulsing cosmic keyboards of his consort, Mrs. Fiend; Johnny Ha-Ha's drums are integrated with a burbling rhythm box, while Yaxi High-rizer spins off primitive Link Wray-via-the-Cramps guitar riffs. Neither did they fit into the decadent glam image propagated by Specimen: theatrical enough to be their own horror movie, Nik's Herman Munster/Alice Cooper synthesis is an original and enjoyable musical persona.

Undisturbed by mainstream trends, the Fiends have made a lunatic career out of a comic-book aesthetic and their own hallucinogenic strain of humor; through a long string of releases, the only thing they ever seem to take seriously is having a freaky old time.

The first LP is a charming collection of punky psycho-tunes like "Wish I Woz a Dog" and "Wild Women." The most concise ASF record, it's like a '50s monster-movie soundtrack returned from the dead. The US edition subtracts one tune in favor of the catchy and audacious B-side "Drive My Rocket (Up Uranus)"; a live track and "Craze" were added to the later CD.

The less guitar-driven production emphasizes Mrs. Fiend's gloriously spooky synth blips on Acid Bath, an inspired dose of mesmerizing, brain-frying insanity. The spacey "E.S.T. (Trip to the Moon)" and "Attack!" (a surging rocker) lead the pack of cool cuts. (The CD adds a psychobilly B-side, "Boneshaker Baby," a live cut and a dub mix.)

The lack of a substantial repertoire at that point makes Liquid Head, recorded live in Tokyo, pretty unnecessary, although completists will want it for the otherwise unrecorded "Back to the Egg."

Maximum Security is a big departure from the first two albums, and the least of all Fiend works. Bleak and predominantly slow, the material is based heavily around drum machine beats (replacing Ha-Ha's human touch) and suffers from a somewhat monotonous sameness. The title track (also released as a 45) is a notable exception.

The Fiends came right back, though, with I Walk the Line, a robust four-song 12-inch which struck a new singles mold for the band: danceable rhythms overlaid by aerodynamic guitar riffs. (The EP also contains a smoking Fiendization of the Coop's "School's Out") This set the stage for "It" the Album, unquestionably the group's most creative, mind-expanding undertaking. The sound is far looser and more organic ("Get into It" is a particularly loopy example), and many of the songs—like the entrancing "Manic Depression"—are stretched to psychedelic lengths. The cassette version pairs it with Maximum Security.

The Impossible Mission Mini L.P. combines "The Impossible Mission" 45 (a groovy instrumental) and its fuzzbuster Cramps-like B-side, "My Brain Is in the Cupboard Above the Kitchen Sink," with two previous singles—the driving "Smells Like . . ." (also on "It") and a cover of Red Crayola's "Hurricane Fighter Plane"—and their B-sides, seven tracks in all. The subsequent Here Cum Germs (which also contains both sides of the "Impossible Mission" single) is a good album, but increasing friction with guitarist Yaxi led to a somewhat thrown-together, incomplete feel. Nonetheless, the title cut, the acoustic-flavored "Isolation" (the closest they've come to a ballad) and the epic "Boots On!" are high spots.

Yaxi departed after Germs, leading to All Our Yesterdays, a consistently high-quality end-of-an-era singles compilation that should definitely be the first choice for those new to Fiendom. The First A.S.F. CD is just Maximum Security with a lot of extra stuff tacked on: "E.S.T.," "Attack!," a different version of "Boneshaker Baby" and a remix of "Ignore the Machine."

Another Planet is an Alien Sex Fiend watershed; the revitalized duo (and some capable new cohorts) come up with their most entertaining album to date. The wacky, sample-based "Bun-Ho!" sits among such gripping, streamlined rockers as "Sample My Sausage," "Nightmare Zone" and "Everybody's Dream." Meanwhile, studio pranks like "Wild Green Fiendy Liquid" and "Instant Karma Sutra" add to the overall psychotronic aura. (The CD version adds a searing cover of Hawkwind's "Silver Machine" and the Stones' "Satisfaction.")

Too Much Acid? is a splendid double-live album from a spring '89 European jaunt. The reconstituted band (the Fiends are joined officially by Rat Fink Jr. and Doctor Milton, who both play various permutations of guitar, drums and keyboards) is a boon, and it's great to hear the material—mainly singles, including the then-current 45 "Haunted House" (a Fiends-on-45 medley set to house beats)—flow with such free-form elasticity. The A.S.F. Box contains a fun mixture of previously issued material: three 12-inches, the R.I.P. 10-inch EP and an 11-inch historical curio (the E.S.T. EP). There's also a booklet, a poster, a T-shirt and, last (but certainly not least), a plastic turd.

Returning to the more experimental "It" mold, Curse emphasizes longer tracks like the monstrous three-part masterpiece "Katch 22," whose creeping, neo-orchestral bounce suggests Laibach on acid. Such hypnotics as "Ain't Got Time to Bleed" and the bug-eyed-boogie single "Now I'm Feeling Zombified" alternate with faster, maniacal blasts like "Eat! Eat! Eat!" and "Burger Bar Baby." The CD and cassette add five, including a Cramps semi-cover, "Mad Daddy Drives a U.F.O.," and an insane gig announcement, "Radio Jumi" [gef]

ALL

Allroy Sez (Cruz) 1988 •
Allroy for Prez EP (Cruz) 1988 •
Allroy's Revenge (Cruz) 1989 •
Trailblazer (Cruz) 1990 •
Allroy Saves (Cruz) 1990 •

In 1987, the Descendents parted ways with singer Milo Aukerman, bringing ex-Dag Nasty singer Dave Smalley in to take over, and transmuted into All, drummer Bill Stevenson's long-brewing caffeine concept quartet. Whether or not anyone actually knows what the concept is, All puts a melodic spin and a goofy lyrical twist on punky, clear guitar rock. At the first LP's silliest, All sings a Dickensish ode to "Alfredo's," a crummy Mexican fast food joint, in the hopes of getting free food. But All's no joke. "Just Perfect," "#10 (Wet)" and "Hooidge" have killer hooks and a beach-blanket sound energized by unexpected hardcore-derived moves. At once summarizing and surpassing the Descendents, All offers a spunky, electric post-punk alternative for those who miss Generation X and despise Billy Idol. Totally excellent.

Allroy for Prez dispenses with the humor for a half-dozen rocking love songs written individually by all the Alls. The playing and production are killer, but the material doesn't consistently connect with equal potency. From Smalley's bitter "Wrong Again" through bassist/cover artist Karl Alvarez's cynical "I Hate to Love," the record gains melodic momentum, peaking on "Postage," an overdriven Shoes-like power pop hummer penned by Stevenson. The CD and cassette add a new version of "Just Perfect" and "Wishing Well," both from a prior 12-inch single.

Scott Reynolds replaced Smalley in time for Allroy's Revenge, a speedy, punkier-sounding album of broadening artistic ambition that lacks the production clarity, melodic strength and carefree demeanor of All's best work. Existential anxieties and problems with women (even "Copping Z," an intriguingly syncopated number about sleeping late, asks "What can I expect from the years ahead?") set a serious tone that is hardly leavened by the hard-edged music. (The delightful "She's My Ex," which puts romantic regrets to a tuneful pop, is the exception that best demonstrates the problem.) A snappy rendition of "Hot Rod Lincoln" (one of two CD/tape bonus tracks) proves that All hasn't lost its taste for fun, but this powerful, occasionally enlightening record should have been made by another band.

In a nice bit of continuity, the live Trailblazer, recorded at New York's CBGB on a Tuesday night in July 1989, opens with the same song that closes the Revenge CD. Named after a portable toilet that (according to the stomach-turning liner notes) vastly improved All's quality of life on the road, Trailblazer draws more than half of its fourteen songs from Revenge. An adequate but unessential document, the sound is mushy and flat, and the performances are nothing special.

The pursuit of the mythic All has most recently brought the group to Allroy Saves, a complex and sophisticated album that trades in difficult rhythms and intricate guitar figures, as well as pop melodies and thoughtful lyrics. With Reynolds taking the lead writing role, conversational narratives about losers, fools, cops and frogs make Saves fascinating and provocative, the rough music alternates All-some catchiness (as on Milo Aukerman's Gen X-y "Just Like Them") with a challenging attack that approaches an unpretentious punk Police. [i]

See also Dag Nasty, Descendents, DYS, Last.

ALL ABOUT EVE

All About Eve (Mercury) 1988 •
Scarlet and Other Stories (Mercury) 1989 •

This London quartet features the rather lovely (and often multi-tracked) voice of Coventry-born Julianne Regan (an early bassist in Gene Loves Jezebel!) and utilizes, of all people, former Yardbird bassist Paul Samwell-Smith in the producer's chair. With dreamy-looking cover art and songs about children, angels and clouds, one might expect lots of wispy, ethereal music, but 1988's All About Eve mostly offers up mainstream, big-guitar rockers. Even the quieter moments, such as "Like Emily" and "Shelter from the Rain" (with Wayne Hussey of the Mission adding vocals), sound like arena fare by some U2 support act. (The CD adds three.)

Samwell-Smith gives Scarlet and Other Stories a much lighter, more acoustic sound. This setting is better suited to Regan's voice, but the LP drags along laboriously; the softer spots come dangerously close to resembling Renaissance. In comparison to this, the debut's variety is a real asset.

Guitarist Tim Bricheno left in '90 and resurfaced later that year in the Sisters of Mercy. [dgs]

See also Sisters of Mercy.

ALLEY CATS

Nightmare City (Time Coast) 1981
Escape from the Planet Earth (MCA) 1982

ZARKONS

Riders in the Long Black Parade (Time Coast-Enigma) 1985

Between the Idea and the Reality ... Falls the Shadow (Atlantic) 1988 •

The Alley Cats—Dianne Chai (bass/vocals), Randy Stodola (guitar/vocals) and John McCarthy (drums)—were an early fixture on the Los Angeles punk scene, churning out loudhardsemifast rock with awful, predictable lyrics. Proceeding from independent label land to the majors, the group's two LPs show some progress—i.e., Nightmare City is more samey and less imaginatively produced than Escape from Planet Earth.

Parting company with both MCA and their original name, the trio reappeared in 1985 as the Zarkons. The diabolical production on the eight-song Riders in the Long Black Parade sinks the heavily echoed vocals deep into the wall behind your speakers; although nearly inaudible, Chai's reasonably dramatic rendition of Grace Slick's "White Rabbit" (in march-time, no less) is the album's only sign of life.

Joined by two new sidemen (a female vocalist and a different drummer), Stodola and Chai then raised their pretensions tenfold. Between the Idea and the Reality (title courtesy of T.S. Eliot)—a slick and vapid radio wannabe—begins by ruining the Yardbirds' "Heart Full of Soul" with synth drums and a noxious sax solo and then proceeds to desecrate the memory of Dylan Thomas, setting one of his poems ("The Hunchback in the Park") to atrocious fake folk music. Beyond contempt. [i]

GG ALLIN AND THE JABBERS

Always Was, Is, and Always Shall Be (Orange) 1980
(Black & Blue) 1988

Public Animal #1 EP (Orange) 1982

No Rules EP (Orange) 1983

Banned in Boston (Black & Blue) 1989 ☐

GG ALLIN AND THE SCUMFUCS

Eat My Fuc (Blood) 1984 (Black & Blue) 1988

Hard Candy Cock EP (Blood) 1984

I Wanna Fuck Your Brains Out EP (Blood) 1985

GG ALLIN AND THE SCUMFUCS/ARTLESS

GG Allin and the Scumfucs/Artless (Ger. Starving Missile-Holy War) 1985

GG ALLIN

Live Fast, Die Fast EP (Black & Blue) 1984 + 1987

Hated in the Nation [tape] (ROIR) 1987

Freaks, Faggots, Drunks & Junkies (Homestead) 1988

Doctrine of Mayhem (Black & Blue) 1990

GG ALLIN AND THE HOLY MEN

You Give Love a Bad Name (Homestead) 1987

For better or worse, GG Allin is a legend. This self-immolating jockstrap-clad mace-spraying dung-heaving aberration has somehow survived his own berserk reputation (not to mention his recklessly self-destructive instincts) to become the worst nightmare the Dead Boys and Iggy never had, a relentlessly obnoxious, coarse and lewd extremist who can send even the most generous-minded liberal over the edge. His catalogue is a juggernaut of puerile mania, demented concupiscence and Hustler-level humor.

All moral and artistic judgment aside, Allin is due some credit for managing to do what he's done with so much conviction for so long. GG's long and storied career began in 1978, deep within New Hampshire's rolling hills, when somebody foolishly fronted this Hookset, NH kook some green to press an LP. A decent though badly produced record, Always Was, Is, and Always Shall Be (which sold like hotcakes in Sweden) mixes a variety of influences—most notably the Stooges and the Dolls, but also 1980-vintage punk and new wave pop—into a fairly appealing rock sound. But Allin has a fatal weakness for extremely vulgar lyrics. How can a relatively straight song like "Unpredictable" be taken seriously in the vicinity of "Beat, Beat, Beat" and the fatuous "Pussy Summit Meeting"? Allin clinched his commercial fate with unwavering offense, and whatever promise flashed on the first LP faded on subsequent releases.

David Peel's Orange Records saw fit to add to the GG Allin and the Jabbers library in 1982 and '83, isuing two 7-inch EPs, Public Animal #1 and No Rules. The former merely consists of three album tracks plus "You Hate Me and I Hate You," a new cut which sounds like a small-town guesstimate of big-city hardcore. No Rules, however, isn't all that bad. Gone for a fleeting three-song moment are the sodomic and anatomical references, replaced by the apt punk strains of "No Rules," "New York City Tonight" and "Up Against the Wall." (GG regains his vile composure on "A Fuckup," but it's a good-humored rant.) The Jabbers disbanded soon after, but GG reunited with two of them in '84 for the Live Fast, Die Fast EP.

After a brief run as frontman of Manchester, NH's Cedar Street Sluts, Allin organized the Scumfucs, a trashy trio indeed. The pairing's three releases on Blood are among the most intensely unlistenable offerings ever spewed into the rock underground. As Eat My Fuc (co-produced by—get this—Dick Urne) captures the totally skill-less Scumfucs in flat and murky sound, it becomes apparent that GG's lyrics have taken a considerable turn towards true derangement—where they have since remained.

Although the music is a little more interesting, Hard Candy Cock tenders five more songs of similar caliber and mentality. Only "Convulsions"—an interesting rhythmic departure from GG's usual invective pattern—strays from the profane path. I Wanna Fuck Your Brains Out continues the scatological tirade, and merits no descriptive amplification.

Allin laid low for a while, but 1987 brought a sudden surge in his hip credibility, and a few independent labels saw fit to encourage him into further ignobility and profligacy. ROIR issued Hated in the Nation, a tape which collects some prior EPs and singles, including "Hard Candy," "Drink, Fuck and Fight" and "Gimme Some Head" (a 1981 45 on which GG is accompanied by two ex-members of the MC5). The cassette includes some live stuff, sessions with "the New York Superscum" (which includes J Mascis of Dinosaur Jr.) as well as a few of the more articulate messages left on GG's answering machine.

Homestead endured GG for two offerings, and label head Gerard Cosloy even played guitar on the Holy Men LP, You Give Love a Bad Name. Whatever vestiges of a singing voice Allin once had are lost to the ravages of self-abuse; his raspy whinings are blanketed over the usual backdrop of punk-cum-grunge metal. "Tough Fuckin' Shit" is a sure-fire original winner, as are covers of Bad Tuna Experience's "Beer Picnic" and Charles Manson's "Garbage Dump." (Be sure to check out the liner notes detailing GG's sexual exploits.) Although he is joined by different sidemen on Freaks, Faggots, Drunks & Junkies, the album is virtually a carbon copy of Love.

With Allin languishing in a Michigan jail after one of his excesses got way too excessive, his recording career has been on ice of late. But a number of reissues, retrospectives and compilations have appeared recently. Banned in Boston, for one, consists of early studio cuts, '82 live matter and radio interviews. [icm]

STEVE ALMAAS

See Beat Rodeo.

MARC ALMOND AND THE WILLING SINNERS

Vermin in Ermine (nr/Some Bizzare) 1984 •
Tenderness Is a Weakness EP (nr/Some Bizzare) 1984
Stories of Johnny (nr/Some Bizzare) 1985 •
Stories of Johnny EP (nr/Some Bizzare) 1985 •
The House Is Haunted EP (nr/Some Bizzare-Virgin) 1986

MARC ALMOND

Melancholy Rose EP (nr/Some Bizzare-Virgin) 1987
Mother Fist... and Her Five Daughters (nr/Some Bizzare-Virgin) 1987 •
Singles 1984-1987 (nr/Some Bizzare-Virgin) 1987 •
The Stars We Are (Some Bizzare-Capitol) 1988 •
Jacques (nr/Some Bizzare) 1989 •
Enchanted (Some Bizzare-Capitol) 1990 •

MARC AND THE MAMBAS

'Untitled' (nr/Some Bizzare) 1983
Torment and Toreros (nr/Some Bizzare) 1983

Leaving the evident confines of Soft Cell behind—during, and subsequent to the dissolution of, his partnership with Dave Ball—singer Marc Almond assembled various associates to be the Mambas on his first two solo albums. 'Untitled' (an LP plus a three-song 12-inch) is a swell hodgepodge of originals, covers, collaborations and excesses, all sung in Almond's appealing but pitch-poor voice. With Annie Hogan and Matt (the The) Johnson as his main collaborators, Almond ventures into summery soul ('Angels'), ambient balladry ('Big Louise') and obvious source material (Lou Reed's 'Caroline Says,' Syd Barrett's 'Terrapin,' Jacques Brel's 'If You Go Away'), covering phenomenally varied terrain. More an audio sketchbook than a coordinated album, 'Untitled' is nonetheless a fine excursion outside the techno-pop corridors of Soft Cell.

Torment and Toreros, on the other hand, is a vile and pathetic attempt to ape '30s German cabaret decadence with mostly piano/orchestral backing and calculated-to-shock vulgar lyrics. A sleazy two-record drag.

That digression over and done with, Almond moved on to the Willing Sinners, and began a far more entertaining segment of his career. Playing his campy gutter queen persona to the hilt, he is pictured on the cover of Vermin in Ermine perched on a garbage can, wearing devil's horns and a spangled jacket he could only have borrowed from Liza Minnelli. While the songs typically reflect Almond's seamy, negativist taste ('Ugly Head,' 'Tenderness Is a Weakness,' 'Crime Sublime,' 'Shining Sinners,' etc.), the Sinners and sidemen provide theatrical, often sarcastically caricatured music to accompany his stylized singing. Vermin isn't all that involving—the jolly presentation works against the grungy intent, leaving a sense of aimlessness rather than artistic tension. (The cassette and CD have three extra cuts.)

Stories of Johnny is more on track, matching moody, sometimes pretty atmospherics with Almond's disconsolate (but brightening) outlook. The backing sporadically includes slick synthesizer maneuvers, bringing him full circle, demonstrating once again just how important Soft Cell was to earning that instrument its place in pop music. The title track (a deserving British hit) is a full-scale Spectorized production number with excellent singing.

Presaged by a double 7-inch of the album's "Melancholy Rose," Mother Fist (dedicated to Truman Capote, whose work provided the LP's title) finds Almond reflecting on pleasure and pain in characteristically graphic fashion. The generally sparse and often pleasant arrangements co-exist uneasily with Almond's decadent balladry but, given his outlook, that's as it should be. The one total downer is the somber "Saint Judy" (as in Garland), which ends with a chilling minor-key refrain of "Get Happy" (a song she originally sang in 1950's Summer Stock) interlaced with Almond's own doleful refrain. Amid the record's lighter-weight fare, it's a powerful centerpiece. Not for the fainthearted, Mother Fist is both rewarding and disturbing.

The singles compilation offers a solid non-Cell A-side retrospective: ten songs, including "Stories of Johnny," "Mother Fist," "Tenderness Is a Weakness" and "The House Is Haunted."

Paring the Willing Sinners down from a sextet to a trio (and renaming the group La Magia), Almond recorded The Stars We Are, a sensual, romantic antidote to Mother Fist's bleak earthiness, lush with synthesized strings and horns. This is an essential album for those looking for insights into the Almond persona: "These My Dreams Are Yours" and "Bittersweet" both serve as apologies of sorts. A duet with Nico on "Your Kisses Burn" and an emotional rendition of Gene Pitney's "Something's Gotten Hold of My Heart" are also highlights.

Jacques is a tribute to Jacques Brel, the Belgian singer/poet whose influence pervades Almond's work. Mostly recorded with an augmented Willing Sinners lineup back in '86 (some tracks are as recent as '89), it's a real showcase for his abilities as an interpretive singer, especially as the vocals are mixed way up front over spare backgrounds. Regardless of how you feel about Almond or Brel—although it does help to appreciate both here—Jacques is an ambitious undertaking by an increasingly confident and always adventurous artist.

Almond made Enchanted without longtime keyboardist Annie Hogan or a live drummer; the use of both Fairlight synthesizer and an orchestra (not to mention guest brass players) creates a not entirely attractive tension between sterility and warmth. Lacking a strong stylistic hand, the arrangements (by Almond and stalwart keyboardist/bassist Billy McGee) are hit-and-miss, too often overzealous when a little bit of restraint would have done the trick. Almond's singing and writing, however, are unpretentiously entertaining, uniting past notions with subtle cohesion and as little overt camp as the listener cares to enjoy. Best track: the faux-Balkan bounce of the satanic "Deaths Diary." [i/ds]

ALPHAVILLE

Forever Young (Atlantic) 1984 •
Afternoons in Utopia (Atlantic) 1986 •
The Singles Collection (Atlantic) 1988 •
The Breathtaking Blue (Atlantic) 1989 •

Berlin's Alphaville plays simpleminded, obnoxious synthesizer rock. On Forever Young, the trio's slickly polished songs and vapid English lyrics ("Big in Japan," "The Jet Set") are at best inconsequential but often overbearingly dumb. The self-importance of singer Marian Gold's overdramatic delivery only contributes to the band's absurdity. While the title track comes within hailing range of a bewitchingly textured Ultravox sound, the album is otherwise insipid.

Whether it's a language barrier or a lack of talent, the idealistic science-fiction concept of Afternoons in Utopia (which credits 31 musicians and vocalists in addition to the group itself—wasn't technology supposed to make humans more self-reliant and efficient?) falls apart in a jumble of vague, frequently comical non sequiturs. While their imagination may be sailing off to Mars, Alphaville's music (notably improved over the first LP, possibly the result of lineup changes and a new producer) remains firmly planted in a simple, tuneful generic dance idiom.

The Singles Collection assembles two mixes each of two tracks each from the trio's two albums. (That means eight all together.) If you need to hear ten minutes (each) of "Forever Young," "Red Rose," "Big in Japan" or "Dance with Me," help yourself.

The Breathtaking Blue, co-produced by the venerable Klaus Schulze (Tangerine Dream), introduces a new, suavely continental aspect to Alphaville's music. Gold's attempts to ape and mix Bryan Ferry, Freddie Mercury and David Bowie are appalling; the band's concomitant efforts to swing on a jazzy acoustic tree prove equally futile. Typical of Alphaville's haplessness, the album's best track ("Ariana") is an utter anachronism, a giddy echo of Abba-styled new wave pop. (For those equipped with the proper equipment, the CD is graphics-encoded with hundreds of still photographs and illustrations.) [i]

ALTER BOYS

Soul Desire (Big Time) 1987 •

Former Dictator Andy Shernoff may have produced the only LP by New York's Alter Boys, but the group's roots seem closer to two other great erstwhile Gotham bands—Television and the Velvet Underground. The two guitarists seem promising enough, but they often seem held back by the relatively stiff rhythm section; the band sounds most comfortable on its best (and most Television-like) number, "One Eye Only," and "Sweet Blossom Mary," which borrows its chorus from "Anarchy in the UK." Depressives may enjoy the more VU-oriented gloom-and-doom of numbers like "Mid-Winter Deathtrip" and "Dry-Out Center." [ds]

ALTERED IMAGES

Happy Birthday (Portrait) 1981 (Epic) 1990 •

Pinky Blue (Portrait) 1982

Bite (Portrait) 1983

Collected Images (nr/Epic) 1984

Led by baby-voiced singer Claire Grogan, this twinkly Scottish nuevo pop quintet hit high in the British singles charts with catchy, uncomplicated tunes like "Happy Birthday" and "Dead Pop Stars." Grogan's cutesy-poo vocals, however, were not universally appreciated; many found the group more precious than charming. Four different producers are credited on the three original albums; they clearly wielded powerful influence on these impressionable youngsters.

Except for the Martin Rushent-produced title track, the first LP (otherwise produced mainly by Banshees bassist Steve Severin) shows no signs of life. The songs drag along, refusing to make any instrumental impression, relying on the singing, which just isn't enough.

Rushent produced all of Pinky Blue, revealing Altered Images to be a clever dance-pop force. With gleaming, bouncy sound, the songs jump out in classic hit single fashion—"See Those Eyes" and "I Could Be Happy" especially provide the joyous setting that Grogan's voice needs to succeed. (The cover of Neil Diamond's cloying "Song Sung Blue," however, should have been nixed.)

Bite is something of a departure. From the mature-young-sophisticate photo of Grogan on the front cover to the lush disco sound—strings, chorus, sax, wah-wah guitar, the works—of "Bring Me Closer," the album foolishly attempts to haul Altered Images out of their adolescent innocence and make them a Scottish Blondie. Worse, the equal division of production responsibilities between Tony Visconti and Mike Chapman leaves the record with a wicked case of schizophrenia. Visconti's tracks are basically heartless dance numbers—Abba gone funky. While Chapman's also trespass in the same terrain, "Change of Heart," "Another Lost Look" and the memorable "Don't Talk to Me About Love" are attractive pop tunes that retain some of the band's winsome charm. (The English cassette has extra tracks and bonus remixes.) Collected Images is a reasonable posthumous compilation.

After the band's end, members formed Hipsway and Texas. Grogan released a single (the only public results of a shelved solo album) and acted on film, stage and TV. Her new band is called Universal Love School.

See also Texas.

[i]

ALTER NATIVES

Hold Your Tongue (SST) 1986

Group Therapy (SST) 1988 •

Buzz (SST) 1989 •

The Alter Natives are a frantic, improv-minded combo from Richmond, Virginia's hop-crazed art community. During SST's expansionist days of '86, their all-instrumental, sax-lead spazz-attack was among the most promising noise the label released. The band's first two LPs, recorded as a quartet, feature sax and flute-playing (Eric Ungar) of a remarkably non-fusionoid stripe; by the time of the third LP, however, the configuration was rock-basic (guitar/bass/drums), and Buzz is an excellent album of aggressive space Hunch. [bc]

ALTERNATIVE TV

The Image Has Cracked (nr/Deptford Fun City) 1978

Vibing Up the Senile Man (Part One) (nr/Deptford Fun City) 1979

Live at the Rat Club '77 (nr/Crystal-Red) 1979

Action Time Vision (nr/Deptford Fun City) 1980

Strange Kicks (IRS) 1981

Peep Show (nr/Anagram) 1987

Splitting in 2 (nr/Anagram) 1989

Sol EP (nr/Chapter 22) 1990

Dragon Love (nr/Chapter 22) 1990

HERE & NOW/ALTERNATIVE TV

What You See ... Is What You Are (nr/Deptford Fun City) 1978

GOOD MISSIONARIES

Fire from Heaven (nr/Deptford Fun City) 1979

MARK PERRY

Snappy Turns (nr/Deptford Fun City) 1981

The hipness and success of London punk-explosion photocopy fanzine Sniffin' Glue was almost entirely due to the irreverent, pugnacious sincerity of its founder/sparkplug Mark P(erry). That Perry should form a band seemed a natural progression; that it was any good at all a surprise; that it maintained a stance utterly disdainful of compromise a small miracle. Unfortunately, this musical Diogenes had neither adequate vision nor foresight to avoid the pitfalls of Striving for Artistic Expression.

Live at the Rat Club '77 (an authorized bootleg) consists of messy-sounding live material taped before co-founder/guitarist Alex Fergusson split. (Temporarily replaced by the Police's then-road manager Kim Turner, Fergusson rejoined in time for Strange Kicks.) By The Image Has Cracked, Perry's urge to experiment was taking intriguing turns (e.g., a half-studio, half-live attempt at meaningful audience participation). Although the abstract stuff doesn't hold up so well, it's still an amazing document of a time and place. The straighter efforts are better: an early Buzzcocks/Clash sock is well-exercised on the band's rousing manifesto, "Action Time Vision." It's also why the compilation of the same name, including non-LP singles sides (through '79) on which Perry's righteously vented spleen is effectively displayed, works better than Image as entertainment if not artifact.

What You See . . . Is What You Are is also live (from the summer of '78), but shared half-and-half with tour partners Here & Now, a horrid hippie offshoot of Gong. Worse (even discounting the tinny sound) still, such disillusion had set in that Perry remade his song as "Action Time Lemon" in sheer disgust. While a move towards edge music could be seen coming—further spurred by Mick Linehan (later in the Lines) replacing Kim Turner—ATV here sounds aimless and desperate. Vibing Up the Senile Man was made by Perry and stalwart bassist Dennis Burns; while some of the lyrics are eloquently impassioned, Perry's tuneless vocals ride atop music that's up the pseudo-avant creek without a paddle.

Come 1981, Perry, Burns and the more pop-minded Fergusson reunited (adding a drummer and a keyboard player) for Strange Kicks, an album that's a different proposition altogether. The one-time quasi-nihilist says, "What the hey!" and rattles off smart, vernacular humor, easygoing if still reasonably cynical, thereby unifying ATV's snappy romp through an assortment of styles (ska, pop-punk, even electro-dance), produced by Richard Mazda. Still, "There must be more to life than a heading in a record store."

Perry launched the Good Missionaries—who were, unfortunately, nothing special—during one period of ATV's dissolution. This band recalls Frank Zappa at his most pointless; the music meanders without form or reason. Creating this chaos may have been enjoyable for the people involved (including Henry Badowski), but that doesn't justify its release. Perry's subsequent solo outing belies its title by dishing up more of his semitortured recitation of what-a-bloody-world-it-is to the tune of . . . well, no recognizable tune at all.

What a surprise that, come 1987, a new lineup of ATV should rise up again with Peep Show. From the back cover: "It's happening again. The angels and demons have dragged me out." Yes, folks, it's back to the bile and the same old semi-anarchic self-indulgence that characterized much of ATV's non-Fergusson work. Yet if you can bear with him, Perry still strikes a few chords and touches a few nerves; his increased knowledge of musical forms and formats enables him to vary the tempo and style, adding horns and keyboards to good effect. Fans of the first ATV LP will probably enjoy this one, too.

By Sol, ATV had changed again (just Perry and one James Kylo), so forget musical progress or even continuity. Plus, the sound stinks. "Every Day" is a decent enough number rendered nearly unlistenable by strange guitar distortion (like an uncorrectable technical glitch); a similar problem mars "The Word." The most succinct and catchy track, "Pain Barrier," is undercut by cymbal echo. The sound of "Affecting People" is merely mediocre but, as with the other three, the all-important words just aren't clear. For fans only.

Offering five tracks from the first LP plus eight sides from non-LP singles, Splitting in 2 is an excellent collection. (But it should have included "Life After Life.") [cpl/g]

See also Psychic TV.

DAVE ALVIN

Every Night About This Time (nr/Demon) 1987

Romeo's Escape (Epic) 1987 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Border Radio (Enigma) 1987

Following his long tenure as the Blasters' guitar-slinging songwriter and a brief stay with X, Dave Alvin struck out on his own with the very fine Romeo's Escape LP (originally released in the UK, titled after another one of its songs). His first try as a lead singer won't win Dave any awards, but his hoarse delivery is more expressive than many technically superior vocalists. The contents are familiar roots rock and country, ranging from scorching boogie ("New Tattoo") to the weary testimony of a union man ("Brother on the Line"). Other highlights include gritty versions of tunes first recorded by the Blasters ("Long White Cadillac") and X ("Fourth of July"). They're less polished here, and plenty persuasive.

The Border Radio soundtrack is a decent bunch of odds'n'ends featuring Alvin, Chris D., Green on Red and members of X and Los Lobos. Tony Kinman of Rank and File delivers a nice, lazy version of Dave's title track (originally on Alvin's own LP); Alvin and Steve Berlin contribute ambient instrumentals. Mainly for completists. [jy]

See also Blasters, X.

PHIL ALVIN

Un"Sung" Stories (Slash) 1986

Without brother Dave's stirring songs, what on earth will Blasters frontman Phil Alvin sing? Not to worry, 'cause this traditional music buff assembles an enticing lineup of blues, jazz and gospel goodies on his solo debut. Good ol' Phil wraps his homey vocals around such venerable delights as Cab Calloway's "Minnie the Moocher" and "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?" in this engaging tour of classic styles, making Un"Sun" Stories a delightful history lesson. Sun Ra and the Arkestra even guest on three, nicely complementing Phil with their own loopy charm [jy]

See also Blasters.

ERIC AMBEL

See Del-Lords.

AMBITIOUS LOVERS

See Arto Lindsay.

AMERICAN MUSIC CLUB

The Restless Stranger (Grifter) 1986

Engine (Grifter-Frontier) 1987 •

California (Grifter-Frontier) 1988 •

United Kingdom (nr/Demon) 1990 •

Rock 'n' roll, especially the fringier areas thereof, has always been awash with beautiful losers. Maybe that's why AMC mastermind Mark Eitzel is so refreshing. His desperate confessional songs reveal a man with little doubt that he's a loser, but can't for the life of him see any beauty in said condition. With a no-frills Bay Area aggregation providing bare-bones backing, Eitzel's pointedly non-metaphorical writing sails past self-revelation on its way to self-evisceration.

The singer's unipolar, Ian Curtis-like vocal drone dominates The Restless Stranger's tales of solitude and delirium tremens to perhaps too great a degree. That affectation, and occasionally ponderous arrangements (he's cited, without irony, early Yes as an influence), blunt some of the songs' impact, though "Room Above the Bar" and "$1,000,000 Song" bull through.

A lineup juggle that preceded Engine (producer Tom Mallon stepped in to handle bass—and, more importantly, arranging—chores) nudges the band towards stark but gently applied folk-rock structure. On "Outside This Bar," a Bukowski-like attempt to maintain the hermetic seal around the singer's world, Eitzel wails almost unaccompanied; in this context, when the backing grows more strident (as on the harrowing "Art of Love"), the edge becomes even sharper.

Like a particularly cruel maze, California is exceedingly difficult to enter and all but impossible to extricate oneself from. Though it incongruously contains the spitting brawler "Bad Liquor," California is even more austere than previous AMC efforts. The cumulative emotional overload (particularly on "Laughingstock") is positively anesthetizing.

Dispensing with its predecessors' vague adherence to folk-rock structure, United Kingdom lacks obvious songs and melodies as such and, in its starkness, recalls nothing so much as Big Star's Sister Lovers. Perhaps the most interesting thing (besides the fact that the three live tracks lack any standard concert-album evidence of an audience's presence) is "The Hula Maiden," the first recording of Eitzel's occasional stage retreat into the safe harbor of broad Vegas schmaltz. With its wild mood swings—from morose to mocking—United Kingdom is the best microcosmic document yet of an erratic, invigorating and frightening band. [dss]

DANNY AMIS

See Raybeats

ANARCHY 6

See Red Cross.

BRUCE ANDERSON

See MX-80 Sound.

Laurie Anderson et al.

You're the Guy I Want to Share My Money With (Giorno Poetry Systems) 1981

Laurie Anderson

Big Science (Warner Bros.) 1982 •

Mister Heartbreak (Warner Bros.) 1984 •

The United States Live (Warner Bros.) 1984 •

Home of the Brave (Warner Bros.) 1986 •

Strange Angels (Warner Bros.) 1989 •

Balanced on a high-wire above performance art and art pop, Laurie Anderson's Big Science is perhaps the most brilliant chunk of psychedelia since Sgt. Pepper. She combines singsong narrative (often electronically treated) with a strong musical base that evokes, yet postdates, traditional musical forms. Big Science, featuring the surprise answering-machine hit single, "O Superman," is a most enjoyable work of genius. (Anderson had previously appeared on several compilation albums, the most prominent being You're the Guy I Want to Share My Money With, a two-record set also featuring John Giorno and William S. Burroughs.)

With the help of co-producers Bill Laswell, Roma Baran and Peter Gabriel (who sings on "his" cut), Anderson continues merging not-readily-identifiable morsels of '60s psychedelia and '70s progressivism into a blinding studio-perfect maelstrom of oddity on Mister Heartbreak, an excellent LP that was overshadowed in the year of its release by the five-record (!) United States Live, a summation of the state of Anderson's bewildering but popular performance art. Anderson and crew performed United States whole in London, Zurich and New York, where the Brooklyn Academy of Music, which commissioned the last of its four parts, provided the site (in February 1983) for recording the whole kit and kaboodle. Perhaps better suited for videotape, the album mixes spoken-word monologues, music and noise (in that order) with snippets of film, slides, lighting and other visual effects that are inevitably lost here. Anderson's impressionistic multimedia portrait of the USA makes a good case for her talents as standup comedian ("There are ten million stories in the naked city, but nobody can remember which is theirs"), yet reveals its miscellany of truths slowly and coolly. Although it's a little like having an artsy friend over who always talks at, rather than to, you, United States Live remains a definitive statement of what a clever artist can get away with—and that's a compliment. (Years later, the set was reissued as a four-CD box.)

Home of the Brave is the digitally recorded soundtrack to Anderson's performance film. Joined by an all-star collection of players (Adrian Belew, David Van Tieghem, Nile Rodgers, Bill Laswell), she proffers technically exquisite versions of familiar items as well as new compositions, all imbued with her usual blend of dadaist humor and bemused social criticism.

Besides demonstrating Anderson's future as an urban Judy Collins (check the title track), Strange Angels goes to a lot of trouble—and uses such sidepersons as the Roches, Bobby McFerrin, Anton Fier and Van Tieghem—to uncover its few gems: "Baby Doll," in which a bossy brain orders the protagonist around via scribbled notes, the wittily feminist "Beautiful Red Dress" and "The Day the Devil." It would be nice to say that Anderson doesn't need theatrical vocal inflections or intellectual songwriting gimmicks to make memorable, significant music, but she does. Despite the unflinchingly high level of craft and taste, songs without meaty hooks glide right by without leaving a trace.

[jw/mf/i]

AN EMOTIONAL FISH

An Emotional Fish (Atlantic) 1990 ◊

If there are any young rock bands in Dublin that don't want to be U2, you'd never know it from some of the ones who have debuted recently. The only glimmers of personality on this quartet's first album are patently derivative; except for the lead-off track, a building drone (with hooks) entitled "Celebrate." An Emotional Fish proves incapable of weaving anything remotely engaging from its borrowings. The CD adds a bonus track. [pn]

ANGELIC UPSTARTS

Teenage Warning (nr/Warner Bros.) 1979

We Gotta Get Out of This Place (nr/WEA) 1980

2,000,000 Voices (nr/EMI) 1981

Live (nr/EMI) 1981

Still from the Heart (nr/EMI) 1982

Reason Why? (nr/Anagram) 1983

Angel Dust (The Collected Highs 1978-1983)
(nr/Anagram) 1983 •

Last Tango in Moscow (nr/Picasso) 1984 (nr/Razor)
1988

Power of the Press (nr/Gas) 1986 (nr/Link Classics) 1990

Bootlegs and Rarities (nr/Dojo) 1986

Blood on the Terraces (nr/Link) 1987

Brighton Bomb (Chameleon) 1987

Live and Loud!! (nr/Link) 1988

England's Alive EP (nr/Skunkx) 1988

With the commanding Mensi (Tommy Mensforth) as singer and spokesperson, the Angelic Upstarts came down from Newcastle in 1978—after self-releasing a powerful and controversial protest single, "The Murder of Liddle Towers"—and found a patron in Sham 69's Jimmy Pursey, who produced their first album. As one of the groups responsible for the continued strength of '70s punk in England, it is to the Upstarts' credit that they have avoided the demagogic stupidity of other skin-head bands by maintaining a progressive attitude and speaking out against racism and fascism.

Through shifting lineups (several of which included ex-Roxy Music drummer Paul Thompson), the band's early albums—effectively culled on the excellent Angel Dust compilation—are classic/standard working-class thrash, a predictable and hardly timeless jolt of accented electric rabble-raising, but no less effective for it.

Reason Why? is the Upstarts' great leap forward, a blend of angry socio-political lyrics with a controlled and melodic rock attack (broken on the title track with a reggae digression and on the a cappella folk ballad, "Geordies Wife") that is punky only in Mensi's unpolished bellow and the band's gang-shouted backing vocals. Otherwise, the guitars build an attractive base—like the Clash on Give 'Em Enough Rope—that is embellished by guest sax and keyboards. The songs are competent enough and the production, by guitarist Mond, captures it all with clarity and energy. A surprisingly good record for all rock tastes.

The (old) Clash comparison carries through on the equally listenable Brighton Bomb (the American equivalent of Power of the Press), which actually contains a song addressed specifically to Strummer: "Joe Where Are You Now?" quotes assorted Clash tunes to make its point about punk traditionalism. As modern electric folksingers, the Upstarts' unprepossessing but palatable musical approach may be excused in consideration of the lyrics' good intentions: simplicity is in direct proportion to the sincerity. Two appropriate non-originals ("Soldier" and Eric Bogle's "Greenfields of France") show a healthy broadening of scope and a fearless respect for folk music in all its many variants.

The picture of Mensi on the back cover of Blood on the Terraces (the title track is about football hooliganism) shows him smiling and short-haired (not crew-cut) in a Nike T-shirt, looking for all the world like a cheerful suburban brother-in-law. Typical of the increasingly diverse and intelligent quartet (which here includes Splodgenessabounds' Max Splodge on drums), the album includes a reggae tune ("It's Your Life"), a punked-out Mel Tillis cover ("Ruby"), a rejection of cold war mythology ("I Don't Wanna Fight the Soviet") and a touching prison drama ("Four Grey Walls"). [i]

ANGRY SAMOANS

Inside My Brain EP (Bad Trip) 1980 (PVC) 1987 (Triple X)
1990 •

Back from Samoa (Bad Trip) 1982 (PVC) 1987 (Triple X)
1990 •

Yesterday Started Tomorrow EP (PVC) 1987 (Triple X)
1990 •

Gimme Samoa: 31 Garbage-Pit Hits [CD] (PVC) 1987 •

STP Not LSD (PVC) 1988 (Triple X) 1990 •

Live at Rhino Records (Triple X) 1990 •

Return to Samoa (nr/Shakin' Street) 1990

METAL MIKE

Plays the Hits of the 90's EP (Triple X) 1991 •

Hypothetically following in the Richard Meltzer/early Dictators tradition at first, this Los Angeles quintet led by erstwhile rock critics Metal Mike Saunders and Gregg Turner (both vocals/guitar) mucks around in the self-conscious gutter of conceptual punk satire. Unfortunately, besides being off-brand musicians, the Samoans aren't very funny. The six-song Inside My Brain manages to spit out some snickering lyrics on "Get off the Air," a vituperative attack on DJ Rodney Bingenheimer, but otherwise offers nothing to get excited about. The brief, well-played songs on Back from Samoa have cool titles ("My Old Man's a Fatso," "Tuna Taco," "They Saved Hitler's Cock," etc.), but the lyrics are rarely as clever.

Yesterday Started Tomorrow adds another half-dozen terse items to the catalogue, neither the words nor the plain-issue rock tracks evince effort or imagination beyond the bare essentials. Hardly amateurish, this impersonal recording is adequate only in a technical sense.

The Gimme Samoa CD consolidates the entire 31-track contents of the band's first three records on one disc.

Proceeding from there, STP Not LSD has great snarly guitar tone and utterly competent playing, but Saunders and bassist Todd Homer still sing the dumb-ass lyrics like they're reading them upside down in a mirror. Although these guys are obviously intelligent junk culture junkies, their inability to follow the prime directive—garbage in, garbage out—remains an insurmountable obstacle.

Those who just can't get enough of the Samoans' magic will probably be anxious to own the band's live album, an atrociously bad sounding document of a short 1979 (!) show before an audience of—judging by the uncontrollable applause—five or six. Playing standard-issue mid-tempo punk, the quintet thrashes its way through "My Old Man's a Fatso," "I'm in Love with Your Mom" (co-written by Meltzer), the Ramones' "Commando" and six more.

The archival Return to Samoa consists of eight previously unissued studio tracks originally recorded for Back from Samoa, with Jeff Dahl doing the vocals. (He joined after Saunders had left the band. The group cut the LP, Saunders returned and redid the vocals, leaving only Dahl's bass playing on one Back from Samoa song.) Return also contains eight live tracks recorded in New York City in 1981.

In early '91, Metal Mike Saunders issued a six-song solo debut. [i]

See also Jeff Dahl Group.

ANGST

Angst EP (Happy Squid) 1983 (SST) 1986

Life Life (SST) 1985

Mending Wall (SST) 1986

Mystery Spot (SST) 1987

Cry for Happy (SST) 1988 •

This Denver-to-San Francisco artpunk trio of brothers Joe Pope (bass/vocals) and Jon E. Risk (guitar/vocals) plus drummer Michael Hursey serves up uncompromising, driving music in a number of directions on their debut EP. They get funky on "Pig," a heartwarming old-fashioned song about the law, drone on the junked-out "Another Day" and drive straight ahead on a would-be political anthem, "Die Fighting." Throughout, Angst manage to stay just one step ahead of their pretensions. Credit a sense of humor, exercised at the expense of some great Americans: "Neil Armstrong" is a goofy look at a space cadet; "Nancy" asks, chanting over a drum beat, "Does Nancy perform acts of oral copulation?"

The articulate lyrics on Life Life again prove Angst's prowess for turning politically informed ideas into mature and witty tunes. Plain sound and no-frills arrangements underscore the preeminence of function over form. "Glad I'm Not in Russia," delivered as dustbowl country-rock, is a fairly incisive comment on the cultural divisions between the superpowers; the skittish and busy dance-funk of "This Gun's for You" mixes up several topics but stays sharp; personal emotional issues ("Friends," "Turn Away," "Never Going to Apologize") receive the same coldly objective analysis.

Stylistic variety also underpins Mending Wall, another dose of Angst's tense and rough-edged musical simplicity, enhanced this time with noticeably stronger vocal harmonies by Risk and Pope. The lyrics are less specific and more thoughtful, individual alienation, confusion and anomie are transformed into powerful, uniquely directed songs. A cover of Paul Simon's "Richard Cory," however, goes wrong, pruning the melody and bare-boning it into an ugly ghost of the original.

Angst took a calculated risk on Mystery Spot, engaging producer Vitus Mataré to help flesh out and upgrade the sound. It almost worked. Multi-tracked guitars and dynamic arrangements bring the songs into near-pop focus, with unprecedented melody, sensitivity, structure and vocal appeal, but atrocious recording quality (and/or a heinously bungled mix) buries them in a flat, muddy swamp. Pope and Risk continue to reveal themselves in emotionally resonant songs—too bad their ambitious effort was spoiled by a technicality.

With Andy Kaps replacing Hursey, Angst and Mataré continued working in the same vein on Cry for Happy, a fine-sounding (except for the drums) record that encompasses semi-acoustic countryish pop, nervous rock funk, boogie, desolate electric blues ("Motherless Child") and straight Angst-rock with pretty harmonies. With lyrics of loneliness and joy that are as emotionally ambivalent as the album title, Cry for Happy brings Angst out into the open as never before. [j/l/i]

ANIMAL LOGIC

See Stewart Copeland.

ANNABELLA

See Bow Wow Wow.

ADAM ANT

See Adam and the Ants.

ANTHRAX

Fistful of Metal (Megaforce) 1984 •

Armed and Dangerous EP (Megaforce) 1985 •

Spreading the Disease (Megaforce Worldwide-Island) 1985 •

Among the Living (Megaforce Worldwide-Island) 1987 •

I'm the Man EP (Megaforce Worldwide-Island) 1987 •

State of Euphoria (Megaforce Worldwide-Island) 1988 •

Persistence of Time (Megaforce Worldwide-Island) 1990 •

Disproving the fantasy that New York bands were too cool to play heavy metal, Anthrax abandoned the hardcore scene early enough to get in on the ground floor of the underground movement that eventually spawned such estimable headbanging ensembles as Megadeth and Metallica. The quintet's debut, Fistful of Metal is fast and furious, but not overbearingly so, holding to a near-rock sound punctuated by dizzying guitar solos. Singer Neil Turbin has a good strong voice but lets fly with stereotypical falsetto howls far too often for adult audio comfort.

Turbin and bassist Dan Lilker were subsequently replaced in what became Anthrax's permanent lineup. (Lilker went on to form Nuclear Assault.) The Armed and Dangerous mini-LP unveiled the new lineup on five unassuming cuts: a pair of studio previews for Spreading the Disease, two live renditions of songs from the previous LP and a reverent, hard-hitting version of "God Save the Queen." The album that followed is, all things considered, much better, a scalding assault that reasserts the band's punk bearings with chunky chords, varying tempos and searing vocals.

The back cover of Among the Living, co-produced by Eddie Kramer, shows Anthrax looking relaxed in a New York subway station, wearing sneakers, jeans and leather jackets. The album focuses the band's sound and attitude to arena-scale, replacing old-fashioned metal clichés with a demi-hardcore approach—shifting tempos, gang vocals—that translated well to larger venues. Besides "Caught in a Mosh," two songs based on Stephen King prose and one inspired by a British comic character, Anthrax trots out a bit of common Bronx street slang to humorous effect in "Efilnikufesin (N.F.L.)," while using the word "dissin" in "Indians." An entirely different sort of post-metal record that is uniquely New York.

Anthrax's merry cross-cultural adventure stretches even further afield on I'm the Man, a six-cut EP with three versions—"Censored," "Def Uncensored" and "Extremely Def III Uncensored"—of the hysterical Beasties-styled rap-rocking title track. The EP also contains live takes of "Caught in a Mosh" and "I Am the Law," plus a convincing rendition of "Sabbath Bloody Sabbath."

By 1988, however, the Mad magazine-style band portrait on State of Euphoria's back cover wasn't Anthrax's only cartoonish element. Although the album went gold faster than any of its predecessors and showed a reasonable amount of progression (especially in the lyrics: "Who Cares Wins" is a hard-hitting depiction of Manhattan's homeless), the riffs bounce around on pogo sticks, and the band sounds aware that, stylistically, they were moshing themselves into a corner.

Anthrax took some time off before returning with the bruising Persistence of Time; a leaner, tougher band attacks the revitalized songs with more energy than any effort since Spreading the Disease. The self-parodic element remains, but Anthrax fights it with a roaring second wind, confronting the real world (family abuse, racism) with music as tough as the subject matter. And if you really want to know what time it is as far as the post-punk world goes, they cover Joe Jackson's "Got the Time" (from his first album) as if it were a hard-rock classic.

Like all movements, the trash-metal thing was done within three years, leaving five (or so) first-class bands and hundreds of mediocre ones. Anthrax is unquestionably one of the best, adding a sense of fun and humor to a genre that far too often tried to be scary and succeeded only in being ridiculous. [i/ja]

ANTIETAM

Antietam (Homestead) 1985

Music from Elba (Homestead) 1986

Burgoo (Triple X) 1990 •

Everywhere Outside (Triple X) 1991 •

Although the genealogical successor to Louisville, Kentucky's Babylon Dance Band, Antietam—named after an 1862 Civil War battle—actually came together in New York. The first album rushes madly through artlessly raucous neo-pop; guitarist Tara Key's strident voice clashes with her three male bandmates' (everybody sings), obliterating intelligent lyrics and potentially nice melodies in the fray. Michael Weinert's clumsy time-keeping never locks into the beat; flashes of mellifluous invention teasingly suggest what Antietam might accomplish if they practiced.

The improvements on Music from Elba can be traced to a new drummer, more coordinated playing and wisely moderated tempos. Still, the discordant dual vocals by Key and husband/bassist Tim Harris (shades of X) and their dull songwriting limits the LP's appeal to those immune to bad singing. Danna Pentes of Fetchin Bones guests on violin.

With production by Yo La Tengo's Ira Kaplan and Georgia Hubley, Key and Harris made the gently grating Burgoo (pressed on clear blue vinyl for those old-fashioned enough to notice), removing any lingering doubt about their inclination or ability to progress. The songs hold more water than before but, after all this time, Key is no closer to singing in tune, their playing is still one-take amateurish and Charles Schultz's unsteady drumming is as helpful to the songs as a rusty threshing machine. If 10,000 Maniacs had younger siblings, they might sound like Antietam. [i]

ANTI-NOWHERE LEAGUE

Anti-Nowhere League EP (WXYZ) 1982

We Are ... the League (WXYZ) 1982 (nr/ID) 1984

Live in Yugoslavia (nr/ID) 1983

Long Live the League (nr/ABC) 1985 •

The Perfect Crime (GWR-Profile) 1987

Live & Loud!! (nr/Link) 1990

Fuck Around the Clock EP (nr/Link) 1990

At first, it was awfully hard to take this cartoonish punk quartet from Tunbridge Wells seriously. The songwriting team of Animal (Nick Karner) and Magoo penned irate diatribes aimed at what they called the "nowheres" of the world: straights, nine-to-fives, etc. Although one can't doubt them when they spit "I Hate . . . People," they do manage to inject a sense of humor on the first album, which can soften even the most potentially offensive song, such as the ragingly misogynist "Woman." And anyone who doubts their ingenuity should listen to the blazing (but surprisingly appropriate) treatment of Ralph McTell's folkie chestnut, "Streets of London." (That number also appears on the prior American EP, joined by two other tunes from the album and a bonus cut.)

The live album was indeed recorded in Tito-land (April 1983) and features a full airing of the band's repertoire, including "I Hate People," "Woman," "We Are the League," "Streets of London" and "Let's Break the Law." The Zagreb audience is surprisingly enthusiastic as the quartet puts on a no-holds-barred rock show, captured in trebly but adequately clear sound. Long Live the League is a compilation, containing outtakes and remixes.

Four years on, the League evidently decided to try a new approach—or ten. Like an '80s rock jukebox gone out of control, tracks on The Perfect Crime imitate Big Country, the Stranglers, Alarm, Buzzcocks and others, with surprisingly good results. "(I Don't Believe) This Is My England," which actually doesn't sound like anybody, is a touchingly anthemic folk ballad that couldn't be further from dumb punk. Overall, the album boasts reasonably sturdy melodies, plus intelligent and positive-minded political lyrics—a likable new chapter in this unlikely saga.

The public, used to a far less respectable League, didn't take to the LP, and the group split up in 1988. The following year, however, a one-off reunion gig in the band's hometown was recorded and released as Live & Loud!! The three Perfect Crime songs get first-album treatment (no synthesizers), and the album rocks in the band's old style from start to finish. Kicking off with the classic "For You," the League's characteristic humor, insouciance and gusto are in full effect, particularly on a version of Eddie Cochran's "Something Else" copied from the Sex Pistols' version, "We Are the League" and "Streets of London." A worthy finale, bidding adieu with a loud belch rather than a whimper.

[ks/i/jr]

ANY THREE INITIALS

See Flipper.

ANY TROUBLE

Where Are All the Nice Girls? (Stiff) 1980

Live at the Venue (nr/Stiff) 1980 •

Wheels in Motion (Stiff) 1981

Any Trouble (EMI America) 1983

Wrong End of the Race (EMI America) 1984

Stiff Records had great commercial hopes for this Manchester quartet, led by balding, bespectacled singer/guitarist/pianist Clive Gregson, whose songs—mostly about the unhappy side of love—have always shown real talent. It unfortunately took the group a long time to escape their basic facelessness and locate a sound, a slow start that may be why Any Trouble ended without ever receiving the acclaim they deserved.

The first LP suffers from (reasonable) comparisons to early Elvis Costello, and shows Any Trouble to be a pub band five years after the end of that era, playing competent, melodic rock with no special character. Only "The Hurt" and the stunningly derivative "Second Choice" (a retread of "Less than Zero") leave any lasting impression beyond overall nice-guy swiftness.

Live at the Venue, recorded onstage in London in May '80, includes performances of both aforementioned songs (and five more from the first album), plus a rendition of Springsteen's "Growing Up" (shades of Greg Kihn). The band shows a helpful increase in spunk and velocity, but still falls short of being exciting. (Although Live at the Venue never came out in America as such, six selections were issued as the promo-only Live and Alive 12-inch.)

Wheels in Motion, produced by Mike Howlett (later a hitmaker for A Flock of Seagulls), evinces further improvement, adding impressive intricacy and dynamics to the arrangements. Gregson's growing confidence as a singer helps put across his pessimistic (but not cynical) lyrics on songs like "Trouble with Love," "Another Heartache" and the outstanding "Walking in Chains." Wheels in Motion still isn't a record to make you stop in your tracks, but an extremely likable collection of intelligently written rock songs performed ably and without pretense.

Any Trouble, by a half-new lineup, is the band's first great album, a wonderful new blend of soul and pop strengthened by Gregson's sharpening melodic sense and lightening lyrical outlook. "Please Don't Stop," "Man of the Moment," "Northern Soul" and other tracks resemble a non-obnoxious Hall and Oates crossed with Costello and recorded in Motown; production by David Kershenbaum provides the sonic variety and sophistication previously lacking. Gregson's development into a powerful, sensitive singer is merely the icing on the cake.

The group inexplicably re-recorded three early (and not timeless) songs for Wrong End of the Race, adding a rousing cover of the Foundations' "Baby Now That I've Found You," and a bunch of new Gregson compositions. (The US edition deletes "Lucky Day" and "Yesterday's Love," a reprise of the group's first single, to make way for three tracks not on the UK version.) Featuring an illustrious cast of guests (Richard Thompson, Billy Bremner, Geoff Muldaur), the LP is less stylized than its remarkable predecessor, but bristles with renewed vigor and rich horn-and-vocal-filled arrangements. Without fanfare, that was the end of Any Trouble. Gregson carried on, making a solo album, working closely with Richard Thompson and forming a remarkably fruitful partnership with Christine Collister. [i]

See also Clive Gregson.

APACHE DANCERS

War Stories (Happy Hermit-IRS) 1990 •

Bernadette Colomine has one of those ooh-la-la French accents that can make grown men blush; guitarist Tom Durbin sings in the lonesome voice of someone who wishes he were raised on a strict diet of Hank Williams. That wild cultural contrast is what makes this LA-based cowboy-rock quartet (which includes Rank and File's old drummer) so uncommon and, in one spot, uncommonly good: "You're the Reason," the non-original duet which opens War Stories, is a left-field country-rock grabber. Unfortunately, most of the album (haphazardly co-produced by Earle Mankey) is an either/or proposition, offering Colomine's unsteady pitch (in English and French) without Durbin's rugged resonance (his melodic skills are only a little better) or vice versa. Additionally impaired by Durbin's terrible guitar playing and dumb-ass lyrics, Apache Dancers can be as incomprehensible and off-putting as their namesakes. [i]

APB

Something to Believe In (Link) 1985 •

Cure for the Blues (Link) 1986

Missing You Already EP (Link) 1986

A popular member of Scotland's neo-funk movement, this Aberdeen group found a friend in American college radio, where the quintet's pressurized dance-rock was very well-received. The ten 1981-'85 singles compiled on Something to Believe In are either effectively claustrophobic and offbeat ("Shoot You Down") or trite and obnoxious ("Rainy Day"). The CD has bonus tracks.

Cure for the Blues is a fine album of new tunes, not all of which follow the band's basic pattern—"Part of the Deal" is light pop that resembles Aztec Camera. Iain Slater's intense bass playing and mildly adenoidal (if pleasantly accented) vocals drive the songs, leaving the rest of the band in a subsidiary role.

Slater switched instruments with guitarist Glenn Roberts in time for the four-track Missing You Already 12-inch, nicely evening out the sound and providing more variety in the stylistic mix. While half the tunes are pretty routine, "Best of Our Love" uses piano and strong rhythm guitar to propel the beat into a soulful shake. [1]

A POPULAR HISTORY OF SIGNS

A Popular History of Signs EP (Wax Trax!) 1984

Comrades (nr/Jungle) 1985

Taste (nr/Jungle) 1987

England in the Rain EP (nr/Jungle) 1988

Led by singer/bassist/keyboardist Andrew Jarman (vocally something of a David Byrne student), this London quartet drifts between arty synth-dance and lightly played mood music. Using dinky electronic percussion rather than a drummer in the early days, the enigmatic group's records alternately wax chilly, funky, humorous and clever.

Save for a few exceptions on Side Two, the poorly structured songs on Comrades typically work one groove for several minutes and then fade out with the vocals still going. Despite the nicely spare arrangements, provocative subject matter ("Lenin," for instance), crystalline production and flawless playing, this is a mighty boring way to spend an afternoon.

Ministry's Al Jourgensen remixed "Ladder Jack" and "House" for the eponymous American 12-inch, a four-song sampling of the band's pre-Comrades 45s. Both of those remixes also appear on Taste, a 1980-'87 singles compilation that presents an absurdly bloodless trashing of Lou Reed's "Rock & Roll" and adds two previously unreleased items, including an awfully strange cover of John Fogerty's "Run Through the Jungle."

Fielding a solid five-man lineup, APHOS comes out of the woods on the obviously commercial England in the Rain. Unlike its previous unpredictable self-indulgences, the band now reveals a clear-cut focus: the half-dozen peppy songs are all standard stylish modern dance rock that compares favorably to Wang Chung and that whole post-Ultravox ilk. If Jarman weren't such a duff singer, these attractively produced tracks might be really appealing. [1]

AQUANETTAS

Love with the Perfect Stranger (Netzwerk-IRS) 1990 •

A cross between Josie and the Pussycats and the Replacements, this all-female New York outfit's debut album (named after a Natalie Wood movie) offers a better peek into girlworld than a hundred issues of Vogue. "Faults" teaches a lesson in how to blow off a bad date; "15 Men" iterates a hilarious catalogue of conquests. With guitarist Jill Richmond tossing off some mean leads, the music is a slightly glossed-up version of garage rock, with hints of surf. Although the album turns predictable by the middle of Side Two, laconic putdowns like "Larry and Pete are just typical guys/ Blasting their music and watching the thighs" make Love a rewarding affair. [kss]

ARABIAN PRINCE

See N.W.A.

ARCADIA

See Duran Duran.

A R KANE

Sixty Nine (Rough Trade) 1988 •

"I" (nr/Rough Trade) 1989 •

remixes EP (nr/Rough Trade) 1990 •

Rising to prominence in 1987 as Colourbox's collaborators on M/A/R/R/S's surprise club hit "Pump Up the Volume," Britain's A R Kane—Alex and Rudi—have lived up to their apt name, which is not just a cute pun but an accurate summation of everything about the enigmatic duo. The only musical influence they cop to is Miles Davis, but you can be sure they're not referring to any of his famous quintets: A R Kane harks back to the deep atmospherics and funk noise of Davis' mid-to-late-'70s work. Co-produced with Ray Shulman, Sixty Nine is, as one might surmise, mostly concerned with sensuality, but an enervated sensuality—the grooves here are submerged, the singing like some strange male siren calling from a cave. The sense of desperate menace hidden amid calm recalls another singular work, Robert Wyatt's Rock Bottom.

Mixing sixteen proper songs with ten sound snippets, "I" runs a wider gamut of song genres than the debut. While "Love from Outer Space" seems like a conventional techno-dance number, "Crack Up" offers some amusing off-kilter piano and "Snow Joke" serves up Philly soul strings. Deeper into the record, though, the music turns harsher, then downright hostile, although the vocals remain implacable and drained of personality.

Five "I" songs appear in new versions ("Crack Up" gets two makeovers) on remixes, an EP which further demonstrates the band's enjoyable willfulness: remixes are generally intended to pep up the originals for better dance-floor consumption, but most of the songs are more restive here than they were on "I". (Robin Guthrie of the Cocteau Twins did half the honors; the band did the rest themselves.) Unfortunately, a few numbers sound more weak-kneed than stripped-down, and their removal from the album's context doesn't help. [gk]

JOAN ARMATRADING

Whatever's for Us (nr/Cube) 1972 (A&M) 1973 •

Back to the Night (A&M) 1975 •

Joan Armatrading (A&M) 1976 •

Show Some Emotion (A&M) 1977 •
 To the Limit (A&M) 1978 •
 Steppin' Out (A&M) 1979
 How Cruel EP (A&M) 1979
 Me Myself I (A&M) 1980 •
 Walk Under Ladders (A&M) 1981 •
 The Key (A&M) 1983 •
 Track Record (A&M) 1983 •
 Secret Secrets (A&M) 1985 •
 Sleight of Hand (A&M) 1986 •
 The Shouting Stage (A&M) 1988 •
 Compact Hits EP [CD] (nr/A&M) 1988 •
 Hearts and Flowers (A&M) 1990 •
 The Very Best of Joan Armatrading (nr/A&M) 1991 •

For two decades, singer/guitarist/songwriter Joan Armatrading—born in the West Indies and raised in Birmingham, England—has been making records of warm, emotionally resonant music that has earned her a devoted following on at least two continents. Despite brushes with chart stardom, Armatrading remains an independent-minded cult star whose remarkable and individual voice, regardless of her albums' assorted settings, never wavers. In recent years, newcomers like Suzanne Vega (the two share a label) and Tracy Chapman (the two seemingly share one voice) have found success holding to much the same folk-based traditions as Armatrading, underlining her achievements by following in their path.

Whatever's for Us, produced between Elton John albums by Gus Dudgeon, was a collaborative effort with lyricist Pam Nestor; on her own, with Dada/Vinegar Joe member Pete Gage at the helm, Back to the Night proved equally uncommercial. She then teamed up with Glyn Johns, who brought in ex-members of Fairport Convention as backing musicians for Joan Armatrading, an extraordinarily thoughtful and moving album that contains "Down to Zero" and "Love and Affection," two of her most enduring and powerful compositions.

The intimate, upbeat Show Some Emotion is warm and lovely, an unaffected, casual-sounding album of songs that, if not among her best, are more than presentable and occasionally captivating. Continuing with Johns, Armatrading made the harder-rocking To the Limit, a slightly dated-sounding collection of strong songs (which includes the notable "Bottom to the Top," set to a gentle reggae beat) played by a small electric band that, at its most exuberant, resembles a modest Mad Dogs and Englishmen. Johns also produced Steppin' Out, a live document drawn from American performances: backed by a five-piece band, Armatrading delivers nine songs, including "Love and Affection" and "Cool Blue Stole My Heart." How Cruel is a four-song 12-inch containing some non-LP material.

Me Myself I was produced by Richard Gottehrer and performed by a stellar cast of Anglo-American rock musicians (including Chris Spedding, Clarence Clemmons, Danny Federici and three members of David Letterman's band). Even in this all-electric setting, Armatrading and her songs hold up nicely. "Me Myself I" is brilliant, a chillingly beautiful declaration of independence with a memorable pop melody; the rest of the record explores the vagaries of love and percolates with energy, grace and sensitivity.

Steve Lillywhite took the production reins for Walk Under Ladders, engaging a fascinating selection of players—XTC's Andy Partridge, King Crimsonites Tony Levin and Mel Collins. Sly and Robbie and Thomas Dolby. Although the stylized results short-change Joan's personality a bit, successful numbers like "I Wanna Hold You" and "At the Hop" affirm her courageous desire to explore uncharted areas.

The Key is a slick package that employs many of the same players as Walk Under Ladders to recapture the potent melodic pop elements of Me Myself I. "(I Love It When You) Call Me Names" is a should-have-been-a-hit single with spectacular multi-tracked harmonies and a hair-raising Adrian Belew guitar solo. "The Game of Love" has an Edge-like echoed guitar sound and a memorable chorus. Motels starmaker Val Garay produced the bristling "Drop the Pilot" (Lillywhite did all but one other track) with loud power chords and a stomping backbeat; although spoiled by ill-advised synths, "I Love My Baby" ends the record with a tender lullaby.

Track Record basically compiles Armatrading's most popular songs from six of her prior albums, but also includes a pair of otherwise non-LP items ("Frustration" and "Heaven") and a track from How Cruel.

Secret Secrets is Armatrading's admission of pain and suffering. In "Persona Grata" she announces, "I'm your whipping boy," adding "I'm in love with you" in a resigned, grim tone. "Love by You" and "Friends Not Lovers" mourn the end of a relationship with tragic depth. In "Strange," she realizes "I am not missing you"; other songs ("Moves," "One Night") allow more hope to shine through the tears. Pino Palladino's inimitable fretless bass provides the most notable instrumental character; other than on "Moves," the sophisticated modern backing is rather faceless.

Armatrading produced Sleight of Hand, using just a drummer, bassist and keyboardist (with a few minor guest contributions). She acquires herself well, both on guitar and behind the board, with songs that suggest more personal happiness and stability than Secret Secrets. Without falling into any easily identifiable musical department, Sleight of Hand has only fascinating sounds, able songwriting and the peerless performing talents of Ms. Armatrading to recommend it. Not bad.

Served up on a sensuous plate dominated by horns, Palladino's bass and flashy guitar work by Phil Palmer and Mark Knopfler, The Shouting Stage—another self-production, this time in a smooth and jazzy adult contemporary vein—explores romance from both ends of the emotional spectrum. The rapture of "Did I Make You Up" and "Watch Your Step" quickly gives way to "Words" and culminates in "The Shouting Stage." Although decent and tasteful, this anxious-sounding effort is not among Armatrading's most musically compelling.

The Compact Hits EP features a non-representative quartet of tracks ("Love and Affection," "Willow," etc.), none of which were actually big hits.

Armatrading selected another one of England's most expressive bassists, Mick Karn, to play on Hearts and Flowers, a handsomely slick and modern realization of her traditional artistic values. After announcing that there's "More Than One Kind of Love" and overtly expressing her spiritual awakening in "Promise Land," Armatrading uses intentionally ambiguous lyrics to convey deep adoration that could just as easily be for a person as for a deity. [i]

ARMOURY SHOW

See Richard Jobson.

ARSENAL

See Big Black.

ART & LANGUAGE

See Red Crayola

ART BEARS

See Henry Cow.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

Give Thanks (Reflex) 1984

In This Life (Can. Lone Wolf) 1987

VIC BONDI

The Ghost Dance (Wishing Well) 1988

JONES VERY

Words and Days (Hawker) 1989 •

Articles of Faith gave singer/guitarist Vic Bondi—a Chicago punk luminary and an articulate thinker more than willing to speak his mind—a podium from which to spout his vision, and spout he does on the Bob Mould-produced (and released) Give Thanks. The quintet wastes no time in cutting to the core of its anger; each song is masterfully crafted, from the pounding and ironic “Give Thanks,” the finger-pointing “In Your Suit,” and the embittered “American Dreams” to the tragically tender “Everyman for Himself.” Though AOF played hardcore, the songs are fully developed, and occasionally run well over the genre’s usual time limits. AOF consistently demonstrates superior talent, exploring various branches from the punk mainstream without stepping across the line to either pop or heavy metal.

Mould produced AOF’s second LP in 1985, but it wasn’t released until early ’87; parts of it sound a lot like contemporaneous Soul Asylum. Some songs scale back the percussion; an acoustic guitar is added to strengthen songs like “Nowhere”; the vocals are imaginatively layered on all thirteen tracks. Highbrow hardcore?

After AOF’s demise, Bondi—by then a University of Massachusetts history instructor—returned with a surprising, dry-as-dust solo album. Strumming an acoustic guitar (with overdubbed electric accents on a few songs) and singing in a hoarse, unmusical voice, he fills The Ghost Dance with plaintive, obliquely poetic songs about relationships, in settings like “Montana,” “Cambridge” and “Abilene Sunset.” Proceeding from the album title (a carefully explained reference to a Native American religious movement of the late 1800s), “Mister Noon” is a striking piece of evocative prose that doesn’t work as a song.

Joining up with a powerful rhythm section, Bondi formed Jones Very (named after a 19th-century Unitarian minister) and cut the impressive but uneven Words and Days, a loudly textured rock album with intelligently sophisticated lyrics. Bondi occasionally unleashes a frightening guttural shriek, making several songs unlistenable harsh. But when he and bassist Jeff Goddard jam (as on “Cut”) or harmonize on tuneful material (like the excellent title track), Jones Very turns into an exciting, invigorating proposition, a taut bundle of hyped-up melodic rock that packs a serious headkick. [ic:m:i]

ART OF NOISE

Into Battle with the Art of Noise EP (ZTT-Island) 1983

(Who’s Afraid Of?) The Art of Noise! (ZTT-Island) 1984 •

In Visible Silence (China-Chrysalis) 1986

(China-PolyGram) 1989 •

Re-works of Art of Noise (China-Chrysalis) 1986 •

In No Sense? Nonsense! (China-Chrysalis) 1987

(China-PolyGram) 1989 •

The Best of the Art of Noise (China-Polydor) 1988 •

Below the Waste (China-Polydor) 1989 •

The Ambient Collection (China-Polydor) 1990 •

Originally a pop producer’s idea of nouveau hip-hop instrumentals, the Art of Noise—a brilliant post-rock meld of studio/tape wizardry, floor-shaking dance percussion and adventurous audio experimentation—has turned into a hardy, self-sufficient organization with a distinctive creative outlook. The group began as a semi-anonymous studio band directed by Trevor Horn, who issued the records as an art statement on his Zang Tuum Tumb label. Into Battle has the aptly named “Beat Box,” with choral vocals and crazy effects (including, repeatedly, a car starting) punctuating typically booming electronic drums. But it also has far lighter essays. “The Army Now,” with cut-up Andrews Sisters-style vocals, and “Moments in Love,” an obsequious, lush backing track (for Barry White, perhaps?) that goes nowhere for an unconscionably long time. Produced to some incomprehensible blueprint, bits from one track often turn up in the midst of another.

The full-length Who’s Afraid Of? album contains some of the same cuts, but most notably adds the brilliant “Close (to the Edit),” a furious and unforgettable march of highly organized rhythm, effects and jagged musical/vocal ejaculations. Elsewhere, spoken-word collages mingle with the disjointed assemblages to create newsreel-inflected dance music of enormous vitality and originality. Remarkable and significant, with an electronic language all its own.

Proving their autonomy, the heart of Art of Noise—Anne Dudley, J.J. Jeczalik and producer Gary Langan—split from Horn and ZTT in 1985. Forming the China label, the group issued the “Legs” single, revealing a desire to invade the pop market by locating a functional compromise with it. A full new album, In Visible Silence, followed several months later. Although no individual track is as gripping as “Close (to the Edit),” a semi-straight version of “Peter Gunn,” with twang legend Duane Eddy playing the unforgettable guitar line, became a substantial international hit; the rest is typically intriguing, aggravating and entertaining.

A long 12-inch mix of “Peter Gunn,” joined by two other previously issued 45s—“Legacy” (a drastic variation on “Legs”) and “Paranoimia,” recorded with the voice of Max Headroom breaking the usual vocal silence—comprise one side of Re-works. The rest of the long mini-album documents Art of Noise onstage in London, playing “Legs,” “Paranoimia” and the ten-minute “Hammersmith to Tokyo and Back.” The concert format has its obvious hazards for a painstaking group which is so reliant on the studio, but the results are more unsatisfying than disappointing. In any case, the ability to put this stuff over in front of an audience is noteworthy.

Shelving their pop ambitions, Art of Noise outfoxed themselves on In No Sense? Nonsense!, an overreaching undertaking that incorporates an orchestra, choir, horn section and guest rock musicians. The flaccid tracks are short on rhythmic power and wander all over the stylistic map with little logic or focus. Taken as a whole, this indeed makes no sense. The handful of numbers which indifferently plunder past adventures manage to be dull even when they resemble things that were exciting. Sonic quality is shortchanged by the technical considerations of recording so many musicians: abandoning modern high-tech claustrophobia for the inappropriately warm, open ambience of a cathedral ranks as a gross creative mistake.

The Best of the Art of Noise is a fine compilation, covering all of the band's high points—alone (“Beat Box,” “Close (to the Edit),” “Legacy,” “Dragnet ’88”) and in collaboration with Max Headroom, Duane Eddy (a different mix than appears on Re-works) and Tom Jones (an endless rendition of Prince’s “Kiss” of more conceptual than musical merit). Although some of the tracks run on way too long, this colorful résumé offers a fine summary of the band’s unique experimentation. (The vinyl edition contains 7-inch mixes; the CD and cassette contain 12-inch versions.)

Below the Waste dabbles with world music (using South African vocal group Mahlathini and the Mahotella Queens on several songs) and a Western orchestra, but the material simply doesn’t meet the challenge and succumbs to frequent film-score dullness. Beyond one energetically rhythmic hybrid (“Chain Gang”), this weak album shortchanges Art of Noise’s audio personality and fails to supplant it with anything equally potent.

Already covered by a half-remixes album and a greatest hits collection, Art of Noise undertook a more radical recycling program on The Ambient Collection, opening their tape library to producer Youth (ex-Killing Joke/Bright) who, to paraphrase the liner notes, “compiled, defiled and remixed” a selection of the band’s gentlest efforts (mostly from In No Sense? Nonsense! and In Visible Silence) into an album of new age wallpaper. The process involves editing tracks, either to brief snippets or lengthy loops, and adding real-world sounds (the word atmospheric has literal significance here) and other ephemera. [i]

A’S

The A’s (Arista) 1979

A Woman’s Got the Power (Arista) 1981

Four Dances EP (Straight A’s) 1982

One of the first bands on Philadelphia’s new wave club scene to sign with a major label, the A’s made their reputation through an energetic stage show which featured singer Richard Bush’s Jerry Lewis-like antics. On the group’s first album, Bush shows an equal aptitude for playing the comedian (“Teenage Jerk Off,” an affectionately tongue-in-cheek nod to punk) and the straight man (the outstanding “After Last Night”). If anything, The A’s resembles the Boomtown Rats’

Tonic for the Troops in the way it combines wit, street savvy and relatively intricate hard-pop arrangements.

On A Woman’s Got the Power, the group’s sound and material changed drastically, and not for the better: The album is an exercise in misplaced bombast. Bush’s occasional excesses are charming on the first outing, but here he consistently over-emotes, imbuing the songs with angst they don’t really merit. While the big sound works well enough for the first couple of tracks (the soulful title tune and the pretty “Electricity”), the bluster then begins to grate; there isn’t another listenable cut on the album.

Back on their own, the A’s pulled in their horns with a 12-inch of four modestly presented rock songs. On the plus side, the likable “Do the Dance” sounds like a techno-pop club tune without the electronics, while “Girl That I Love” is crisp skinny tie Beatle-pop. But when “Ain’t No Secret” devolves into a blithering jam of arena guitars and synthesizer riffing, it’s time for the B’s. [ds/i]

DANIEL ASH

See Love and Rockets.

A SPLIT-SECOND

Ballistic Statues (Bel. Antler) 1987 ●

A Split-Second EP (Wax Trax!) 1988 ●

... From the Inside (Wax Trax!) 1988 ●

Another Violent Breed EP (Bel. Antler) 1989 ●

Firewalker EP (Caroline) 1990 ●

Kiss of Fury (Antler-Subway-Caroline) 1990 ●

The Belgian duo of Mark Ickx (ex-Extraballe) and Chrismar Chayell first emerged in 1986 with an imaginatively upbeat instrumental dance track, “Flesh.” Despite the promise of a bright future in that vein, A Split-Second wanted desperately to be perceived as a band, and on their next record (“Rigor Mortis”) introduced deep, morbid vocals to prove the point. By the time Wax Trax! in America compiled these initial efforts into a six-track EP, A Split-Second had already issued an album (Ballistic Statues) that indicated a determination to match body music with song structure.

Ickx and Chayell have gradually honed a studio sound built upon electronic drums, fleshed out with prominent synthesizer melodies, caustic guitars and vocals alternating unevenly between the bass-heavy growls favored by many Euro rockers and conventional pop choruses. Still capable of enticing grooves when the mood is right, the best moments on From the Inside are its dance singles—“Scandinavian Bellydance” (also included on A Split-Second) and “The Colosseum Crash”—although the torchy “Last Wave” and the gentle title track indicate some songwriting ability.

Following a live EP (Another Violent Breed), Kiss of Fury shows AS-S pushing towards conventionality; the opening “Backlash” is its most commercial offering to date. A fascination with the darker side is maintained, however, in the moody vocals, visual imagery and a continuing obsession with erotica (“Crash Course in Seduction”). Awkwardly juggling gothic rock, industrial and pop-dance, A Split-Second doesn’t quite excel in any of those arenas. [tf]

See also Extraballe.

ASSOCIATES

The Affectionate Punch (nr/Fiction) 1980 + 1982

Fourth Drawer Down (nr/Situation Two) 1981

(nr/Beggars Banquet) 1982

Sulk (Sire) 1982 •

Perhaps (nr/Associates-WEA) 1985

Take Me to the Girl EP (nr/Associates-WEA) 1985

Heart of Glass EP (nr/WEA) 1989 •

The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1989 •

Wild and Lonely (Circa-Chansma) 1990 ◊

Popera: The Singles Collection (Sire-Warner Bros.)

1990 ◊

ALAN RANKINE

The Day the World Became Her Age (Bel. Crépuscule)

1986 •

She Loves Me Not (nr/Virgin) 1987 •

The Big Picture Sucks (Bel. Crépuscule) 1989 •

The Associates—Billy Mackenzie (most words and all vocals, eventually everything) and Alan Rankine (most music and all instruments except drums)—once attempted brilliance, but later settled for playing at being clever. The Affectionate Punch boldly tried to stake a claim for some of the no-man's land between Bowie's theatrical, tuneful rock and Talking Heads' semi-abstract, intellectual dance approach, with a slight flavoring of the pair's native Scottish traditional music. Not fully mature, and sometimes almost burying its own best points, the band seemed a promise of riches to come.

Unfortunately, the Edinburgh-based duo veered off in a more art-conscious—at times willfully obscure—direction, with harsh musical textures often dominating the melodies. Fourth Drawer Down, a compilation of singles, gives the somewhat redeeming impression of determined experimentation that is, however, lessened by the exclusion of certain B-sides in favor of later tracks which reveal Mackenzie's growing preference for pose over accomplishment.

By Sulk, such talent as comes through seems strained under the weight of Mackenzie's self-consciousness. Rankine's emphasis on keyboards over guitar is symptomatic of the defection away from rock and towards a sort of neo-pop, but the melodies are hindered by tinny sound, arrangements that muddle rather than clarify and vocal excesses that make Bowie's worst sound tame. The US edition subtracts three cuts, inserting instead a pair from Fourth Drawer Down and two subsequent singles. Net result: Associates (no article) are a shrill, non-synth Human League for emotional infants. The title's all too accurate—Mackenzie comes across as a callow, shallow poseur. On the eve of its first major British tour, the band splintered.

Putting the article back in the name, Mackenzie completed an album with Martin Rushent that WEA rejected in 1983; some of it emerged two years later on Perhaps. To write it off with a snide "perhaps not" would be a cheap shot, but more than generous. Mackenzie has many associates here, including guitarist Steve Reid—who co-wrote half the songs—but whether any given track was produced by Heaven 17's Martyn Ware, Martin Rushent or the team of Mackenzie and Dave Allen, it all sounds like Heaven 17 or the Human League—with synths, now—making undanceable dance music with a few ho-hum twists. The lyrics include strange, gratuitous, incomprehensible non sequiturs; the music is at best uninvolved, even if you listen for sheer sound and ignore the pose. At seven minutes, the one all-around good track ("Waiting for the Loveboat") overstays its welcome by half; the cassette edition needlessly adds instrumental versions of four album cuts.

A surprisingly strong new single, "Take Me to the Girl," emerged later in the year, and—shortly after it flopped—was re-released on a five-track 10-inch, combined with a remix of "Perhaps" and three live cuts recorded in London that find Mackenzie crooning heart-felt if histrionic versions of songs like "God Bless the Child" and (ulp) "The Little Boy That Santa Claus Forgot."

Four years and another rejected LP (The Glamour Chase) later, Mackenzie re-emerged with a non-LP EP and, the following year, a garish Eurodisco album, Wild and Lonely. While the songs reprise the moods and melodies (not to mention the keyboardist) of Perhaps, producer Julian Mendelsohn straps on a similarly dated saccharine straitjacket. (Have these guys been living on Mars?) Still, Mackenzie's voice occasionally shines through the marzipan, particularly on the atmospheric title cut.

The five-track Peel Sessions EP (from April '81) contains rougher, rock-oriented versions of '81-'82 material and would be highly recommended if it actually included "Me, Myself and the Tragic Story" (which is listed) instead of the far inferior "Arrogance Gave Him Up" (which isn't).

Popera compiles nearly all of the essential material (including a track from The Glamour Chase and a song recorded with Yello) from the Associates' seemingly deliberate anti-career, resulting in the group's most satisfying and wildly schizoid release ever. (That nothing from Wild and Lonely appears is no loss.)

Since leaving the band in 1982, Alan Rankine has been living in Brussels, working extensively with Paul Haig and releasing solo albums. She Loves Me Not, the only one of his efforts to be issued outside of Belgium, offers clever dance-pop and impressively sung balladry, a smooth and appealing concoction akin to mid-period Thompson Twins but dolled up with a bit of continental suaveness. [jg/ja]

See also Paul Haig, Holger Hiller, Yello.

VIRGINIA ASTLEY

Love's a Lonely Place to Be EP (nr/Why Fi) 1982

From Gardens Where We Feel Secure (nr/Happy Valley-Rough Trade) 1983

Promise Nothing (Bel. Crépuscule) 1983

Hope in a Darkened Heart (Geffen) 1986 •

A classically trained pianist and flautist less known for her own work than for the illustrious company she keeps, Astley has played sessions for Siouxsie and the Banshees, Richard Jobson and Troy Tate, among others. Her father, Ted Astley, is an accomplished composer best known for television themes; her brother is artist/producer Jon Astley; her brother-in-law is Pete Townshend. (She played piano on his "Slit Skirts.") Her late-'70s band, the three-woman Ravishing Beauties, included Nicky Holland, later known for her work with Tears for Fears and Ryuichi Sakamoto. However, Astley's own pastoral and tranquil records are markedly different from those of family and friends.

Evoking images of summer afternoons in the countryside, From Gardens Where We Feel Secure is, superficially at least, soothing sonic wallpaper. Except for a few syllables, it's entirely instrumental, consisting basically of piano, flute, clarinet and tape loops. Upon closer scrutiny, the tapes (animal sounds, church bells, etc.) build subliminal tension; there's more to Ms. Astley than initially meets the ear.

Promise Nothing is a compilation, including cuts from Gardens and various singles. The orchestration on the earlier work is thicker—synthesizers, sax and percussion place the material more in the rock realm—but her choir-boy soprano keeps things from getting too raucous. Standouts: the irresistible "Love's a Lonely Place to Be" and "Arctic Death," as haunting as any John Cale effort. An impressive record from an intriguing artist.

In 1985, Astley signed to Elektra in the United Kingdom and released a pair of singles, neither of which broke any new musical ground for her. Hope in a Darkened Heart, her US debut, was mostly produced by Sakamoto, who adds more synths and drum machines. David Sylvian sings on the opening "Some Small Hope." While it's still very pretty, there's more substance, as well. The angry lyrics by this single mother (the baby's father left Astley during her pregnancy) are made even more effective by the charm of her voice and the delicacy of the music. I wouldn't want to be the guy to whom "A Father" or "So Like Dorian" are directed. Remixes of earlier tracks, including "Love's a Lonely Place to Be," round out Side Two.

She may never be prolific or commercially popular, but Virginia Astley is one of the most unique talents around these days. [dgs]

ASWAD

- Aswad (Mango) 1976 •
- Hulet (nr/Grove) 1978 (nr/Grove-Island) 1979 (Mango) 1990 •
- Showcase (nr/Grove-Island) 1981 (Mango) 1990 •
- New Chapter (nr/CBS) 1981
- Not Satisfied (nr/CBS) 1982 •
- A New Chapter of Dub (Mango) 1982 •
- Live and Direct (Mango) 1983 •
- Rebel Souls (Mango) 1984 •
- To the Top (nr/Simba) 1986 (Mango) 1990 •
- Distant Thunder (Mango) 1988 •
- Renaissance (nr/Stylus) 1988 •
- Crucial Tracks (Best of Aswad) (Mango) 1989 •
- Too Wicked (Mango) 1990 •

Though they've never really caught on in the States, Aswad is one of Britain's best and most popular reggae bands. The trio's work is characterized by consistently excellent musicianship (Aswad's adjunct horn section is superlative) and a sound that is modern yet authentic. (Although it's become less so as the group has become increasingly oriented to the pop mainstream.) Their easygoing groove may resemble UB40's, but Aswad is thoroughly unique; after fifteen years, their continued growth and versatility are remarkable. Along with Linton Kwesi Johnson and Dennis Boveli, Aswad represents the flowering of British reggae. Their recording history, however, is disjointed and reflects shifts in personnel, musical direction and labels.

The debut album (with "Back to Africa") is of mixed quality, but showcases the band's stylistic variety, featuring lovers rock, dub and Marley-inspired roots. Hulet, released two years later, is much better—assured and capable—but indecision about direction is clearly audible. Shortly after this release, bassist George Oban left, Tony Gad (Robinson), who had played keyboards in the group, took over on bass. A stint with British CBS yielded two albums, New Chapter and Not Satisfied, both (particularly the latter) rich with fine songs and performances. A New Chapter of Dub, while decent enough, is for fans only.

Rebel Souls has a genial consistency and includes significant covers of Toots Hibbert's "'54-46 (Was My Number)" and Marvin Gaye's "Mercy Mercy Me." Wisely, Aswad were linking themselves to tradition as they geared up for the future.

The group's full yet rootsy sound continued on To the Top; strong and full of punch, the album is one of their best, with top-notch writing, singing and playing throughout. With the band operating at peak power, the record is probably their most representative studio effort.

Distant Thunder marks a distinct change in direction. Feeling perhaps that they had pushed their old sound to its limit, the band experiments here with funk and soul, as well as keyboards. The lightweight, crossover-gear approach was bound to alienate some fans but, while several of the new songs sound tentative, others (like the pop-soul single "Don't Turn Around") are engaging and credible, featuring the same musical craftsmanship that has always characterized Aswad's work.

To some extent, Aswad's strongest releases have been their singles. No proper greatest hits package existed prior to 1989, but two albums had partially filled that gap. Showcase—remixes of their most popular non-LP numbers, including "Rainbow Culture," "Warrior Charge" and "Babylon" (the title theme of a film which starred Aswad's Brinsley Forde)—is excellent, and a fine place for novices to start. In addition, Live and Direct (London, 1983) contains some of Aswad's best-loved songs and gives a hint of the band's live power. "Rockers Medley" stands out, but the whole LP is great.

The Renaissance compilation, issued by a UK label marketed through TV advertising, attempts to cram in 20 selections from the group's long history, but unceremoniously edits the numbers down, making this a must to avoid.

Crucial Tracks (Best of Aswad) has six fewer cuts than Renaissance but preserves the songs' full running times. The compilation includes some single sides, including "Gimme the Dub," the B-side of 1988's "Give a Little Love."

Too Wicked finds the group in an even more serious crossover bid, pushing towards funk, pop, soul and even dancehall, with beatbox drumming, hi-tech samples and house grooves all reeking of commercial aspirations. The best track is "Fire," on which Aswad is joined by Shabba Ranks, 1990's ruler of the dancehall DJs. While "Just Can't Take It" maintains Aswad's socio-political awareness, the record could have done nicely without an Eagles cover ("Best of My Love"). [bk/aw]

ATHLETICO SPIZZ 80

Do a Runner (A&M) 1980

SPIZZLES

Spiky Dream Flowers (A&M) 1981

SPIZZ

Spizz History (nr/Rough Trade) 1982

SPIZZOIL

The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1987

Whatever band British vocalist Kenneth Spiers led—Spizzoil, Spizzenergi, Spizzles, Athletico Spizz 80—he'll always be best remembered for one novelty hit, 1979's "Where's Captain Kirk?" The charm and wit of that single was nowhere to be found on the subsequent Do a Runner, which was mired in the band's predilection for science fiction imagery. If it seems tough to conceive an album of time warps, time machines and almost nine minutes of "Airships," imagine how tough it would be to repeat that formula; Spiky Dream Flowers offers robots, deadly war games and incessant run-away guitar (by recent arrival Lu Edmonds) with no place to go.

Spizz History compiles tracks from various Spizz eras, reaching all the way back to a 1978 single; "Where's Captain Kirk?," "Soldier Soldier," a version of Roxy Music's "Virginia Plain" and a 1982 single, "Megacity," are all worth hearing, but that's about it. The Peel Sessions EP was recorded in the summer of '78. [gf]

ATLANTICS

Big City Rock (ABC) 1979

BALL AND PIVOT

Ball and Pivot EP (Z Club) 1983

The only album by this talented Boston rock band with strong, melodic material and a slightly overdramatic vocalist was unfortunately issued on a label that was breathing its corporate last. Two standout songs—"When You're Young" and "One Last Night"—suggest abundant power-pop promise, but weak production and a crucial lack of promotion kept the quintet a local phenom.

The Atlantics' songwriters—guitarist Tom Hauck and bassist Bruce Wilkinson—returned a few years later fronting a synth-pop trio called Ball and Pivot. The EP, which echoes Duran Duran, Spandau Ballet and Red Noise, is pleasant enough. The most interesting track, however, is "Two O'Clock Jump," which mixes the pair's new sound with the Atlantics' Yardbirds stylings. [i/ds]

A TRIBE CALLED QUEST

People's Instinctive Travels and the Paths of Rhythm (Jive-RCA) 1990 •

Junior members of the Native Tongues—the pacific Afrocentric New York area rap family that includes the Jungle Brothers and De La Soul—A Tribe Called Quest build their wonderful, easygoing debut on a solid platform of warm humor and classic soul (and other) music. Over smoothly percolating tracks more suited to swaying than any more athletic motion, the witty and personable young quartet—Q-Tip, Shaheed, Phife and Jarobi—tells shaggy dog stories ("I Left My Wallet in El Segundo"), romances fantasy figures ("Bonita Applebum"), warns about lice ("Public Enemy") and cholesterol ("Ham'n'Eggs"), and criticizes a variety of anti-social archetypes ("Description of a Fool"). Except for several instances in which good ideas give way to tiresome repetition, People's Instinctive Travels is a thoroughly enjoyable trip. [i]

ATTRACTIONS

See Elvis Costello.

BILLY ATWELL

See Th'Inbred.

AUDIO TWO

What More Can I Say? (First Priority Music-Atlantic) 1988 •

I Don't Care (First Priority Music-Atlantic) 1990 •

One controversial flashpoint in 1990's censorship free-for-all was this Brooklyn rap duo's second album; more specifically, the homophobic "Whatcha' Lookin' At?," which announces that "I hate faggots . . . gay mothers get punched in the face." Lacking real rhyming talent or good voices, these sons of First Priority president Nat Robinson (and the brothers of MC Lyte, who guests on two I Don't Care tracks) outgrew (?) the innocuous B-boy boasts of the dull What More Can I Say? by becoming outrageously obnoxious, delivering witless ultra-attitude ("I Get the Papers") and crude sexuality ("Undercover Hooker," "Build Up Back Up," "The Nasty"). Not for nothing does I Don't Care stoop to bathroom sounds. [pn]

AU PAIRS

Playing with a Different Sex (nr/Human) 1981

Sense and Sensuality (nr/Kamera) 1982

Live in Berlin (nr/a.k.a.) 1983

Although the quartet was evenly divided between the sexes, the trademarks of Birmingham's Au Pairs were singer/guitarist Lesley Woods' husky vocals and her feminist themes. They favored stripped-down, generally tuneless dance-rock, perhaps the better to drive home ironic messages like "We're So Cool," "Set-Up" (both on the first album), "Sex Without Stress" and "Intact" (on Sense and Sensuality). A female viewpoint is, unfortunately, still novel for pop music; Woods is humorless and sometimes oozingly graphic, but usually thought-provoking in her romantic analyses. Au Pairs' few overtly political songs ("Armagh," "America") are less successful.

The live album, recorded at the Berlin Women's Festival, finds the group in good form, running through their best songs with careful intensity. The rhythm section is especially good, but Woods predictably dominates the proceedings. [si/i]

AVENGERS

Avengers EP (White Noise) 1978 + 1981

Avengers (CD Presents) 1983 •

PENELOPE HOUSTON

Birdboys (Subterranean) 1988

What allegedly began as an excuse for punk fashions became, briefly, the most powerful band in the San Francisco area; the Avengers' original EP was a minor classic of its time, indicating that they might have become America's best straight-ahead punk (not hardcore) band had they lasted. The four-song Avengers boasts tight, memorable cuts instrumentally akin to Johnny Thunders and the Sex Pistols, though it's Penelope Houston's intoning words of some depth that makes the difference. Like X without any pretensions; too bad Steve Jones couldn't finish the production (the mix needed him).

The posthumous album reprises the entire contents of that EP, adding a stack of ace punk tunes recorded (with one subsequent exception) in 1977 and 1978. Houston clearly prefigures Chrissie Hynde as the archetypal indomitable rock'n'roll woman—her strength and aggression are what elevates these tracks from energetic but typical punk to remarkable personal statements. Whether anyone outside of San Francisco realized it at the time, the Avengers were a major national musical asset. (The CD and cassette contain two bonus cuts.)

After the Avengers folded in 1979, the Los Angeles-born and Seattle-bred Houston worked with Alex Gibson and Howard Devoto. In 1986, her cleverly named group, Dash Thirty Dash (journalists will get the reference), issued a smart and melodic single, "Full of Wonder." That song and its B-side also appear on her subsequent album, a folk acoustic collection produced by (and dedicated to) the late Snakefinger and played with a four-person band. While the lyrics are astute, and Houston's skillful voice—an airy, mature soprano—fills Birdboys with lovely character, much of the simple music (self-composed with various collaborators, none of them as worthy as her Dash Thirty Dash partner) just isn't that good. [j/g/i]

JOHN AVERY

See Hula.

AZTEC CAMERA

High Land, Hard Rain (Sire) 1983 •

Oblivious EP (Sire) 1984

Knife (Sire) 1984 •

Still on Fire EP (nr/WEA) 1984

Backwards and Forwards EP (Sire) 1985

Love (Sire) 1987 •

Somewhere in My Heart EP (nr/WEA) 1988 •

Stray (Sire-Reprise) 1990 •

The Glaswegian guitarist-singer-songwriter Roddy Frame leads/is Aztec Camera, whose delicate pop conveys his poetic sensibility and rampant originality. High Land, Hard Rain is a magnificent debut, airy yet somehow lush, filled with lovely melodies and thoughtful, impressionistic lyrics. "Oblivious," "Walk Out to Winter" and "We Could Send Letters" are all memorable, distinguished by layered acoustic guitars, beautiful vocal arrangements and jazzy rhythms; "Down the Dip" displays Frame's playful side.

There are two Oblivious EPs. Both include the same remix of the title tune, but the US version has three British B-sides, while the earlier UK edition contains one B-side, an LP track and a live take.

Knife, produced by Dire Straits' Mark Knopfler, is a lot less ethereal, employing a stronger backbeat, sterner vocals and horns. Frame's lyrics continue to walk the line between profound and ludicrous but, for the most part, manage to stay within the realm of lucidity. His writing shows the influence of Elvis Costello and also incorporates a mild R&B feel. Typical of the record's approach, the lead-off "Still on Fire" faintly recalls the Jackson 5's "I Want You Back." (That song's 12-inch release adds four live cuts.)

It's rare to encounter a marketing gimmick worthy of special mention, but the commercially available Backwards and Forwards EP is brilliant. The folder covering the 10-inch record contains the band's complete discography and history, plus profiles and photos. The swell record offers four live tracks (only two encores from the Still on Fire EP) plus the band's ingeniously languid acoustic cover of Van Halen's "Jump."

Reduced to a name for Frame's solo career, Aztec Camera returned to action three years later with Love, a heartfelt but colorless Philly soul record made with studio musicians and half a dozen producers. (Think of Boy George or Paul Young, with music supplied by Steve Winwood.) Although Frame's singing and songwriting don't quite suit this musical style, his low-key charm and basic talent keep him from embarrassing himself.

In some ways, Stray is Frame's return to form, a mature retake on some of High Land's themes. "The Crying Scene" is a verdant burst of electric guitar pop; the title track, with its dizzying wordplay and tender sentiments, ponders the pain of lost innocence. But Frame has yet to settle into a particular genre, and the album swings between jazzy cabaret ballads, ballsy rock'n'roll and more blue-eyed soul ("Notting Hill Blues" could be an outtake from Love). The profound lyrics and emotive vocals hold things together, though, and Stray contains some of Frame's finest work to date. [i/kss]

B B B B B B B

BABES IN TOYLAND

Spanking Machine (Twin/Tone) 1990 •

Gut-grinding music from three Minneapolis women, as powerful as it is agitating. In line with the jackhammer rhythm section, Kat Bjelland beats the shit out of her guitar (which seems to be fighting back), and matches that aggression with cathartic screeching: these babes didn't just fall off the toy-truck. With monstrous production by Jack Endino, Spanking Machine is a forceful, uncompromising opening statement. [sm]

BABY FLIES

Rain (Hol. Resonance) 1988

A Colorful View (Resonance) 1989 •

If nothing else, bands with an established producer in their lineup can be assured of good-sounding records. That's certainly the case with New York-scene studio-star-cum-bassist Jim Waters (Das Damen, Missing Foundation, etc.), whose Hoboken-sound pop trio makes a handsomely presented but nearly generic debut on Rain. For most of the album, Pat Waters' thin, plain singing leaves the overly restrained (and laboriously paced) material at the starting gate. But then she cranks up a neat multi-voiced part on the chorus of "Iza Dream" and pumps handsome life into the song.

Although stronger, Pat's folksy delivery is still inadequate on A Colorful View, an occasionally lively record of simply attractive tunes arranged—with impressive new maturity and sophistication—for chiming guitars and subtle keyboards. A nice try, but the Baby Flies still need better singing and songwriting. (The CD adds six Rain songs.) [i]

BABY OPAQUE

See Bomb.

BACKBONES

See Senders.

BAD BRAINS

Bad Brains [tape] (ROIR) 1982 (Dutch East Wax) 1991

Bad Brains EP (nr/Alternative Tentacles) 1982

I and I Survive/Destroy Babylon EP (Important) 1982

Rock for Light (PVC) 1983 (Caroline) 1991 •

I Against I (SST) 1986 •

Live (SST) 1988 •

Attitude: The ROIR Session [CD] (ROIR-Important) 1989 •

Quickness (Caroline) 1989 •

The Youth Are Getting Restless (Caroline) 1990 •

H.R.

Its About Luv (Olive Tree) 1985 (SST) 1988

Human Rights (SST) 1987 •

HR Tapes '84-'86 (SST) 1988 •

Singin' in the Heart (SST) 1989 •

Charge (SST) 1990 •

RAS MICHAEL

Zion Train (SST) 1988 •

In their quest to become a crossover band, these black jazz-rock fusionists from Washington DC (later based in New York) turned to orthodox speedpunk and released the memorable 1980 super-fast single "Pay to Cum" (1:33 of free-fire guitar rage, produced by Jimmi Quidd of the Dots) that established their mastery of that genre. Bad Brains' hardcore is a more distinctively modulated roar than most, but what really sets them apart are radically contrasting excursions into dub and reggae. Hardcore's dogmatic streak makes it harder on chameleons than most rock subgenres; these guys get away with it.

On the Bad Brains cassette album (and the four-song Bad Brains EP excerpted from it), the quartet excels in both fields: loping, Rastafarian reggae ("I Luv I Jah," "Leaving Babylon," "Jah Calling") and powerhouse political slam-rock (a re-recorded "Pay to Cum," "Banned in D.C.," "Big Takeover"). The album was later reissued on CD under the title Attitude and later on vinyl as Bad Brains.

The Ric Ocasek-produced Rock for Light, which includes new versions of five Bad Brains songs, offers the same dualism, with subject matter covering everything from angry politics ("Riot Squad") to minor pop culturisms ("At the Movies"), stretching from Rasta topics to "How Low Can a Punk Get" sociology. Throughout, Joseph I's (aka H.R.) reedy vocals set off the hardcore roar led by guitarist Dr. Know (Gary Miller) and sweetly color the reggae rumble. A fascinating and truly unique blend. (Ocasek and bassist Darryl Jenifer remixed the album for its 1991 reissue, which also adds three outtakes from the original sessions.)

I Against I is a bracing all-rock explosion, a mature collection of well-written originals played, at varying speeds, with authority and enthusiasm. Dr. Know trots out a number of different effects, sounds and approaches; H.R. has likewise never been better. Shrugging off punk conventions, Bad Brains explore sophisticated and subtle terrain all their own. At its most explosive, the record crosses Van Halen with Black Flag; more restrained passages resemble an energized, younger Police. The quartet holds reggae rhythms to a bare minimum, although lyrics continue to reflect their religious and political convictions.

Playing punk, thrashy rock and reggae with equal command and conviction (Earl Hudson's deft drumming is crucial to the band's gear-shifting ability), the Bad Brains fill the impressive Live with familiar repertoire items documented at a handful of dates on an '87 tour. The CD bonus track is a reggae version of "Day Tripper."

Like many hardcore stars, Bad Brains took a turn towards metal (on the mighty Quickness, a mid-speed rock record with just one reggae number), accepting the genre's brutish intensity but rejecting its clichés. Dr. Know's spiraling near-jazz leads and Hudson's thundering percussion (fortified by a second drummer) give H.R. a mighty platform from which to deliver the band's obscure socio-religious analyses—of AIDS (“Don't Blow Bubbles” contains the memorable exhortation, “Don't blow no fudge buns”), genetics, musical trends and Rastafari faith.

The Youth Are Getting Restless is another '87-vintage concert album, this one a punky explosion recorded at an Amsterdam show. Although there's lots of material overlap with Live, this eighteen-song selection offers a more extensive review of the first three albums, downplaying dub for such charged classics as “Rock for Light,” “Pay to Cum” and “Big Take-over.”

H.R. (Paul Hudson) has left and rejoined the group several times, releasing solo albums along the way. The fascinating if indifferently recorded Its About Luv (on his own Olive Tree label) offers chaotic punk—class of '77 UK division, with anthemic melodies (“Let's Have a Revolution”)—on one side and upbeat Caribbean funk (“Who Loves You Girl?”), jazzy reggae (“Happy Birthday My Son”) and a live rocker (“Free Our Mind”) on the back. (Expanded by the three-song Keep Out of Reach 12-inch, Its About Luv was issued on cassette—and CD—as HR Tapes.)

The high-tech Human Rights—featuring, among others, Oscar Brown Jr. and H.R.'s brother, drummer Earl—is a bizarre but captivating pastiche of funk, reggae-based rock-pop, carefully arranged and delicately textured rock, studio experimentation and other offbeat manifestations of H.R.'s beliefs.

Most of Singin' in the Heart is straight Rasta reggae and dub—easygoing grooves nicely played and warmly sung, with some neat guitar work thrown on top—but then there's “Singin' in the Heart” and “Don't Trust No (Shadows After Dark),” on which a different group of musicians (Oscar Brown Jr. performs the entire title track on keyboards and a drum machine) support H.R. in a suavely soulful pop mode.

With Earl on drums, four guitarists, backing vocalists and a two-man horn section, H.R. sings nothing but old-style reggae originals with little stylistic variation on Charge, a handsome but dull album that praises the lord so often it might as well be a church service.

H.R. produced, co-wrote and sings (Earl plays drums) on the deeply atmospheric Zion Train, one of many albums by Ras Michael, a legendary Jamaican figure whose career dates back to the '60s. [mf/i]

See also Token Entry.

BAD MANNERS

Ska'n'B (nr/Magnet) 1980

Loonee Tunes! (nr/Magnet) 1980

Bad Manners (MCA) 1981

Gosh It's... (nr/Magnet) 1981

Forging Ahead (Portrait) 1982

The Height of Bad Manners (nr/Telstar) 1983

Klass (MCA) 1983

Can Can (nr/Hallmark) 1984

Mental Notes (Portrait) 1985

Live and Loud!! (nr/Link) 1987 ●

Anthology of the Ugly (Blue Beat-Relativity) 1989 ●

Anthology—Bad Manners (nr/Blue Beat) 1989 ●

This rollicking nine-piece London neo-ska nonsense ensemble is fronted by a cartoon-character vocalist dubbed Buster Bloodvessel (well, it's a more colorful name than Doug Trender), an immense bald hulk. The rest of the lineup—three horns, guitar, bass, drums, keyboards and harmonica (played, but of course, by Winston Bazoomies)—churns out smooth, tight bluebeat like early Madness or Specials, while embracing all manner of musical silliness for humorous effect. Bad Manners is strictly entertainment; their records, juvenile though they may sometimes be, consistently provide smile-inducing, good-natured, toe-tapping value in every groove.

Ska'n'B (the band's original musical self-description) has fewer originals than subsequent LPs; versions of “Monster Mash,” “Scruffy Was a Huffy Chuffy Tug Boat,” the “Magnificent Seven” theme and “Ne-Ne Na-Na Na-Na Nu-Nu” are ludicrous but engaging. Their first American escape, Bad Manners, draws tracks from Ska'n'B as well as Loonee Tunes!, released in the meantime. Gosh It's... squeezes in a frisky instrumental rearrangement of “Can Can” amid pleasing originals like “Gherkin” (giddily described on the back cover as a “deeply moving tribute to Charles Aznavour”) and “Ben E. Wriggle,” plus some almost serious numbers that suggest insidious maturation.

Forging Ahead, the group's finest record, has a (thankfully) instrumental version of “Exodus,” a cover of “My Boy (Girl) Lollipop” and an original called “Samson and Delilah (Biblical Version).” When released in the US two years later, a great subsequent single, “That'll Do Nicely,” had been added.

Two compilations were issued in 1983. The American one has a truly disgusting pig-out cover and most of the band's best early tracks; the British release offers a different selection, with only six songs in common. While the following year's Can Can collection overlaps both, it's not that similar to either. Of the three, Height offers the strongest program.

With Mental Notes, B.M. pulls away from their original concept, managing to cover Todd Rundgren's “Bang the Drum All Day” without serious damage. Like Madness' transitional period (which came a lot earlier, careerwise), the bluebeat tempos remain, but they're under a slick coat of restraint, sophistication and—dare it be said?—maturity. Bring back giddy stupidity!

During the band's lengthy studio lay-off, a 1987 “official bootleg” album appeared: poorly recorded but dynamic live performances of the band's best originals and favorite covers. The CD adds two extra cuts.

Amid further compilations, Bad Manners managed to record the all-new Return of the Ugly, a serious fun album with traditional ska values and no stylistic mucking about. Covering two Laurel Aitken songs (now that's bluebeat cred!), giving the Bonanza theme a rock steady twist and contributing a bunch of generic originals, Bad Manners put their digressions aside and party like it's 1979. Skank on! [i]

BAD RELIGION

How Could Hell Be Any Worse? (Epitaph) 1982
Into the Unknown (Epitaph) 1983
Back to the Known EP (Epitaph) 1984
Suffer (Epitaph) 1988 •
No Control (Epitaph) 1989 •
Against the Grain (Epitaph) 1990 •

On their first album, this Southern California hardcore quartet adds such unexpected attributes as piano, dynamics and university-level lyrics to an otherwise traditional sore-throat-vocals/maximum-overload-guitar sound. The well-recorded LP meets the minimum daily requirement of loud and fast rock without sacrificing basic human intelligence in the process. Into the Unknown, a mini-album, is even better, a swirling blizzard of noisy, catchy psychedelia and paisley rock, with real songs and a sound that resembles Nazz tunes played by early Deep Purple. A masterpiece.

After that great leap forward, half the original lineup, joined by guitarist Greg Hetson (on loan from the Circle Jerks) and a guest bassist, made a conscious reversal on the one-sided 12-inch EP, Back to the Known, which banishes the stylish keyboard sound in favor of an unreconstructed punk attack. Still, Greg Graffin's articulate vocals are way above average, and the stun-volume chords don't swamp out the melodies or lyrics. Not bad at all.

The first-LP quintet reunited in 1988. Considering the years elapsed since Back to the Known, Suffer's new-found fury is a revelation. The album is faster, meaner and leaner than any in the band's past, the attack ablaze with unusual hooks, pointed riffs and pseudo-erudite lyrics ("The masses are obsequious contented in their sleep/The vortex of their minds contented in the murky deep"). Unfortunately, with two slower exceptions ("Best for You" and "What Can You Do"), the relentless velocity makes it hard to tell the songs apart.

Suffer was just a warmup, however, for No Control, an awesome achievement in an otherwise moribund genre. Arguably one of the best hardcore albums ever, No Control recaptures all of the form's exhilarating attributes, with inspired songwriting, vocal harmonies, transfixing highbrow lyrics ("The automatic man is the quintessential mindless modern epicene"), explosive playing and Graffin's soaring, pleading, tearing voice. The lack of rhythmic and stylistic variety can't sabotage this firecracker, as the sheer power of might meeting melody is too satisfying.

Against the Grain maintains No Control's pace, another deranged rollercoaster ride without a seat belt. Smoking hot production makes Graffin's sensational voice seem even more sinister on such tracks as "Get Off," "Anesthesia" and a scathing indictment of the anti-abortion movement, "Operation Rescue." The few slow songs (like "Faith Alone") test his range, but he delivers dramatic performances. In offering a heavy dose of the danger modern rock so rarely possesses, Bad Religion has become not only the best (by far) contemporary hardcore band, but one of the best current rock-'n'-roll bands, period. [i/jr]

BAGS

Rock Starve (Restless) 1987 •
The Bags (Stanton Park) 1990

SWAMP OAF

Swamp Oaf (Stanton Park) 1989

The product of a city with a tremendous underground musical heritage, this Boston trio plays a hybrid of common punk and '70s heavy-guitar rock, but writes surprisingly sensitive songs with memorable hooks and singalong choruses. On Rock Starve, the Bags demonstrate a singular ability to analyze and describe relationships and emotions with searing but subtle simplicity. (How often do you hear a hardcore number sincerely, even lovingly, describe a woman's beauty?) The album doesn't contain a bad tune.

Guitarist Crispin Wood and bassist Jon Hardy's dual vocals show substantial maturity on the follow-up, and the material (like "Evil," an examination of a recently severed relationship) is just as solid. The peculiarly danceable "Atomic Coconuts," the hardcore "Superpower," the moving "Closer Than" and the clever "Beauty of the Bud" are all terrific.

The Swamp Oaf album finds the Bags posing as a mythical lost monster band (à la Spinal Tap). Swamp Oaf was recorded in eighteen hours, uniting a variety of sounds (including a sort of goofy jazz improv) to create a very un-Bagsy platter. [icm]

CHRIS BAILEY

See Saints.

BAILTER SPACE

See Gordons.

JOE BAIZA & THE UNIVERSAL CONGRESS OF

Universal Congress Of (SST) 1987

UNIVERSAL CONGRESS OF

Prosperous and Qualified (SST) 1988 •

This Is Mecolodics EP (SST) 1988

The Sad and Tragic Demise of Big Fine Salty Black Wind (Ger. Enemy) 1990

Saccharine Trust guitarist Baiza's first solo record contains two endless studio jams, sans vocals. "Certain Way" covers the entire first side and part of the second; whether you'll actually turn the record over to hear how it finishes depends entirely on your ability to remain awake during nineteen enervating minutes of four guys dicking around formlessly in the studio. But his band's next outing, Prosperous and Qualified, is much better—a jazzy, spacious rock record that contains actual songs, credible sax riffing (by Steve Moss) and other good stuff.

The luxuriantly post-bop vocabulary of the five-song This Is Mecolodics' lengthy, tongue-in-cheek liner essay doesn't, ultimately, go very far towards explaining just what the term (the use of which Baiza is nominally serious about) means. One pigeonhole to eliminate immediately—parodistic packaging aside—is the fake jazz once espoused by semi-kindred spirit John Lurie. This is as real (spiritually, at least) as jazz gets. Baiza's as hell-bent on improv as ever: garroting his axe Sonny Sharrock-style on the virulent "Joey," softening the tone and lending a mariachi feel to Ornette Coleman's "Law Years," even sitting out a round as Steve Moss and Jacob Kuhn tussle in the steel cage sax matchup "Niños de la Tierra"

Sad and Tragic Demise returns to tighter structures, emphasizing the band's formidable new rhythm section. Versions of Ronald Shannon Jackson and Henry Threadgill numbers reveal more precision and swing than anything in UCO's past. Baiza, however, downplays his guitar work (probably a bad idea) and sings on a number of tracks—definitely a bad idea, aside from "Uh-Huh," an oddball Donald Fagen soundalike.

See also Saccharine Trust. [i/dss]

ARTHUR BAKER AND THE BACKBEAT DISCIPLES

Merge (A&M) 1989 •

Hip-hop's first star producer in the early '80s and a major figure in the introduction of record remixing to mainstream rock artists, Arthur Baker was just a face in the studio crowd by decade's end. So he made an album of his own. Collaborating with everyone from ABC and OMD to the Force M.D.'s, Baker (whose limited role here involves songwriting, percussion and occasional instrumental contributions) doesn't so much merge styles as stack them up. Essentially a sampler album, Merge offers slick techno soul, new jack swing, mushy adult rock, hip-house, suave pop and more, none of it particularly noteworthy. [i]

BALAAAM AND THE ANGEL

Love Me EP (nr/Chapter 22) 1985

Day and Night EP (nr/Chapter 22) 1985

She Knows EP (nr/Virgin) 1986

The Greatest Story Ever Told (Virgin) 1987 •

Live Free or Die (Virgin) 1988 •

I Took a Little EP [CD] (nr/Virgin) 1989 •

Days of Madness (Virgin) 1989 •

Despite their goth garb, Scotland's Morris brothers—singer/bassist Mark, guitarist Jim and drummer Des—are popsters at heart, a fact which they take pains to disguise on these unremarkable albums. The Greatest Story Ever Told does have some charm, but the trio's melodies are too often buried in feeble attempts to whip up a vague air of menace. (Balaam started as protégés of the Cult's Ian Astbury.) Live Free or Die, produced by former Cult boardman Steve Brown, is closer to Van Halen-styled AOR metal. (The CD adds two tracks.)

Day and Night is a four-song 12-inch of pre-LP material, the title track of which wound up as one of two bonus cuts on the British Greatest Story CD. Built around a song from the first LP, She Knows is a double 7-inch with two radio session tracks of songs that appeared on the second album. The 1989 CD-3 EP (offering a one-song preview of Days of Madness) joins the titular LP track with three live cuts.

With the band now a quartet, Days of Madness continues Balaam's descent into metal mediocrity, unironically recycling every commercial hard-rock cliché in the book, without even the mild diversion of its predecessor's pop hooks. [hd]

BALANCING ACT

New Campfire Songs EP (Type A) 1986 (Primitive Man) 1987 •

Three Squares and a Roof (Primitive Man) 1988 •
Curtains (IRS) 1988 •

This semi-electric LA rock quartet is earnest enough on its Peter Case-produced debut EP but, with the exception of "Wonderful World Tonight," a likable and evocative update of the "Goin' Up the Country" ethos, none of these half dozen New Campfire Songs is likely to show up alongside "Blowin' in the Wind" at the next weenie roast. Give the Balancing Act credit for a unique blend of acoustic and electric elements, though. Also, they've got a melodica, and they know how to use it!

Three Squares and a Roof is a lot less precious and more interesting than the EP. The playing and production are better, the material vastly improved, revealing songs that cover substantial lyrical territory, nearly all of it previously uncharted. The Three Squares CD also contains New Campfire Songs.

Deftly produced by ex-Gang of Four guitarist Andy Gill, Curtains could be a sampler of classic '60s and '70s harmony vocal styles. Echoes of the Beatles, Hollies and especially Crosby, Stills and Nash abound, as well as the Bee Gees (on a cover of Funkadelic's "Can You Get to That," no less!), the Monkees and jazzers Lambert, Hendricks and Ross. Gill's adventurous high-tech production not only keeps the album from sounding too retro, but helps put some punch into material which occasionally leans towards wimpiness. [ds]

BALCONY DOGS

See Echo & the Bunnymen.

B.A.L.L.

Period (Another American Lie) (Shimmy-Disc) 1987 •

Bird (Shimmy-Disc) 1988 •

Trouble Doll (Shimmy-Disc) 1989 •

Four (Hardball) (Shimmy-Disc) 1990 •

GUMBALL

Special Kiss (Primo Scree) 1991 •

Everything you really need to know about B.A.L.L.L. is that Bird contains a smirking cover of George Harrison's "Bangla Desh." This dual swipe at rock star pomposity and sacred cow causes pretty much defines the B.A.L.L.L. worldview. How funny you find the joke depends on how resonant the whole post-Beatles era of rock self-importance was to you, and how tolerant you are of grown men who think that lampooning it is a meaningful activity.

Formed by Velvet Monkeys singer/guitarist Don Fleming and drummer Jay Spiegel, along with producer/bassist Kramer and percussionist Dave Licht, B.A.L.L.L. fills Period with amusing, grungy, guitar-driven crud-pop tunes like "The French" and "My TV Is Broke" (so what else is new?). The joke behind the band comes to full flower on Bird, the cover art of which is a recreation of the Beatles' infamous butcher sleeve. Besides "Bangla Desh," the tunes here include Ringo Starr's "It Don't Come Easy," Harrison's "Wah-Wah" and Marc Bolan's "Buick Mackane"; all of them are kind of funny but none shed any light on the original songs. The band's own material is mildly entertaining but generally faceless.

The back cover of Trouble Doll calls it "the disappointing third LP," but that's not the half of it. The cover drawing is blatantly racist and without discernible context; the faux-protest song "African Sunset" (on CD only) doesn't promote intercultural understanding, either. While some songs are moderately diverting, other stuff is barely of demo quality. (One side was recorded live at CBGB, and includes material from Bird as well as covers.) The very deliberate attempt to make sloppiness a virtue backfires as often as it clicks here.

Strangely enough, in the midst of a reportedly acrimonious breakup, the band (which later reassembled as Gumball) completed its best album, Four (Hardball). Side One offers fully fleshed-out, fast, funny and energetic songs, while the flip comprises a trash suite of sorts, with five grunge-guitar-heaven instrumentals. (It's likely these were meant to be complete vocal numbers and that Fleming quit before finishing them, but that's not how it sounds.) All in all, a worthy precursor to Rake, the LP Fleming next made with a reformed Velvet Monkeys. [gk]

See also Velvet Monkeys.

DAVE BALL

In Strict Tempo (nr/Some Bizarre) 1983

GRID

Electric Head (nr/East West) 1990 •

Without erstwhile Soft Cell partner Marc Almond supplying the sleaze, shy keyboard man Dave Ball is a cold-hearted bore on his solo album. In Strict Tempo's drab mood pieces strain with little success for wry wit to leaven the pretentiousness, but wind up just a jumble of undeveloped ideas. Genesis P-Orridge of Psychic TV warbles on two tracks.

Making up for lost time, Ball's first album with Grid partner Richard Norris (a former P-Orridge collaborator who does a bit of vocalizing besides poking at an assortment of machines and guitar) runs through a wide variety of related electronic dance musics: techno-pop (dinky and lush), environmental ambience, go-get'em house, prog-rock and found-sound fooling around. The few songs and the most focused instrumental pieces are fine for what they are, but a seemingly random track sequence badly blunts Electric Head's impact. [jy/i]

OTIS BALL

I'm Gonna Love You 'Til I Don't (Bar/None-Restless) 1990 •

A transplanted Midwesterner who joined the Hoboken scene, singer/guitarist Ball has a whiny voice perfectly suited to songs that poke fun at celebs from Buddha to Charles Manson, as well as several women who are no doubt nearer to his heart. The two exceptional songs that make this light, warm self-produced pop record worth many a return visit are the rollicking "Walk on Water" (They Might Be Giants provide the insidious chorus vocal hook) and the anthemic title track, a wondrous let's-live-for-today credo that's somehow both sad and strongly optimistic. [sm]

BALLAD SHAMBLES

See LeRoi Brothers.

BALL AND PIVOT

See Atlantics.

AFRIKA BAMBAATAA & THE JAZZY 5

"Jazzy Sensation" (Tommy Boy) 1981

AFRIKA BAMBAATAA & SOULSONIC FORCE

"Planet Rock" (Tommy Boy) 1982

"Looking for the Perfect Beat" (Tommy Boy) 1982

"Renegades of Funk" (Tommy Boy) 1983

Planet Rock—The Album (Tommy Boy) 1986

"Return to Planet Rock" (York's) 1990

TIME ZONE

"The Wildstyle" (Celluloid) 1983

"World Destruction" (Celluloid) 1984 •

SHANGO

Shango Funk Theology (Celluloid) 1984 •

AFRIKA BAMBAATAA & JAMES BROWN

"Unity" (Tommy Boy) 1984

AFRIKA BAMBAATAA AND FAMILY

"Funk You!" (Tommy Boy) 1985

Beware (The Funk Is Everywhere) (Tommy Boy) 1986

Death Mix Throwdown (nr/Blatant) 1987

The Light (Capitol) 1988 •

Bronx DJ-turned-hip-hop-godfather Bambaataa not only created the record that thrust beatbox electro-funk into the '80s and brought Kraftwerk onto the dancefloor, he has made pioneering sides with numerous performers and established himself as a major figure in contemporary music. Working mainly in the 12-inch format, Bam's ascent began with a routine boast rap, "Jazzy Sensation," but got into gear with "Planet Rock," the Arthur Baker-produced (and co-written, with the band and John Robie) explosion of scratch cuts, electronic gimmickry, processed vocals and solid-state rhythms. (Both tracks were later compiled on the Tommy Boy label retrospective, Greatest Beats.) "Looking for the Perfect Beat" is even better, with Baker mostly soft-pedaling the monolithic pounding in favor of a skittish electronic metronome and tacking on fancier effects, vocals and mix tricks to create an ultra-busy urban symphony. The mega-rhythmic "Renegades of Funk" adds social/historical/political lyrics to the dance-floor dynamism and delivers a really bizarre blend of rap, synthesizers and oppressive electronic percussion.

As a precursor to a long-promised album (which ultimately included it), Bambaataa released "Funk You!," a corny rap idea stretched out over a 12-inch in four very different mixes, with borrowings from James Brown and Queen. When it finally appeared, Beware proved that the LP format presents no obstacle to the imposing Overseer: variety and invention make it an exciting electro-beat vision of a freewheeling stylistic future. "Funk Jam Party" is exactly that; "Tension" sounds like Bowie comes to Harlem. "Rock America" incorporates howling electric guitars, a munchkin chorus and chintzy organ without ever losing the funk. Easily the highlight, and another amazing cross-cultural accomplishment by Bambaataa, is Bill Laswell's earthy, energized production of the MC5's "Kick Out the Jams." Awesome.

In a fascinating cross-generational culture mix, Bambaataa teamed with the Godfather of Soul to record "Unity," a positive political message released in six alternate versions (connected by studio patter) on one disc. Hitting a funky compromise between classic soul and modern hip-hop, the record works on a number of levels and is certainly a significant milestone in rap. Taking another startling detour, Bambaataa wrote and recorded "World Destruction" with Bill Laswell, sharing the vocals with John Lydon, jump-cutting the Englishman's no-wave keen into an intense, ominous funk-rock maelstrom for one of the most remarkable dance singles in recent memory.

Bambaataa also records as a member of Shango, a vocal trio that is supported by Material (for this purpose, Laswell and Michael Beinhorn). The album-length Funk Theology offers five sophisticated party creations that also feature guitarist Nicky Skopelitis. The originals get no heavier, lyrically, than "Let's Party Down"; a version of Sly Stone's "Thank You" is utterly appropriate. Good for dancing but a bit dull for listening.

Extending the Family way out there, The Light features UB40, Nona Hendryx, Boy George, George Clinton, Bootsy Collins, Yellowman and others. At times, the appealing and diverse pan-ethnic album involves Bam only tangentially, like a brief rap on UB40's "Reckless" track, or a few interjections on the Hendryx/George rendition of Curtis Mayfield's "Something He Can Feel." The only credit he takes on "Shout It Out" is as co-publisher of the composition. The individual tracks are fine, but the lack of focus leaves this plainly commercial effort more a various artists sampler than a cohesive Bambaataa creation.

Planet Rock—The Album is a compilation of the three classic 12-inch records with Soulsonic Force plus previously unreleased tracks featuring Melle Mel and Trouble Funk. [i]

BAMBI SLAM

Is... EP (Product Inc.-Rough Trade) 1987

The Bambi Slam (Blanco y Negro-Warner Bros.) 1988 •

Admittedly inspired by the Jesus and Mary Chain, this Canadian-British quartet (guitar/bass/drums/cello!) takes a less claustrophobic and more rhythmic approach to noise-laden echo-pop than the Reids but still winds up sounding a lot like Psychocandy on Is, a six-track American compilation of British singles. Although not prominent in the mix, the big fiddle adds a nice touch to songs like "La, La, La (It's Out of Hand)" and "Hit Me with Your Hairbrush." Redundant but amusing.

Singer/guitarist Roy Feldon is all that remains of the Bambi Slam on the album, although his former bandmates add some cello, backing vocals and one drum track. Running the one-man show, Feldon gets an irritatingly raw sound from a rhythm machine and lots of equally coarse guitar; his singing is no mellifluous prize, either. Where the EP had a certain spirit and excitement, the album is draggy, ineffectual and repetitive, a parade of sounds rather than songs. [i]

BANANARAMA

Deep Sea Skiving (London) 1983 •

Bananarama (London) 1984 •

True Confessions (London) 1986 •

Wow! (London) 1987 •

The Greatest Hits Collection (London) 1988 •

Pop Life (London) 1991 •

SHAKESPEAR'S SISTER

Sacred Heart (frrr-PolyGram) 1989 •

Keren Woodward, Sarah Dallin and Siobhan Fahey became a trio in London in 1979. They first gained notoriety singing with the Fun Boy Three, who later returned the favor by producing and backing them on their earliest singles. Deep Sea Skiving essentially compiles their first string of infectious 45s, encompassing a panoply of styles: percussive Afro-beat ("He Was Really Sayin' Somethin'"), girl-group soul ("Shy Boy"), '60s chart silliness ("Na Na Hey Hey Kiss Him Goodbye") and lush pop ("Cheers Then"). Additionally, Deep Sea Skiving offers Paul Weller's "Doctor Love," the charming and light "Hey Young London" and the morose "What a Shambles." An assortment of producers yields little uniformity of sound, but the ensemble vocals provide the crucial character regardless of setting.

For their first real album, Bananarama gave the ball to hitmakers Swain and Jolley (Spandau, Alison Moyet, Imagination) who, as is their custom, co-wrote the material. Over the lush, highly arranged backing, the ladies croon two wonderful singles—the evocatively tropical "Cruel Summer" (a hit, one year apart, in the UK and US) and "Robert De Niro's Waiting." Otherwise, the album deflects much of the trio's engaging individuality and substitutes a vacuous sheen that's too functional and defeats their ingenuous image. Bananarama isn't bad—the vocals are charming in any case—but it is forgettable.

Although Swain and Jolley still held the reins for True Confessions, they lost their franchise to the up-and-coming Stock-Aitken-Waterman team, who placed two sides on the LP, including an irresistibly catchy disco remake of Shocking Blue's "Venus" that topped the American charts. Overall, True Confessions is a limp outing that sculpts a refined adult sound, evaporating the group's youthful vitality and charm in the process.

Capitalizing on their Moroder-based sequencer formula, Stock, Aitken and Waterman wrote, produced and programmed Wow!, a peppy synth-driven dance record that disguises Bananarama's vocal limitations in an overwhelming wash of electronic music simulation. The crass gimmickry and mock-Supremes arrangements of "I Heard a Rumour" and "I Can't Help It" are as predictable as the tunes are unshakable; the rest of the album's tracks resemble those two so closely they might as well be remixes. (The UK CD and cassette actually include bonus remixes.) Sure it's total trash, but what else does a car need to keep it running in the hot summer sun?

In late '87, following Wow!'s success, Fahey (by then married to Dave Stewart of Eurythmics) left the band and was replaced by Jacque O'Sullivan, formerly of the Shillelagh Sisters. It would have been nice if the resulting compilation album had carefully sealed the original group's best and biggest tunes in a time capsule, but The Greatest Hits Collection mixes in a couple of items by the new lineup and includes before-and-after photos as well. Considered as an overall oeuvre (well . . .), there's a lot more crap than quality here; the handful of charming pop gems are swamped by craven trash.

If Dave Stewart had, as claimed, no hand in crafting the synthesized dance-rock of Sacred Heart, then precisely mimicking Eurythmics' sound must be easier than one would imagine. Joined in Shakespear's Sister by Marcella Detroit (who, in her '70s life as Marcy Levy, toured and recorded with Eric Clapton), the post-Bananarama Fahey (sporting a deeper, more serious voice) kisses off her ex-bandmates with the nasty "You're History," but isn't above recreating their harmony signature on several tunes. Although she does a fair Chrissie Hynde impression on "Heaven Is in Your Arms" and echoes other contemporary vocalists elsewhere, frequent, detailed nods to Annie Lennox give the record an overwhelming sense of déjà entendu. Even "Primitive Love," a goofy six-line shoutalong with raging fuzz bass, sounds like Eurythmicized Gary Glitter. [i]

BAND OF BLACKY RANCHETTE

See Giant Sandworms.

BAND OF OUTSIDERS

See Certain General.

BAND OF SUSANS

Blessing and Curse EP (Trace Elements) 1987
 Hope Against Hope (Furthur-Blast First) 1988 ●
 Love Agenda (Blast First-Restless) 1989 ●
 The World and the Flesh (Restless) 1991 ●

ROBERT POSS

Sometimes [tape] (Trace Elements) 1986

ROBERT POSS/NICOLAS COLLINS

Inverse Guitar [tape] (Trace Elements) 1988

HELMET

Strap It On (Amphetamine Reptile) 1990

Indeed there were, for a time, three Susans (Stenger, Tallman and Lyall) in this New York sextet that has its roots in Glenn Branca's and Rhys Chatham's experimental downtown ensembles. The four songs on Blessing and Curse, produced by (ex-Western Eyes) guitarist/songwriter/vocalist Robert Poss, locate an exciting niche between anti-music chaos and accessible rock by setting simple, repetitive chord/bass patterns in motion and then slathering on layers of vocals and noisy guitar. Dense without being forbidding, "You Were an Optimist" and the speeding "Where Have All the Flowers Gone" (an original) clearly indicate the Susans' intriguing direction and skill.

Hope Against Hope (titled after an EP track that was remixed and included; a second appears in a new version here) is an improvement on all fronts, revealing a bracingly loud—but never actually strident—band that seemingly can't put enough guitar electricity on vinyl to satisfy itself. Besides Poss' febrile production, his songs are better formed here, with chord progressions that actually resolve. (In a touching show of pop cognizance, "I the Jury" quotes the Stones' "Last Time.") Anchored by a solidly plain rhythm section, the storm of strings continues to rage unabated, making Hope Against Hope something of a rockier American response to Psychocandy. (Just ignore the band's English-major lyrics.) The CD adds the two remaining songs—"Where Have All the Flowers Gone" and "Sometimes"—from Blessing and Curse.

With the departure of two Susans (following Hope Against Hope's mid-'87 sessions), a five-piece/three-guitar lineup made Love Agenda with no diminution in power. Although it sounds unlikely the songs would amount to much musically in a different context—these aren't twinkly little pop ditties given a radioactive-waste bath—the band's ability to harness distortion, wall-shaking volume and feedback (keeping things just below the chaos line) into reasonably melodic forms remains a marvelous achievement. The barreling "Because of You" and the droney "It's Locked Away" are the album's most impressive tracks. The CD adds a loud but unconvincing cover of the Stones' "Child of the Moon."

Made while Poss was still a member of Chatham's band, Sometimes predates the Susans' first record but features two of its members—Alva Rogers on backing vocals and drummer Ron Spitzer on piano. A tentative and transitional bridge between career stages, the eight songs—which include early versions of "Sometimes" and Hope Against Hope's "Throne of Blood," as well as an otherwise unrecorded song entitled "Blessing and Curse"—cover both regular rock and surging noise.

Poss fills one side of Inverse Guitar with formless, ear-splitting 1987 guitar-damage improvisations; the other documents his (and Susan Tallman's) collaboration with electronic music composer Nicolas Collins on three failed experiments that employ familiar life sounds and backwards manipulation of guitar and bass.

Guitarist/shouter Page Hamilton—a Love Agenda Susan—leads the far less melodic Helmet, a brutal noise quartet that clearly isn't in it for the songs. Like an uptempo Black Sabbath record with a bad skip, Helmet repeats lockstep guitar/bass riffs endlessly on Strap It On, erecting a crudely effective brick wall of sound.

See also Rhys Chatham. [i]

BANGLES

Bangles EP (Faully Products) 1982 (IRS) 1982
 All Over the Place (Columbia) 1984 ●
 Different Light (Columbia) 1986 ●
 Everything (Columbia) 1988 ●
 Greatest Hits (Columbia) 1990 ♠

SUSANNA HOFFS

When You're a Boy (Columbia) 1991 ♠

These four young women from Los Angeles—originally known as the Bangs—display an odd collection of influences on their five-track debut EP, neatly produced by Craig Leon. The swell harmonies on several cuts come straight from the Mamas and the Papas, while the music alternates between evoking Rubber Soul and energetic, bantamweight Yardbirds-styled garage rock. The playing's fine and the vocals are great—the songs just aren't up to snuff.

The Bangles' young career was temporarily derailed when Faulty Products went out of business and bassist Annette Zilinskas left to join Blood on the Saddle. Come 1984, the group swung back into action, fortified with a new bassist, a more reliable record contract, the best American power-pop producer money can buy (David Kahne) and a passel of brilliant new songs (mostly by guitarist Vicki Peterson, but also Kimberley Rew's "Going Down to Liverpool," a cover which indirectly led to his group, Katrina and the Waves, finally securing an American deal). All Over the Place has everything a pop album needs, exceptional harmony vocals, catchy, memorable and intelligent tunes and a full dose of rock-'n'-roll guitar energy. Unlike the Go-Go's, who never fully clarified their lyrical stance, the Bangles offer an adult play-fair-or-take-a-hike independence that is a lot more contemporary than their joyously evocative sound. The best cuts other than "Liverpool"—"Hero Takes a Fall," "Tell Me" and "James"—feature guitarist Susanna Hoffs' alluring vocals and are unassailable gems; the worst tracks only fall short of that by a smidge. Simply wonderful.

Prince became a fan, and gave the rising band a song, "Manic Monday" (written pseudonymously by "Christopher"), for Different Light. Despite trivial lyrics, it became a gigantic hit single, establishing the quartet's stardom but causing many to overlook the LP's finer points: Jules Shear's "If She Knew What She Wants," Alex Chilton's classic "September Gurls" and bassist Michael Steele's harrowing "Following." If not as consistently top-notch as All Over the Place, it's nonetheless enjoyable and often memorable.

Taking a dive from the precipice of quality pop, the Bangles sacrificed Everything to the gods of radio programming. Studiously produced by Davitt Sigerson into a weak imitation of artistic pretension, the mellifluous album contains one great song (the sexy "In Your Room"), lots of bad ideas ("Bell Jar," a Sylvia Plath tribute so idiotic that the grim lyrics and peppy arrangement almost fit together; "Glitter Years," a sheepish glam-rock recollection that ends with a Bowie quote; the merry death wish of "Crash and Burn") and the group's creative nadir: the blatant pandering song-factory schmaltz of Hoffs' showcase "Eternal Flame," a test-run for her impending solo career.

Besides a short list of obvious LP tracks (that manages to overlook "September Gurls," "James," and other personal faves), the compilation appends the Bangles' ripping version of Paul Simon's "Hazy Shade of Winter" (from the Less Than Zero soundtrack), a bland folksy romp through the Grass Roots' "Where Were You When I Needed You" (rescued from an early B-side) and an insignificant Everything outtake.

Hoffs' solo album (named for a lyric from the Bowie song that closes the record) is a no-holds-barred commercial bore, with painstaking adult-pop overproduction by Kahne and a strange hodgepodge of demographically designed material. Besides the hollow products of hit hacks, the scattered program includes Cyndi Lauper's "Unconditional Love" (with "new lyrics written expressly for Susanna Hoffs"!), E*I*E*I*O's fine "This Time," Pearl Harbor and the Explosions' "So Much for Love" and "That's Why Girls Cry," a presentable collaboration between singer, producer and Juliana Hatfield of Blake Babies. Donovan Leitch is one of the numerous backing singers; John Entwistle guests on the appalling misreading of "Boys Keep Swinging." [i]

See also Blood on the Saddle.

LESTER BANGS AND THE DELINQUENTS

Jook Savages on the Brazos (Live Wire) 1981

DELINQUENTS

The Delinquents (Live Wire) 1981

LESTER BANGS AND BIRDLAND

Birdland (Add On) 1986

Elevated (strung up?) as the newest breed of rock-'n'-roll hero—martyred chronicler—Lester Bangs was a timely victim for the perennial personality cult, which seized upon his accidental death in April 1982 to resurrect his seminal rock writing for a new fanzine audience. By turns introspective and scathing, his dissection of music was frequently intense and insightful, occasionally misguided and paltry, but it was always soul-searching and achingly personal, crypto-musical characteristics that have endeared him to subsequent generations and which, not surprisingly, infuse his own recorded work.

Following the nakedly bleary emotion of his "Let It Blurt" 45 (with backing by members of the Patti Smith Group, Voidoids and Raybeats), Bangs somehow hooked up with the Delinquents (Texas version), locally infamous for relinquishing their sociopathic vocalist Layna Pogue to a quiet room with rubber walls. That brief intersection yielded an LP not unlike Richard Hell's first—if recorded impromptu during second rehearsal, with Hank Williams and Pere Ubu puppeteering overhead. Classic or erratic, depending on your skew of vision.

The Delinquents also released a self-titled LP sans frontperson, with the guitarists sharing vocals atop vaguely B-52'sish new wave surf. After they disbanded, bassist/Live Wire boss Brian Curley went on to work with yet another certifiably abnormal intellect, Roky Erickson, in Evil Hook Wildlife ET., before forming 27 Devils Joking.

In 1986, Birdland denigrated the Bangs legend with its posthumous reflection on Lester's band of the same name, generally despised during its existence as a worthless live unit with ties to Lower East Side little brothers the Rattlers. Basically pop with dulled hooks, even Lester's jagged vocals and lyrics seem to have lost all edge and point, not least in the remakes (from Jook Savages) of the previously nervy "I'm in Love with My Walls" and "Accidents of God." [ab]

See also Rattlers.

PATO BANTON

Never Give In (nr/Greensleeves) 1987 (Primitive Man) 1988

Pato & Roger Come Again EP (Primitive Man) 1988

Visions of the World (IRS) 1989

Wize Up! (No Compromise) (IRS) 1990 •

A dozen years after making his album debut (on the Beat's Special Beat Service) duetting with Ranking Roger on "Pato and Roger a Go Talk," Pato Banton (born Patrick Murray) returned to these shores with Never Give In. Mainly backed by Birmingham's Studio Two house band, which provides strong reggae riddims punctuated by colorful horns and rock-oriented lead guitar, Banton sings, toasts and speed-raps against war, poverty and drugs (except one, of course). Fortunately, his advice on how to behave in Babylon is laced with humor—his impersonations of his mother (on three songs), wife and a scared riot victim are hilarious. Also fun are duets with Paul Shaffer, another go-round with Ranking Roger and a wonderful high speed toast titled "Gwam!"

The Pato & Roger Come Again EP contains two versions of the title track, one longer and one shorter than the one on Never Give In; "Don't Sniff Coke" (also from the LP), which features a rap about Pato's encounter with a dope dealer on a train; and the gritty non-LP "King Step."

While Visions of the World and Wize Up! remain fairly similar to Never Give In in terms of subject matter, the music is slicker, leaning more towards smooth dance rock, bland soul and synthesized pop reggae. Pato's added a bit more boast to his toast, but both albums lack the humor and flair of the first. Switching styles (and accents) in most unnerving manner, Banton makes a number of faint political statements on Visions of the World, adding only one amusing toast, "Ready Me Ready," about a romantic misadventure in London.

Steel Pulse's David Hinds duets on the title track of Wize Up!, which also features Banton's rendition of "Spirits in the Material World." (In a fitting stylistic payback, the Police song became an alternative radio hit for him.) Judging from this album, Banton could be the first toaster to become a pop star in America. [ds/i]

BARNES & BARNES

Voobaha (Rhino) 1980

Fish Heads: Barnes and Barnes Greatest Hits EP (Rhino) 1981

Spazchow (Rhino) 1981

Soak It Up EP (Boulevard-CBS) 1983

Amazing Adult Fantasy (Rhino) 1984

Sicks (Rhino) 1987

Zabagabee: The Best of Barnes & Barnes (Rhino) 1988 •

Art and Artie Barnes (one of whom had a highly public former life as Billy Mumy, child actor) are a sick pair of perverts you would not want to know personally. At your party, they would stage disgusting practical jokes; they would tell obscene lies to your parents just to get a laugh. Both Voobaha and Spazchow offer heavy doses of dark-hued novelty music that chews up modern culture and spits it back, producing an equal number of chuckles and shudders. The first features the underground hit "Fish Heads" plus "Boogie Woogie Amputee" and "Party in My Pants." On Spazchow you get "Spooky Lady on Death Avenue," "Swallow My Love" and a merciless dissection of (the group) America's "I Need You."

In what clearly was the only possible response, two members of America provided backing vocals on the pair's next effort, Soak It Up, a relatively restrained five-song EP. (The earlier retrospective EP is a fish head-shaped picture disc.)

Amazing Adult Fantasy offers further proof that age is softening the Barnes boys. Not only does Steve Perry of Journey sing on the utterly presentable "Don't You Wanna Go to the Moon," but the pair makes a vain stab at commercial accessibility with "I Don't Remember Tomorrow" and other wimpolinos. Sicks, however, returns them to the disgustatorium, with such garbage pail tunes as "Pizza Face," "Pussy Whipped" and "Sit on My Lap and Call Me Daddy."

Reprising only two of the five songs comprising the appropriately shaped Fish Heads picture disc, Zabagabee contains many of the pair's finest and most essential moments, including "Fish Heads," "Party in My Pants," "Boogie Woogie Amputee," "Pizza Face" and a fine reading of "What's New Pussycat?" produced by kindred weirdo Bob Casale. (The CD throws in five more.) Lovers of absurdist, sleazy humor should consider Barnes & Barnes highly recommended. All others should proceed with extreme caution. [jy/i]

See also Crispin Hellion Glover.

RICHARD BARONE

See Bongos.

BARRACUDAS

Drop Out with the Barracudas (Vox) 1981 •

Mean Time (Fr. Closer) 1983

House of Kicks EP (nr/Flicknife) 1983

Live 1983 (Fr. Coyote) 1983

Endeavour to Persevere (Fr. Closer) 1984

The Big Gap (Fr. Coyote) 1984

Live in Madrid (Sp. Impossible) 1986

I Wish It Could Be 1965 Again (Fr. GMG) 1987

The World's a Burn EP (nr/Flicknife) 1988

The Garbage Dump Tapes! (nr/Shakin' Street) 1989 •

FORTUNATE SONS

Rising (nr/Bam Caruso) 1986

Karezza (nr/Bam Caruso) 1987

JEREMY GLUCK WITH

NIKKI SUDEN &

ROWLAND S. HOWARD

I Knew Buffalo Bill (nr/Flicknife) 1987

Burning Skulls Rise EP (nr/Flicknife) 1988

Despite a cheerfully self-deprecating stance, London's Barracudas offer quite an enjoyable sentimental journey through assorted American traditions on Drop Out. Some tunes plunge headlong into dense, ringing folk-rock—see "Violent Times" or "I Saw My Death in a Dream Last Night" for an update of the Byrds on a gloomy day. Surf tunes like "Summer Fun" and "His Last Summer" strive a little too hard for laughs to overcome fundamental flimsiness, but are fun and can't be faulted on attitude. (The UK and US versions of the LP differ by a track.)

After abandoning a second album (four tracks from which were salvaged and released as House of Kicks) and losing drummer Nick Turner to the nascent Lords of the New Church, singer Jeremy Gluck and guitarist Robin Wills assembled a new Barracudas and recorded the wonderful Mean Time, produced by Pete Gage

(ex-Vinegar Joe), who also adds evocative keyboards to the LP. Reclaiming more than half of the unreleased album's songs, the Barracudas here sound like a younger Flamin' Groovies (In fact, this five-piece lineup—easily the Barracudas' best—features ex-Groovie guitarist Chris Wilson.) An effortless and catchy '60sish blend of punky pop, vintage rock'n'roll, mock Merseybeat, snarly mild psychedelia and Byrdsy 12-string folk-rock.

The 1983 live LP, packaged and recorded so amateurishly as to resemble a bootleg, has a few original songs from the two preceding albums but mostly consists of covers like "Seven and Seven Is," "You're Gonna Miss Me" and "Fortunate Son." The performances rock out enthusiastically, but the miserable sound quality is an insurmountable obstacle to enjoyment.

After making a third album, Endeavour to Persevere, the Barracudas disbanded at the end of '84. While assorted European labels issued compilations (I Wish It Could Be 1965 Again), outtake collections (The Big Gap) and archival concert albums (Live in Madrid, a terrible 1984 show with better sound than the French live LP), Gluck made a musically unrelated solo LP in collaboration with Nikki Sudden and Epic Soundtracks (both ex-Swell Maps), Rowland S. Howard (Birthday Party, etc.) and Gun Club leader Jeffrey Lee Pierce (on guitar). Various permutations of that gang play Gluck/Sudden compositions in simple recordings that have a nice, casual feel. Stylistic variety—from acoustic guitars ("Gone Free," the nicest tune here) to near-noise (the last portion of the epic "All My Secrets")—keeps Buffalo Bill interesting, but Gluck's artless voice doesn't really suit the material. Intriguing but unsatisfying. (The same crew later reassembled to cut an EP, Burning Skulls Rise.)

For his part, Wills made a pair of albums with a group called the Fortunate Sons (originally a trio, but later a quartet with Chris Wilson), whose bassist wound up in the Barracudas when Wills and Gluck decided to restart the band in early '89. The first order of business was to polish up the tapes of the lost second album from 1982. House of Kicks' belated release as Garbage Dump isn't exactly the Rosetta Stone of '80s music, but it is a potent dose of solid garage rock, albeit without the same tuneful charm as Mean Time (with which it shares eight songs); in hindsight, that underscores the roles Chris Wilson and Pete Gage played on that album. Overall, the biggest failings are the vocals, which are hoarsely unattractive and rather weak in the harmony department, and the unimaginative, overly nostalgic production style. The World's a Burn is a six-track compilation of singles.

By the end of 1990, the Barracudas had recorded an album's worth of new material produced by Andy Shernoff and were looking for a label. [jy/i]

SYD BARRETT

The Madcap Laughs (nr/Harvest) 1970 (Capitol) 1990 •

Barrett (nr/Harvest) 1970 (Capitol) 1990 •

The Madcap Laughs/Barrett (Harvest) 1974

The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1987 (Strange Fruit-Dutch East India) 1991 •

Opel (nr/Harvest) 1988 (Capitol) 1989 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Beyond the Wildwood (nr/Imaginary) 1987 •

One of rock's legendary living dead casualties, guitarist/songwriter Syd [Roger] Barrett formed Pink Floyd in 1965 and made it one of the first art-school bands to abandon blues for drug-riddled psychedelia. Syd fell out of Pink Floyd after a debut album that put the band on the verge of major international success; having grown erratic, withdrawn and unpredictable, he pretty much retired in 1968, and has since lived a private, reclusive existence—except for making two solo records in 1970. Barrett has influenced many bands and remains an enduring rock icon for the chronically dislocated. Twenty years later, his unselfconscious looniness continues to set a framework in which artists can explore updated acid-rock with little more than an acoustic guitar. The Television Personalities have sung about him, Robyn Hitchcock, Anthony More, Edward Ka-Spel (of the Legendary Pink Dots) and others have been compared to him, and numerous art, psychedelic and neo-mod bands have invoked his name, recorded his songs or acknowledged his impact. Tormented but unquestionably brilliant, Barrett left a musical legacy which is wholly contained on Floyd's first LP and these four discs. (The two original records were issued separately but subsequently repackaged as a double album. When it came to CDs, however, they were split up again.)

The Madcap Laughs sounds as though it was a difficult record to make. Ex-bandmates David Gilmour and Roger Waters obviously had to expend some effort to get Barrett organized enough to produce releasable tracks, and they only did half the record. (The remainder was produced by the label manager of Harvest Records.) The inclusion of false starts and between-take discussions make it clear this was no easy task. Still, the songs (e.g., "Terrapin," "Octopus") are wonderful, and Syd's delicate but clumsy singing lends charm to the effort, which alternates between one-man performances and subtly played group efforts (several of which were actually solo takes overdubbed by Hugh Hopper, Mike Ratledge and Robert Wyatt of the Soft Machine).

Gilmour and Floyd keyboardist Richard Wright produced Barrett, using Humble Pie drummer Jerry Shirley as the album's fourth musician. This more consistent-sounding record—relatively confident and upbeat—offers Barrett's idiosyncratic view of life in songs like "Waving My Arms in the Air" and "Effer-vescing Elephant." Confusion and anger lurk just below the surface of misleadingly chipper bits of Carnaby Street flower-power music.

The outtakes and leftovers from those two projects, combined with 1968 demo sessions, were culled for Opel, an excellent appendix to Barrett's oeuvre. Considering the uncommon qualities of The Madcap Laughs and Barrett, this collection of early/alternate/unaccompanied versions and otherwise unreleased material—including "Golden Hair," "Octopus" (then titled "Clowns & Jugglers"), "Dark Globe" (aka "Wouldn't You Miss Me")—make just as cohesive an album. None of these tracks shed any new light on Barrett as a person or an artist, but this is a major addition to his slim solo catalogue.

The excellent Peel EP dates from February 1970 and contains cogent renditions of "Terrapin," "Gigolo Aunt." "Baby Lemonade." "Effervescing Elephant" and the otherwise unissued "Two of a Kind," performed energetically and reasonably cogently with simple accompaniment by Gilmour and Shirley. The EP's US release (on CD and tape only) has a different cover and a singular title.

One of the very first entrants in the recent rash of tribute albums, Beyond the Wildwood contains interpretations of Barrett songs by an assortment of neo-psychedelic bands, including the Soup Dragons ("Two of a Kind"), Shamen ("Long Gone") and the TV Personalities ("Apples and Oranges"). Highlights: the Mock Turtles' unnervingly Syd-like version of "No Good Trying," Plasticland's straightforward "Octopus" and SS-20's wispily sung/enthusiastically played "Arnold Layne." [i]

WILD WILLY BARRETT

See John Otway.

ROB BASE & D.J. E-Z ROCK

It Takes Two (Profile) 1988 •

ROB BASE

The Incredible Base (Profile) 1989 •

New York MC Rob Base (Ginyard) shook more than dancefloors with his first LP: rapping against contrasting refrains of non-sampled soul singing (most notably on the title cut—blithely named the best single of all time by Spin magazine—and "Joy and Pain"), he made an exciting style-busting innovation that helped spread serious hip-hop sounds into the "black music" mainstream. Other than those extraordinary achievements (and "Crush," a croony romantic ballad Base more or less sings), It Takes Two matches powerfully simple rhythm tracks to masterful PG-rated rhymes. Where some rappers revel in the violence of contemporary urban life, Base—a positive self-promoter devoted only to pumping up a good time—has the sense to acknowledge that "Times Are Gettin' Ill" and reject the temptation of drugs and guns.

With his partner temporarily out of the picture, Base followed his gold-selling debut with The Incredible Base, an entertaining stream of high-velocity/high-ideals egocentric rhymes and cushy soul singing. Taking two distinct stylistic directions, the album pushes straight rap—the killer "Turn It Out (Go Base)" and "If You Really Want to Party" hype up the mix with chanted backing vocals, while "The Incredible Base" throws in the kitchen sink to move the jam along—and loosely swinging grooves that borrow music from 20-year-old classics (like "War," "Come and Get Your Love" and "Ain't Nothing Like the Real Thing"). As Base himself immodestly notes, The Incredible Base is "Outstanding." [i]

BASEMENT 5

1965–1980 (Antilles) 1981

In Dub (nr/Island) 1981

Basement 5 came out of Island Records' London art department playing a blend of reggae and synth-pop under the production auspices of Martin Hannett. 1965–1980 waffles between both forms, never quite achieving the hoped-for marriage, but does sport a number of light ditties with heavy political overtones. The contrast between roots and futurism gives Basement 5 a fascinating, if ephemeral, flavor. Even more interesting is In Dub, a paean to Hannett's control-booth genius, which naturally features dub versions of some material from the first LP. Bassist Leo Williams later surfaced in Big Audio Dynamite. [sg]

See also Big Audio Dynamite

BASSOMATIC

See William Orbit.

BASTRO

Rode Hard and Put Up Wet EP (Homestead) 1988

Bastro Diablo Guapo (Homestead) 1989 •

Sing the Troubled Beast (Homestead) 1990 •

Guitarist/singer David Grubbs (who also plays in Bitch Magnet) formed Bastro after the end of Squirrel Bait; he recorded the six-song debut with only a former bandmate, bassist Clark Johnson, and a rhythm machine. Bringing drummer John McEntire into the lineup, the trio made Bastro Diablo Guapo, an above-average LP that embraces—but isn't consumed by—Chicago-styled thrash noise. Rather than careen around like a rhinoceros plugged into an electric socket, Bastro stays tight, well-structured and musical, even when engaging in meltdown firepower.

Sing the Troubled Beast tempers Grubbs' extremist instincts to reveal a rough but stately melodic side, and an affecting poetic sensibility. The guitar has the rich textures of a Hammond organ (an instrument which, like piano, makes an occasional appearance); the rhythm section demonstrates the facility to dig trenches or drop back to small-scale time-keeping. While "The Sifter" is either a disastrous mastering mistake or just a pointless bit of transistorized foolishness, the haunting, somber "Tobacco in the Sink" crystallizes Bastro's achievements to date, and sets the stage for a promising future.

See also Bitch Magnet. [i]

MARTYN BATES

See Eyeless in Gaza.

BATFISH BOYS

The Gods Hate Kansas (nr/Batfish) 1985

Crocodile Tears EP (nr/Batfish) 1985

Head (Twilight) 1986

Lurve: Some Kinda Flashback (Twilight) 1987

BATFISH

Batfish Brew (GWR-Restless) 1989

When singer Simon Denbigh was booted from March Violets, he wasted little time in assembling a more conducive outfit. On The Gods Hate Kansas, the Batfish Boys take the Violets' dark post-punk and give it a traditional rock setting. Several of the best moments ("The Tumbleweed Thing," "Mrs. Triffid" and the terrific single, "Swamp Liquor") are reminiscent of the Cramps or Gun Club, utilizing creepy, twanging riffs and Denbigh's weird, roughly grumbled lyrics to create a bluesy, desolate atmosphere. While the tunes are passable, Crocodile Tears suffers from a lack of this intrigue

By Head, the group had devolved into muddy, guitar-driven rock with psychedelic blues overtones. They display plenty of panache, but the material is all too familiar. Lurve illustrates the problem. Chronologically assembling their British EPs from '85 (including most of the tracks from Crocodile Tears) to '87 ("The Bomb Song"), it reveals a downward spiral from imaginative swamp rock to mediocre pseudo-metal.

Apparently not boys anymore (and presumably aware how dumb the Batfish Men would sound), the group simply became Batfish with the release of the 1989 album. The generic, mid-tempo arena-metal on Batfish Brew is completely indistinguishable from scores of other practitioners. The only track that stands out does so for its utter inanity: a cover of Queen's "Another One Bites the Dust" with a feeble attempt to insert bits of Hendrix's "Purple Haze," an exercise even more pointless than it sounds. [dgs/gef]

See also March Violets.

STIV BATORS

Disconnected (Bomp!) 1980 ●

The Church and the New Creatures (Fr. Lolita) 1983

So what does a typecast Dead Boy do when his band breaks up? He moves to Los Angeles, hires local musicians and cuts a tremendous album of melodic rock tunes. Playing down his outrageous side, Bators' first solo record maintains an Iggy-like persona while replacing chaotic garage-punk with thoughtful music that owes power pop a sizable debt. Originals like "Evil Boy" and "The Last Year" mask their dark messages with pretty tunes; a great cover of the Electric Prunes' classic "I Had Too Much to Dream (Last Night)" clarifies Bators' roots and caps the album off nicely. The French LP contains all of Disconnected, adding three sides from a pair of Bomp! singles and one other cut.

In 1987, Bators released a 12-inch ("Have Love Will Travel" b/w a sharp swipe at the Moody Blues' "Story in Your Eyes") on Bomp!, with musical assistance from various co-conspirators. He later sang with Jeff Conolly on a Lyres song, issued as a 12-inch and included on that band's 1988 LP. In June 1990, Bators was struck by a car in Paris, returned home and died of his injuries the next day. [i]

See also Dead Boys, Lords of the New Church, Wanderers.

BATS

By Night EP (NZ Flying Nun) 1984

"And Here Is 'Music for the Fireside!'" (NZ Flying Nun) 1985

Made Up in Blue EP (nr/Flying Nun) 1986

Completely Bats [tape] (NZ Flying Nun) 1987
(Communion) 1991

Daddy's Highway (NZ Flying Nun) 1988 (Communion) 1988 ●

Four Songs EP (NZ Flying Nun) 1988

The Law of Things (NZ Flying Nun) 1990 (Communion) 1990 ●

When the former bass players for New Zealand legends Toy Love and the Clean—Paul Kean and Robert

Scott, respectively—decided in 1983 to form a band together, Scott (also perpetrator of the Every Secret Thing fanzine and cassette label) switched to guitar and led the group into the studio to record six of his melodic melancholic odes By Night is paradoxically morose and exhilarating, each song a moody pop gem, with hints of the hard-strummed countryisms of Gram Parsons. The seven-song Fireside 12-inch is even better, spanning a wider stylistic spectrum, from lackadaisical laments to sweeping, enticing rushes of pure pop satisfaction, each made all the more appealing by Scott's nasal, high register vocals.

Recorded in a 24-track London studio during a 1986 European trip, Blue (the first Flying Nun UK release) lacks some of the alluring immediacy of its predecessors. All three tracks were reissued on the following year's Completely, along with all of Fireside and five-sixths of By Night.

The Bats' first proper album, begun in Scotland and finished in NZ, is a bit of a disappointment. Generally softer and less heady, as well as less identifiably Bat-like, Daddy's Highway finally brought the group an American release (and prompted a US tour). Four Songs excerpts the standout track, spreading it flatteringly across twelve full inches with a B-side trio harking back to the sound of the Blue EP.

Following time devoted to other pursuits—like the Clean reformation and singer/multi-instrumentalist Kaye Woodward's motherhood—the Bats returned to action, releasing several singles and the monumental Law of Things LP. Capturing all the hooky appeal and personal charm of their first records, it updates the recipe with seven years of instrumental mastery and superior sonics, becoming, along with Completely, one of the two essential Bats releases, as well as a high-water mark of New Zealand musicmaking. [ab]

See also Clean, Tall Dwarfs.

LES BATTERIES

See Fish & Roses.

BAUHAUS

Bela Lugosi's Dead EP (nr/Small Wonder) 1979 ●

In the Flat Field (nr/4AD) 1980 ●

Mask (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1981 ●

Searching for Satori EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1982

The Sky's Gone Out (A&M) 1982 ●

Press the Eject and Give Me the Tape (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1982 ●

Ziggy Stardust EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1982

Lagaritja Nick EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1982

Burning from the Inside (Beggars Banquet-A&M) 1983 ●

The Singles 1981–1983 EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1983 ●

4.A.D. EP (nr/4AD) 1983

1979–1983 (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1985 ●

Swing the Heartache: The BBC Sessions (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1989 ●

Though their career was over in a mere four years, Bauhaus are the acknowledged godfathers of gothic rock, following the art movement for which they were named in seeking to use minimalism as a powerful mood-setting tool. Combining guitars and electronics into a bleak backdrop for Peter Murphy's angst-driven vocals, Bauhaus ignited what was already a volatile mix by throwing dark, energetic theatrics into the pot.

"Bela Lugosi's Dead" (gloom's own "Stairway to Heaven") is an unlikely debut single which melds brisk dub reggae rhythms, Daniel Ash's creepy, atmospheric guitar technique and Murphy's Nosferatu vocal performance. If the record created any stylistic expectations, however, Bauhaus was quick to defy them, as the group's subsequent records were all significantly different from each other.

The self-produced In the Flat Field is a dense, disjointed patchwork of sounds and uncertain feelings, supported by a pressured, incessant beat. Delving deep into the dark side of the human psyche, Bauhaus conjures up unsettling images of a world given over to death and decay. Mask, their finest achievement, explores a variety of styles, incorporating airs of heavy metal, funk brass and Tangerine Dreamy electronics into an organic whole. Though still weighty, the lyrics make occasional stabs at humor and reveal an increasingly romantic side.

Searching for Satori offers a wholly different version of 1981's funky "Kick in the Eye" 45, a dub mix of a Mask track and a pair of reggae-influenced new cuts, "Harry" and "Earwax."

The Sky's Gone Out opens with a lively, bright version of Brian Eno's "Third Uncle," signaling a more upbeat period for Bauhaus, offsetting the ongoing themes of death and destruction. Good production opens up the sound considerably and, in a flash of ambition, the album includes a three-part mini-opera, "The Three Shadows." (The CD adds four bonus tracks.) Press the Eject and Give Me the Tape, a live LP recorded in London and Liverpool, was first included as a second disc in UK copies of The Sky's Gone Out, then reissued as a separate album.

The late-'82 release of a copycat live-in-the-studio version of "Ziggy Stardust" (joined on the 12-inch by a bizarre, funny original consisting of Faustian film dialogue over cool instrumental backing, "Third Uncle" and a live recording of "Waiting for the Man," with guest vocals by Nico) supported Bauhaus' self-image as latter-day glam-rockers (the group had released a single of T. Rex's "Telegram Sam" in 1980), taking an intentional poke at critics who had accused the group of imitating Bowie. Besides the tart, enigmatic title cut, Lagartija Nick (another non-LP 12-inch) has a horn-dominated dance track, a live take of "In the Flat Field" and the weird in-joke of "Paranoia, Paranoia."

A bout with pneumonia forced Murphy to miss several recording sessions, leaving Ash and bassist David J(ay) to sing almost half the songs on the final Bauhaus album, Burning from the Inside (no doubt a pivotal development towards their work as Love and Rockets). There are plenty of swell numbers, some in a more acoustic vein (Ash's haunting "Slice of Life," the optimistic "Hope" and the delicately chanted "King Volcano"); still, the individualized songwriting weakened the band's sense of unity.

Bauhaus split up in mid-1983. Ash continued a side project he'd begun in 1981, Tones on Tail, soon joined by Bauhaus drummer Kevin Haskins. Jay did a hefty amount of solo recording, briefly joined the Jazz Butcher, then got together with Ash and Haskins (when a planned Bauhaus reunion fell through) to form Love and Rockets. Peter Murphy teamed with ex-Japan bassist Mick Karn to form Dalis Car, then went solo.

In death, Bauhaus has become more popular (and influential) than ever, a phenomenon exploited by numerous posthumous collections. The Singles EP consolidates six A-sides, including "Ziggy Stardust," "Kick in the Eye" and "Lagartija Nick." 4.A.D. compiles several 1980 singles, including "Telegram Sam," "Dark Entries" and a rare version of John Cale's "Rosegarden Funeral of Sores." The double disc set 1979-1983 functions as both a comprehensive overview of Bauhaus' work—spotlighting both the popular singles and more obscure album tracks and flip-sides—and as a one-stop sampler, though it does include the memorable "Sanity Assassin" (which was to be their last single), previously available only on a fan club 45. The more intriguing Swing the Heartache joins all four of the group's UK radio sessions, which (roughly) chronologically correspond to the four original studio albums (all of which have since been issued on CD with non-LP singles tacked on). Of particular note are two previously unknown songs ("Poison Pen," a sinister piece of anti-drug funk that had been recorded for Mask, and a sizzling off-the-cuff version of the Strangeloves' '66 garage rocker "Night Time") and a version of "Third Uncle" at a tempo much closer to the original. [sg/igjef]

See also Jazz Butcher, Love and Rockets, Peter Murphy, Tones on Tail.

BEARS

See Adrian Belew.

BEASTIE BOYS

Polly Wog Stew EP (Rat Cage) 1982 + 1988

Rock Hard EP (Def Jam) 1984

Licensed to Ill (Def Jam-Columbia) 1986 •

Paul's Boutique (Capitol) 1989 •

The Beastie Boys began in 1979 as a jokey New York University hardcore band starring Adam Yauch, Michael Diamond and drummer Kate Schellenbach. Although the group quickly fell apart, the Beasties reformed in 1981 to cut and release the eight-song Polly Wog Stew, a 7-inch of average but occasionally rambling punk salvos ("Egg Raid on Mojo," "Transit Cop," "Jimi," "Beastie Boys"), later reissued as an import 12-inch of dubious legal standing.

Abandoning the sound of punk while delving further into its snotty attitude, the Beastie Boys stripped down to a trio—Yauch (aka MCA), Diamond (aka Mike D) and Adam Horovitz (aka King Ad-Rock)—and set a course for the big time. Pointing the way to the group's hip-hop future, the 1983 "Cooky Puss" single laid down a tremendous beat pulsing with rock energy, adding sharp mix tricks and puerile spoken-word jive centered on a crank telephone call. Ridiculous but undeniably funny and danceable, the 12-inch includes a bogus reggae song ("Beastie Revolution") that mugs Musical Youth and Rasta culture.

In 1984, the Beasties moved into rap with the release of Rock Hard, a 12-inch produced by NYU chum Rick Rubin. Unmistakably white and middle class, the group acknowledged its '70s rock heritage in hunks of guitar—AC DC riffs pop up in “Rock Hard” and “Party’s Gettin’ Rough,” shards of Led Zeppelin fill “Beastie Groove.” The Beasties then appeared in the film Krush Groove, for which they cut “She’s on It,” a fun, dumb stomper with a great guitar hook and obnoxious couplets like “She’d get down on her knees. If we’d only say please.” The Beasties had reached the heights of offensiveness and were squinting upwards.

The release of Licensed to Ill caught the guardians of popular culture napping. Within months, the album and its attendant 45s were skyrocketing towards astronomical sales levels as kids of all colors in countless countries rapped and danced to such intentionally moronic celebrations of self-indulgent stupidity and trash culture as “Fight for Your Right (To Party),” “No Sleep till Brooklyn,” “Brass Monkey,” “Time to Get Ill” and the absurdly catchy “Girls.” Rubin’s brilliant stew of dodgy bits lifted from records by the Stones, Led Zep, Clash (and dozens more still unidentified), combined with the whining nasal roar of the three stooges’ inventive sexist drivel, somehow hit that perfect beat, and made the Beasties mondo stars, dragging controversy, anger and damage reports in their wake.

By the time the Beasties came off the road, engineered a disputed label switch and got around to making a record (with time out for Horowitz to star in 1989’s Lost Angels), the rap world was a very different—and far more competitive—place. Recognizing the fragile oddness of their stylistic position, the trio abandoned Licensed to Ill’s rock’n’rap formula and reached for street credibility on Paul’s Boutique. What they wound up with was a dull collection of simple rhythm tracks over which the terrible three’s verbose raps (and the record’s innumerable samples) drop endless cultural references to no memorable effect. Lacking Rubin’s furious imagination, the Dust Brothers (California producers responsible for monster records by Tone-Lōc and Young MC) leave the Beasties yakking among themselves on an album that is neither effective hip-hop nor amusing parody. The deluxe fold-out sleeve—two panoramic four-panel photographs of the Lower East Side—is easily the best thing about this disappointing dud. [dgs/i]

BEASTS OF BOURBON

The Axeman’s Jazz (Aus. Green) 1984 (Big Time) 1985 •
Sour Mash (Aus. Red Eye) 1988 •
Black Milk (Aus. Red Eye) 1990

SALAMANDER JIM

Lorne Green Shares His Precious Fluids (Aus. Red Eye)
1985

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Waste Sausage (Aus. Black Eye) 1987
Leather Donut (Aus. Black Eye) 1988

THUG

Mechanical Ape/Proud Idiot’s Parade (Aus. Black Eye)
1987

Electric Woolly Mammoth (Aus. Black Eye) 1988

BUTCHER SHOP

Hard for You EP (Aus. Black Eye) 1988
Pump Action (Aus. Black Eye) 1990

The connecting factor here is Tex Perkins, but really we’re talking about a hefty chunk of Australia’s ugliest, least velvet underground. On Axeman’s Jazz, the Beasts of Bourbon—Tex (vocals), Spencer Jones (guitar) and three past or present Scientists—play lazy, garagey nihilistic C&W with moderately straight faces. Highly Crampsian in feel, the material and restraint (not to mention prominent slide and scree guitar) invent a new category for the band, one that garnered a considerable worldwide indie following back in ’84, particularly amongst chronic thrashaholics. (The live B-side added to the US edition features an alternate selection of Scientists.)

Salamander Jim posits Tex in front of a new band with similarly anti-social proclivities, making C&W just one facet of a mash rampant with James White Brownisms, jagged Beefheartian R&B and even a Stoooge cop or three, adding up to a (short) LP that may not be original, but lurches and sputters to a peculiarly intriguing internal heartbeat.

At this point, things really begin to fragment and fester. Australia’s Red Eye label caught a whiff of what the ex-Salamanders were doing and promptly formed Black Eye to isolate them from the rest of the species. Salamander Jim’s Lachlan McLeod assembled Waste Sausage (and later Leather Donut), two dangerously inbred collections of real and spurious “bands” populated by former Jims and diseased cohorts playing brutal and scato-sexual music spanning the lizard lounge to the hardcore pit. Naturally uneven, the overall tone of disgust and DIY invests even the weaker tracks with a sense of place and purpose; the same sort of contextual value that makes Live at the Roxy a genuinely endearing historical document instead of just a shittily recorded live compilation.

Meanwhile, as Stuart Grey from Salamander Jim was turning up the volume to become Stu Spasm of Lubricated Goat, Tex joined with Peter Read to complete the original Black Eye roster in Thug, who may not have planned to crack the local alternative charts with their deliciously malicious debut 45 “Fuck Your Dad,” but unexpectedly found themselves with a genuine hit partway through 1987. Mechanical Ape/Proud Idiot’s Parade, even less cohesive and coherent than Waste Sausage, is the aural equivalent of a dying man’s life flashing before his eyes—assuming said life to be foul and filthy, filled with discord and turmoil—conveniently condensed for the incumbent corpse into 40 or so minutes of snippets combined and maligned for maximum discomfort. Electric Woolly Mammoth varies the recipe only in titling the snippets rather than merely the side, adding McLeod as the third Thug, and being belligerently more juvenile. And clownish. And obvious. And inferior.

The Butcher Shop reunited Tex with Spencer Jones, adding Kid Congo Powers (Cramps, Bad Seeds, Gun Club), first for a much heavied-up Beastlike-cum-Jimian EP, the extended tribal drone of the B-side being its sole mesmerizing factor, while the 1990 LP (with no personnel overlap save Tex and bassist Phil Clifford, supplemented by assorted Sausages and Salamanders) is almost confusing in context for its rote simplicity. Tough in pose but weak in delivery, it sounds like an LP of B-sides and filler.

Which perhaps it is, as Tex reformed the original Beasts concurrent with the Butcher Shop; the only difference between the new group and the old one is that it's angrier, meaner, more spiteful, more vicious and more capable of flaying with sound. Including the title track from the Butcher Shop's debut—here played out expansively and nine times ballsier—the songwriting on Sour Mash echoes the band's earlier C&W misanthropy but finally interpolates it into a singular black-eyed drive that invests the hateful narratives with the sort of power, immediacy and personal threat inherent in the best country blues.

Black Milk, with an extended cast that includes pianist Louis Tillet from Wet Taxis, is closer to a Chicago sort of blues LP, the anger and attack subdued, the band subservient to familiar style. Which is not to deny the individual elements—sometimes strking for their respective instants—but taken as a whole the thurd LP is only modestly rewarding. [ab]

See also Lubricated Goat.

BEAT

The Beat (Columbia) 1979

To Beat or Not to Beat EP (Passport) 1983

PAUL COLLINS' BEAT

The Kids Are the Same (CBS) 1982

Paul Collins, once a third of SF-to-LA's fabled Nerves (the other two were Peter Case, later of the Plimsouls, and tunesmith-to-the-stars Jack Lee), writes songs calling to mind the early Hollies (except grittier and American) and a more down-to-earth, less poetic Byrds. Though never scaling the heights of either band, The Beat (issued prior to the name conflict with the English Beat) is simple, satisfying power pop, all meat and no filler. If anything, though, it's a little too no-frills, with unimaginative production; the lack of idiosyncrasy and variation gives it a monotonous feel.

This problem was remedied somewhat on the Beat's second album, which is quite a bit heavier. Although they seem to run out of steam—and songs—halfway through The Kids Are the Same, the band shows a high degree of musical volatility up to that point.

Collins refurbished the Beat's lineup for the 1983 EP. The new combo includes ex-Patti Smith Group drummer Jay Dee Daugherty and guitarist Jimmy Ripp, both of whom have played on Tom Verlaine LPs. The band smokes and the songs are stylistically varied, but this glorified demo surprisingly failed to get Collins a new major-label deal. [jg]

(ENGLISH) BEAT

I Just Can't Stop It (Sire) 1980 (IRS) 1983 •

Wha'ppen? (Sire) 1981 (IRS) 1983 •

Special Beat Service (IRS) 1982 •

What Is Beat? (IRS) 1983 •

Although lumped in with the 2-Tone crowd upon emerging in 1979, the wonderful Beat (known in America as the English Beat) proved far more versatile and broadly talented than most of their skanking contemporaries. True, I Just Can't Stop It has its share of ska-influenced upbeat—a delightful reworking of "Tears of a Clown" (on the US release only) and patois-tinged toasting ("Rough Rider") by Ranking Roger—but the Birmingham band's furious drive and pumping bass ("Two Swords," "Click Click," "Twist & Crawl") relate more to the rock tradition. A recording of Andy Williams' warm-bath "Can't Get Used to Losing You" is a nice gesture, regardless of the outcome. (The US release also includes another track not on the original British album.)

By Wha'ppen?, the Beat had mellowed out, preferring midtempo grooves drawn from various Third World cultures. Loping music, playful combinations of voices (Roger and lead singer/guitarist Dave Wakeling) and Saxa's effervescent sax almost obscure the songs' depressing views of personal and social troubles ("Drowning," "All Out to Get You," "Cheated").

Special Beat Service is the band's slickest offering. The polished music generates more light than heat, but lyrics—dwelling more on romantic than political problems—depict believably complex scenarios. Ranking Roger's lighthearted showcases are now isolated from the group's main concerns, but the Beat here remains a fine band committed to pan-cultural understanding.

The What Is Beat? farewell compilation is actually three different records. The fourteen-track English album is a straight greatest-hits collection of their most memorable work; early copies (and the cassette) added a bonus disc's worth of eight extended remixes. Although there's a lot of overlap in material, the American release is altogether different—single sides, two live renditions, a couple of remixes, etc. Collect 'em all!

Following the Beat's lamentable dissolution, Ranking Roger and Dave Wakeling stuck together to form General Public; David Steele and Andy Cox assembled Fine Young Cannibals. [si/i]

See also Pato Banton, Fine Young Cannibals, General Public.

BEAT FARMERS

Tales of the New West (Rhino) 1985 •

Glad'n'Greasy EP (nr/Demon) 1986 (Rhino) 1991 •

Van Go (Curb-MCA) 1986

The Pursuit of Happiness (Curb-MCA) 1987 •

Poor & Famous (Curb-MCA) 1989 •

Loud and Plowed and ... LIVE!! (Curb) 1990 •

JOEY HARRIS AND THE SPEEDSTERS

Joey Harris and the Speedsters (RDM-MCA) 1983

JACKS

Jacks Are Wild (Rounder) 1988

BUDDY BLUE

Guttersnipes 'n' Zealots (Rhino New Artists) 1991 •

You can tell a lot about musicians by the company they keep. On Tales of the New West, produced by Steve Berlin, this San Diego quartet gets vocal assistance from Peter Case (ex-Plimsouls), Chip and Tony Kinman (Rank and File) and Sid Griffin (Long Ryders). The Farmers do the '50s-come-'80s neo-country-rock stomp with enthusiasm, economy and not a hint of phoniness or selfconsciousness. The mock-cowboy nonsense of "California Kid" (disregarding its uncharacteristic resemblance to the Bonzo Dog Band) proves they're not sensitive about the genre; post-punk roots even show on a cover of Lou Reed's

"There She Goes Again." An honest album from an honest band.

Glad'n'Greasy, a six-song studio recording made during the Farmers' first UK tour ('85), comes even closer than the debut album in capturing the band's down-and-dirty essence. With no intrusive tinkering from producers Bob Andrews (ex-Rumour) and Colin Farley, they rip into Neil Young's "Powderfinger" and attack Rod McKuen's "Beat Generation" with a rocking combination of humor and humanity that would be in shorter supply on subsequent studio efforts.

A re-recorded "Powderfinger" is one of the few highlights of Van Go, a halfbacked, halfhearted outing that doesn't step in anything odious but falls flat on its bum anyway—even as guitarist Buddy Blue's energetic slide work threatens to save the day. A wry Blue tune called "Gun Sale at the Church" offers faint breath in the mirror, but otherwise this one's ready for burial.

Guitarist/singer Joey Harris replaced Blue on The Pursuit of Happiness, a commercially minded record that meanders further from the simple glories of The New West. Echoes of Springsteen, Jeff Lynne and John Cougar Mellencamp don't exactly improve the originality quotient, but Harris' witty songwriting—gossiping about cow-pokers in "Texas" and expressing religious skepticism in "God Is Here Tonight"—does. Covers of Tom Waits and Johnny Cash are beneficial; guest pianist Nicky Hopkins does his bit with typical aplomb.

The band's continuing misguided efforts to tone down their eccentricities on record resulted in Poor & Famous, the most schizophrenic item in the Beat Farmers' catalogue. Though there are some memorable songs—including Harris' "Wheels" and "Girl I Almost Married" and singer/guitarist Jerry Rane's "Socialite"—the album's barren personality deprives them of intensity. Meanwhile, bear-voiced singer/drummer (and ex-Crawdaddy) Country Dick Montana's showcases—always a highlight of live shows—seem completely out of place in this context. Poor & Famous is a disorientingly lopsided listen.

The double Loud and Plowed and . . . LIVE!! temporarily solves the Farmers' record-making dilemma by capturing them in front of a hometown crowd on New Year's weekend '89/'90. The band is in fine form on a selection of highlights from the studio albums, plus well-chosen covers of George Jones, the Kinks and Kenny Rogers. Montana's beer-soaked clowning, never properly integrated on the three previous LPs, fits in perfectly here.

Harris' lone album with the Speedsters is well-crafted but overly conventional commercial rock-pop, distinguished by his soulful vocals and some strong songwriting.

Blue re-emerged as leader of the Jacks, whose one LP features likable bar-band country-rock in a style not unlike the first Beat Farmers disc. The rest of the Jacks (plus Dave Alvin, Mojo Nixon and Richard "Louie Louie" Berry) contributed to Blue's solo debut, Guttersnipes 'n' Zealots, which casts the singer/guitarist as a mature, thoughtful songwriter without sacrificing his rock'n'roll grit. "Blind Monkeys," "Somethin' Inhuman" and a superior remake of "Gun Sale at the Church" demonstrate a rare combination of social conscience and ironic satire. [i/hd]

BEAT HAPPENING

Beat Happening EP [tape] (K) 1984

Three Tea Breakfast EP [tape] (K) 1984

Beat Happening (K) 1985

Crashing Through EP (nr/53rd & 3rd) 1988

Jamboree (K-Rough Trade) 1988

Black Candy (K) 1989 •

1983-85 (K-Feel Good All Over) 1990 ◊

Dreamy (Sub Pop) 1991 •

BEAT HAPPENING/SCREAMING TREES

Beat Happening/Screaming Trees EP (K-Homestead) 1988

Overweening ambition is such a common component of contemporary music that it's nice to find a young band that truly doesn't have any. Beat Happening, a talented trio of minimalists from Olympia, Washington, write and sing swell songs, accompanied only by shards of guitar and rudimentary drum(s). To their credit, Bret, Heather and Calvin Johnson (all three switch off playing; Heather and Calvin alternate vocals) consistently sail past the Scylla and Charybdis of rock'n'roll primitivism and never sound pathetic or precious.

After releasing two five-song tapes (Beat Happening contains the band's debut single, "Our Secret"; the rudimentary and easily skipped Three Tea Breakfast was recorded in Tokyo) via Calvin's K label, Beat Happening made a great debut album, produced (well . . .) by Greg Sage of the Wipers. This fresh breeze of one-take pop ingenuity is remorselessly amateurish but loaded with charm and invention. Some songs ("I Spy," "Down at the Sea" and the Crampsy "Bad Seeds," presented in both studio and noisy live renditions) are fully developed and could easily bear complete arrangements, while others ("In Love with You Thing") are a little too eccentric for their own good.

Just prior to the release of their second album, Beat Happening issued a four-song UK 12-inch. Along with Jamboree's "Crashing Through" and an alternate version of the same LP's "The This Many Boyfriends Club," Crashing Through contains both sides of a non-LP single.

Repeating the first LP's gambit of ending with a live cut, Jamboree—co-produced by Mark Lanegan and Gary Lee Conner of Screaming Trees—is a bit more intricate and electric than Beat Happening, but not enough to hurt. What makes the group so special is its innate ability to turn raw, crude ingredients into friendly, nice music without getting all mushy about it. So, while "Hangman" gets a ferocious Cramps roar going, the vocals are totally mild. Similarly, the alluring "Indian Summer" paints an idyllic lyrical picture over a Velvet Underground drone relieved of all sinister implications. On the other end of the spectrum, the Jonathan Richman-like pathos of "Cat Walk" has enough of a spine not to whimper.

The four songs on the joint Beat Happening/Screaming Trees 12-inch (the record melds the two groups without specific credits) suggest that someone in Olympia's been listening to Disraeli Gears a lot. (The wah-wah and mock-Ginger Baker drumming is a dead giveaway.) "Polly Peregrin" and the pointedly titled "Tales of Brave Aphrodite," a loopy confessional, are rough-cut electric pop with definite '60s ambience.

Beat Happening lost its poise on Black Candy, a disappointing album that's more careless than casual, with vocals (almost all by Calvin) that wander nervously around melodies over guitars and drums that are too often intrusively aggressive (and, in "Knick Knack," gravely out of tune). While the Crampstan grind of "Pajama Party in a Haunted Hive" and the driving intensity of "Ponytail" are impressive, there isn't enough winsome pop ("Cast a Shadow" and the folksy "Other Side" are pretty much it) to balance out the mood. Sung over snapped fingers and brushes on a snare, the somber "Grave Digger Blues" has the record's lightest sound, but not a shred of innocence or vulnerability. Has maturity overtaken our young heroes?

Produced by Steve Fisk, the darkly painted Dreamy continues the stylistic direction introduced on Black Candy but is a much better, more consistent LP with none of its predecessor's sloppy shortcomings. Calvin's resonantly deep voice is the concise (30 minutes) disc's dominant feature (Heather sings three: the lightly tuneful "Left Behind," the wistful "Fortune Cookie Prize" and a feedbacky droner, "Collide"); the simple electric music supports him with easy grace, making the most of inspired—and only occasionally Crampsy (check "Nancy Sin")—minimalism

The 26-song 1983-85 combines the band's first single, first album, Three Tea Breakfast, several compilation contributions and some previously unreleased tracks. [1]

BEATNIGS

The Beatnigs (Insight-Alternative Tentacles) 1988 •
Television EP (Alternative Tentacles) 1988

On their debut album, this striking San Francisco quintet explodes in a tight and danceable riot of industrial percussion, vocals and tape manipulations. According to an enclosed booklet ("Aural Instruction Manual"), the word "nig" is defined as "a positive acronym . . . [it] has taken on a universal meaning in describing all oppressed people who have actively taken a stand against those who perpetuate ethnic notions and discriminate on the basis of them." Assailing "Television" (the medium, not the band), poverty and hunger ("Burritos"), the "CIA" and South Africa ("Control"), the Beatnigs cross Devo, Test Dept. and the Dead Kennedys in a brilliant, original coincidence of extremist musical ideas and radical politics. "Television" was subsequently given a pair of head-spinning remixes by Adrian Sherwood, Gary Clail and Mark Stewart and issued on a four-version 12-inch. [1]

BEATNIK BEATCH

See Jellyfish.

BEATNIKS

See Yukihiko Takahashi.

BEAT RODEO

Staying Out Late with Beat Rodeo (IRS) 1985
Home in the Heart of the Beat (IRS) 1986 •

CRACKERS

Sir Crackers! EP (Twin/Tone) 1980

STEVE ALMAAS

Beat Rodeo EP (Coyote) 1982

Following the breakup of the Suicide Commandos (in which he played bass), Minneapolis' Steve Almaas turned to guitar and formed the Crackers (not the New Mexico band with the same name). Unfortunately, the trio's EP is of little consequence except to vaguely indicate the rough-hewn melodic rock direction he'd pursue. Sir Crackers! threatens to take off, but just fizzles.

After working with the Bongos, Almaas and boss Bongo Richard Barone headed down to North Carolina to visit Mitch Easter at his Drive-In Studio. The three of them whipped up the Beat Rodeo EP, finally showing Almaas off to great advantage. If Marshall Crenshaw's early treatment of the Buddy Holly legacy irks you for being wrapped in candy floss, this charming, rocking disc should be right up your alley—swell tunes, Almaas' straight-as-an-arrow vocals and Easter's clear production that lets the natural sweetness shine through.

Almaas almost immediately formed a quartet named for the EP but not including any of its other participants. Staying Out Late (originally issued in Germany in 1984) shows a country bent implicit in its name (but absent from the EP) and integrates it (countryish guitar sound, even a dash of fiddle) rather well into the already established pop-rock context. But there's little memorable content and insufficient élan: "Without You" almost rocks out, but shortcircuits the power with an overloaded arrangement. Also, lyrical tension is never conveyed by Almaas' vocals, which run the emotional gamut from A(miable) to B(oringly benign).

Staying Out Late was produced by Don Dixon (with two tracks by Richard Gottehrer). Whether resulting from the switch to Scott Litt or simply the educational benefit of past mistakes, Home in the Heart of the Beat is a definite improvement. The band tends to play more to its strengths and avoid (or compensate for) its weaknesses. The countryness is now a feel rather than a form, and as such suits them far better; the songs are more mature and less awkward. The record's title may be a tad pretentious, but in several ways Beat Rodeo really is more at home—with themselves, at any rate. Solid, enjoyable fare. [1/2]

See also Bongos.

BEATS INTERNATIONAL

Let Them Eat Bingo (Go Beat-Elektra) 1990 •

After the Housemartins disbanded, bassist Norman Cook returned to his original career as a DJ and became one of England's most successful remixers; that led him to form Beats International, less a group than a conglomeration of singers, musicians and, most important, samples. The music tracks on Let Them Eat Bingo are constructed almost entirely out of other people's songs and recordings. The dub-inspired bass line of the Clash's "Guns of Brixton" is used as the bottom for a cover of the SOS Band's classic "Just Be Good to Me"; a Billy Bragg up/down electric guitar stroke from "Levi Stubbs' Tears" is vamped into the basis for "Won't Talk About It"; and so on. At its best, this is clever stuff that, beyond being enjoyable strictly on its own, provocatively recontextualizes its sources and creates an endlessly fascinating cross-cultural weave—dig how well the African drums fit in with the imitation-Billie

Holiday moaning on "Burundi Blues." At its worst—the tiresome "Babies Making Babies"—it's just boring and silly. (The CD contains a bonus 12-inch mix of the album's "For Spacious Lies.") [gk]

BEAUTIFUL SOUTH

Welcome to the Beautiful South (Go! Discs-Elektra) 1990 ●

Choke (Go! Discs-Elektra) 1990 ○

The two groups that arose from the Housemartins' ashes are as dissimilar to each other as they are from the original group. Unlike Beats International, the Beautiful South is mildly identifiable with the Housemartins, as it also features the acerbic lyrics and sweet vocals of Paul Heaton. But while the old pop jangle has been replaced by a jazzier, keyboard-driven sound that could easily suck in any lite-music-loving yuppie who happened by it, the songs' unrepentant nastiness puts a sharp hook inside such alluring bait.

On Welcome to the Beautiful South, the catchy "You Keep It All In" deftly skewers pop-psych truisms, while "Woman in the Wall" is a grisly, perhaps Poe-inspired tale of wife abuse. The South's special target, though, is the pop machine itself, and "Song for Whoever" unflinchingly dissects the cynicism that goes into the making of so many silly love songs. Welcome can be too clever for its own good, and becomes particularly annoying when it draws a bead on sitting ducks—the potshot at Simon Le Bon is not just predictable, but dated as well.

Expanding from a quintet to a sextet, the Beautiful South returned the same year with the even more bilious Choke, a collection of eleven acerbic, pointed songs that is over and done in 37 minutes. The group's disgust with just about everything but its seductive music—tinged with horn parts straight from the Bacharach/David songbook and distinguished by a loping, easy groove—is palpable from the very first cut, "Tonight I Fancy Myself," where the singer recoils from the sight of icky-cooey lovers and bluntly states, "I choose/self-abuse." On another cut, Brian Corrigan describes a horrible scene of domestic violence and then sings, with perfect insouciance: "I should have kept my eyes shut/My mouth should've closed/But the mixture of vomit and blood/Just crept up through my nose." In "I've Come for My Award," a disgusting, thieving captain of free enterprise allows that "Jesus was my greatest accomplice." Choke makes it clear that the Beautiful South has ample pop sense and pure venom to keep its unique act going for quite a while. [gk]

JEAN BEAUVOIR

Drums Along the Mohawk (Columbia) 1986 ●

Jackknifed (Columbia) 1988 ●

This onetime Plasmatic (more recently a producer and Little Steven sideman) did almost everything on his first solo album—writing, playing, producing, arranging, etc. Side One of Drums Along the Mohawk (the reference is tonsorial) owes a huge debt to Prince (see the "Little Red Corvette" chapter), but the mainstream rock LP makes chameleonic room for other soundalikes: "Rockin' in the Street" favors Eddy Grant, while most of "This Is Our House" could be Foreigner with better vocals. And darned if that ain't Tom Petty singing "Drive You Home." Welcome to the wax museum . . .

Recorded in New York, Paris, Stockholm and elsewhere, Jackknifed lets a few musicians share in the fun. Beauvoir thankfully downplays the stylistic clone action (although the Prince influence is far from gone), but forgets to replace it with anything sufficiently original or substantial. His lyrics—clever and provocative—are the best aspect of this highly accomplished and salable album which is neither diverting nor memorable. [i]

BEFOUR THREE O'CLOCK

See Three O'Clock

BEL CANTO

White-Out Conditions (Bel. Crammed Discs) 1987 (Can. Netwerk) 1988 ●

Birds of Passage (Can. Netwerk) 1989 (Netwerk-IRS) 1990 ●

The name is Italian ("beautiful song"), but this trio hails from Norway, sings mostly in English and was originally signed by an artsy Belgian label. Bel Canto's songs are delicate soundscapes that effectively blend orchestral and folk instruments with electronic keyboards and computer-driven synths. On the first LP, Anneli Marian Drecker sings in a fairly limited but not unpleasant alto, a new age Siouxsie Sioux with a slight accent and voice lessons. White-Out Conditions offers a decent variety of material, from Enoesque pop ("Blank Sheets") to somewhat clichéd electro-noodling ("Upland"), but the surprise is "Agassiz," an Arabic-flavored dancefloor oddity.

Drecker stretches out her falsetto more on Birds of Passage, but she has all she can do to keep from being buried in the thick orchestration crafted by bandmates Nils Johansen and Geir Jenssen (plus guests playing everything from flugelhorn to bouzouki). Fans of the Cocteau Twins, Minimal Compact, Virginia Astley and other chamber-rock artists should feel at home with Bel Canto, although the trio adds more bite where necessary. Intriguing stuff. [dgs]

ADRIAN BELEW

Lone Rhino (Island) 1982

Twang Bar King (Island) 1983

Desire Caught by the Tail (Island) 1986 ●

Mr. Music Head (Atlantic) 1989 ●

Young Lions (Atlantic) 1990 ●

Pretty Pink Rose EP [CD] (Atlantic) 1990 ●

BEARS

The Bears (Primitive Man) 1987 ●

Rise and Shine (Primitive Man) 1988 ●

Having served with David Bowie, Talking Heads, the Tom Tom Club and King Crimson, guitarist Belew echoes famous associates on his first solo LP without staking out any turf to call his own. The Kentucky native employs pre-stardom friends from Midwestern bands rather than big names, serving up a varied program of calculated weirdness, straight rock and semi-funk. Mildly charming and rather unfocused, the tenuously unifying thread on Lone Rhino is his David Byrne-influenced voice.

On his second outing, Belew shows much more self-assurance in putting over the same ingredients—an assurance that spills over into self-indulgence long before the album is over. But this record does underscore his contributions to King Crimson: the distinctive vocabulary of extra-musical noises, the personality and especially the humor, which is in abundant evidence here. When it all works, it works incredibly well.

Before taking a solo hiatus in the Bears, Belew issued a one-man instrumental record, Desire Caught by the Tail. The simply overdubbed guitars and percussion have a casual home-studio air but no discernible direction. Unlike his ex-bandmate's obsessively controlled Frippertronics, these excursions, while occasionally evocative, hold scant listener appeal.

Seemingly designed to discover how his catalogue of eccentric guitar noises would sound in the context of a traditional pop-rock band—like, say, the Beatles, Hollies, Squeeze or XTC—Belew hooked up with pre-Crimson bar buddies the Raisins to form the Bears. And what a revelation the group's two wonderful records are! Challenging, muscular, tuneful, idiosyncratic and accessible, The Bears (complete with group cover portrait by Mad magazine's inimitable Mort Drucker) is a superlative record. Everyone contributes and it all works—songs, playing, vocals and production. The only catch: it's too pop for weirdo purists, too weird for pop purists. You figure out why it didn't sell lots of copies.

Rise and Shine is nearly as good. While a bit more adventurous in song structure and playing, it also contains the occasional heavy-handed lyric (especially when bassist Rob Nyswonger writes alone) and one or two fewer memorable songs than The Bears. You'd be foolish to pass up either of these, though—get 'em while you can. As a bonus, the CD adds remixed versions of two songs ("Man Behind the Curtain" and "Figure It Out") that were on The Bears.

Belew returned to the one-man-band approach of Desire Caught by the Tail for his Atlantic albums, making allowances for a few guest performers on each. The main difference between them and his work for Island is that the newer material is far more accessible. Mr. Music Head, Belew's most pop-oriented album to date, shows the Bears' influence. Written mostly on piano, it's definitely more song-oriented than any of his earlier solo records, though containing enough of his signature guitar demonstrations to please the faithful. Still, a pure pop ditty like "Oh Daddy" (with guest vocals by daughter Audie) would have been hard to imagine on any of his prior records.

Belew finished Young Lions just before going out on David Bowie's globe-trotting Sound + Vision tour, in which he served as guitarist and musical director. Bowie's presence is strongly felt here, not just because he wrote and sings two songs (including the catchy "Pretty Pink Rose," also issued on a CD with two non-LP cuts and the previous album's "Oh Daddy"), but in the album's generally heavier—but somehow more ethereal—tone. If Mr. Music Head was an earth-bound journey with a nostalgic edge (typified by "Motor Bungalow" and "1967"), Young Lions constantly looks skyward in the present, whether for salvation on "Looking for a U.F.O." or at "Men in Helicopters" shooting rhinos from the sky. Only the album's two covers seem out of touch with Belew's strong vision here: a reworking of "Heartbeat," which he originally sang on King Crimson's Beat, and a faithful-but-faster rendition of the Traveling Wilburys' "Not Alone Anymore." [jymf ds]

See also David Bowie, King Crimson, Talking Heads.

BELLE STARS

The Belle Stars (Stiff-Warner Bros.) 1983

Offering a self-contained, funkier alternative to early Bananarama, London's seven-woman Belle Stars played and sang neo-soul and dance-rock. At their most glamorous (the excellent "Sign of the Times") they resemble that era's ABC, but with added spunk and less chrome. Much of the material on the album is, however, much plainer. Far more enjoyable than the band's originals are covers of "Mockingbird," "Needle in a Haystack," "The Clapping Song" and "Iko Iko" (a huge hit when recycled on the soundtrack of 1988's Rain Man) which provoke a good time largely through the band's own evident enjoyment. [i]

BELOVED

Where It Is (nr/Flim Flam) 1988

Happiness (Atlantic) 1990 ●

Blissed Out (nr/East West) 1990 ♀

As a dark and moody British independent rock act, Camberwell, London's Beloved floundered in obscurity for much of the late '80s, releasing a series of unsuccessful singles (eventually compiled as Where It Is). Comparisons to early New Order are inevitable, not just because of the similarity between Jon Marsh's plain-but-comforting vocals and those of Bernard Sumner, but by dint of the band's jolting instrumentation (as on "This Means War") and furtive experiments with drum boxes and synthesizers. The beautiful ballad "Surprise Me" aside, the most remarkable thing about the original Beloved was that they persisted for so long with such mediocre results.

The group then split in half, leaving Marsh and keyboardist Steve Waddington to pursue a growing fascination with dance music. After several further unspectacular singles, they re-emerged on a major label, still casting reflections to New Order, but suddenly—and spectacularly—as peers rather than from a distance. Building on layers of luscious synthesizer and relaxed dance beats, still utilizing guitars (but without aggression), the duo came up with a mellow anthem for the rave generation ("The Sun Rising"), quickly followed it up with a list of their own reference points ("Hello") and then unleashed a debut album that lived up to its title in all respects. Every song on Happiness sounds like a single; with its inviting melodies, relaxed grooves and a feel for commercial appeal that never sacrifices subtlety, it is the perfect pop souvenir of Britain's turn-of-the-decade dance movement.

A fondness for remixes and the procession of singles drawn from Happiness led to the equally joyful listen of Blissed Out, which reprises most of the album's tracks in extended form(s). (The cassette has five bonus mixes.) [tf]

BERLIN

Pleasure Victim (M.A.O.-Enigma) 1982 (Geffen) 1983 •
Love Life (Geffen) 1984 •
Count Three & Pray (Geffen) 1986 •
Best of Berlin 1979-1988 (Geffen) 1989 •

BIG F

The Big F (fff-Elektra) 1989 •

Los Angeles' Berlin had been active for several years—an almost totally different lineup issued a 1980 single—before bursting onto the national scene with the impressively slick Pleasure Victim, a seven-song mini-album which commercializes routine synth-rock with singer Terri Nunn's audio pornography. The record's most blatant (and hence, popular) track, "Sex (I'm a . . .)," is tasteless and offensive, with crude lyrics and ridiculous moaning. There are two likably atmospheric tunes ("Masquerade" and "The Metro"); otherwise this ranges from bland to inept. (The CD adds a track.)

Berlin serves up more singles-bar smarm on Love Life, which makes a bid for respectability as a techno-dance band. Unfortunately, bassist/singer John Crawford is too shallow a songwriter; at best, Berlin can only manage a polished Mike Howlett-produced noise (Giorgio Moroder co-produced a pair of tracks as well) to glamorize a vapid and depressing view of sex. Pathetic.

Between them, Nunn, Crawford and drummer Rob Brill brought only vocals and a rhythm section to Count Three & Pray. With unannotated guitar work by Ted Nugent, Dave Gilmour and Elliot Easton, plus a heap of other session players, Berlin made what thankfully proved to be their last record. (The band ended its miserable existence in 1987, perhaps to make way for Pretty Poison.) While Brill's "Like Flames" is an adequate song with a catchy singalong chorus, Crawford's "Sex Me, Talk Me" is straight from the stunted rut of his attitudes about copulation. Originally co-written and produced by Moroder for the soundtrack of Top Gun, "Take My Breath Away" is a terrible, characterless ballad that somehow became a forgettable hit single.

Besides the obvious hits and album tracks, the non-chronological compilation also contains the group's otherwise non-LP debut single, "A Matter of Time."

Although the hard-rocking power trio is carefully swathed in mystery, no one has ever seen Big F bassist/singer John Shreve and ex-Berlin bassist/singer John Crawford in the same room. (Coincidentally, the Big F drummer's first name is Rob.) Despite its studied goth pretensions, The Big F is merely another noisy soldier in the sub-Cult army of '70s metal wannabes, and not an especially skilled one at that. Shreve's unpleasant growl and Mark Christian's derivative guitar demonstrations give the din-o-meter a good push, but one would have to be a pretty indiscriminate and gullible Led Zep fan to think anything of this shuck. [i]

CINDY LEE BERRYHILL

Who's Gonna Save the World? (Rhino) 1987 •
Naked Movie Star (Rhino) 1989 •

On her debut, Cindy Lee comes off as an endearing flake who at times may remind you of a folksy Patti Smith or a female Jonathan Richman in his Modern Lovers days. Like them, she's no great singer or musician, but her songs, mostly about middle-class adolescent and post-adolescent life crises (alienation, drug addiction, suicide) not only ring true, but do so without lapsing into cliché or self-pity. There's also an ironic sense of humor at work, best seen in "Damn, Wish I Was a Man," a catalogue of reasons for penis envy that contains such gems as "Wish I was a man, I'd be sexy with a belly like Jack Nicholson."

For Naked Movie Star, producer Lenny Kaye beefs up Berryhill's musical surroundings, expanding and amplifying the lineup (an acoustic trio on the debut) on a number of songs. In fact, after a couple, you may think Cindy Lee's working on becoming Southern California's female Springsteen. Fortunately, the first album's spirited quirkiness eventually re-emerges, complete with a new set of purposeful musical reference points that include Blonde or Blonde-era Dylan, Peggy Lee, the Beach Boys and Patti Smith. With Naked Movie Star, Berryhill moves into new areas while remaining true to what made her interesting in the first place. [ds]

ADELE BERTEI

Little Lives (Chrysalis) 1988 •

Sporting a résumé that includes stints with the Contortions, Thomas Dolby and Jellybean Benitez, New York singer Bertei made a surprisingly accessible and enjoyable solo debut with Little Lives. Collaborating on both the fine songs and imaginatively diverse production with keyboardist Ian Prince (and others), Bertei dishes out a warm platter of engagingly substantial dance music, adult rock and jazzy soul-pop. Several numbers gain rich, theatrical character from a backing chorus providing answers to her strong lead vocals. Following Laura Nyro into the '80s, Little Lives establishes Bertei as an intelligent and independent voice.

See also Thomas Dolby, Jellybean. [i]

BEVIS FROND

Miasma (Reckless) 1987 •
Inner Marshland (Reckless) 1987 •
Triptych (Reckless) 1988 •
Bevis Through the Looking Glass (Reckless) 1988
Acid Jam (nr/Woronzow) 1988
The Auntie Winnie Album (Reckless) 1989 •
Any Gas Faster (Reckless) 1990 •
Ear Song EP (Reckless) 1990

BEVIS AND TWINK

Magic Eye (nr/Woronzow) 1990

Trading under the one-man banner of the Bevis Frond, London's prolific Nick Saloman traffics in unreconstructed, unrepentant psychedelia. His procession of remarkable (and mostly homemade) albums could get by, if necessary, on their sheer monomaniacal obsession to the form. Fortunately, the guitarist (and other instruments) is a master craftsman, adept at fashioning quirkily expressive cottage-industry epics out of psychedelia's most overworked conventions.

Miasma, Inner Marshland, Triptych and The Auntie Winnie Album are more or less interchangeable, mixing gently twisted melodic pop, aggressive Hendrixian jamming, moments of reflective introspection and flashes of absurdist humor. (The authentically anachronistic sound is apparently due in part to the fact that much of the material was written and/or recorded years before its release.) The CD versions of these four albums offer excellent value for money, each running beyond 70 minutes, with bonus tracks drawn from two vinyl-only releases: Bevis Through the Looking Glass and Acid Jam, both of which concentrate on Saloman's guitar-freakout expertise.

The upgraded production values of Any Gas Faster (recorded in a real studio for a change) make it a fine forum for Saloman's iconoclastic artistry. A subsequent EP of two Any Gas Faster tracks ("Ear Song" and "Olde Worlde") also contains four live songs from a 1990 Copenhagen show, at which Saloman ably leads a four-man group.

Looking very much like father and son in the cover snap, Saloman and ex-Pink Fairy drummer Twink unite two generations of British psychedelia on Magic Eye, alternating vocals for an inconsistent but frequently fab batch of unstylized (nonetheless retro-sounding) songs, like Bevis' Hüsker Düish "Flying Igloos," the two-chord "Fractured Sky," Twink's deliciously sludgy "The Fairy" and the no-it's-not-the-Stooges "Bag Drip." Despite an overabundance of wanky noodling (all that's lacking at the most aimless points is a voice going "check . . . check . . ."), there's plenty here to enjoy. [hd/i]

See also Social Deviants.

BEWITCHED

See Sonic Youth.

B-52'S

- The B-52's (Warner Bros.) 1979 •
- Wild Planet (Warner Bros.) 1980 •
- Party Mix! EP (Warner Bros.) 1981
- Mesopotamia EP (Warner Bros.) 1982
- Whammy! (Warner Bros.) 1983 •
- Bouncing off the Satellites (Warner Bros.) 1986 •
- Cosmic Thing (Reprise) 1989 •
- Dance This Mess Around: The Best of the B-52's (nr/Island) 1990 •
- Party Mix/Mesopotamia (Reprise) 1991 ♠

FRED SCHNEIDER & THE SHAKE SOCIETY

- Fred Schneider & the Shake Society (Warner Bros.) 1984 (Reprise) 1991 •

Just when new wave seemed to be bottoming out, along came Athens, Georgia's B-52's to rev it back up again, with distinctive junk-store '60s visuals (Kate Pierson and Cindy Wilson sport bouffant wigs—"B-52's" in Southern regional slang) and stark, highly danceable songs with appropriately surreal kitsch lyrics. The B-52's' wacky sense of humor made their self-titled first album a sleeper that was finally certified gold in 1986. Now a cult classic, it contains such cornerstones of the repertoire as "52 Girls," "Dance This Mess Around," "6060-842" and the ever-popular "Rock Lobster."

The B-52's have been wondering what to do for an encore ever since. The eagerly awaited Wild Planet has its inspired moments: "Private Idaho" and "Devil in My Car" mesh a firm beat with dark and/or silly sentiments. "Give Me Back My Man" takes a new direction—a serious (!) showcase for Cindy Wilson's Patsy Cline-influenced singing. (Vocalist Fred Schneider is usually up front for comic relief.) But too much of the album, with its short length and recycled ideas, comes across as a pale imitation of its predecessor.

Apparently the band felt the same way, and stayed away from the recording studio for the next year and a half Party Mix!, issued in the interim, takes three songs each from the two LPs and—through the miracle of tape loops, overdubs and other studio tomfoolery—inflates them to nearly 30 minutes of playing time. The result is functional for discos but antithetical to the B-52's' minimalist precepts.

The band was next "officially" heard from with another mini-LP, Mesopotamia, salvaged from sessions produced by Talking Head David Byrne. Whether under Byrne's humorless influence or not—he plays on the record and engages a couple of Heads-family percussionists to help out—the B-52's get serious, with dire results. "Loveland" and "Deep Sleep" sacrifice élan for slickness—not a fair trade. "Cake" and the title cut (one of only two Schneider vocals) come off as self-conscious parodies of the old, carefree B-52's. Only "Throw That Beat in the Garbage Can" taps the zany reservoir that made the group popular in the first place.

After the curious abortion of Mesopotamia, Whammy! came as a reassuring return to form, or perhaps formula. On some cuts ("Whammy Kiss," "Trism," "Butterbean"), the band goes through the by-now-well-worn motions. Elsewhere ("Big Bird," "Queen of Las Vegas"), horns—introduced on Mesopotamia—and intriguing narratives show the B-52's are only on semi-automatic pilot. Drummer Keith Strickland and guitarist Ricky Wilson (Cindy's brother) play all the instruments save horns; the sound is more electronic than funky-human.

Schneider's solo project hardly discouraged fears about the state of the B-52's. (Kate Pierson helps Fred out with vocals.) The pro tem Shake Society is a fine stopgap for the parent band's looniness. Schneider's lyrics continue to dwell on campy sci-fi ("This Planet's a Mess," "Orbit") and campy fantasy ("Summer in Hell," "Boonga"), with campy sex ("Monster," "It's Time to Kiss") thrown in for good measure. The remixed reissue is billed and titled without mention of the Shake Society.

Ricky Wilson died of AIDS in October 1985, shortly after the recording sessions for Bouncing off the Satellites. Produced by British popmeister Tony Mansfield (who also plays Fairlight on every track) and with Schneider hardly in evidence, the bittersweet record was eventually completed and released in late 1986. The first side is entirely delightful, filled with such classic B-52 silliness as "Wig," "Detour Thru Your Mind" and "Girl from Ipanema Goes to Greenland," but the flip is overly smooth, limp and uninspired. Typifying the record's structural oddness, Schneider is the only band member on the lengthy "Juicy Jungle," co-written and largely played by one John Côté.

Although the B-52's seemed likely to toss in the towel after Satellites, they pulled together (Strickland having switched to guitar), worked out their problems and managed an amazing come-from-behind victory. Don Was and Nile Rodgers (two seemingly odd studio choices that panned out beautifully; each produced half of Cosmic Thing, which relocates the group's old fun-filled groove and gives it a commercially snug berth. Preserving the band's kitschy spirit but eliminating its rhythmic eccentricity, the platinum Cosmic Thing puts the quartet's signature vocals and whimsical lyrics center stage in a slickly mainstream recreation of '60s party music. While the sound is as consistent as TV dinners, the material runs from fabulous ("Roam," "Love Shack," "Deadbeat Club") to fair ("Bushfire") to flat ("Channel Z," "Dry County").

The B-52's and Wild Planet have been repackaged as a double-length cassette (but individual CDs) In 1991, a remixed version of Mesopotamia was issued on a joint CD with Party Mix! The skimpy eleven-song Dance This Mess Around compilation offers a far-from-definitive sampling of the band's albums through Satellites. [s/i]

JELLO BIAFRA

No More Cocoons (Alternative Tentacles) 1987
High Priest of Harmful Matter—Tales from the Trial
(Alternative Tentacles) 1989

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Terminal City Ricochet (Alternative Tentacles) 1989

JELLO BIAFRA WITH D.O.A.

Last Scream of the Missing Neighbors EP (Alternative Tentacles) 1990 •

JELLO BIAFRA WITH NOMEANSNO

The Sky Is Falling and I Want My Mommy (Alternative Tentacles) 1991 •

Since the end of the Dead Kennedys, Jello Biafra has continued to ply his missionary trade with spoken word records. No More Cocoons contains four sides of political satire recorded at college appearances, radio interviews, readings and in-stores. Biafra has found his ideal medium here, and this is as sharp, funny and informative as any DK record. Biafra applies his acerbic wit, endless outrage, abundant intelligence and dramatic skills to a variety of concerns, making the record highly worthwhile and grimly amusing. Those old enough to remember Lenny Bruce or even Mort Sahl in his prime may consider this a topical comedy record in the grand tradition; younger listeners are likely to hear it as a chilling reintroduction to what the DKs' songs were saying all along.

As someone whose outspoken opinions and free-thinking actions are enough to bring down the legal wrath of the land's moral guardians, it's convenient that Biafra has an independent record label on which to rebut his accusers. Following his 1987 acquittal for "distribution of harmful matter to minors" in the Frankenchrist trial, Biafra released a post-mortem on that absurd brush with the justice system. Besides a typically intelligent and amusing 1988 lecture on the general topic of contemporary censorship, the two-disc High Priest offers his detailed account of the events that began on April 15, 1986, when police raided his San Francisco apartment.

Biafra stars in and performs on the soundtrack of 1989's Terminal City Ricochet; the soundtrack album of this Canadian film contains tracks by assorted AT bands as well as Biafra's musical collaborations with D.O.A., Nomeansno and Keith LeBlanc. While working on that project, he took a step towards resuming his musical career with Last Scream of the Missing Neighbors, a roaring rock record that puts Biafra's trademark vocals and songs to D.O.A.'s meat-and-potatoes guitar power. With a half-dozen numbers like "Wish I Was in El Salvador," "Attack of the Peacekeepers" and the epic "Full Metal Jackoff," Last Scream proudly rehoists the DK flag in all but name. [i]

See also Dead Kennedys, Ice-T, Lard.

BIBLE

Walking the Ghost Back Home (nr/Backs) 1986 •
Eureka (Chrysalis-Ensign) 1988 •
The Bible (nr/Ensign-Chrysalis) 1989 •

BOO HEWERDINE AND DARDEN SMITH

Evidence (Chrysalis) 1989 •

This Cambridge, England-based band includes a jazz drummer on keyboards and Kirsty MacColl's brother Neill on guitar. On Walking the Ghost Back Home, the Bible covers a lot of musical territory, from airy Bruce Hornsby-esque rock ("Graceland") to Traffic-like jazz-rock (the title track) to a U2-ish tribute to Mahalia Jackson ("Mahalia"). One song recalls early Bowie; another almost goes back to the days of dole queue punk. While the whole enterprise is earnest and competent, only "Graceland" and "Mahalia" are truly compelling.

The Steve Earle-produced Eureka is a more focused record. Clean and crisply played, it has pretty moments, but also suffers from a real lack of rhythmic dynamism; the songs tend to plod on too long. The Bible is a compilation that contains all but three of Eureka's tracks and adds five more, including "Graceland" (again) and a version of "Abraham, Martin and John" that—believe it or not—is even more sentimental than Dion's original. Initial quantities of the UK release contained a bonus 12-inch of four acoustic cuts.

Bible vocalist Boo Hewerdine teamed up with Texas singer-songwriter Darden Smith on Evidence, a far more interesting and affecting album than anything the Bible's done to date. The unpretentious Smith (who has also done albums on his own) is a perfect foil for Hewerdine; the vocal excesses Hewerdine indulges in the Bible are checked here, and his voice is instead channeled into arresting harmonies in the bare-bones tunes. A winner. [ds]

BIFF BANG POW!

Pass the Paintbrush, Honey.. (nr/Creation) 1985 •
Love's Going Out of Fashion EP (nr/Creation) 1986
The Girl Who Runs the Beat Hotel (nr/Creation) 1987 •
Oblivion (Creation-Relativity) 1987 •
Love Is Forever (Creation-Relativity) 1988 •
The Acid House Album (nr/Creation) 1989 •
Songs for the Sad Eyed Girl (nr/Creation) 1990 •

Besides doing his part to influence the sound of British music by founding and running the influential Creation label, Glasgow native Alan McGee leads this hip neo-pop quartet, which he formed in London. Although Biff Bang Pow! has much to recommend it, fans of the band for which it and the record company are named, however, will find little evidence of the Creation's peerless '60s art-rock here.

Psychedelia and nostalgia inform Biff Bang Pow!'s records but, as often as not, the wiry guitar pop sounds like a compromise between Josef K, Orange Juice and Haircut One Hundred. Although they would seem spiritually in synch with the Television Personalities or Times (indeed, the latter's Edward Ball is an occasional member), Biff Bang Pow! doesn't share those groups' winsome charm or demonstrative cultural resonance.

The cover photo of Pass the Paintbrush shows a set of Vox gear that would do any revivalist band proud. The first side offers little such personality; noisy interludes of non-chromatic harmonica provide the most noticeable component of the short ditties. Side B has the real goods, containing the rushing Kinky "Colin Dobbins" and the outstanding "A Day Out with Jeremy Chester," a lengthy acid-rock trip loaded with wild feedback and exciting guitar crashes. The Paintbrush CD also contains the band's next album.

Poorly produced with thin, shrill sound, The Girl Who Runs the Beat Hotel reveals much stronger, more attractive songwriting. "Someone Stole My Wheels" and "The Happiest Girl in the World" are convincing period pieces colored in with, respectively, prominent organ and female vocals; "Five Minutes in the Life of Greenwood Goulding" uses crazy backwards guitars. Strangely, McGee's vocals suggest Robert Smith on "Love's Going Out of Fashion" and Lloyd Cole on "He Don't Need That Girl." The melodies and varied arrangements are stylishly appropriate, but the botched mix prevents them from being fully appreciated. The 12-inch of "Love's Going Out of Fashion" avoids that sonic pothole and includes three atmospheric non-LP tracks.

Almost all of the band's remaining sharp edges have been polished off of Oblivion, a handsome effort with brilliant vocals and sparkling guitar uplifting the finely constructed songs. Still, it's heartwarming to hear "A Girl Called Destruction" devolve into a noisy old-fashioned raveup; "I See the Sun" contrasts acoustic strumming with massive distortion on the solo. If Paul Weller had grown up listening to the Hollies as much as the Who, the Jam might have made an album like Oblivion; fortunately, Biff Bang Pow! did.

Side One of Love Is Forever mixes electric and acoustic guitars (played by McGee and stalwart bandmate Richard Green) with pretty harmonica to yield music akin to the Bluebells' sprightly folk-rock (but not songs of that group's caliber). The other side—all electric and at times loud—is bracing but largely unfathomable, despite the inclusion of such delicacies as "She Went Away to Love." While remnants of Oblivion's appeal and clarity are evident, Love Is Forever is comparatively dull and uninspired.

The Acid House Album is nothing of the sort, but rather an exceedingly enjoyable compilation containing one side of alternate versions (demos, outtakes, etc.). Surprisingly consistent production sound and wise programming makes this a fine place for neophytes to begin and fans to revisit. (A demo of "The Girl from Well Lane" provides a teaser for the group's next release.)

The seven romantic Songs for the Sad Eyed Girl may be heartfelt, but casual folksy underproduction leaves the record a bit listless. (Some of the tracks are effectively McGee solo acoustic turns.) Only the marvelous massed harmonies of "She Kills Me," "Baby, You Just Don't Care" and "Hug Me Honey" offer reasons to be cheerful. [1]

BIG AUDIO DYNAMITE

This Is Big Audio Dynamite (Columbia) 1985 •

No. 10, Upping St. (Columbia) 1986 •

Tighten Up Vol. 88 (Columbia) 1988 •

Megatop Phoenix (Columbia) 1989 •

BIG AUDIO DYNAMITE II

Kool-Aid (nr/CBS) 1990 •

The Globe (Columbia) 1991 •

The rote replay of the unClash's Cut the Crap only underscores the accomplishment of Mick Jones' subsequent band, originally formed with filmmaker-cum-musician Don Letts. Joe Strummer attempted to purify the Clash by purging Jones, but wound up liberating the guitarist's muse and (for a while) misplacing his own. The original B.A.D.—which included ex-Basement 5 bassist Leo Williams in its uncommon lineup—takes off from various things the Clash had tried on Sandinista! and Combat Rock, but goes much further with audio vérité, sonic effects and beatbox funk. The adventurous band's recordings are creatively ambitious crazy quilts of half-baked songs with fascinating lyrics, slathered over with shards of film dialogue and news reports. Although flimsy and gimmicky on first exposure, the meandering dance grooves on This Is Big Audio Dynamite (especially "E = MC²" and "The Bottom Line") prove far more alluring and resilient with repeated exposure. Jones' monochromatic vocals can be a negative factor in spots, but they're generally adequate to the task, and occasionally perfectly suited.

In a truly startling development, Strummer wound up co-producing (and co-writing half of) B.A.D.'s second album with Jones. Appraising the nature of his contribution or understanding the pair's ongoing synergy is impossible, but finding this uniquely conceived pan-cultural record fascinating is easy. Similar to the first album, but improved by greater studio mastery and better writing, No. 10, Upping St. deconstructs modern culture and politics in a wild soup of sounds and lyrics. The shuffling "Beyond the Pale" and the attractively melodic "V. Thirteen" (reprinted in an instrumental version as "The Big V.") are the closest things to Clash songs since Combat Rock, while "C'mon Every Beatbox" quotes Jeff Beck and Eddie Cochran over a powerful groove with ricocheting drumbeats. ("Badrock City," the B-side dub of the "Beatbox" single, became a surprise dance hit, and was tacked onto later pressings of the album.) A unique, danceable hybrid of art and life.

The disappointing Tighten Up Vol. 88 reaches no such peaks and now sounds like a fairly brazen attempt to get hip commercial airplay. The fault is seldom with Jones' songwriting but more with the slick sheen laid over the leaner, less aggressive beats. The LP yielded "Just Play Music" and "Other 99," but a pall was thrown on the release as Jones fell deathly ill shortly after its appearance; having contracted pneumonia, he was hospitalized for months.

Less than a year after Tighten Up, however, Jones miraculously returned with Megatop Phoenix. Arguably B.A.D.'s best, this dense, quick-cut audio collage weaves its songs through enough studio wankery to summon flashbacks of Sandinista!; the claustrophobic sequencing makes the invention of CD remotes especially welcome. Not unlike his early '80s funk fetish, Jones mixes acid house in to both surprisingly good ("Contact," "House Arrest") and embarrassingly bad ("James Brown") effect. However, his flair for melody is as strong as ever and, although the fun samples ("Honky Tonk Women" and "I Can't Explain," among dozens) are often cluttered, the cinematic mixes collude to create evocative soundscapes for the London-centric cyberpunk/Colin MacInnes lyrics.

Megatop was, in many ways, the culmination of B.A.D.'s original concept, and the band split in early '90. Letts, Williams and drummer Greg Roberts formed Screaming Target, releasing a single called "Who Killed King Tubby?" late that year; keyboardist Dan Donovan joined Tony James—Jones' pre-Clash bandmate in the London SS—in Sisters of Mercy. Jones recruited three street-looking lads (one of whom alarmingly resembles Sid Vicious), adopted the name Big Audio Dynamite II and issued Kool-Aid, a stopgap prior to The Globe. With a relatively loose feel and concept, Kool-Aid is his most diverse outing ever, offering two acoustic ballads, acid-dance, techno-rock, Kraftwerk samples and even Laurie Anderson-styled poltergeist vocals, as well as a remixed (and retitled) version of "Free," the band's contribution to the Flashback soundtrack. [1/ja]

See also Basement 5, Clash, Jah Wobble.

BIG BAM BOO

Fun, Faith, & Fairplay (Uni) 1987

Catchy pop tunes, nicely harmonized joint vocals, heartily strummed acoustic/electric guitars and reverberant drums make this personable (if overly commercial) Anglo-Canadian duo something of an '80s Everly's descendant. Although Richard Manwaring's production frequently drowns the pair in sappy modern arrangements (not that it's an unwelcomed imposition: Big Bam Boo is not at all rootsy or nostalgic in concept), the album's few modestly presented songs (like "Fell off a Mountain" and "Wicked Love") are delightful. [i]

BIG BLACK

Lungs EP (Ruthless) 1983

Bulldozer EP (Ruthless-Fever) 1984

Racer-X EP (Homestead) 1984

Atomizer (Homestead) 1986 •

The Hammer Party (Homestead) 1986 •

Headache EP (Touch and Go) 1987

Sound of Impact (nr/Walls Have Ears) 1987

The Rich Man's Eight-Track Tape [CD] (Homestead) 1987 •

Songs About Fucking (Touch and Go) 1987 •

ARSENAL

Manipulator EP (Touch and Go) 1989 •

Factory Smog Is a Sign of Progress EP (Touch and Go) 1990 •

"The only good policeman is a dead one/The only good laws aren't enforced/I've never hung a darkie but I've fed one.I've never seen an Indian on a horse." With these gentle words, acerbic Chicago fanzine writer Steve Albini began his extremely serious adventures in the rock'n'roll skin trade. For a while, Albini assembled makeshift lineups from other bands: Big Black subsequently stabilized a lineup of its own; regardless of who, they make music that's grating, angular, humorless and very intelligent—sort of a cross between Gang of Four, PiL and the Great Crusades (not a band). Albini's self-righteousness sometimes causes him to be as much unaccommodating as uncompromising, but his bile is generally well-directed, and he's immune to corruption, except from within. All these records are challenging and rewarding.

Lungs is at once the most homegrown and overwrought Big Black release. Over a skeletal art-funk background, Albini creates bleak, tough images of recessioned industrial America. While "I Can Be Killed" is almost laughable for its delusionary self-importance, "Steelworker" is intensely muscular. Bulldozer goes for a chunkier sound and more violent imagery. The recording quality and playing are more sophisticated, making it less alluring than the spartan Lungs. "Cables" is about voyeurs at a slaughterhouse; "The Pigeon Kill" is about poisoning birds; "Seth" is about a dog trained to attack black people. Overambitious, but sincere and scary. (A limited number of copies of Bulldozer were packaged in a sheet metal sleeve, with the band's name etched in acid.) The CD of The Hammer Party, which on vinyl is simply a combined reissue of the first two EPs, adds the third, Racer-X.

Racer-X is less obsessively cranky than the first two records (a positive development). The basic elements remain: one-riff industrial funk grooves, coarse vocals, jagged guitar. But this EP fills out the sound without sacrificing any of its amateur appeal. The musicians, while skilled technicians all, keep the sound raw. And if Albini is still something of a cartoon curmudgeon in his boasts about being "The Ugly American," he at least includes a James Brown cover and a tribute to Speed Racer's cooler brother. Not as idiosyncratically brilliant as Lungs, but fine stuff nonetheless.

Atomizer comes thundering out of the starting gate like a wounded rhino, charging around madly with awesome, claustrophobic rock power. Albini leads his troupe through such angry slices of niho-philosophy, depravity and arson as "Big Money," "Stinking Drunk," "Fists of Love," "Jordan, Minnesota," "Kerosene" and "Bazooka Joe" (for which the liner notes note "part of the drum track is an M1 carbine being fired in a field exercise by a guy named Joe"). A magnificently rugged record and a major sourcebook for countless bands to come.

As a sticker prudently warns, Headache is nowhere near as good as Atomizer. With the exception of the slow-to-fast chugger "Ready Men," nothing approaches the same level of excellence. Although Headache is the weakest Big Black LP or EP, it will forever be remembered for its original (fortunately?) limited edition sleeve: the most gruesome, disgusting photo imaginable, an accident victim's head so grotesque the record had to be sold with a covering black jacket.

Sound of Impact is a rather mysterious, extraordinarily limited edition live LP. Big Black's name appears nowhere on the sleeve or spine; many are unaware of the record's existence. Recorded live in Muncie, Indiana and Minneapolis, it includes early versions with different lyrics of later material, and is as jarring and unrelenting as their concerts were.

The CD-only Rich Man's Eight-Track Tape (ha-ha) is a sixteen-track compilation containing all of Atomizer and Headache plus both sides of the "Heartbeat"/"Things to Do Today" single.

As Big Black was splitting up, they released their finest work: a second actual LP, Songs About Fucking. As if to go out kicking, screaming, howling and biting, it's their most raging, abrasive, pulverizing record, with only an excellent and ironic guitar take of Kraftwerk's "The Model" providing any relief. Albini's screeched vocals are so low in the mix they're just another instrument. Obsessing as usual on the excessive and bizarre side of human life, his stories remain mini horror movies set to the punishing, scathing guitar attack. Lyrically and aurally like Atomizer, it's liable to alter your perceptions. (The CD and cassette add Big Black's cover of Cheap Trick's "He's a Whore," originally released as a 45, complete with parodic sleeve photo.)

Following Big Black's windup, Albini got busy producing records (usually without taking sleeve credit) for the Pixies and zillions of other bands. He also formed Rapeman and discovered entire new vistas of aural and conceptual antagonism that have proven astonishingly influential.

Although the main reason Big Black split was because guitarist Santiago Durango enrolled in law school, he's since found the time to record two EPs as Arsenal, assisted on the second by Naked Raygun's Pierre Kezdy. (Durango was in Raygun's original lineup, prior to Kezdy's arrival.)

Manipulator is too experimental, as if Durango hadn't decided what sort of music he wanted to make. "Little Hitlers" could be a Big Black outtake, but the rest sounds like an afternoon of self-indulgent knob twisting. The vocals, delivered in a barely discernible Darth Vader growl and deliberately hidden behind the instruments, make Albini's anti-singer mixes sound like a U2 album.

Factory Smog is much better. Including songs originally done by the legendary Strike Under and Trial by Fire (Kezdy's two old bands), this EP carries on Big Black's harsh wallop, with big-fuzzed instrumental passages that also bring to mind Breaking Circus. While the vocals are still nowhere near the front of the mix, the harrowing riffs make for real drama. (One CD contains both EPs.) [j/i/jr]

See also Rapeman.

BIG BOYS/DICKS

Recorded Live at Raul's Club (Rat Race) 1980

BIG BOYS

Where's My Towel (Wasted Talent) 1981

Lull, Fun, Fun ... EP (Moment) 1982

Lullabies Help the Brain Grow (Moment-Enigma) 1983

No Matter How Long the Line Is at the Cafeteria, There's Always a Seat! (Enigma) 1984

Wreck Collection (Unseen Hand) 1988 + 1989

Initially another bunch of misfit goodfernaughts in thrall of shock, volume and outrage, Austin, Texas' Big Boys were well matched with cross-dressing nascent blues revisionists the Dicks on the LP they shared, recorded loud and dirty at their hometown's premier end-of-the-'70s punk showplace.

The self-released Where's My Towel better indicates the band's ultimate strengths: Randy "Biscuits" Turner's melodic rasp and shriek, the surprising musical prowess and singularity of the instrumentalists (particularly guitarist Tim Kerr) and, most significantly, the proto-funk leanings that would later dominate the group. They continued to hone/splinter their approach on the two Moment releases, paralleling the anti-metal punk bent of Mission of Burma and, more specifically, those fractured funk political missionaries, the Minutemen.

By the time of the schizo No Matter How Long the Line Is at the Cafeteria LP, the Big Boys encompassed everything from pure 'core to Hüsker Dü-inspired overdrive pop to horn-flatulent dance dreck. Unsurprisingly, this was their last LP; members scattered to units as diverse as Doctor's Mob, Bad Mutha Goose and the Brothers Grimm, Scratch Acid, Poison 13, Rapeman and, most ignominiously, Junkyard. In 1988, longtime producer/collaborator Spot released (first on tape and second on vinyl) the Wreck Collection of odds and ends, beginning with the impossibly rare (until recently bootlegged) debut 7-inch and running through outtakes and alternate mixes. [ab]

See also Dag Nasty.

BIG COUNTRY

The Crossing (Mercury) 1983 ●

Wonderland EP (Mercury) 1984

Steeltown (Mercury) 1984 ●

The Seer (Mercury) 1986 ●

Peace in Our Time (Reprise) 1988 ●

Broken Heart EP (nr/Mercury) 1988 ●

Through a Big Country (nr/Mercury) 1990 ●

Guitarist Stuart Adamson—the unsung hero and sound shaper of the Skids—survived that once-wonderful band's miserable end to form a down-to-earth rock quartet unhampered (at the outset, anyway) by grandiose artistic pretensions. Rounded out by guitarist Bruce Watson and the ace rhythm section of Tony Butler and Mark Brzezicki (who have also played, individually and collectively, on records by Pete Townshend, the Pretenders, Roger Daltrey and others), Big Country quickly jumped into the vanguard of resurgent guitar-hero bands.

Retaining some of the Skids' pseudo-Scottish six-string-bagpipe effects, The Crossing, brilliantly produced by Steve Lillywhite, offers rousing anthems ("In a Big Country," "Inwards" and "Fields of Fire," its riff cleverly lifted from "The Guns of Navarone") and moving romantic ballads ("The Storm," "Chance") that neatly intertwine Celtic folk traditions with blazing guitar riffs. (The UK tape edition has extra tracks.) The Wonderland EP consists of four songs, including an early B-side and the uplifting, catchy title track, one of the band's best efforts.

Steeltown breaks no new ground and is basically a formulaic reprise, but the band is so unique, passionate and skilled at what they do that you don't really mind. Best selections: "East of Eden," "Where the Rose Is Sown" (a virtual rewrite of "In a Big Country," itself not all that different from "Fields of Fire") and "Just a Shadow."

Well-crafted, with melancholy lyrics and a guest vocal appearance by Kate Bush on the title track, The Seer holds close to the band's by-now-standard sound, with no loss in appeal. Even if they don't vary much in content or style, Big Country's records offer an original and invigorating brand of modern rock'n'roll with deep cultural resonance.

After carefully establishing their rockist guitar-army aesthetic, Big Country took a surprising detour on the deliriously overproduced Peace in Our Time, which submerges the band's trademark sound in sanitized, synthesized musical settings that bear scant evidence of what made their previous efforts so appealing. While a few decent songs—"Thousand Yard Stare," "From Here to Eternity," the title track—shine through, Peace in Our Time's drastic recasting of the band feels like commercial desperation rather than artistic restlessness. More to the point, it just isn't much fun.

Through a Big Country is a fine fourteen-track career summary, with material from all four albums, plus "Wonderland" and the non-LP "Save Me." The CD and tape contain three more bonus cuts, all previously released. [i/hd]

See also Skids.

BIG DIPPER

Boo-Boo EP (Homestead) 1987 •

Heavens (Homestead) 1987 •

Craps (Homestead) 1988 •

Slam (Epic) 1990 •

Boston's Big Dipper came together in 1986 when bassist Steve Michener and guitarist Gary Waleik (both from the original lineup of the Volcano Suns) joined up with former (and future) Embarrassment vocalist Bill Goffrier and local drummer Jeff Oliphant. The six-song Boo-Boo is an extremely jovial combination of retro-punk guitar and loopy rhythms and vocals. It bounces like a goddamn superball.

The Heavens LP, which shows the group beginning to rely more heavily on layered vocals than string-croak, features such college-rock classics as "Younger Bums" and "All Going Out Together." (The cassette appends one song; Boo-Boo is contained on the CD.)

Subsequent recordings have seen Big Dipper move even further into the college-rock hard-pop mainstream (Slam contains an ambiguous cover of Mott the Hoople's "All the Way from Memphis"), and their initial, odd bite seems to have softened. [bc]

See also Embarrassment.

BIG DISH

Swimmer (Virgin-Warner Bros.) 1986 •

Creeping Up on Jesus (Virgin-Warner Bros.) 1988 •

Satellites (East West) 1991 ◊

Singer/songwriter Steven Lindsay leads the Big Dish, a tasteful and basically unstylized Scottish pop trio. With subtle soul inflections in the roomy guitar-plus-horns arrangements, the handsome, intelligent songs on Swimmer consistently tumble into the dead zone between youthful freshness and mature restraint.

Using an impressive list of session players—including Blair Cunningham (drums) and Gary Barnacle (horns)—producer Bruce Lampcov fleshed out Big Dish's sound on the second album, but to no avail. Despite twinkling layers of guitar, keyboards and vocals, Lindsay's songs are steadfastly underwhelming, and the album is merely an attractive but characterless noise.

The Big Dish finally got off the ground with Satellites, an effectively commercial adult-pop record that makes good use of stylistic borrowings (soul, rock, country) and guest players (bassist Pino Palladino, drummer Manu Katché) to flavor the bright (if not illuminating) material. Lindsay's faint vocal resemblance to Sting, and Warm Livesey's sterile Steely Dan-style production keep the record a small-scale entertainment, but at least the tunes don't all evaporate as soon as they reach the air. [i]

BIG DRILL CAR

Small Block EP (Variant) 1988 (Cruz) 1990 •

Album Type Thing (Cruz) 1989

Tape Type Thing [tape] (Cruz) 1989

CD Type Thing [CD] (Cruz) 1989 •

Like labelmates All and Chemical People, Huntington Beach, California's Big Drill Car specializes in bouncy punk-pop full of hooks, harmonies and exuberant playing. To its credit, BDC wisely eschews the former's atonal excesses and the latter's porno fetish.

Frank Daly's earnest and clear vocals and Mark Arnold's sharp, efficient guitar work (both are ex-M.I.A.) brighten the six-song Small Block, a near-perfect introduction to a very likable quartet. The inexplicably French-titled "Les Cochons sans Poils," which suggests the group has listened to as much Cheap Trick as Black Flag, stands out on a record whose only disappointment is its brevity.

The band's first full-length opus (the title of which is format-specific) mines similar terrain, though only a couple of the tracks are as immediately catchy as those on the EP. Still, as the jaunty "16 Lines," "No Need" and "About Us" prove, you'd be hard-pressed to find a band straddling the hardcore, power-pop and hard-rock fences with more finesse and enthusiasm. (Compulsives may want to consult "I Scream" from the Brigade's 1986 The Dividing Line to trace the ancestry of the great hook on "About Us.") [db]

See also M.I.A.

BIG F

See Berlin.

BIG IN JAPAN

From Y to Z and Never Again EP (nr/Zoo) 1978

As the band Budgie drummed in before the Slits (or Siouxsie and the Banshees), as Ian Broudie's group long before he was a hotshot producer or a Lightning Seed, as the first recorded sighting of wild Bill Drummond (future mastermind of the JAMS/KLF) and as an early proving ground for bassist (!) Holly Johnson (later the vocalist in Frankie Goes to Hollywood), Liverpool's Big in Japan deserves a lasting place in rock history merely for existing.

Between the group's formation in the summer of '77 and its dissolution fifteen months later, the entirety of its vinyl output was one half of a single (backed by a pseudonymous Yachts track credited to the Chuddy Nuddies). The rest of its oeuvre was issued posthumously: two compilation cuts and a four-track 7-inch, From Y to Z and Never Again. Singer Jayne Casey (who later led the dub-tinged pop band Pink Military and the ethereal Pink Industry) takes inspiration here from Japanese girl pop singers, adopting a choppy and chirpy boopsie-doll voice in "Suicide a Go Go," a sing-song foray into an underworld of prostitution. While "Taxi" hints at the kind of full-echo drumming that Badgie would later exploit as a Banshee, "Cindy and the Barbi Dolls" is a Martian surf samba with Drummond mumbling Rod McKuen-esque poetic love junk over '50s guitar while a kitschy choir of double-speed munchkins oh-oh-ohs and yeah-yeahs its way behind the chords. [e]

See also Frankie Goes to Hollywood, Justified Ancients of Mu Mu, Lightning Seeds, Original Mirrors, Pink Military.

BIG PIG

Bonk (A&M) 1988 •

From the cruel metaphor of the opening "Iron Lung" to the weary conclusion of "Devil's Song," Bonk is one angry record. Although technically an Australian group, Big Pig began in London around 1985, and hatred of Margaret Thatcher's England seems to fuel the bittersweet material. Lead singer Sherine has a dark alto that complements the songs' often depressing tone. But vocals aren't the half of Big Pig. The instrumentation is keyboards, harmonica and drums—lots of drums, played by three out of seven members. The trundling, tribal rhythms give the songs the effect of steamrollers extinguishing their protagonists' burned-out lives. Sparse musical textures, including group chants and that anomalous bluesy harmonica, help make Bonk compelling listening. Big Pig's obviously got attitude to burn, and who couldn't use a healthy blast of protest? [si]

BIG STAR

See Alex Chilton.

BIG TROUBLE HOUSE

See Breaking Circus.

BIG WHEEL

East End (Giant) 1989

With two of his ex-bandmates off to weird noiseville in Slint and another joining the Lemonheads, onetime Squirrel Bait singer Peter Searcy formed this Louisville quartet to play impassioned and intelligent heartland rock with no more than a hint of its punk roots. Sharing the skillful songwriting with guitarist Glenn Taylor, Searcy belts out intriguingly bemused lyrics about friends and loners over rough but unchallenging music with a few light interludes (the album includes one acoustic number). Despite Searcy's dramatic voice, East End is strong but never striking. [i]

BIG YOUTH

Screaming Target (nr/Trojan) 1973 •

Dreadlocks Dread (nr/Klik) 1975 (nr/Front Line) 1978 (Front Line) 1989 •

Natty Cultural Dread (nr/Trojan) 1976

Hit the Road Jack (nr/Trojan) 1976

Isaiah, First Prophet of Old (nr/Front Line) 1978

Everyday Skank—The Best of Big Youth (nr/Trojan) 1980

Some Great Big Youth (Heartbeat) 1981

The Chanting Dread inna Fine Style (Heartbeat) 1983

Live at Reggae Sunsplash (Sunsplash) 1984

A Luta Continua (Heartbeat) 1985 •

Manifestation (Heartbeat) 1988 •

Jamming in the House of Dread [tape] (ROIR) 1991

His front teeth inlaid with red, green and gold gems, Big Youth (Manley Buchanan) is probably the best-known and most popular of all reggae DJs, with a career that's been going strong since the early '70s. He began toasting in the early '70s, after working as a cab driver and a mechanic. His success was quick: records like "The Killer" and "S.90 Skank" (named after a motorcycle) scaled the Jamaican charts with ease, demonstrating his power and versatility. Many years and albums later he remains a major reggae presence, an influence on an entire generation of toasters. (He's credited with coining the term "natty dread.") If U-Roy laid the foundation, Big Youth made it happen—he gave toasting style as well as something to say.

Eccentric and startling, all of Big Youth's early records sounded radical when they first appeared, and have held up marvelously well. Featuring instrumental tracks from songs by Dennis Brown, Gregory Isaacs and others, Screaming Target boasts two versions of the wild title cut, along with "The Killer" and "Solomon a Gunday." Natty Cultural Dread features the amazing "Every Nigger Is a Star" and "Jim Squashy," which invokes John Coltrane. Hit the Road Jack has several loopy covers of American soul hits, including Marvin Gaye's "What's Going On," the titular Ray Charles song and Teddy Pendergrass' "Wake Up Everybody." You've never heard these songs this way—offbeat and wonderful. Although all of the Trojan releases are worth owning, Everyday Skank is an invaluable compilation of LP tracks and early singles.

Dreadlocks Dread (reissued by Virgin in the Crucial Cuts series) features "Marcus Garvey Dread" (a toast of the Burning Spear classic), "Train to Rhodesia" and "House of Dread Locks." The LP marks Big Youth's development as a composer, and his increased reliance on Rasta subject matter. Side Two has a couple of filler instrumentals, but the record is widely considered his best.

Isaiah continues the evolution heard on Dreadlocks Dread. Youth does more singing (or sing-jaying, as it's called) than toasting; originals outnumber covers. The groove is steady and appealing. Big Youth's recent releases are also marked by their consistency. All four Heartbeat titles boast a variety of styles, tough and relevant protest lyrics and rootsy playing. Not as wild as his early sides, these records are nonetheless some of the best contemporary reggae—authentic and uncorrupted, personal and moving. He's mellowed a bit with age—parts of Manifestation are downright sluggish—but Big Youth remains as formidable an artist as ever.

Rounding out the canon, Live at Reggae Sunsplash

(from a 1982 festival) proves he hasn't lost his ability to work a crowd, and provides a decent document of one of his better shows. [bk]

BIRDHOUSE

Burnin' Up (nr/Vinyl Solution) 1987 (Link) 1988
Raw & Alive! (Ger. Glitterhouse) 1988
Meglomania (Link) 1989

Prominent among US-worshipping foreigners, London's Birdhouse managed to amass a sizable following for their slavishly imitative Motor City drone with a 1986 single, "My Birdman." Burnin' Up was released as a six-song EP in the UK and a ten-song album in America; except for Vic Maile's crunching production and an obnoxious slap at metal/rap, the quintet's second studio album, Meglomania, is indistinguishable.

Arguably superior to your average Athens-by-numbers or Belgium-by-numbers, the Birdhouse's Detroit-by-numbers shtick suffers only for lack of power, chops and originality; every cold, stolen nuance, every feigned emotion, every fake climax merely confirms that they've spent too much time studying French bootlegs. Raw & Alive! is a red vinyl live 10-inch (eight songs, mostly from the two albums) that illustrates why one should, in seeking Detroit's real progeny, turn to Halo of Flies or early Motörhead. [ab]

BIRDSONGS OF THE MESOZOIC

Birdsongs of the Mesozoic EP (Ace of Hearts) 1983
Magnetic Flip (Ace of Hearts) 1984
Beat of the Mesozoic EP (Ace of Hearts) 1986
Sonic Geology [CD] (Rykodisc) 1987 •
Faultline (Cuneiform) 1989 ◊

BIRDSONGS OF THE MESOZOIC —ERIK LINDGREN—PINK INC.

Soundtracks (Arf Arf) 1987

ERIK LINDGREN

Polar Yet Tropical (Arf Arf) 1987

Launched in 1980 as a one-off experimental keyboard collaboration between two former Boston bandmates—Mission of Burma guitarist Roger Miller and producer/synthesist Erik Lindgren—the all-instrumental Birdsongs of the Mesozoic expanded to a real band with the addition of keyboardist Rick Scott and another Burmite, tape manipulator-turned-guitarist Martin Swope. The group (which described itself as "the world's hardest rocking chamber music quartet") remained a part-time sideline until Miller developed tinnitus and decided to continue his musical career at a lower volume, thus forcing an end to Burma. Often compared to new minimalist composers like Philip Glass and Terry Riley—who do a lot with a little—Birdsongs seem to be doing a lot with more. And probably going right over the heads of many old Burma fans in the process.

The debut EP finds Birdsongs taking quite a different tack from Burma's impassioned, chaotic noise-on-the-brink, with six instrumentals ranging from the achingly pretty romance of "The Orange Ocean" to juxtaposed chords played as much against as with each other. Magnetic Flip improves substantially on the first record's flat production, allowing the band's whole idea and execution to become bolder and more aggressive.

The opening of "Shiny Golden Snakes" is pure rock power chording, while the variations on Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring" pile one thundering dissonance over another and the austere keyboard repetition starting off "Ptoecata" does recall Glass. (The loopy rendition of "Theme from Rocky and Bullwinkle" proves that the band's highbrow inclinations are only one facet of its personality.)

The five songs on Beat of the Mesozoic take a generally less radical approach, allowing beauty to be a prime directive. Still, "Scenes from a . . ." layers taped voices and bells over the soothing piano cant, the title piece employs numerous types of sonic effects. The tense "Lost in the B-Zone" is the most unsettling track, a complex conflation of synthesizer lines going off in a half-dozen directions, with syncopated electronic percussion tripping over itself in the background. The CD-only Sonic Geology retrospective draws large portions from those three records, adding two new items to complete a rewarding 72-minute package.

Side One of Soundtracks consists of the Birdsongs' improvised 1986 score for Michael Burlingame's independent film, To a Random. With Lindgren on synth, Miller on piano, Scott on Farfisa and Swope on guitar, the quietly anxious piece lacks some of the group's off-beat studio invention but maintains the usual standards of taste and musicianship. The rest of the album contains a witty Lindgren suite entitled "The Last 68 Million Years Summed Up in Less Than 13 Minutes" and "Flames in Trains," his varied 1984 collaboration with two female vocalists.

With Miller off to a fulltime solo career, Birdsongs made its 1989 album without him, adding two hommen (Ken Field and occasional past collaborator Steve Adams) to the Swope-Lindgren-Scott core. The hour-long Faultline (composed individually by four of the musicians) runs the complete continuum from jazz to noise, delicate subtlety to unendurable wall-shaking chaos. Building up from the Birdsongs' past, Faultline shows the group to be not only alive but well on its way to forging a new stylistic synthesis.

Recorded sporadically between 1975 and 1987, Lindgren's Polar Yet Tropical contains an entire side of '60s (loosely defined) covers. Showing moderate wit and maximum reverent enthusiasm—these are mid-tech garage renditions rather than smugly modern reinterpretations—he confronts such classics as "I Wanna Be Your Dog," "Iron Man" and "In-a-Gadda-Da-Vida," armed with sophisticated keyboard instruments and occasional assistance by his bandmates ("Out of Limits" is, in fact, played by Birdsongs.) The original keyboard instrumentals—colored by guest horns, reeds, strings, etc.—on the other side show Lindgren's diverse compositional skills. [ep/1]

See also Roger Miller, Mission of Burma.

BIRTHDAY PARTY

The Birthday Party (Aus. Missing Link) 1980
Prayers on Fire (Thermidor) 1981 (nr/4AD) 1988 •
Drunk on the Pope's Blood EP (nr/4AD) 1982
Junkyard (nr/4AD) 1982 •
The Bad Seed EP (nr/4AD) 1983 •
The Birthday Party EP (nr/4AD) 1983 •
Mufin! EP (nr/Mute) 1983 (nr/4AD) 1989 •

It's Still Living (Aus. Missing Link) 1985
A Collection ... (Aus. Missing Link) 1985 (Suite Beat)
1986 ●
The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1987 ●
The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1988
Hee Haw [CD] (nr/4AD) 1989 ●
Peel Session Album (Strange Fruit-Dutch East India)
1991 ♠

BOYS NEXT DOOR

Door Door (Aus. Mushroom) 1979
Hee Haw EP (Aus. Missing Link) 1979 + 1983

LYDIA LUNCH

Honeymoon in Red (Widowspeak) 1987 ●

This intensely challenging and influential Australian band put everything it had into making inhospitable and unyielding records and wound up as the yardstick by which countless bands have since been judged. With partial comparisons possible to such noisy free-formists as the Fall, Pere Ubu and Public Image Ltd., the Birthday Party's unique sensibility sprang from singer Nick Cave (who wrote most of the lyrics) and guitarist Rowland S. Howard, who took care of a good chunk of the songwriting.

Before relocating to London from Melbourne, the Birthday Party released several Australian-only records, the first two under their original name, the Boys Next Door. Door Door and the five-song Hee Haw are surprisingly normal-sounding aggressive rock with traditional song structures and musical values. Cave's vocals invest the album with an ominous undercurrent, but the overall ambience hardly suggests the insanity that lay ahead.

That began to take form on their next release, The Birthday Party (the label credits the band under both monikers). Whatever their name, though, serious derangement was setting in fast. Cave's vocals and Howard's newly developed wall of feedback make Door Door sound positively inhibited; each track here is deeply unsettling. The LP's opening kick, "Mr Clarinet," presents an ultra-distorted organ sitting atop a stiff goose-step beat. The second side is even more crazed: "The Friend Catcher" (relentless and hypnotic) and "Happy Birthday" both contain some of the most frenzied guitar work ever captured on vinyl.

After moving to the UK, the Birthday Party recorded and released their first international LP, Prayers on Fire, a raging beast filled with agonized howling, braying Cave vocals flung against a backdrop of violently attacked guitars and no-wave horn noise. Drums and bass alone toe the line of established patterns; everything else ignores the song at hand and goes flat out in competition with Cave's literate invective.

The live Drunk on the Pope's Blood followed, half of a disc that also contains a side of live Lydia Lunch (who later formed the Immaculate Consumptives with Cave, and worked with Howard and others in the axis). Recorded in London at the end of 1981, the disc is honestly described on the jacket as "16 minutes of sheer hell!" Drawing two of its four songs from Prayers on Fire, Cave and Co. growl and shriek through the slow pieces with stunning gruesomeness—incomprehensibility aside, no one else has ever suffered with a more effective sonic display than what's in these grooves. Junkyard has less energy to the sound, but still manages to lift blood pressure with such assaults as "Dead Joe," "Big-Jesus-Trash-Can" and "6" Gold Blade."

Three BP EPs (plus a reissue of the Boys Next Door's Hee Haw) were released in 1983, the same year the band broke up. The first was The Bad Seed, four concise cuts of incredible visceral impact. From the slow psycho-blues of "Deep in the Woods" to the frenzied blur of "Sonny's Burning," it leaves the listener helpless and enthralled. The Birthday Party EP compiles five tracks from singles: the A-side ("The Friend Catcher") of the band's 1980 UK debut plus 1981's "Release the Bats" b/w "Blast Off" and "Mr Clarinet" b/w "Happy Birthday." Finally, the posthumous Mutiny! was released at the correct time: it wouldn't have been easy to follow. Like The Bad Seed, it mixes two furious numbers with a pair of funereal dirges. "Jennifer's Veil," a harrowing lament, is perhaps the band's finest song ever—neither John Cale nor Alfred Hitchcock was ever this scary.

Released in Australia two years later, It's Still Living (recorded in Melbourne in 1982) offers spirited performances of material from Prayers on Fire and Junkyard and, although decried by the band, is recommended for fans. The first Peel Sessions EP dates from April 1981; the second from December of the same year; the LP joins 'em up. Tracks include "Release the Bats," "Pleasure Heads Must Burn" and "Rowland Around in That Stuff."

A Collection . . . (also known as The Best and the Rarest) takes its tracks from Junkyard, Hee Haw, Prayers on Fire and some singles, adding a few alternate versions and other rarities. The American CD is somewhat different.

Having already issued CDs of Prayers on Fire (with two bonus tracks from an Australian 45) and Junkyard, 4AD brought the rest of the band's post-Door Door studio catalogue into the laser age with two 1989 reissues. One disc contains Mutiny! and The Bad Seed, adding two vintage outtakes previously issued on an Australian 45. Hee Haw pairs that EP's five songs with The Birthday Party EP, adding "The Friend Catcher"'s two B-sides and three more songs to create an expanded version of the Birthday Party album.

Prior to packing it in for other projects, bits and pieces were recorded for what was supposed to have been a Birthday Party/Lydia Lunch album. Shelved and subsequently tinkered with by Lunch and Clint Ruin, Honeymoon in Red finally saw the light of day in 1987 on Lunch's label. (Slow tempos and sparse arrangements suggest that Lunch dominated the proceedings and/or had plenty of input come mixing time.) Howard and bassist Tracy Pew (an epileptic who died in 1986) are credited, but Cave and guitarist/keyboardist/drummer Harvey appear under pseudonyms (Cave is Lunch's "dead twin" on "Done Dun" and "a drunk cowboy junkie" on "Dead in the Head"). The tracks all employ different personnel permutations, with guests—including Thurston Moore, Ruin and Genevieve McGuckin (These Immortal Souls)—adding to the morbid racket. The lyrics are real storybook/fairytale fodder (it rains blood, people cry blood, etc.), but the music is eminently suitable for such visions. The best cut is McGuckin's "Three Kings," on which Howard and Moore combine for some of the most haunting guitar noise ever recorded five years apart. [i/dgs]

See also Barracudas, Blue Ruin, Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds, Crime and the City Solution, (Die) Haut, Lydia Lunch, Nikki Sudden, These Immortal Souls.

BISHOPS

See Count Bishops.

BITCH MAGNET

Star Booty (Roman Candle-Communion) 1988 ●

Umber (Communion) 1989 ●

Ben Hur (Communion) 1990 ●

On Star Booty, this North Carolina-based trio (originally formed at Oberlin College in Ohio) lays out eight sheets of feedback-heavy fuzz-punk, well-played and raucous but lacking in any real personality that would make it stand out among others offering similar wares.

Things get a bit more streamlined on Umber, where songs with real melodies emerge from the loud miasma. With ex-Squirrel Bait guitarist David Grubbs (who splits his time between Bitch Magnet and his own band, Bastro) contributing mightily to the din, the anthemic "Motor" sets the pace for a collection of ten noise-fests, some of which are painted in a deep shade of Big Black. Though the record's slow tracks sound quite a bit like contemporaries Nice Strong Arm, Bitch Magnet finally manages to overcome this excessive familiarity by serving up a thick guitar-rich soup that splashes by quite powerfully on its own (The Umber CD and cassette append Star Booty.)

Ben Hur includes a lyric sheet, but with lines like "What beats the taste of lye on a swollen tongue raw with sores" it probably shouldn't have. Thankfully, the lyrics are unintelligible and decidedly secondary to the seismic rumblings of the industrial-strength rhythm section and slices of noise-funk guitar. "Dragon," the excellent nine-minutes-plus opener, lives up to the album's epic title, but Bitch Magnet's derivativeness (right down to the bullhorned vocals) will do nothing to shake its well-earned Little Black tag. [db]

See also Bastro.

BIZ MARKIE

Goin' Off (Cold Chillin'-Warner Bros.) 1988 ●

DIABOLICAL BIZ MARKIE

The Biz Never Sleeps (Cold Chillin'-Warner Bros.) 1989 ●

Rap's reigning clown prince, Long Island's Biz Markie (Marcel Hall), has a juvenile sense of humor and a pronounced speech impediment, but his relaxed rhyming style and uninhibited silliness make him a winning entertainer. Produced by long-time associate Marley Marl and co-written by the Biz, Marl and Big Daddy Kane, Goin' Off is a dubious debut, opening with a supremely obnoxious ode to something too tasteless to go into before settling down to a mildly entertaining program of inoffensive nonsense.

Although it also begins on a worthless note ("Dedication") and includes a number about body odors, The Biz Never Sleeps is a much better record that solidly establishes Biz Markie's unique character. Producing (with disconcertingly abrupt fades) and writing it all himself, the Biz re-emerges as an ingenious nut, punctuating his winsome romantic stories with odd musical bits and wholesome wit. A dinky piano line and a hopelessly off-key refrain keep popping up in the sad funny tale of a faithless lover ("Just a Friend"), while an equally inane bit of crooning (in a goony Barry White voice) breezes through "Spring Again," an infectious hymn to warm weather. But the Biz isn't only geared for laughs: with a neat horn sample adding to the evocative groove, he dips into nostalgic recollection for the tender tribute of "My Man Rich." [i]

BLACK & WHITE

Don't Know Yet (Atlantic) 1989 ●

This LA rap duo mixes more than races: the rhythm tracks on Don't Know Yet are uncut heavy metal with a booming drum sound. Unfortunately, the MCs, both ostensibly gang-connected, are not especially convincing (although only one of them has a lame Val-boy accent); the pair doesn't so much rap as shout inane and atonal lyrics in crude rhythmic synch with the music. Despite the credible notion of two relevant covers—Sly Stone's "Don't Call Me Nigger," Whitey and Jimi Hendrix's "I Don't Live Today"—this attempt at a novel hybrid is a gimmicky failure. [i]

BLACKBEARD

See Dennis Bovell

BLACKBIRD

Blackbird (Iloki) 1988 ●

Blackbird (Iloki) 1989

After the proto-cowpunk Rank and File failed to make its way through the music-industry maze and reach a mainstream audience, brothers Chip and Tony Kinman (originally of the punk Dils) more or less told the business to take a flying leap by reinventing themselves once again as a ridiculously uncommercial post-industrial drone-pop duo. Ironically, by the time Blackbird had released a couple of records, there was actually a sizable audience for industrial music, and the Kinmans' concept no longer seemed so weird.

Mixing guitar and bass with bargain-basement drum machines and other low-tech noisemakers, Blackbird makes dark, clattery music that's not as far removed from the brothers' punk and country roots as it might appear. Their strong songwriting and the humanity of their off-kilter vocal blend consistently bubbles beneath the noise.

Blackbird's two eponymous Iloki albums are completely separate entities. The first (red cover) is the noisier and riffier of the two, and contains Blackbird's most memorable song, "Howl." The second (black cover with pink lizard) leans more towards melody, with the uncharacteristic love song "Hold Me" and an interesting version of Lou Reed's "What Goes On."

See also Dils, Rank and File. [au]

BLACK FLAG

Nervous Breakdown EP (SST) 1978 ●

Jealous Again EP (SST) 1980 ●

Damaged (SST) 1981 ●

Everything Went Black (SST) 1983 + 1984 ●

The First Four Years (SST) 1984 ●

My War (SST) 1984 ●
 Family Man (SST) 1984 ●
 Slip It In (SST) 1984 ●
 Live '84 [tape] (SST) 1984 ◊
 Loose Nut (SST) 1985 ●
 The Process of Weeding Out EP (SST) 1985 ●
 In My Head (SST) 1985 ●
 Who's Got the 10 1/2? (SST) 1986 ●
 Wasted . . . Again (SST) 1987 ●
 I Can See You EP (SST) 1989 ●

Black Flag was, for all intents and purposes, America's first hardcore band. They emerged from Southern California to gain international prominence, touring enough to become a major attraction in virtually every city where a scene existed and undoubtedly inspiring others to get in the game. Via the band's still-thriving SST label, Black Flag played an essential role in the development and popularization of American punk. Through countless revolving-door personnel changes—which spawned numerous spinoff bands along the way—Black Flag persevered until 1986, finally dissolving after locating and exploring the zone where punk and heavy metal intersect and overlap.

The four-song 7-inch Nervous Breakdown (SST 001) and the five-song 12-inch Jealous Again offer brief but convincing blasts of primal punk roar by two early lineups; the ghost of the Sex Pistols comes floating through the brazen blare of guitars and vocals. Damaged features a superior cast (most significantly, Washington DC singer Henry Rollins, ex-S.O.A., had joined) and includes the culture classic "TV Party," as well as other goofy peacocks to dissipated suburban life ("Six Pack," "Thirsty and Miserable") and the classic American punk anthem, "Rise Above." Rollins' hoarse shout grates, but the barely contained rock energy and tongue-in-cheek lyrics make Damaged a great rock'n'roll LP that isn't beholden to any clichéd genre. (The Damaged CD also contains the contents of Jealous Again.)

In the midst of a horrible legal dispute with Unicorn Records, the group found itself enjoined from using the Black Flag name and logo on any new records, and resorted to releasing the double-album outtakes-and-more career retrospective, Everything Went Black, with only a listing of band members on the cover for identification. (It was later reissued with all the proper nomenclature and unexpurgated liner notes.) The tracks, which date from 1978 to 1981 (the album's European edition is substantially different), feature various configurations of the Black Flag gene pool attacking a motley collection of songs. ("Police Story," "Gimmie Gimmie Gimmie," "Damaged" and "Depression" all get done twice.) As a developmental Black Flag sampler, Everything Went Black is both illuminating and entertaining, but the real treat is Side Four, "Crass Commercialism," a hysterically funny collection of crazed radio spots for Flag gigs, most with music, that say a lot about the cultural milieu in which the band existed. The First Four Years is an extensive compilation of early releases, including the 1981 Six Pack maxi-single, Jealous Again and two tracks from a New Alliance compilation.

Following the resolution of their litigation (Unicorn helpfully went bankrupt), a new and prolific Black Flag—Rollins, guitarist Greg Ginn (who doubled in the studio on bass, using the pseudonym Dale Nixon) and Descendents drummer Bill Stevenson—drifted vaguely towards metal on My War, a mediocre album with some interminably long songs. (One plodding side has a grand total of three!) There are some good punk tunes ("I Love You") but elsewhere, a labored heavy-bottomed sound and appallingly bad guitar solos cross the line from sarcasm into sheer awfulness. Rollins' vocals are the same as ever, which makes the bad tracks even stranger.

Kira Roessler (sister of 45 Grave keyboardist Paul Roessler) took over on bass for Slip It In. With far clearer sound on the eight tracks, the LP further blurs the line between moronic punk and moronic metal. Songs are mostly built on trite riffs repeated endlessly; the rude lyrics of the title song are performed complete with enthusiastic sex noises for anyone who fails to grasp the point and/or be offended by it. Other songs are less tasteless but little more interesting. Family Man deconstructs Black Flag into a side of Rollins reading his poetry and a side of group instrumentals.

Live '84 puts the band's recent creative output and selected oldies onstage for an hour of wanton loud fun. Black Flag concerts were typically an utter mess, which suits the songs perfectly, making this chaotic explosion naturally one of their best releases.

Black Flag continued their torrid pace in 1985, releasing three new records: Loose Nut, The Process of Weeding Out and In My Head. Weeding Out is a Henryless instrumental EP: four lengthy improvs displaying unexpected technical prowess (especially Kira, on "Your Last Affront") and a new side to the band. There's a certain nostalgia factor for those who remember Canned Heat or Ten Years After in the old days, but on its own merits, little here would entice you into multiple listenings. The other two records feature the complete Rollins-Ginn-Kira-Stevenson lineup and are fairly similar: nine songs each of varied but mostly medium-tempo guitar rock that keeps a safe distance from metal, hardcore and sleaze. Loose Nut has clean sound, Rollins' brutally self-hating "This Is Good" and lyrics on the inner sleeve—the best Black Flag LP of 1985. (The In My Head cassette contains three bonus tracks.)

With new drummer Anthony Martinez, Black Flag recorded the live Who's Got the 10 1/2? in Portland, Oregon on 23 August 1985. Besides a great cover photo of the band's actual tour calendar that says more about the rock'n'roll life than any half-dozen magazine articles, the album features hot versions of '84-'85 material, plus a genuine oldie, "Gimmie, Gimmie, Gimmie." (The cassette and CD add 24 more minutes of fun.)

The posthumous Wasted . . . Again neatly recapitulates Black Flag's high career points with a dozen essential tracks, from "Wasted" to "Drinking and Driving." Everything you'd want in a single disc is included, and brief annotation adds the veneer of history.

In 1989, SST quietly issued I Can See You, an EP of four previously unreleased studio tracks by the '84-'85 quartet, probably recorded around the time of In My Head. The music isn't extraordinary for that era of Black Flag, but Rollins' colorful vocal performances—on the complacent "Kickin' & Stickin'" and the aggrieved "You Let Me Down" especially—make this a surprisingly rich nugget. [1]

See also Circle Jerks, D.C.3, Dos, Gone, Minute-men, Henry Rollins, S.O.A., SWA.

BLACKGIRLS

Speechless EP (Tom Tom-Black Park) 1987

Procedure (Mammoth) 1989 •

Happy (Mammoth) 1991 •

No, they're not and, yes, they are. The three white North Carolina women of Blackgirls perform intricate chamber music on acoustic guitar, violin and piano, creating an uncommon art-folk/classical hybrid with occasional Celtic inflections. But singer-songwriters Eugenia Lee and Dana Kletter both have dry, unsteady voices and a taste for cuteness and/or neurotic hypersensitivity in their lyrics. Combined with the dizzying polyrhythmic tides of the instrumental/vocal arrangements on Procedure, the accomplished music is charmless and uninviting.

With Joe Boyd (of Fairport Convention fame) again providing a crystalline production job, Blackgirls refine and smooth out their art (if not their diary-entry lyrics) on Happy, a sophisticated and accomplished-sounding record that seems, for the first time, to acknowledge the possible presence of an audience. While a lot of the album sticks to its predecessor's choppy complexity, the arrangement of "Charleston" is simplified to the point of easy appeal. [i]

BLACK UHURU

Love Crisis (nr/Third World) 1977

Showcase (Heartbeat) 1979

Sinsemilla (Mango) 1980 •

Black Sounds of Freedom (Greensleeves) 1981 •

Red (Mango) 1981 •

Black Uhuru (nr/Virgin) 1981 •

Guess Who's Coming to Dinner (Heartbeat) 1981 •

Tear It Up—Live (Mango) 1982

Chill Out (Mango) 1982

The Dub Factor (Mango) 1983

Anthem (Mango) 1983 •

Reggae Greats (Mango) 1985 •

Brutal (RAS) 1986 •

Brutal Dub (RAS) 1986

Positive (RAS) 1987 •

The Positive Dub (RAS) [tape] (ROIR) 1988

Live in New York City (Rohit) 1988 •

Now (Mesa) 1990 •

Now Dub (Mesa) 1990 •

Iron Storm (Mesa) 1991 •

JUNIOR REID

One Blood (Big Life-Mercury) 1990 •

MICHAEL ROSE

Proud (nr/RCA) 1990 •

The leading second generation reggae vocal group, Black Uhuru was formed in Jamaica in 1974 by Derrick "Duckie" Simpson, after a couple of false starts, he enlisted Michael Rose, whose quivery voice makes him sound like a Rasta cantor, and recorded Love Crisis—competent but hardly distinctive (although the best track, "I Love King Selassie," survived to become a live staple). (Black Sounds of Freedom is a remix of the same album.) After American expatriate Puma (Sandra) Jones joined to add haunting high harmony, Black Uhuru joined forces with Sly and Robbie; their riddims pushed the singing along with the force of a tank.

Showcase, a compilation of their early singles

("Abortion," "General Penitentiary," "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner," etc.), is an unqualified classic. In 1981, the album was reissued by Heartbeat as Guess Who's Coming to Dinner and by Virgin as Black Uhuru.

Sinsemilla firmly established Uhuru as an album act. The record delivers a level of consistency only Bob Marley himself had achieved. Their breakthrough, however, came with Red. From the first track, "Youth of Eglington," listeners—even those not particularly interested in reggae—had a compelling reason to discover Black Uhuru.

The band spent considerable time on the road. A live album (Tear It Up) recycles a lot of the material from Showcase and is only a so-so approximation of their in-concert excitement. But Chill Out, the next studio effort, is great. Rose had moved to New York and takes on the city in the title cut; "Darkness," "Emotional Slaughter" and others reveal a departure from Rasta subject matter. The Dub Factor is a ferocious dub disc, more of which can be found on Sly and Robbie's Raiders of the Lost Dub.

The release of Anthem was troubled. The original issue was remixed and revised for America; that version was subsequently re-released in Europe. In any case, it's a spotty record, despite a couple of killer tracks ("Party Next Door" and Steve Van Zandt's "Solidarity"). Sly and Robbie's synthetics are more pronounced, perhaps to compensate for the weak material and convictionless performances. (Ironically, it won a Grammy award in the US.) A decent hits collection in the Reggae Greats series followed. Then Michael Rose left to go solo. After five years of scattered singles (and a short-lived change of name spelling to Mykal Roze), he finally released an album at the end of 1990.

On Brutal, Black Uhuru unveiled their new lead singer, Junior Reid, who displays an awkward tendency to mimic Rose. Sly and Robbie still provide backup; Arthur Baker is among the producers. While the Reid/Simpson songs attempt a number of different styles, not all are successful. (A companion dub LP, featuring mixes by Baker, Scientist and Steven Stanley is also available.)

Live in New York City, recorded at the old Ritz in the fall of 1987, is the last Black Uhuru album to feature the Reid-Simpson-Jones lineup. With backing provided by some of Jamaica's top players (including guitarist Earl "Chinna" Smith, who now plays with Ziggy Marley, and drummer Santa Davis, who played with Peter Tosh), Reid's spicy lead vocals and between-song improvis make this a perfect souvenir of the band's '86-'87 era. The set includes a lot of material from Brutal, as well as some of Reid's solo numbers ("Shock-a-Lock," "Foreign Mind") and items dating back to Michael Rose's days ("Emotional Slaughter," "Solidarity").

Puma Jones left the lineup and was replaced by Olafunke, a Jamaican-born soundalike; Positive shows the reconstituted group moving forward. The LP finds Reid coming into his own as a vocalist, and features a few songs that are strikingly original (Simpson's apocalyptic "Fire City," for example). Sly and Robbie continue to be the featured musicians, but producer Steven Stanley offers flourishes and variations on their familiar martial drums and bass lines. While there are echoes of the old Black Uhuru on Positive, a new band identity and sound are slowly emerging. An okay dub version of the LP has also been released, first as a limited-pressing LP, then on cassette with an added cut. (The Positive CD contains four dub mixes.)

On 28 January 1990, Puma Jones, 36, died of cancer and was buried in South Carolina, her birthplace. She was one of the great women of reggae, Rasta, black pride and women's rights, and one of the only females to be part of a predominantly male group that reached such international acclaim.

Ironically, around the time of Jones' death, Black Uhuru released Now, featuring what is considered to be the band's original lineup: founder Duckie Simpson, Don Carlos (a solo artist for many years) and Garth Dennis (ex-Wailing Souls). Revisiting the group's early vocal-trio sound, this reunion album is highlighted by more richly produced remakes of three songs from Love Crisis: "Army Band," "Peace and Love" (originally titled "Willow Tree") and "Heathen" (aka "Eden"). Despite the different sound (compelling, but less biting than usual), the message—militancy, prophecy, truth and rights—remains, as does the lyrical punch, in songs like the anti-crack "Reggae Rock," the romantic "Thinking of You" and "Take Heed." A cover of "Hey Joe" rounds out the album, with roots reggae, pop harmony and rock guitar.

Now Dub is a dub version of the LP that stretches the limits of the form. A Guy Called Gerald's genre-bending remix of "Reggae Rock" is a crazyhouse version that fixes Uhuru's floating vocals to pounding bass and a wall-pulverizing drum beat. The dub of "Hey Joe" is even more astonishing.

Resuming his solo career, Junior Reid had a massive Jamaican hit in 1989 with "One Blood," which became the title track of his slick, electro-reggae album the following year. (Puma Jones sings backup on a bizarre cover of "Eleanor Rigby.") Covering a few other bases, Reid appears on Coldcut's 1988 "Stop This Crazy Thing" and did a guest turn on the Soup Dragons' "I'm Free." [bk/aw]

See also Sly and Robbie.

RUBÉN BLADES

Maestra Vida: Primera Parte (Fania) 1980

Maestra Vida: Segunda Parte (Fania) 1980

Nothing but the Truth (Elektra) 1988 ●

RUBÉN BLADES Y SEIS DEL SOLAR

Greatest Hits (Musica Latina Int'l) 1983

Buscando America (Elektra) 1984 ●

Escenas (Elektra) 1985 ●

Agua de Luna (Elektra) 1986 ●

RUBÉN BLADES Y SON DEL SOLAR

Antecedente (Elektra) 1988 ●

Live! (Elektra) 1990 ◊

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Crossover Dreams (Elektra) 1986 ●

Rubén Blades is the first major salsa performer to integrate rock aesthetics into his music. After a successful stint with Willie Colón, the Panamanian-born New Yorker went solo, rocketing to the top of salsa charts with songs that avoided the music's clichés in favor of topical narratives and carefully crafted imagery. The best of these, including the classic gangster tale "Pedro Navaja," are found on Greatest Hits.

In 1984, Blades signed two contracts with Elektra, one for Spanish-language recordings, the other for English-language ones. Buscando America stands as the finest of his major-label recordings to date. His group, Seis del Solar, includes four percussionists and two electric keyboardists. Instead of salsa's traditional horn section, Blades sings frank songs about abortion, Latin America's political disappeared and the banality of evil.

Blades is also a screen actor. His first starring role was in Crossover Dreams, which charted the rise and fall of a salsero who denies his roots in search of American chart success. The soundtrack LP includes two pop tunes by Blades, plus a healthy selection of salsa standards performed by some of the field's finest players.

Escenas finds Blades making first steps towards the sort of crossover (he calls it "convergence") acceptability he so obviously desires. Joe Jackson and Linda Ronstadt make guest appearances, but except for "Muévete," things don't sizzle quite so much as before. In an audacious experiment with tepid results, some of Blades' songs on Agua de Luna were inspired by Gabriel García Márquez short stories.

Setting his band aside, Blades collaborated with Elvis Costello, Lou Reed and Sting on Nothing but the Truth, his first all-English album. Recorded with studio journeymen, the music ranges from hard-core salsa to mainstream rock to political doo-wop. The tunes co-written by Costello hold up the best, but that's to be expected. Following that record, as if to atone for an apparent sell-out (sorry, "crossover"), Blades quickly rejoined the newly aligned five-man Son del Solar and made the rewardingly rootsy Antecedente.

The following year, with eleven musicians suavely mixing trombones, timbales, piano and synthesizer, Blades recorded a vibrant live album at New York's Lone Star Roadhouse. Ignoring recent albums, the material (with the exception of "Pedro Navaja" and one other) is drawn entirely from Escenas and Buscando America. [rg/i]

See also Sting.

BLAKE BABIES

Nicely, Nicely (Chew-bud) 1987

Slow Learners (nr/Utility) 1989 ●

Earwig (Mammoth) 1989 ●

Sunburn (Mammoth) 1990 ●

Rosy Jack World EP (Mammoth) 1991 ●

With singer/bassist (and former Berklee music student) Juliana Hatfield's voice as the pivotal love-'em/leave-'em factor, Boston's Blake Babies play peppy post-mod pop that has a few teeth. On the first album, drummer Freda Boner and guitarist John Strohm (both natives of Indiana), Hatfield and a bassist run through collegiate numbers like "Let Them Eat Chewy Granola Bars," "Swill and the Cocaine Sluts" and "Better 'n You" (a handsomely harmonized duet with Evan Dando of the Lemonheads, a band for whom Strohm moonlighted on drums), demonstrating a facility for tunelessly presentable songs and the unsettling range of Hatfield's all-over-the-place singing. The habit of suddenly abandoning a nice mid-range melody to search out a high note that may elude her makes Hatfield an unpredictable and inconsistent quantity.

Dando played bass on Slow Learners (Hatfield didn't take over that responsibility until sessions for the next LP), a more accomplished and refined seven-song collection—incorporating a country accent—that is entirely duplicated on Earwig. That album, which contains two other 1988 recordings (with a different guest bassist) and a half-dozen 1989 products of the now-autonomous trio (including a fair sexual inversion of the Stooges' "Loose"), sets its sternly judgmental attacks ("You Don't Give Up," "Take Your Head off My Shoulder," "Outta My Head," "Your Way or the Highway," etc.) into consistently attractive textured guitar pop.

The burst of feedback that begins both Sunburn and Hatfield's "I'm Not Your Mother" isn't nearly as abrasive as the song's venomously petulant lyrics. In general, though, Juliana's off the offensive on the Blakes' best album: her casually blunt lyrics range from resigned victimization ("A Million Years") to haunting desolation ("Gimme Some Mirth") to frightening fantasies of self-destruction ("Watch Me Now, I'm Calling"). Meanwhile, Strohm's songs ("Girl in a Box," a rare vocal turn, and "Train," a duet) and his collaborations (the exceptional "Out There") provide a much needed lyrical alternative. With some of the band's catchiest tunes ("Look Away" for one) and fewer vocal misadventures (effective harmonies mask some of those remaining), Sunburn is an ironic and frequently moving mixture of beauty and sadness. [i]

See also Lemonheads.

BLANCMANGE

Happy Families (Island) 1982

Mange Tout (London-Sire) 1984 •

Believe You Me (London-Sire) 1985 •

Second Helpings: The Best of Blancmange (nr/London) 1990 •

WEST INDIA COMPANY

Ave Maria EP (nr/London) 1984

Music from New Demons (Editions EG) 1989 •

One of the synth-pop era's more individual and original duos, Stephen Luscombe and Neil Arthur mixed dominant percussion with bizarre, often exotic seasonings to create tracks with abundant personality and enormous dance potential. The one major drawback is Arthur's voice: a rough, unpleasant instrument which becomes riddled with melodrama when he gets excited.

On Happy Families, Blancmange offer typically eccentric concepts—"God's Kitchen," "Living on the Ceiling"—in varied settings that fall into two general styles: (1) Loud, rhythmic and derivative of Talking Heads. These tunes, especially "Feel Me," suffer from extreme monochromatic tediousness. (2) Delicate and reserved. "I've Seen the Word" and others are quite lovely, resembling the spare grace of mid-period Orchestral Manoeuvres in the Dark.

Mange Tout (a brilliant bilingual pun) is simultaneously a bit sillier and grander overall, using more horns, woodwinds and strings than before. Largely neglecting option 2 but not sounding much like the Heads either, Blancmange opt to let the beat send the message, while thankfully maintaining better song quality and, thus, less boredom. The four major tracks—"Don't Tell Me," "My Baby," "Blind Vision" and "That's Love That It Is"—all offer different levels of melodiousness (most pretty high) with Arthur's vocals, though improved, still an occasional stumbling block.

Believe You Me is an ambitious undertaking, recorded in seven different studios with four producers and zillions of guest musicians. The results are hardly as inconsistent as they might have been; in fact, the restrained album is quite agreeable, reasonably free of the overzealousness, busyness and absurdity that diminished some of the duo's prior work. The songs aren't consistently wonderful, but simplicity and understatement make inquisitive tracks like "Don't You Love It All" (with flugelhorn played by Hugh Masekela), "What's Your Problem?" and "Why Don't They Leave Things Alone?" pleasant, if not immediately memorable.

Second Helpings is a straightforward (albeit incomplete) compilation of UK chart singles—from 1982's "God's Kitchen" through 1985's "What's Your Problem?"—that pretty much covers the high points of Blancmange's recording career. But considering that all ten tracks (including two B-sides) come from the band's three albums, fans can skip this serving with impunity.

Following Blancmange's 1986 split, Luscombe devoted himself to the poly-cultural West India Company, an experimental trio whose 1984 vinyl debut employed the voice of famed Bombay film singer Asha Bhosle. Created as the performance soundtrack for a show by Montreal avant-dance company La La La Human Steps (known for their work on Bowie's '90 tour), New Demons alternates vocal selections and instrumentals, putting traditional Indian music (and other sources) through a sympathetic British art wringer. Despite the similarity of their basic components, the decidedly non-pop WIC bears no resemblance to Monsoon; the trio's rich and cerebral blend—both in terms of instrumentation and presentation—is quite original. [i]

BL'AST!

The Power of Expression (Wishing Well) 1984 (SST) 1987 •

It's in My Blood (SST) 1987 •

Take the Manic Ride (SST) 1989 •

Formed in 1982 as M.A.D., this Santa Cruz quartet was obviously touched by the message of Black Flag's mid-period work. The rumble on the bottom, the elliptical scrambling of Mike Neider's guitar and the bell-cose roar of Clifford Dinsmore's vocals all bring post-Damaged Flag to mind. Considering the lame thrash that many of their skate-punk peers were purveying at the time, Bl'ast! should be saluted for taking a far less generic stance. (The CD of It's in My Blood includes both sides of the "School's Out" single.) [bc]

BLASTERS

American Music (Rollin' Rock) 1980

The Blasters (Slash-Warner Bros.) 1981

Over There: Live at the Venue, London EP (Slash-Warner Bros.) 1982

Non Fiction (Slash-Warner Bros.) 1983

Hard Line (Slash-Warner Bros.) 1985

The Blasters Collection (Slash-Warner Bros.) 1991 ◊

They say everything old becomes new again, and California's Blasters proved it in 1981 by jumping into the national spotlight with an utterly familiar brew of blues, rockabilly and rock'n'roll. Detractors might call them little more than an updated Canned Heat—as if anything were wrong with that—but such criticism ignores their strengths: tight ensemble work, swingin' original tunes in the classic mold and Phil Alvin's ageless, confident vocals.

American Music appeared on an independent rockabilly revival label, which is probably one reason it didn't reach a larger audience. The band already had total control of R&B and rock conventions, fusing them into a supple, flowing style. Although there's not quite as much sting here as later on, Dave Alvin's guitar work displays plenty of spirit. Oldies like "Buzz Buzz Buzz" and "I Wish You Would" (Billy Boy Arnold via the Yardbirds) mingle with catchy new tunes like "Marie, Marie," later a big UK hit for Shakin' Stevens.

The Blasters established the quintet nationwide. Originally released on LA independent Slash, it did so well that the label was able to strike a licensing/distribution deal with Warner Bros. No wonder: it smokes. The band is tighter than a drum, and Dave Alvin's songs—including "No Other Girl," a re-recorded "Marie, Marie" and "Border Radio"—have a joyous, irresistible momentum. R&B legend Lee Allen guests on sax.

Highlighted by a crackling hot sound, the six-cut live in London EP serves as a good introduction to the Blasters, but offers no new wrinkles. Definitely suitable for parties, though.

Any lingering suspicions that the Blasters were just an oldies band at heart were surely dispelled by the fine Non Fiction. Dave Alvin's essay on real life, the LP presents a series of well-crafted vignettes reminiscent of Robbie Robertson's work with the Band. Songs like "One More Dance" and "Fool's Paradise" depict the trials and tribulations of the little people, while "Long White Cadillac" laments Hank Williams. The playing on the self-produced record is smoother and not as quaint as before.

A shade less stirring than Non Fiction, Hard Line reprises that LP's formula, but also includes a blatant stab at commercialism. Although "Colored Lights," penned for the Blasters by John Cougar Mellencamp, isn't bad, other songs are more heartfelt. Highlights include "Trouble Bound" and "Help You Dream," both featuring the Jordanaires (of Elvis Presley fame for you young'uns).

In 1986, Dave Alvin left to join X, briefly replacing Billy Zoom; he soon moved on to launch his own solo career. But he also worked on other people's projects; for instance, backing Syd Straw on her '89 tour. Alvin's replacement in the Blasters was a guitarist known as Hollywood Fats (Michael Mann), who tragically died a few months later, bringing Alvin briefly back into the fold. Ironically, Billy Zoom later joined the Blasters, who have been less active since Phil Alvin began attending graduate school.

The Blasters Collection assembles 20 tracks, including three previously unreleased numbers. [jy]

See also Dave Alvin, Phil Alvin, X.

PETER BLEGVAD

The Naked Shakespeare (nr/Virgin) 1983

Knights Like This (nr/Virgin) 1985

Downtime (nr/Recommended) 1988

King Strut and Other Stories (nr/Silvertone) 1990 •

SLAPP HAPPY

Sort Of (Ger. Polydor) 1972

Acnalbasac Noom (Ger. Polydor) 1973

(nr/Recommended) 1982 (Cuneiform) 1988 •

Slapp Happy (nr/Virgin) 1974

SLAPP HAPPY/HENRY COW

Desperate Straights (nr/Virgin) 1975 (nr/Recommended) 1982

In Praise of Learning (nr/Virgin) 1975 (Red) 1979 [CD] (East Side Digital) 1991 •

JOHN GREAVES & PETER BLEGVAD

Kew. Rhone. (nr/Virgin) 1977

If Peter Blegvad is one of America's most underrated songwriters, it's partly due to the fact that the New Yorker—who is also an accomplished illustrator—has lived in England for most of the past two decades, and few of his records have been issued in the US. An affecting singer and a fine guitarist, Blegvad has an uncanny knack for creating literate lyrics—a golden triangle of emotion, intellect and humor—and combining them with enduring melodies. A restless spirit that displays no patience for cliché runs through all of his work. And while Blegvad has hiked with many stellar companions, he has always blazed an utterly personal trail.

In Germany in the early '70s, the Connecticut-born Blegvad, British keyboardist/composer Anthony Moore and his wife, German singer Dagmar Krause, began working their own little corner of the obscure-pop tapestry as Slapp Happy. On the liner notes to the trio's first album, Sort Of, Blegvad wittily tags the band as "champions of Naïve Rock, the Douannier-Rousseau sound," which pegged them perfectly—sort of. With its slightly discordant guitars, deliberately simple lyrics and Dagmar's naturally doomy voice trying to come off winsome or chipper as the song may demand, Sort Of is willfully naïve and, at its worst, a bit affected.

At its best, though, the band was refreshing, diverting and sometimes moving. The second Slapp Happy LP, Acnalbasac Noom, is a gem from start to finish. Blegvad crafts some wonderful, offhandedly literary lyrics while Moore provides sophisticated tunes to match. (As the group didn't contain a rhythm section, both albums feature the rhythm section from Faust, not that you'd ever guess.) Slapp Happy, using anonymous studio musicians as needed, includes a handful of previously recorded songs in drastically rearranged versions, some including ambitious but unsuccessful string backing.

Following those three records, Slapp Happy and labelmates Henry Cow—a symbiotic blend of art and politics united by equally offbeat sensibilities about musicmaking—joined forces to produced a pair of highly rated albums. Several years later, Blegvad and Henry Cow bassist John Greaves made a record together. In the early '80s, Blegvad began a solo career.

Andy Partridge's production of The Naked Shakespeare is entirely too slick and busy. Only the songs given relatively simple arrangements are delightful, particularly "You Can't Miss It," "Vermont" and the pensive title track. Also noteworthy is the chilling rape-nightmare of "Irma," a mostly spoken piece set to Ennio ambient synth.

Engaged by Virgin in an unabashed effort to sell Blegvad to UK pop radio, David Lord (Peter Gabriel, etc.) did a spectacular misproduction job on Knights Like This. (Shades of Phil Spector's off-base pairing with Leonard Cohen.) Like Cohen, Blegvad is an idiosyncratic writer whose songs work best in uncomplicated settings. Here, most of his luminous lyrics are lost amid the overwrought pop arrangements, full of strings, backup choruses and synthesized percussion.

Back in New York during the early '80s, Blegvad fell in with the burgeoning downtown improv scene. He recorded with John Zorn and, through his friendship with Anton Fier, became part of the Golden Palominos family. Blegvad served as "vocal coach" on the group's first album, and co-wrote half the songs of the third (Blast of Silence), on which he also performed. In 1989, Blegvad played on sometime-Palomino Syd Straw's solo album, the highlight of which is one of the two songs they wrote together. (Anthony Moore also contributed to Straw's LP.)

In comparison to Blegvad's first solo efforts, the folksy and countryish rock settings (there's even a Louvin Brothers cover) of Downtime are much more successful at capturing the intimacy of his music. Chris Cutler (ex-Henry Cow/Pere Ubu), Tony Maimone (Pere Ubu) and members of Greaves' current band, the Lodge (which includes Blegvad's brother Kristoffer and, lately, Peter himself), provide warm backing to a set of powerful songs, including the hilarious "Card to Bernard" and improved readings of two songs from the Palominos' Blast of Silence. This splendid album closes with the whimsical bossa nova of "Crumb de la Crumb," a self-deprecating poke at Blegvad's own obscurity.

King Strut puts it all together for Blegvad, combining the warmth of Downtime with the pop smarts of his first two LPs. Partridge produced three tracks (not two, as indicated on the label), including the unfortunate closer, an irritating reprise of the title track. (The rest of the album receives sympathetic treatment from Chris Stamey, who brought in ex-partner Peter Holsapple, rekindling a collaboration that led to their 1991 album.) The treasures of King Strut are five mostly acoustic pearls on Side Two, particularly the deeply romantic "Northern Lights" and "Shirt & Comb."

[ws/gk]

See also Golden Palominos, John Greaves, Anthony More, Syd Straw, Victoria Williams.

BLIND IDIOT GOD

Blind Idiot God (SST) 1987

Undertow (Enemy) 1989 •

Purged Specimen EP (Enemy) 1989

Refusing to compromise their chops with some cut-rate rock vocalist, this young instrumental trio (originally from St. Louis but now living in Brooklyn) constructs a huge, brash sound influenced (consciously or not) by Blue Cheer, Jimi Hendrix, the Velvet Underground, the Meters (Blind Idiot God covers the Crescent City funk geniuses' "More Time"; the Sex Pistols, Glenn Branca and Jamaican dub (their first LP concludes with a trio of dubwise treats). Simultaneously leaning towards heavy metal (with less ego) and reggae (with more voltage), these demonic decibel gluttons are having the time of their lives in hammer-of-the-gods territory. [rg]

BLONDIE

Blondie (Private Stock) 1976 (Chrysalis) 1977 •

Plastic Letters (Chrysalis) 1977 •

Parallel Lines (Chrysalis) 1978 •

Eat to the Beat (Chrysalis) 1979 •

Autoamerican (Chrysalis) 1980 •

The Best of Blondie (Chrysalis) 1981 •

The Hunter (Chrysalis) 1982 •

DEBBIE HARRY/BLONDIE

Once More into the Bleach (Chrysalis) 1988 •

JIMMY DESTRI

Heart on a Wall (Chrysalis) 1982

That Blondie may be remembered as perhaps the best singles band to emerge from the new wave—in fact, a world-class hitmaking powerhouse—is extraordinary for those who recall the group's humble genesis and occasionally appalling early efforts. Even after the New Yorkers had secured a recording contract, few expected they could ever surpass the commercial level of, say, Lou Reed—i.e., a moderate fluke hit single, perhaps a charting album, but mainly cult status. How could the torpid, immovable, generally disgusting commercial music establishment of the day somehow reverse itself and open up to Blondie? Like the rest of the us they were part of, it seemed they'd always be on the outside looking in.

Yet the core members (singer Debbie Harry, guitarist Chris Stein, keyboard player Jimmy Destri and drummer Clem Burke) always had a vision that anything was possible. So what if they weren't slick studio musicians? They'd still be able to put the sounds in their heads on plastic, sounds that weren't just "Pure Pop for Now People" but pure pop for hit radio—in the most sincere, uncynical and popularly resonating tradition. So they engaged in inspired, positively subversive, musical "pilferage" and synthesis in ways few others have consistently sustained. And through all of that (until the last album, anyway), Blondie maintained a distinctive group identity.

Some of their dabblings weren't successful, but if Blondie could be called a bunch of dilettantes, it's only fair to note that many others wet their musical toes in the same exotic waters only after Blondie set the precedent. Moreover, Blondie largely pursued their commercial and artistic goals in nonconformist fashion, often to the dismay of their record company and even some of their fans.

Blondie effervesces with exuberance which, at points, extends the band's reach beyond its grasp. Still, it's a guileless classic, and arguably the group's best album. They create a series of charming musical Frankenstein monsters—stitched together from salsa, funk, Broadway pop and thrill-flick soundtracks—in addition to their more typical girl-group/surf/Anglopop hybrids, as on "X Offender," the debut single included here. Any lapses in expertise are counterbalanced by the sense of ebullient abandon, as captured by producer Richard Gottehrer.

Plastic Letters reflects not only professional seasoning and a better rapport with Gottehrer, but also the turmoil of changes in personnel, management and record label. The resulting LP—fuller, tighter and more authoritatively rocking than the debut—includes the band's first two UK hits, "(I'm Always Touched by Your) Presence, Dear" (written by, and recorded as a sort of tribute to, departed bassist Gary Valentine) and "Denis" (a revamp of the 1963 Randy & the Rainbows oldie). There's also a brooding feel to many of the tracks—the hard, riffy stuff and the thoughtful experimentation ("Cautious Lip") alike. More conservative than Blondie, and less exciting.

By Parallel Lines, the new lineup had already jelled, and producer Mike Chapman (looking to repeat the massive success he enjoyed during the early-'70s English glitter-pop days) took over the console, imposing his exacting, disciplined approach. The band seems totally in control of every musical form it takes on, from zombie metal to pop-a-billy, from quasi-avant spaciness to the hitbound electro-disco flirtation, "Heart of Glass." Compared to Gottehrer's first-take spontaneity, some of the LP seems a tad clinical, but it's easily good enough to be considered America's answer to Nick Lowe's first solo LP.

Eat to the Beat, surprisingly, proved less artistically and commercially successful than an album that recapitulates a soaring band's strong points should have been, but it does have some of the best sheer rock'n'roll the group ever produced. Autoamerican goes in precisely the opposite direction; breaking out of a stylistic cul-de-sac, Blondie jumped out in a number of new directions again: cocktail jazz, Eurodrama, country (sort of) and rap. An "A" for effort, but Blondie's most uneven album, ranging from obvious boo-boos to the hits "Rapture" and "The Tide Is High."

Within two years after that ambitious LP, the "successful rock band collapses under its own weight" syndrome had apparently set in. The Hunter sounds as though their excitement about musical recombination had simply degenerated into a polished but sterile capability of manipulating a wide variety of stylistic devices. Bereft of things to say, or ways to say nothing with style and grace, the LP is aimless, elephantine—it's largely impenetrable pretentiousness not that far removed from dinosaurs like Jefferson Starship or Yes.

The Best of Blondie should really be called The Singles Album, since that's exclusively what's on it and what limits the view it gives of the group. It doesn't include the spiffy version they did of Johnny Cash's "Ring of Fire" on the soundtrack of the movie Roadie, but it does have three special remixes and the otherwise non-LP hit, "Call Me" (from American Gigolo). The US and UK editions differ according to Blondie's chart successes in those markets.

Although it shares five songs in common with The Best of Blondie, Once More into the Bleach—a mixture of group songs and Harry's solo work—offers most of them (and eight others) in drastically remixed and elongated form. Considering this music from a decidedly dance-oriented perspective overlooks its historical context, eliminating the friendly openness of Blondie's new wave pop records for the distant sound of any-mous star product—an effect the original albums, regardless of their hits, always avoided. Clubbing up already rhythmic jams like "Heart of Glass," "Call Me" and "Rapture" involves no great stylistic leap, but cutting the joy out of "Denis" is unforgivable, and the Coldcut dub mix (complete with seagulls) of "The Tide Is High" (inexplicably credited here to Harry solo) is idiotic. Oddly, the set ends with the group's delightful (and previously rare) French rendition of the third album's "Sunday Girl," mercifully unsullied by studio second-guessers.

Keyboardist Destri's solo outing, produced by Lou Reed/Pink Floyd cohort Michael Kamen and featuring Clem Burke, takes traditional pop values and updates them with decidedly Bowiesque leanings. Destri had already proved himself a creative and occasionally inspired musician and songwriter in the group context (and beyond—in 1980 he produced an album by Joey Wilson); here, he proves solid, if not exemplary, in those capacities. But his lack of vocal ability or even identity is a definite drag on the proceedings. [jg/i]

See also Chequered Past, Debbie Harry.

ALPHA BLONDY

Jah Glory (Fr. Celluloid) 1985

Apartheid Is Nazism (Shanachie) 1987 ●

Cocody Rock!!! (Shanachie) 1988 ●

Revolution (Shanachie) 1989 ●

The Prophets (Capitol) 1989 ●

The Best of Alpha Blondy (Shanachie) 1990 ●

ALPHA BLONDY AND THE WAILERS

Jerusalem (Shanachie) 1987 ●

Since the death of Bob Marley, numerous Third World performers have been proposed to succeed him as the world's leading reggae exponent. Ziggy Marley is one obvious choice; Alpha Blondy (born Kone Seydou) is another, more unusual, candidate. For starters, Blondy is from the Ivory Coast; he performs reggae in French, English, Hebrew, Arabic and other African languages. Rather than Rasta and Jah, he sings about the Middle East and South Africa, on records which he writes, produces and arranges himself. He's enormously popular in Europe and Africa, where he tours frequently. Because of his global success, Blondy has come to signify the internationalization of reggae as a music and phenomenon—the true world beat.

Blondy's LPs—beginning with 1982's Jah Glory, later issued in France—are genuinely exciting, and should definitely be heard. Among his first few American releases, Jerusalem has the slight edge, if only because the Wailers play behind him (strengthening the comparisons to Marley) and they always sound so good. On Apartheid Is Nazism, he's backed by members of his touring group, the Solar System Band, who are less distinctive but just as tight. The Best of Alpha Blondy contains both arrangements, offering such exemplary tracks as "Cocody Rock," "Apartheid Is Nazism," "I Love Paris" and "Jerusalem." Combining roots rhythms and exotic foreign lyrics, the music is at once familiar and strange, but its depth of feeling never falters, and needs no translation. Delightfully haunting—this is reggae and then some.

Moving to a major American label, Blondy made the weird-sounding The Prophets, dedicating it to the planet Earth. Mixing synthesizers, horns, a female chorus and way too much reverb, he deftly shifts in and out of reggae rhythms with political and religious songs in English, French and Dioula. Adventurous but a bit too odd, The Prophets is not the ideal ticket to broaden Blondy's audience [bk/i]

BLOOD ON THE SADDLE

Blood on the Saddle (New Alliance) 1984

Poison Love (Chameleon) 1986

Fresh Blood (SST) 1987

These California cow-punks are less concerned with revering C&W icons than trashing them at a furious pace: Blood on the Saddle's idea of country is Hank Williams OD-ing in the back of his car; their western, that of spaghetti flicks. On the quartet's first album, ragged harmonies, yodelled vocals and the slap of stand-up bass lend authenticity, making the record a rodeo where even the horses are doing speed. One of the band's three lead singers, ex-Bangle Annette Zilinskas, vocalizes on the best songs, including "Do You Want to Dance?" and "(I Wish I Was a) Single Girl (Again)," where she sounds like a real down-home country singer trying to stay straight while her band, out of control, beats her to the finish.

Poison Love refines the group's stylistic balance, clarifying the energetic country-rock side while reducing the first album's more wanton rock impulses. The resulting cross-breed is easygoing and colorful, a post-adolescent barn dance with enough electricity to make a deep impression and enough credible cultural resonance to survive the style-mongering. Zilinskas and guitarist/banjo-picker Greg Davis both bring more enthusiasm than skill to the microphone, but their delivery (better solo than their X-like harmonies) is perfectly adequate for kick-up-your-heels songs like "Police Siren," "Steal You Away" and "Promise Your Heart to Me." Slow numbers like "Johnny's at the Fair" and speeders like "Colt 45," however, elude the band's grasp.

With one acoustic rest period, the band's blood runs hotter on the third album, an uneven race with the devil that uses flat-out tempos on hard-rocking originals related to country music more by structural inspiration than content. (Indicative of the shifting personality, covers of "Rawhide" and "Folsom Prison Blues" are crazed but bland, hand-me-downs that no longer fit.) As a singer, Davis thrives in this exciting environment, but Zilinskas' efforts to keep pace with the charging rhythms and skillet-licking solos strip the twangy character from her voice. [ep/i]

See also Bangles, iScreamin' Sirens!

BLOOD ORANGES

Corn River (East Side Digital) 1990 ♠

Defying geographical prejudices, this Boston quartet plays twangy country rock, setting Mark Spencer's fancy electric guitar pickin' against singer Jim Ryan's skillful mandolin work, driving it all with a crisp rhythm section. Displaying a polite cowpunk sensibility as well as an appreciation for traditional Appalachian music (e.g., "Shady Grove"), the Blood Oranges are more folky-reverent than most of the West Coast groups known for similar hybrids, but Corn River doesn't shy away from electricity at all: "Incinerator" has guest slide guitar by Dumpttruck's Seth Tiven. "Western Man" is a loud Creedence-style blues-rock choogle and "Time Takes Away" distributes a roar of measured guitar power that nearly crushes tinkly bits of mandolin and guest piano [i]

BLOODSPORT

I Am the Game (Homestead) 1985

Part of the mid-'80s Chicago scene (alongside Big Black, Effigies et al.), Bloodsport features guitarist Chris Björkland, a veteran of Strike Under, the early Chi-town punk band (its 1981 EP was the first-ever Wax Trax! record) that also included his brother Steve (later of Breaking Circus) and Naked Raygun bassist Pierre Keady.

Björkland, singer Dave Bergeron, bassist Tom Woods and drummer Joe Haggerty (brother of Raygun's John) cut Bloodsport's only record, the seven-song I Am the Game, in 1985. Inspired by the same Ruts/Killing Joke/Stranglers sources as Bloodsport's counterparts, the slabs of innovative, guitar-dominated walls of post-punk power-rock ("Better and Best," "Sixes and Sevens," the instrumental "Killing Floor" and the chilling "Rhymes of Reason") are just what one would expect: solid and invigorating.

The group has been a study in inertia ever since. Bloodsport continued as an unrecorded trio after Bergeron left; all three members currently back singer John Keady in the Effigies. Although Bloodsport still exists, Björkland moonlights in the re-formed Defoliants and Haggerty is in Pegboy, a new band with his ex-Raygun brother John. [jr]

See also Effigies, Naked Raygun.

LUKA BLOOM

Riverside (Reprise) 1990 •

Barry Moore, brother of famed Irish singer Christy Moore, moved to New York after releasing three folk albums in Ireland. With joking nods to James Joyce's Leopold Bloom and Suzanne Vega's bestselling kid, he changed his name to Luka Bloom and earned a fast following as a riveting live performer. Riverside is admirably underproduced for a major-label product, relying mostly on an amplified acoustic guitar, subtly assisted by such guests as Liam O'Maonlai (Hothouse Flowers) on bodhrán, Ed Tomney (Rage to Live) on electric guitar, Jane Scarpantoni (Tiny Lights) on cello and Ali Fatemi on Iranian finger drum. A few songs, like "The Man Is Alive" (an elegy for his father), are set in Ireland, but most of them take place in New York—or in Bloom's hopelessly romantic heart. A tendency towards obviousness occasionally leads him astray, as in the heavyhanded "Hudson Lady" (apparently about the Statue of Liberty) and in the silly wet-dream fantasy of "An Irishman in Chinatown." While those songs become annoying after repeated listens, other tracks—like "Gone to Pablo," "This Is for Life" and "You Couldn't Have Come at a Better Time"—prove Bloom to be an extraordinarily sensitive lyricist and singer. [ws]

BLOTTO

Hell! My Name Is Blotto. What's Yours? EP (Blotto) 1980
Across and Down EP (Blotto) 1980
Combo Akimbo (Blotto) 1982
I Wanna Be a Lifeguard (Performance) 1987

Albany, New York's whimsical comic-pop sextet made a big splash with the silly summer song, "I Wanna Be a Lifeguard," included on the first EP. All three original records have witty observations and skillfully played parodic music, but Blotto reached its peak on the pre-Spinal Tap brain-banger, "(I'm Turning into a Heavy) Metal Head," from Combo Akimbo.

I Wanna Be a Lifeguard is a fair career summary, putting the best items from both EPs and Combo Akimbo on one easy-to-use record, with a bonus flexi-disc of "I Wanna Be a Lifeguard" (live) and a studio cut. [i]

KURTIS BLOW

Kurtis Blow (Mercury) 1980
Deuce (Mercury) 1981
Tough (Mercury) 1982
Party Time? EP (Mercury) 1983
Ego Trip (Mercury) 1984 •
Amerco (Mercury) 1985
Kingdom Blow (Mercury) 1986 •
Back by Popular Demand (Mercury) 1988 •

One of rap's earliest and most enduring stars, New York's Kurtis Blow consistently makes solid records with workable grooves and lyrics that alternately address topics of social and socializing interest. In doing so, Blow has become something of a modern African-American culture maven, singing the praises of Harlem ("One-Two-Five (Main Street, Harlem, USA)" on Party Time?), waxing eloquent about hoops ("Basketball" on Ego Trip) and competing Grandmaster Flash's "The Message" in discussing the urban challenge ("Tough" on the LP of the same name, "Street Rock" on Kingdom Blow). All of the records are state-of-the-art in an almost mainstream vein; Ego Trip makes a concerted effort to get hipper by having Run-DMC do a guest rap on "8 Million Stories." (Kingdom tops that in the cameo stakes: the first voice you hear belongs to Bob Dylan.)

Taking a turn towards patriotism in the title cut of America, Blow (who also produced) shows off his dichotomous musical goals. In the same song he uses aggressive electronic percussion and mixing techniques to mimic the Bambaataa/Lydon Time Zone sound (with Art of Noise effects) and sings like Kool and the Gang. The rest of the album is passable but only the catchy and soulful strut of "If I Ruled the World" is worth remembering. (And "Super Sperm" is well worth forgetting.)

Kingdom Blow not only has Dylan and a homely but sincere paean to "The Bronx," but George Clinton and "Zip-a-Dee-Doo-Dah" to boot. Kurtis is nothing if not open-minded and adventurous. The eight long cuts, some more compelling than others, throw in just about everything (TV bites, Donald Duck, party sounds, Emulator gimmickry, etc.) except the London Philharmonic.

Dispensing with most of Kingdom Blow's ambitious frivolity, Back by Popular Demand finds the venerable but passé rapper in an understandably insecure mood, circling his wagons in a vain attempt to get with the new hip-hop generation. Boasting is traditional, but Blow spends far too much of this mild old-school record (that contains a few melodic soul excursions, including an appealingly sung version of Charles Wright's old "Express Yourself"—is this Blow's future?) claiming his preeminence in the field and too little proving it. [i]

BLOW MONKEYS

Limping for a Generation (nr/RCA) 1984 •
Forbidden Fruit EP (RCA) 1985
Animal Magic (RCA) 1986 •
She Was Only a Grocer's Daughter (RCA) 1987 •
Whoops! There Goes the Neighbourhood (nr/RCA) 1989 •
Choices: The Singles Collection (nr/RCA) 1989 •
Springtime for the World (nr/RCA) 1990 •

Moving in to fill the vapid-soul vacancy left by Culture Club during that band's terminal creative drought, England's Blow Monkeys whipped up a disturbingly familiar-sounding bit of fluff, "Digging Your Scene," for their second album. While the absurdly named bowler-wearing Dr. Robert (Howard) manages a passable imitation of George's vocals and songwriting, his subordinates are no match for the Clubbers, and the rest of Animal Magic is equally redundant and stupid. The title track is an appalling T. Rex knock-off; "Sweet Murder" attempts to rewrite Talking Heads' "I Zimbra." The LP's most consistent feature is its pathetic lack of originality.

As an introduction to America, Forbidden Fruit mixes "Atomic Lullaby" and the Smiths' "Wild Flower" from Limping for a Generation with four foretastes of Animal Magic. The only items of note are a pair of crazed Eek-a-Mouse dub mixes that largely obscure the songs.

The uncontrollably egotistical Dr. R. sorted out his stylistic desires in time for She Was Only a Grocer's Daughter, which consistently focuses on a danceable pop-soul format that crosses Culture Club's basic ideas with lush ABC-like production, including enough strings and backing vocals—the credits list a dozen session singers—to pack a stadium. If the band can't hack it instrumentally on their own, a studio full of players are on hand to help. The trivial songs at least sound fine; the peerless Curtis Mayfield provides a huge (if undeserved) credibility boost by duetting on the appropriately derivative "The Day After You." The album title is an effete slap at Margaret Thatcher; the CD adds two extra tracks.

Most of There Goes the Neighbourhood sounds frighteningly like ABC, but a variety of producers (Stephen Hague, Leon Sylvers III, Julian Mendelsohn and the godlike talents of a certain Blow Monkey) prevents any consistent sound from jelling. Continuing his strange habit of setting strongly motivated left-wing criticisms of the state of contemporary England into ultra-commercial arrangements, Dr. Robert doesn't so much share his political thoughts as allude to them coyly while his three bandmates and guests effortlessly and energetically pump out forgettably glib mush.

The Blow Monkeys followed Neighbourhood with a compilation of their UK hits. The Choices CD and tape add extended remixes and other bonus tracks.

Extending the misbegotten limits of pretentious conceptual insanity, Springtime for the World begins with blandly commercial pop-soul (the title track is a nifty Style Council imitation) but then turns absurdly global. "Reflections '89" is an instrumental with soundbites from assorted world leaders; other songs appropriate Afrobeat accents, absurdly cramming them into a schmaltzy orchestral arrangement on "If You Love Somebody." These confused fellas really need to straighten themselves out. [i]

BUDDY BLUE

See Beat Farmers.

BLUE AEROPLANES

Bop Art (nr/Abstract) 1984

Action Painting and Other Original Works EP (nr/Fire) 1985

Lover and Confidante and Other Stories of Travel, Religion and Heartbreak (nr/Fire) 1986

Tolerance (nr/Fire) 1986 •

Spitting Out Miracles (Restless) 1987 •

Friendloverplane (nr/Fire) 1988 (Fire-Restless) 1989 •

Swagger (Ensign-Chrysalis) 1990 •

Loved EP (nr/Ensign) 1990 •

World View Blue (Ensign-Chrysalis) 1990 •

GERARD LANGLEY + IAN KEAREY

Siamese Boyfriends (nr/Fire) 1986

Aided by numerous friends, this eccentric Bristol quintet often has as many as a dozen people playing on its records; the diversity of ideas shows in the rich sound. Referents such as the Velvetes, Fall, Pere Ubu, Feelies and others ricochet from all sides, topped off by Gerard Langley's poetic lyrics.

From the hard funk of "Pinkies Hit the Union" to the sonic landscape of "Owls," Bop Art has something for everyone. Along with a barrage of guitars, bass and percussion, the instrumentation includes saxes, bagpipes and several 16th-century guitar ancestors. The band is such an effective ensemble that, even with all the masterful variety, the LP manages a logical progression.

The Action Painting EP builds some nice Velvetes-cum-early Cabaret Voltaire drones; Lover and Confidante, another four cuts, is a trailer for Tolerance. Not quite as kaleidoscopic as Bop Art, Tolerance trades much of the oddness and idiosyncrasy of previous work for some psychedelic touches, adding just enough characteristic embellishment to prevent deep identification with the paisley bandwagon.

By the time of their first American release, Spitting Out Miracles, the Blue Aeroplanes were up to an eight-piece (if you count the dancer and the guy who contributes tapes and records), with an equal number of guests (including Michelle Shocked on mandolin). Amazingly, with all those ingredients, it often manages to sound like a singer/songwriter album; the musicianship is so controlled and artistic that the focus stays on Langley's beat-influenced wordplay and Dylanesque delivery. On "Bury Your Love Like Treasure," the artistes rock out fine and everybody gets home happy. All of the aforementioned records are highly recommended.

Friendloverplane is a compilation of non-LP tracks, half of them previously unreleased. As is typical of such efforts, it's a hit or miss assemblage, with song and sound quality varying quite a bit. (Ironically, most of the better-produced numbers are inferior songs, such as "Etiquette!" and the single "Veils of Colour.") While the first side is mostly slower quasi-blues, Side Two opens up more. Highlights are "Tolerance" and "Old Men Sleeping on the Bowery," but neither ranks among the band's best. For devotees only.

Swagger contains the Blue Aeroplanes' first new material in three years. Gil Norton's clear production allows the multi-layered guitars to create an uncluttered backdrop for tales of interpersonal relationships. (Langley provides lyrics for ten of the twelve tracks, guitarist Rodney Allen contributes "Careful Boy" and Sylvia Plath's "The Applicant" is effectively tuned up.) Guests include Michael Stipe and ex-Belle Stars saxophonist Clair Hirst. The Blue Aeroplanes remain one of rock's hidden treasures, intelligent and mature without being pretentious or stodgy.

Named for the Swagger track presented here in an acoustic version, World View Blue is an eight-song collection of live tracks, leftovers and covers (a concert run-through of Dylan's "I Wanna Be Your Lover" rocks as much as anything the group has ever done). "You (Are Loved)" sounds like a potential breakthrough single; the sole low point is a completely unnecessary "Sweet Jane."

Langley and in-again-out-again Aeroplanes guitarist Ian Kearey recorded the six-song Siamese Boyfriends in 1986. Kearey is quite the multi-instrumentalist here, finding a part for everything from toy pianos and melodica to bowed psaltery and banjimer (!). "Joe Taylor's/La Morisque" is a nicely played but not very interesting instrumental; "Dear, Though the Night Is Gone" is a W.H. Auden poem mumbled almost inaudibly over Kearey's accompaniment. Siamese Boyfriends isn't so much produced as just recorded; that results in the participants jockeying for position and stepping on each other's contributions. Not a major work. [dgs]

BLUE ANGEL

Blue Angel (Polydor) 1980 + 1984

As crass trash goes, you could certainly do worse than New York City's Blue Angel. Their painfully obvious mixture of '50s hokum, '60s girl-group theatrics and '70s detachment might have been more noteworthy if Blondie hadn't issued their own, more original version a few years earlier. The singer warbles and trills skillfully, but without much charm. The album was re-issued in 1984, after said warbler, Cyndi Lauper, topped the charts with "Girls Just Want to Have Fun." [jy]

See also Cyndi Lauper.

BLUEBELLS

The Bluebells EP (Sire) 1983

Sisters (Sire) 1984

MCCLOSKEY BROTHERS

Aware of All (nr/Thrush) 1987

In a brief career, Glasgow's rustic pure-pop Bluebells—whose small output was concentrated on singles made with a procession of producers—never had anywhere near the impact their marvelous music plainly deserved. Guitarist and ex-fanzine publisher Robert Hodgens (aka Bobby Bluebell) wrote instantly memorable classics (some in collaboration with the two brothers who completed the Bluebells' essential trioka) and Kenneth McCluskey sang "em in a likably unaffected voice, making every track count. The five-song EP and the album have three songs in common (Brendan Behan's moving folk classic, "The Patriot's Game," the beautiful and romantic "Cath" and different versions of "Everybody's Somebody's Fool"), all of them winners. Sisters also boasts "I'm Falling (Down Again)" and six others, all subtly shaded with country fiddles and mandolins, ringing guitars, a light bouncy beat and choruses that you'll be humming all the way home. Utterly wonderful.

After the Bluebells ended, brothers Kenneth (vocals) and David (drums) McCluskey picked up different instruments, formed a duo and continued to record airy originals with more of a folksy feel and none of Hodgens' power pop leanings. Bluebells bassist Laurence Donegan, meanwhile, surfaced in Lloyd Cole's Com-motions. [1]

BLUE HIPPOS

Blue Hippos (Twin/Tone) 1987

Forty Forty (Twin/Tone) 1988

OTTO'S CHEMICAL LOUNGE

Spillover (Homestead) 1985

On the seven-song Blue Hippos, this Twin Cities trio, led by singer/guitarist Paul Osby (late of Otto's Chemical Lounge), wavers between garage thrash and tentative funk, with competent but unexceptional results. Forty Forty sounds more confident, and shows a somewhat greater mastery of funk dynamics, but the band still lacks the musical and/or lyrical bite that would give its R&B appropriations more authority.

Like the Blue Hippos' discs, the sole release by Otto's Chemical Lounge (with Osby as guitarist and songwriter but not lead vocalist) fails to capture on vinyl what was reputedly a powerful live act. The eight-song, 22-minute disc is basically competent but pedestrian indie guitar rock with avant-gardsy pretensions. The jams don't go anywhere in particular, and the covers of Johnny Kidd and the Flamin' Groovies are flat and obvious. Grant Hart sings backup on three songs. [hd]

BLUE IN HEAVEN

All the Gods' Men (Island) 1985

Explicit Material (Island) 1986

Rock'n'Roll R.I.P. EP (nr/Solid) 1988

Although this young Irish quartet debuted on 45 with a fiery guitar anthem ("Julie Cries"), an inappropriate choice of producer (Martin Hannett) for their first album turned them into bass-heavy doom mongers. A remix of the single on All the Gods' Men tells the whole sordid tale. A little light does shine through in "Sometimes," "The Big Bear" and "In Your Eyes," but Hannett's lush atmospherics detract from, rather than complement, the effort.

The second record was co-produced by Island Records chief Chris Blackwell, Eric Thormgren and the band, to far more appealing effect. Guitars power the mostly melodic songs along without overly coloring them. Shane O'Neill's vocals provide the strongest character. Amidst the attractive pop, Shane's avowed Iggy fixation comes through on the grungy "Be Your Man" (which also mentions a familiar canine variation).

The multi-personality EP chronologically straddles the band's major-label career, with a derivative 1983 track ("On and On") produced by the Edge and three '87 studio efforts (light pop, ponderous plodding and Iggy-styled rock). Rounding off this strange package is a dull live '87 take on the Stooges' "Loose." [ag/1]

BLUE NILE

A Walk Across the Rooftops (Linn-Virgin-A&M) 1984 •

Hats (Linn-Virgin-A&M) 1989 •

This unique Glaswegian trio has considerable creative depth, building atmosphere with lots of empty space and well-controlled conflicting musical maneuvers. The first album's title track mixes strings, horns, drum and bass with a meandering, disjunct vocal for something like a blend of Robert Wyatt, Joni Mitchell and John Cale. Although A Walk Across the Rooftops isn't easy to love, at its most accessible point ("Stay," which actually has a chorus and more of a verse melody than the others), it's quite appealing.

Hats was five years in the making, but the band's relentless perfectionism paid off: the album's seven songs are as dense and moving as a midnight sky. With sweeping synths and the pristine click of electronic percussion, "The Downtown Lights" and "Over the Hillside" are as moody as film music, while "From a Late Night Tram" and "Saturday Night" are impressionistic vignettes that creep along in slow motion. There's hardly a guitar or live drum to be heard, but seldom has studio technology been used to such warm and personal results. [i/kss]

BLUE ORCHIDS

The Greatest Hit (Money Mountain) (nr/Rough Trade)

1982

Agents of Change EP (nr/Rough Trade) 1982

This Manchester quartet, which included two early members of the Fall—guitarist/singer Martin Bramah and keyboardist Una Baines—used organ as its main instrument, but at times on The Greatest Hit it sounds as if Baines is playing a different song from the rest of the band. There are many overlapping layers in the deceptively simple sound; the long organ washes are interrupted by guitars lurching to the fore. Bass and drums keep the steady beat, but the others don't necessarily fall in line behind them. Vocals are half-sung, half-spoken and full of poetic pretense, but it's the mesmerizing music that captures the listener in bright swirling folds. While The Greatest Hit can be simply tagged as neo-psychedelia, that doesn't cover the full scope of this fascinating band's music.

The EP, packaged in a printed plastic shopping bag, offers four very nice subsequent tracks that are at once subtler and more conservatively structured, sounding like nothing so much as the pretty side of early Velvet Underground.

The Blue Orchids didn't last long, and the members dropped out of the spotlight. In 1989, however, occasioned by Bnx Smith's departure, Bramah rejoined the Fall in time to play on Extricate. [i]

See also Fall

BLUE PEARL

See Youth & Ben Watkins.

BLUE RODEO

Outskirts (Can. Risqué Disque) 1987 (Risqué

Disque-Atlantic) 1988 •

Diamond Mine (Risqué Disque-Atlantic) 1989 •

Casino (East West America) 1991 •

BOB WISEMAN

Bob Wiseman Sings Wrench Tuttle: In Her Dream (Risqué

Disque-Atlantic) 1990 •

There's an undeniable '60s flavor to Toronto's Blue Rodeo. On Outskirts, that means Beatlesque harmonies, Dylan-influenced songwriting, down-home Band-like musicianship and a touch of Doorsy organ. Fortunately, the quintet's two singer/songwriter/guitarists—Jim Cuddy and Greg Keelor—possess excellent and distinctive voices and a knack for writing songs that transcend the obvious comparisons.

Diamond Mine continues the stroll down the "boulevard of broken dreams" (as the first album's liner notes put it), but also expands to include some political songs, including "God and Country," a thinly veiled swipe at Ollie North and his ilk. Recorded pretty much live in an empty theater in Toronto, it lacks both the punch and especially the neat harmonizing of Outskirts. In attempting rawness, the band may have sacrificed some of its best assets.

Producer Pete Anderson must have thought so. On Casino, he brings back the harmonies with a vengeance, pushes the group's pop side to the fore, and turns up the guitars. This one may remind you a lot of Rubber Soul at times, or at least that period in which the ideas of the Beatles and Dylan seemed to converge. Blue Rodeo, however, brings that sound clearly into the '90s.

Keyboard/accordion player Bob Wiseman's solo album probably won't appeal to everybody, and that's a pity. On In Her Dreams, he puts to music lyrics purportedly sent to him in the mail by a fellow named Wrench Tuttle. (Actually, Wiseman writes them himself, but it's a good story.) In fact, Wiseman doesn't have much of a voice, but what he lacks in tunefulness he more than makes up in personality and charm. The songs are topical, quirky, bluesy, heartfelt, clever and more; obviously a real labor of love. Wiseman plays guitar as well as keyboards here, and is helped out by a coterie of Canadian musicians, including k.d. lang side-man Ben Mink and the wonderful Mary Margaret O'Hara. [ds]

See also Crash Vegas.

BLUE RUIN

Such Sweet Thunder (Aus. Major) 1985

Flame (Aus. Rampant) 1987

Strange Things in the Corner (Aus. rooArt-PolyGram)

1988 •

Although the lone Birthday Party alumnus in this dark and bluesy Australian quartet is drummer Phill Calvert, it's singer Ian "Quinsy" McLean and his obvious Nick Cave fixation that establishes the stylistic bond between Such Sweet Thunder and From Her to Eternity. With Blue Ruin providing the basic guitar-bass-drums framework and dramatic vocals, guests add the sax, harmonica and keyboards coloration that make hard-edged numbers like "She's Murder," "Waterhole" and "Love Me When I'm Low" engrossingly atmospheric.

Other than guitarist Mulaim Vela's organ work, Flame again relies on session players (trombone, strings, sax) for its musical flavoring. Overall, Blue Ruin's second album takes a better-adjusted path, relegating a chunk of the group's jagged intensity and bleakness to the downcast—not quite dissolute—and violent lyrics. (Strangely, Flame includes a new rendition of the first album's vindictive "What a Hell'uva Woman.")

The powerfully live Strange Things in the Corner was recorded over a pair of May 1988 nights in Melbourne. Other than Willie Dixon's "I Just Wanna Make Love to You" (given an alternately slow/fast but consistently tuneless reading) and one band original, all of the tunes come from the two studio albums. (Yep, "Hell'uva Woman" makes its third appearance.) [i]

BLURT

In Berlin (Ruby) 1981

Blurt (nr/Red Flame) 1982

Bullets for You (Fr. Divine) 1984

Six Views in Black (Sixty Minutes of Blurt in Blighty) [tape] 1985

Friday the 12th (nr/Another Side) 1985 (PVC) 1985

Poppycock (nr/Toeblock) 1986

Smoke Time (Moving Target) 1987 •

Kenny Rogers' Greatest Hit (Take 2) (nr/Toeblock) 1989 •

The Body Livel (Ger. Heute) 1989 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

A Factory Quartet (nr/Factory) 1981

TED MILTON

Confessions of an Aeroplane Farter EP (nr/echt!) 1982

Love Is Like a Violence (nr/Embryo) 1984

"Ode: O to Be Seen Through Your Eyes!" EP

(nr/Toeblock) 1985

JEAN-FRANCOIS PAUVROS

Le Grande Amour (Fr. Nato) 1986

Ted Milton is a direct and honest guy. "I will lead the world over the end of the Santa Monica Pier," he declares in "No Go Dada" (originally on Bullets for You, but also on several of the live records: two Blurt credos are recycling and documenting each new lineup in performance), "but not until you've raised the temperature of the Pacific Ocean to blood temperature and provide warm towels in the dressing room." (He's practical, too.) Making a saxophone honk, screech and generally giving the impression of Mother Goose meeting armageddon, Milton, his drummer brother Jake and guitarist Pete Creese debuted in the summer of 1980 with the "My Mother Was a Friend of the Enemy of the People" single, followed it with a live debut album the following year and have been squawking their way through a noisy avant-garde netherworld between jazz and rock ever since. Ted's voice is just what his band's name would suggest, a grumbling, gurgling, bleating (if not bleeding) blurt of a sound, silenced only when his mouth is wrapped around a saxophone reed. That saxophone would just as soon imitate fingernails down a chalkboard or elephants in heat as conform to the jazzy warmth the instrument might yield in other hands.

A lover of wordplay, the iconoclastic Milton is capable of serious irreverence. In the title track of Bullets for You, a song about JFK's assassination, he grunts, "I am a donut. There's a hole in my head. Ich bin ein Berliner. That's what Jack said . . . and now Jack is dead." Blurt lyrics (as well as those on Milton's solo works) are dada ga-ga woven around some kind of derailed spark. Behind that spark is a literate and educated sense of nonsense. You either love Blurt or hate them; there's plenty of validity to both views.

Blurt is one of the trio's artistest and most orderly works. Creese's minimalist guitar spews out repeating patterns of stark chords that function almost like a backing samba in "The Ruminant Plinth" (against Ted's incoherently belching screams and squirming sax) and double as a rhythm track, as well as the melody, at other times.

Bullets for You is Blurt at its most accessible, and the final release by the original lineup. Featuring lyrics that are actually decipherable, song structures from Earth instead of Mars, and even hooks such as the mutilated two-syllable "you-ooo" in the title track, Ted twists his voice (between saxophone tweetings) into a yodel-edged squeal that is as catchy and memorable as any pop refrain. Jake counters with some equally infectious drumming.

After Creese left, the brothers hired keyboardist Herman Martin for a short time. The cassette-only Six Views in Black, compiled from four live performances in March of 1985, contains the band's only known recordings with synthesizer. (Blurt's live documentation also includes a four-song side of A Factory Quartet.)

Martin alone accompanies Milton on the solo 12-inch rendition of "Ode: O to Be Seen Through Your Eyes!" (a band version of which appears on Kenny Rogers' Greatest Hit (Take 2)), a recitation set to a harsh synthesized drumbeat. Like Foetus, whose twisted intonations his vocals resemble, Milton is a master of mood when allowed out on his own. Martin's synth work is anything but traditional, veering from the silicon chip gone amok of "Skies Are Blue" to percussive layers and textures.

Guitarist Steve Eagles replaced Martin for Friday the 12th, another live album that contains almost the same selections as the twelve-track Six Views, but returns the arrangements to guitar.

By the time of Poppycock, Paul Wigans had taken over the drum seat. Though the only dance-step possible to a Blurt record is the quadriplegic head-bob, Smoke Time almost reaches a dance-club orientation. With Wigans contributing violin as well as percussion, the album features a big, clear beat on the title cut and more upfront drumming in the unbelievably intense "Nights Before." A smorgasbord of Blurt's various sounds, it revives the band's early-period sound in "Bullet-Proof Vest," while "Aboule Ton Fric" returns the band to the simpler textures of "The Ruminant Plinth."

With new drummer Nic Murcott, Kenny Rogers' Greatest Hit (Take 2) is a sparser recording, Milton grumbles intelligibly (in a mixture of English and French) while a smoother, clarinetish tone sneaks out of his sax bell. Murcott also appears on The Body, a live retrospective that includes "Enemy Ears" (dating back to the first Blurt lineup) but concentrates on post-Creese material. The majestically spacious live recording finds Milton back to his honk-and-babble vocals, Murcott drumming with crashing precision and everything else harsh and grungy.

In another extra-Blurt-ial project, Ted collaborated with Arto Lindsay, Terry Day and Jean-Francois Pauros on the avant-experimental Le Grande Amour LP. [e]

BOBS

The Bobs EP (Safety Net) 1983

White Gazebo (Safety Net) 1984

This Ft. Lauderdale trio (not to be confused with the San Francisco a cappella group of the same name) led by future Silos co-founder Bob Rupe plays quirky, satiric music with an edge, steeping their hard pop in reggae and funk, occasionally interrupting it with a distorto-guitar solo. If the Bobs weren't as engagingly clever as some of their TV-culture-commentary peers, at least they were occasionally louder.

The crucial tracks on the sprightly six-song 12-inch debut (recorded in 1981 by Rupe and two other guys named Bob) are "Sneaking T.V." and "Sounds of People" (eating). Working with a different drummer and guitarist (neither of whom is named Bob), bassist/singer Rupe finds fewer original avenues for the band's satire on White Gazebo, a more accomplished seven-songer that has better tunes and such accents as pedal steel (on "The Beer Tune," an ingenuous country lament from the lighter side of the roots movement). [j/i]

See also Silos.

BODEANS

Love & Hope & Sex & Dreams (Slash-Warner Bros.)

1986 •

Outside Looking In (Slash-Reprise) 1987 •

Home (Slash-Reprise) 1989 •

Black and White (Slash-Reprise) 1991 ◊

Despite the unappetizing roots-rock-saviors hype, Waukesha, Wisconsin's BoDeans (not to be confused with Britain's Bodines) are "new music" by default, simply because the rock mainstream at which they aim their earnest, plain-spoken tunes no longer exists. (If it ever did.) And while a lack of pretension is the BoDeans' principal charm, it's also their biggest liability, as the band rarely strives for much more than competent tunefulness.

Love & Hope & Sex & Dreams—on which all four members adopt the BoDean surname—is an agreeably modest debut, thanks to T-Bone Burnett's homey production and the downright bizarre interplay of singers Sammy Llanas and Kurt Neumann (the band's only concession to eccentricity). But even at this early stage, the material is alarmingly thin, with memorable singles like "Fadeaway," "She's a Runaway" and "Angels" contrasting obvious filler.

Depending upon your reference points, Outside Looking In—on which the BoDeans lose a drummer but regain their real names—either suffers or benefits from Talking Head (and fellow Wisconsinite) Jerry Harrison's radio-ready production, which smooths out most of the rough edges and leaves the band sounding suspiciously like everybody else. Still, the combo's natural grit shines through the gloss on "Only Love," "What It Feels Like" and a few others. It's significant that Outside Looking In's most appealing and memorable numbers are a trio of self-produced four-track demos included on the CD and cassette.

Surprisingly, the even glossier Home uses space-age studio technique to the band's advantage, showing off mature songwriting and strong vocals (not to mention guest drummer Kenny Aronoff's usual fine work) "When the Love Is Good" and "Beautiful Rain" are unpretentiously soulful, while "Good Work" and "Worlds Away" rock righteously. The album's only major misstep: the echoey U2-ish guitar effects on the anthemic "You Don't Get Much," which only serve to subvert an otherwise worthy song.

Black and White continues in more or less the same vein as Home, balancing gritty performances and slick production by David Z. The material shows continued growth, with some fine adult love songs ("Good Things," "Naked") and a few successful stabs at social comment ("Paradise," "Black, White and Blood Red"). [hd]

BOLLOCK BROTHERS

The Last Supper (nr/Charly) 1983 •
Never Mind the Bollocks 1983 (nr/Charly) 1983 •
Live Performances: Official Bootleg (nr/Charly) 1983
'77 '78 '79 (nr/Konexion) 1985
The 4 Horsemen of the Apocalypse (nr/Charly) 1985 •
Rock'n'Roll Suicide (nr/Konexion) 1986
Live in Public in Private (nr/Charly) 1987 •
The Prophecies of Nostradamus (Blue Turtle) 1987 •

Under the enthusiastic (mis)guidance of singer Jock McDonald, the semi-serious Bollock Brothers will try anything once, and make an art out of artless prole absurdity. Over the years, this unpredictable and virtually undefinable band has wavered between conceptual brilliance and total creative failure. The Last Supper, a double studio album, rambles easily from "Horror Movies" (a corny Munsterized dance theme) to attempted political criticism ("The Act Becomes Real," with regard to Reagan), plus lots more, all characterized by inept singing and ept playing.

The bizarre Never Mind the Bollocks 1983 paradoxically reprises the entire contents (and cover design) of the Sex Pistols' 1977 album. Rather than attempt to mimic the Pistols, however, the Bollock Bros. simply borrow the material in toto, adding a few lyrics of their own, and employ synthesizers to convert most of the tunes into a sub-New Order update with McDonald's blandly artless vocals serving in lieu of Rotten's sneering bile. Not exactly a piece of timeless musical history, but an amusing novelty record made just a bit weirder by the guest vocal appearance of Michael Fagin (a head-case once arrested for sneaking into Buckingham Palace) on "God Save the Queen" and "Pretty Vacant." Fagin also appears on one side of the "official bootleg" Live Performances, a two-record collection of various concert appearances which revisits the band's catalogue, including a set of Pistols tunes. Ridiculous.

The 4 Horsemen employs three of the least likely songwriters you'd ever expect to find sharing one album—McDonald, the late Alex Harvey and Vangelis—yet this well-produced studio job isn't as wacky as that might indicate. Jock still can't sing worth a damn, although his dumb B-movie lyrics remain as crazed and offbeat as ever; combined with the conservative rock backing, it makes for a regrettably tepid and laborious album.

Each side of The Prophecies of Nostradamus leads off with a typically devolved and irreverent cover version (Steppenwolf's "Magic Carpet Ride" and Led Zeppelin's "Heartbreaker"). Although mysteriously retitled "God Created Woman," Berlin's "Sex (I'm a . . .)" is also featured, complete with a brief interpolation of "Satisfaction." There are a few good originals, but McDonald's cloying metaphysics on the title track and proselytic religious numbers like "Ceremony" and "The Beast Is Calling" degrade the music, appealingly played by a proficient five-person European band. (But what are we to make of Genevieve French's credit for "backing vocals & special entertainment"?) [i]

BOLSHOI

Giants EP (nr/Situation Two) 1985 (IRS) 1986 •
Friends (IRS) 1986 •
Lindy's Party (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1987 •
Bigger Giants (nr/Situation Two) 1990 •

Sounding like a modest cross between U2 and early Cult, this Leeds trio isn't exactly good (vocalist Trevor Tanner ain't got what it takes), but they're not dead in the water, either. The six-track Giants has some promising ideas and intriguing production qualities, but nothing else going for it.

Keyboardist Paul Clark joined the Bolshoi in time for Friends, which takes more of a glossy guitar-and-synth dance path, colored by sporadic echoes of Big Country, a crisp drum sound and Tanner's alternately Antlike/Bonosque overtones. While the American Friends CD incorporates the contents of Giants, the UK tape and CD merely add one bonus track ("A Funny Thing . . .").

After such slow beginnings, the quartet finally located a workably thick equilibrium between guitar and keyboards on the self-produced Lindy's Party, ten new slices of threadbare lyrical pretension delivered in Tanner's usual semi-tolerable voice. Less specifically derivative than the group's previous records, Lindy's Party should have been the Bolshoi's debut.

Released in 1990, Bigger Giants consists of Giants plus two 12-inch singles of the same vintage. With a weird cover of Hendrix's "Crosstown Traffic," a wretchedly Bowiesque rendition of Jacques Brel's "Amsterdam" and two different versions of "Happy Boy," this record proves conclusively that—in the Bolshoi's case at least—bigger isn't necessarily better. [i]

BOMB

To Elvis... in Hell (Bogadigga) 1987
Hits of Acid (Boner) 1988
Happy All the Time EP (Boner) 1989
Lucy in the Sky with Desi [CD] (Boner) 1989 •

BABY OPAQUE

Fugue in Cow Minor (Catch Trout) 1986

Back in Charlottesville, Virginia, singer/bassist Michael Dean was in Baby Opaque, a trio whose lone album applies tight punk unity and a bit of jazzy aggression to imaginative rock songs with slightly derailed vocals. Although guitarist Todd Wilson keeps threatening to run off into noiseland, Baby Opaque never loses control, and winds up in some surprisingly subtle territory. Ian MacKaye (Minor Threat/Fugazi) guests on the trio's version of "Long Black Veil."

Moving to San Francisco, Dean became one-third of Bomb, a similar but more incendiary and self-amused outfit whose open-space rock thrashings (like "Healthfood and Heroin" and "I Loved You and Then I Died") fill the first two albums with an odd semi-psychedelic mixture of Buttholian frantics and rough flower-powery atmosphere.

The well-produced and stronger-sounding Happy All the Time has two songs (including "Lucy in the Sky with Desi," which became the title of a CD compiling the band's two Boner releases) on the 45 rpm side and four (including a remake of "Healthfood and Heroin") on the 33 rpm reverse. [kl]

BOMB THE BASS

Into the Dragon (nr/Rhythm King) 1988 •

Tim Simenon was only 19 years old when he recorded a relentless dance collage of stolen sounds and break beats entitled "Beat Dis" in early 1988. Released under the name Bomb the Bass, the single was not just a major hit in Britain and a club smash in America, but the birth of the DJ record and the UK dance explosion. Bomb the Bass led the charge of anonymous hi-tech groove producers; unmoved by the lure of pop stardom, Simenon hid behind other vocalists and rappers on subsequent hits, which ranged from the urgent hip-hop of "Megablast" to the updated cover of Aretha Franklin's "I Say a Little Prayer." On album, this mishmash sounds a little confused, a sense perhaps shared by Simenon, who attempted to cement Into the Dragon together with radio segues. [tf]

VIC BONDI

See Articles of Faith.

BONEDADDYS

Ä-Koo-De-Ä! (Chameleon) 1988 •
Worldbeatniks (Chameleon) 1989 •

Uplifting Afrobeat, uptight contemporary funk and sizzling rock'n'roll collide with delightful results on the merry gumbo of the Bonedaddys' first LP. The large interracial LA outfit—essentially a citywide sideband—takes a knowledgeable approach to exotica (confidently covering two Manu Dibango songs) and a witty pen to localism. "Zouk Attack," co-written by Bonedaddy guitarist Paul Lacques (whose main band is the polka-crazy Rotondi, but he also has a group called the Underthings) and ex-Motels/Burning Sensations leader Tim McGovern, critiques the trendy club scene: "Dumpster Girl," penned by singer Kevin Williams, is a twisted love song. Other bands—like the Red Hot Chili Peppers and Oingo Boingo—have confronted the challenge of rampant cross-culturalization and large-ensemble organization, but the Bonedaddys have a musical nationality all their own.

The party continues on Worldbeatniks, as the group (here an octet with guests; McGovern is no longer involved) offers up three more Afrobeat numbers (including Fela Kuti's "Zombie" and Afro National's "Jokenge"), some New Orleans-style R&B (Allen Toussaint's "Shoo-rah, Shoo-rah") and an eclectic array of originals, among them the (first?) neo-hippie anthem "Hippie Children," also recorded by Rotondi. Fun'n'funky. [i/ds]

BONE ORCHARD

Stuffed to the Gills EP (nr/Jungle) 1983
Swallowing Havoc! EP (nr/Jungle) 1984
Jack (nr/Jungle) 1984
Penthouse Poultry EP (nr/Vax) 1985

The artwork on this Brighton quintet's debut LP employs the same scratchy/violent style as Batcave bands like Specimen and Alien Sex Fiend; the music on Jack is similarly gloomy and intense, but generally less clichéd and more engaging. Credit singer Chrissy McGee (an original, intelligent lyricist—check the story-like "Five Days in the Neighborhood" for details), whose deep, deadpan voice sounds a little like Siouxsie's, and the use of four guest musicians augmenting the guitar-based lineup with piano, strings and sax. Bone Orchard's other strength is a sense of dynamics—they can thunder oppressively or drop back for contrast. Jack may not be an overly pleasant disc, but it is a well-crafted one with several nice touches.

The two earlier EPs are of the same caliber, if less artful, with lots of aggressive songs with exclamation points in the titles. The band definitely has a major Birthday Party jones but, unlike many other Party pretenders, they bring a fresh perspective to the psychobilly sound (McGee wasn't called the female Nick Cave for nothing). Stuffed to the Gills' best track is "Shall I Carry the Budgie Woman?," a meld of surf guitar, tribal drums and a strange outro with bird sounds. Swallowing Havoc!'s highlights are the Crampsian "I'm Boned! (Bonebilly Party)" and the slow, sexy "Love Has Sin."

Bone Orchard followed Jack up with the "Princess Epilepsy" 12-inch—consisting of two more psychobilly cuts (McGee's assertive "You Don't Press My Pants" is pretty funny) and a long, burning blues on the B-side—which fails to raise as many hackles as the earlier EPs. Ironically, the band's final release, Penthouse Poultry, is a breakthrough, diverging off into all sorts of weirdness: "Scenic Cruiser" is cocktail jazz with tingling sax, "Eyesore" nicks its riff from the Stooges' "TV Eye" and the eerie ballad, "Dumb Poet," could be a sibling of the Birthday Party's "She's Hit." [i/gef]

BONE SYMPHONY

See Scott Wilk + the Walls.

BONGOS

Time and the River (nr/Fetish) 1982
Drums Along the Hudson (PVC) 1982
Numbers with Wings EP (RCA) 1983
Beat Hotel (RCA) 1985

RICHARD BARONE/JAMES

MASTRO

Nuts and Bolts (Passport) 1983

RICHARD BARONE

Cool Blue Halo (Passport) 1987 •
Primal Dream (Paradox-MCA) 1990 •

Led by enthusiastic guitarist/singer Richard Barone, this Hoboken, New Jersey pop band makes no effort to conceal its roots. On Drums Along the Hudson (an expanded version of the Time and the River mini-album, itself a compilation of singles), mixed among original songs is a breathy cover of T. Rex's "Mambo Sun"; elsewhere, Barone spins out streamlined Byrds guitar licks and maintains a brisk pace throughout. Tuneful originals like "In the Congo" and "Video Eyes" may trade a certain amount of substance for easy appeal, but there's no better musical equivalent of whipped cream anywhere.

The Bongos subsequently expanded from a trio with the fulltime addition of guitarist James Mastro. In an offbeat variation on the solo record concept, Barone and Mastro dropped down to North Carolina to record Nuts and Bolts in collaboration with Mitch Easter. Each Bongo takes a side to showcase his own writing and singing, while helping the other out as well. Barone's results are bland and resemble unfinished band demos or outtakes, with dull sound matching uninspired material; Mastro takes a more idiosyncratic approach, using the opportunity to express some individuality and clearly delineate his contribution to the Bongos.

Recording for the first time as a quartet, the Bongos cut five new songs for Numbers with Wings, produced by Richard Gottehrer. "Barbarella" and the title track are prime, filled with swell harmonies, driving acoustic guitars and subtle structural tricks; the rest is adequate but dispensable.

Produced by John Jansen (Lou Reed, Television), Beat Hotel is the Bongos' most rocking record, a sparkling explosion of guitar pop. "Space Jungle" has a nagging hook and a full-blown arrangement, "Apache Dancing" is similarly ambitious in a different vein; "Come Back to Me" and "A Story (Written in the Sky)" hark back to the band's simpler days; "Totem Pole" sounds a bit like the dB's except for the overblown big-band finale. Given the best audio treatment of their career, the Bongos prove their mettle, simultaneously exposing their main inadequacy: inconsistent songwriting.

Barone recorded his first solo album onstage at New York's Bottom Line, trading the Bongos' big pop for airy chamber music, leading a scaled-down attack flanked by a cellist, acoustic guitarist and a percussionist-pianist-vibraphonist. Cool Blue Halo's gentler approach shows off his romanticism to good effect, especially on well-chosen covers as the Beatles' "Cry Baby Cry" and Bowie's "The Man Who Sold the World" and Bongos classics ("The Buirushes" and "Numbers with Wings"). A perfect three a.m. record, though it sounds a tad precious in broad daylight.

In contrast, Primal Dream is a full-blown studio job that applies overly smooth production (half by Richard Gottehrer, half by Don Dixon) to Barone's subtle song craft. Though it's consistently tasteful and tuneful, Primal Dream lacks the rocking playfulness of the Bongos' best work, veering dangerously close to MOR blandness. Still, taken in small enough doses, the pleasures of such tunes as "River to River" and "Where the Truth Lies" (not to mention a gracefully unslick cover of Lou Reed's "I'll Be Your Mirror") are undeniable.

See also Beat Rodeo

[j.y.l.hd]

BONGOS, BASS, AND BOB

Never Mind the Sex Pistols, Here's Bongos, Bass, and Bob! (What on Earth Were They Thinking?) (50 Skidillion Watts) 1988

Sixteen terribly amusing songs about oral hygiene, used duds ("Clothes of the Dead"), rent-control romance, Thorazine and girls with guns, all done to a golden-brown turn by magician-comedian-label-proprietor Penn Jillette (Bass), Dean J. Seal (Bongos) and Rob "Running" Elk (guitar), with Kramer kind of at the controls. Loose'n'lively in a hip, know-it-all, post-frat singalong sort of way. [rg]

BONGWATER

Breaking No New Ground! EP (Shimmy-Disc) 1987
Double Bummer (Shimmy-Disc) 1988 •
Too Much Sleep (Shimmy-Disc) 1989 •
The Power of Pussy (Shimmy-Disc) 1991 •

What's in a brilliant name? Some of the funniest, smartest and messed-up ultra-psychedelia ever invented. Almost all of Bongwater's music comes courtesy of Mark "Maul of Sound" Kramer, the former Shockabilly linchpin, king of the Shimmy-Disc label and in-house workaholic producer/owner of Noise New York studios. Performance artist-cum-actress Ann Magnuson contributes onstage attitude and her dreams, transcriptions of which provide many of the group's lyrics. Frequent associates include guitarist Dave Rick (Phantom Tollbooth, etc.) and former Shockabilly percussionist David Licht (who sat out Too Much Sleep, replaced by a drum machine). Bongwater is not so much a rock band as a particularly disturbing dream of one.

With its covers of songs by the Moody Blues, Led Zep and the Beatles, the six-track Breaking No New Ground! was but a suggestive whiff of the surreal, parodistic skullfuck of Double Bummer, a monumental two-LP set. (The Double Bummer + CD adds the EP and an inspirational cover of Roky Erickson's "You Don't Love Me Yet.") Double Bummer breaks down into songs constructed around Magnuson's rock dreams, translucently sludgy Kramer originals that take post-pot Beatles as zero-base inspiration and an assortment of adroit covers.

Slapp Happy's "The Drum" is transmogrified into a poignant group anthem on Too Much Sleep (the cassette of which also contains No New Ground). Even better, Magnuson and Kramer—by this point the thinking person's Eurythmics—have integrated their song-writing abilities to even more troubling and hilarious ends, with sampled voices and head-spinning effects a specialty. Thick, rich and satisfying.

As is The Power of Pussy, which turns cock-rock on its head in nearly every song and breaks virgin ground with Magnuson's nine-minute opus of apocalyptic acquiescence, "Folk Song." [rg]

See also Carney-Hild-Kramer, Shockability.

BONZO GOES TO WASHINGTON

See Jerry Harrison.

BOOGIE DOWN PRODUCTIONS

Criminal Minded (B-Boy) 1987 •

By All Means Necessary (Jive-RCA) 1988 •

Ghetto Music: The Blueprint of Hip Hop (Jive-RCA) 1989 •

Edutainment (Jive-RCA) 1990 •

Ya Know The Rules EP (Jive-RCA) 1991

Live Hardcore Worldwide (Jive-RCA) 1991 ◊

MS. MELODIE

Diva (Jive-RCA) 1989 •

HARMONY

Let There Be Harmony (Virgin) 1990 ◊

D-NICE

Call Me D-Nice (Jive-RCA) 1990 •

STOP THE VIOLENCE MOVEMENT

Self Destruction EP (Jive-RCA) 1989

Chris Parker was homeless on the streets of New York for six years before he met Scott Sterling, a counselor at a Bronx men's shelter. As Blastmaster KRS-One (a loose acronym for Knowledge Reigns Supreme Over Almost Every One) and DJ Scott LaRock, the duo formed Boogie Down (slang for the Bronx) Productions as an umbrella organization for various musical endeavors and cut the self-financed single "Crack Attack." They followed it with Criminal Minded, one of the most stunning hip-hop debuts ever. The record clearly revealed Parker as an eloquent and serious social commentator, one who would go well beyond rap's standard concerns, tempering his didactic preachiness with humor and humility. Indeed, he has grown into one of the most influential and respected artists of his generation, largely responsible for the rise of positive-message rap and the blending of reggae and hip-hop.

The title track of Criminal Minded is as good as rap gets. Witty, compassionate lyrics bust out gracefully over hard beats as ghostly (opera?) samples float in the background. The waking-nightmare "9mm Goes Bang," set to a chattering reggae beat, takes us deep inside the mind of a drug dealer—and begins a BDP tradition of painting psychological profiles of street life.

That life struck home all too vividly when LaRock was shot to death on 25 August 1987, just as the album was growing into a major underground hit. (It went on to sell nearly a million copies.) Undeterred, KRS-One returned with By All Means Necessary, noticeably more confident and politically conscious than on the debut. His brother Kenny Parker (and posse member D-Nice) ably shouldered the DJ responsibilities, laying down killer reggae rhythms and sampling everything from Deep Purple to a street person mumbling "What can we get for 63 cents?" (As every future BDP release would, the sleeve declared that By All Means Necessary was "Overseen by D.J. Scott LaRock.") While Chris Parker posed with an Uzi on the cover in emulation of Malcolm X, his lyrics made it clear that he advocates violence only in self-defense. The song "Stop the Violence" led to Self Destruction, an all-star benefit 12-inch produced by KRS-One and D-Nice and featuring an impressive cast: Kool Moe Dee, Just-Ice, MC Lyte, members of Stetsasonic and Public Enemy, plus Parker's wife, Ramona "Ms. Melodie" Parker.

The best of the post-LaRock albums so far, Ghetto Music presents a startling blend of provocative politics and hard-edged reggae-rap, mostly played by live musicians. Highlights include the stark, explosive police story, "Who Protects Us from You?," the rapid-fire Dylanesque images of "Jack of Spades" and the dub-wise "Jah Rulez," which showcases impassioned singing by Ms. Melodie's younger sister, Pamela "Harmony" Scott.

Edutainment is indeed educational, but hardly as entertaining as previous BDP albums. The thirteen barebones tracks are interspersed with six excerpts from lectures by KRS-One and Kwame Touré (formerly Stokely Carmichael). Allowing some bitterness and sarcasm to mingle with his thoughtful commentary, KRS lashes out at meat-eaters, the music industry and "house niggas." But few of the tracks have musical hooks as strong as their stories. The two most musically successful are "100 Guns," a relentless account of driving across the country with a trunk full of weapons, and "The Homeless," a bitter state-of-the-black-nation address ("Not fully American/We're getting there slowly") set to an African-styled rhythm. (The CD and cassette contain three bonus tracks, including "7 Dee Jays," a nine-minute reggae number that features various posse members.)

Ya Know The Rules includes three mixes of the Edutainment track for which it's named plus live versions (all from Live Hardcore Worldwide) of "Criminal Minded" and "The Bridge Is Over" (from the debut) and the second album's "Jimmy."

Although losing out to the 2 Live Crew as the first group to release a live rap album, BDP proves even more explosive on stage than in the studio. Including six raps from the debut album and several impassioned speeches by KRS-One, Live Hardcore Worldwide—recorded at clubs in New York, London and Paris—offers a solid introduction to the band's career.

Besides working the lecture circuit, KRS-One has become an in-demand producer, working with both hip-hop and reggae artists, including Sly and Robbie, Ziggy Marley and Mikey Dread. He's also taken an active role in BDP's expanding roster, producing albums for both Ms. Melodie and Harmony. While the former's Diva is simply mediocre, Let There Be Harmony is an intriguing, if erratic, effort. Harmony alternately applies her rich gospelly voice to mushy love songs and raps about tough revolutionary politics—and Christian piety.

Displaying more production skills than lyrical depth, D-Nice (Derrick Jones) steps out on Call Me D-Nice, a great-sounding mix of hip-hop, soul and reggae that—with the positive edutainment exceptions of “A Few Dollars More” and “Glory”—stays pretty close to kiss-dis clichés. KRS-One makes an avuncular guest appearance on “The TR 808 Is Coming.”

In yet another facet of BDP’s business, toaster rapper Jamal-ski is featured on one side of a 1990 12-inch, speeding his way through “Let’s Do It.” [ws]

BOOK OF LOVE

Book of Love (I Square-Sire) 1986 ●

Lullaby (I Square-Sire) 1988 ●

Candy Carol (I Square-Sire-Warner Bros) 1991 ◊

Produced by Ivan Ivan for his own label, this New York art-school quartet’s first album is a clever synthesis of catchy electro-pop minimalism and dance-driven rhythmatism. Susan Ottaviano’s breathy, almost spoken vocals on atmospheric tunes like “Boy” and “Happy Day” neatly offset the simple, spacious arrangements; others aren’t quite as memorable. A bit like Trio without the irony or Dominatrix cleaned up for mass appeal, Book of Love is an alluring if insignificant way to while away time in clubland. (Special note to aficionados of esoteric cover versions: Book of Love tackles Lilliput’s “Diematrosen”)

From such fringe beginnings, Book of Love made the mistake of abandoning the first record’s stylish economy and reaching for mainstream success on Lullaby. The group’s knowing junk-culture side surfaces on the driving club interpretation of “Tubular Bells” that opens the album, but Susan O’s sex-kitten singing, Ted Ottaviano’s dumb lyrics and the routine sound of hyperactive sequencers nearly adds up to Berlin reborn.

The all-keyboards-and-vocals quartet (with a few guest guitarists) found its place again on the toned-down Candy Carol, a fairly enticing application of flower-power style and lush pop harmonies. The synth arrangements run from trite (“Butterfly”) to subtle (“Candy Carol,” which makes cute use of a melody that comes pre-programmed on every $30 Casio), as do the lyrics: “Quiver” is simple and dumb, while “Flower Parade” consists of an a cappella list of floral species, and “Orange Flip” is a kicky little ode to lipstick colors. [i]

SONIC BOOM

See Spacemen 3.

BOOM CRASH OPERA

Boom Crash Opera (Warner Bros.) 1987 ●

These Here Are Crazy Times (Giant) 1990 ●

On Boom Crash Opera’s debut album, the Melbourne, Australia quintet plays heavy drum-driven dance-oriented rock much in the manner of INXS, but with just enough angst and bombast to live up to their name.

Wide-screen sound characterizes the crisply produced (in part by Jimmy Iovine) Crazy Times, even though many of the numbers are pushed by acoustic guitars. There’s a dash of U2’s spiritualism here and the Alarm’s romanticism there (especially on the anthemic “Dancing in the Storm”), a couple of bright big-beat dance-rock numbers, even a Zeppelin-style riff or two thrown in for good measure. Not a bad record, but the band has yet to establish a vision of its own. [ds]

BOOMTOWN RATS

The Boomtown Rats (Mercury) 1977

A Tonic for the Troops (Columbia) 1978 ●

The Fine Art of Surfacing (Columbia) 1979 ●

Mondo Bongo (Columbia) 1980 ●

Rat Tracks EP (Can. Vertigo) 1981

V Deep (Columbia) 1982 ●

The Boomtown Rats EP (Columbia) 1982

Ratrospective EP (Columbia) 1983

In the Long Grass (Columbia) 1984

Greatest Hits (Columbia) 1987 ●

Like Madness and the Jam, the Boomtown Rats generally matched considerable Anglo-European success with near-total American commercial obscurity. Despite a string of intelligent, irresistible pop singles and intricate, skillful, unpredictable albums filled with assorted musical styles and sounds, the only US hit the Rats ever had was the morbid ballad “I Don’t Like Mondays.” While their albums are not uniformly excellent, the band’s commitment to quality and growth, plus singer/songwriter Bob Geldof’s magnetic personality, help elevate even lesser efforts to listenability, and much of their work is downright brilliant.

The six future Rats left the unemployment lines in Dublin to enter the rock sweepstakes and had become a going concern on the Irish concert circuit by the time new wave came along. While the resulting upsurge in record-industry openness towards young, energetic bands undoubtedly helped them get a contract, it was clear from the start that the Rats were a different musical breed. Produced in Germany by pre-metal Mutt Lange, the first album is more tradition-minded than punky, but there’s no mistaking the verve and independence which tied the Rats solidly to less accomplished, more enraged outfits. From the Springsteenish “Joey’s on the Street Again” to the Dr. Feelgoody “Never Bite the Hand that Feeds” to a Mott the Hoople-styled ballad, “I Can Make It If You Can,” and the album’s sarcastic standout, “Lookin’ After No. 1,” the ambience is hip, but the rock is fairly routine. Geldof’s incisive lyrics and the entire band’s credible musicianship invest the stylistically diverse selections with character, making this a top-notch, timeless record.

Assumptions about the Rats’ musical intent were dispelled with A Tonic for the Troops. Taking giant steps forward in invention and sophistication, Geldof turned from a junior rock singer into a skilled vocalist with a recognizable style; the band likewise exhibited new-found intricacy and multifaceted versatility, thanks in large part to Johnnie Fingers’ keyboard cleverness and Lange’s layered production. Troops is not a total departure—“Rat Trap” picks up precisely where “Joey” left off, and “She’s So Modern” merely improves on “Mary of the 4th Form”—but “Me and Howard Hughes,” “Like Clockwork” and “Living in an Island” display development on all fronts: writing, singing, performing, arranging. (The American version deletes “Can’t Stop” and “(Watch Out for) The Normal People” in favor of two tracks retrieved from the first LP, which had sunk without a trace upon its release by the Rats' previous US label.)

The Rats took another big leap on The Fine Art of Surfacing, but with less rewarding results. Substandard songs get unenthusiastic treatment, and an overwhelming sense of self-importance highlights the ennui, despite impressive technical aptitude and obviously strengthened confidence and stylistic reach. The record does contain the powerful "I Don't Like Mondays" and a few other standouts—"Someone's Looking at You," which is clumsy but melodic and charming, and "When the Night Comes," a showstopper with ace Geldof lyrics and a swell arrangement that uses Latin-flavored acoustic guitar for color—but otherwise Surfacing is a slick drag.

On first listen, Mondo Bongo is even more outlandish, but a little application reveals a number of great tracks in a percussion-laden Afro-Carib style, delivered up in gonzo fashion by co-producer Tony Visconti. "Up All Night," "The Elephants Graveyard" and "Don't Talk to Me" are rollicking good fun, but "Mood Mambo" takes the genre detour too literally, and a totally unnecessary rewrite of an old Rolling Stones tune ("Under Their Thumb . . . Is Under My Thumb") adds to the record's shortcomings. Neither a triumph nor a disaster, Mondo Bongo is a halfbaked but entertaining digression. The Canadian-only Rat Tracks has a live cut, a remix of "Up All Night" and several otherwise UK-only obscurities: five tracks in all.

Total confusion as to the band's direction and frustration at the disinterest shown by the American audience may have been the reasons why Columbia tried to avoid releasing V Deep, opting instead for a 12-inch condensation of it. (The company eventually came around and issued the entire LP, including the EP's contents.) Although heavily stylized and partially overproduced, V Deep (the band's fifth LP and its first as a quintet, following the departure of guitarist Gerry Cott, who then released a couple of solo singles) contains some of the Rats' strangest songs, but also some of their most evocative and moving efforts. Geldof is at his driven best, and the band keeps pace in a number of styles (including an encore of Mondo Bongo's sound and a Dennis Bovell dub mix of one track) that don't neatly hang together, but paint the group in a most fascinating light. A fine album to be savored repeatedly.

After V Deep, the Rats dropped out for several years, prompting the US issue of Ratrospective, a mini-album containing "I Don't Like Mondays," "Up All Night," "Rat Trap" and three other familiar cuts. In late 1984, Geldof surfaced as the co-instigator of Band Aid, an all-star 45 fundraiser for Africa that inspired a wave of similar ventures throughout the music world. The band returned to action in early 1985 with a new single, followed several months later by an entire new album, In the Long Grass, which had actually been recorded in 1983 but initially rejected by their label. (The inner sleeve thanks people "For making an unbearable year tolerable . . .") The Rats look miserable and spent on the cover; the lyrics are unremittingly bitter, defiant and angry. Matching the verbal onslaught, the music is as dense and rugged as any they have ever made, yet uplifting in the band's stalwart refusal to buckle. An extraordinarily powerful record. (In an ironic final bit of tampering, Columbia forced the Rats to rewrite the lyrics of "Dave," a song on the UK LP, resulting in an entirely different vocal and title: "Rain.")

Later that year, Geldof organized the massive Live Aid charity concert telecast and was mooted for Nobel Prize consideration, but it hardly aided the Rats, who met 1986 without an American label and decided to call it quits. Acknowledging the group's demise and taking fair (and dignified) advantage of the attention Geldof had earned, Columbia expanded Ratrospective by four tracks and called it Greatest Hits, a fair compilation improved by Arthur Levy's enthusiastic liner notes. [i]

See also Bob Geldof.

DUKE BOOTEE

Bust Me Out (Mercury) 1984

Duke Bootee (Edward Fletcher, in his other life a Newark, NJ schoolteacher) is one of the unsung heroes of rap. As a member of the Sugar Hill label's extraordinary house band, he wrote the tune, "chorus" and half the raps for "The Message." Although that groundbreaking single came out under the name of Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five, the raps belong to Bootee and Melle Mel. The two paired up less successfully (and more formulaically) on "Message II" and "New York, New York," before Bootee rediscovered the urban claustrophobia groove on the title track of his solo LP. The album boasts aggressive playing and production from his old Sugar Hill friends, and the rap side (as opposed to the song side) smokes. [j1]

BOOTHILL FOOT-TAPPERS

Get Your Feet Out of My Shoes EP (nr/Gol Discs) 1984

Ain't That Far from Boothill (nr/Mercury) 1985

In yet another installment of "Musical Styles Traverse the Ocean," these seven rustic English lads and lassies play a charming and catchy version of old-timey folk (banjo, fiddle, guitar, washboard, accordion) on the wonderful title track of their five-song 12-inch. But it doesn't stop there: they also essay a soulful choral arrangement of Curtis Mayfield's "People Get Ready" and a rousing assault on Margaret Thatcher called "True Blues." The only duff item is the rushed, tuneless "Milk Train."

Unfortunately, the album makes a crime of eclecticism: the band dabbles in everything from ska to country-western, connecting emotionally with none of it. Flat, insipid production (mostly by Dick Cuthell) matches the performances' lack of spunk; the net result is a record without depth or charm. Even a new version of "Get Your Feet Out of My Shoes" sounds tedious and contrived. The Boothill Foot-Tappers disbanded at the end of 1985. [i]

BOOTSTRAPPERS

See fIREHOSE.

BOO-YAA T.R.I.B.E

New Funky Nation (4th & B'way) 1990 •

The "Six Bad Brothas" of Los Angeles' Boo-Yaa crew are, in fact, an imposing family of mean-looking Samoan-Americans named Devoux who sing and deliver tough gangster raps over a full band of live musicians. As a result of that innovation and the band's considerable abilities, New Funky Nation is an extraordinarily powerful and uncommon hip-hop LP, a rhythmic soul assault of horns, Boo-Yaa bass and violence-prone street rhymes that have an unsettling ring of truth.

[i]

BOREDOMS

Soul Discharge (Shimmy-Disc) 1990

This totally inexplicable noise band from Japan boasts six members: P-We YY, God Mama, Human Rich Vox Y, Hila Y, Eye Y and No. 1 Y. Soul Discharge, which contains such songs as "JB Dick + Tin Turner Pussy Badsmell" and "Bubblepop Shot," amounts to lumbering stop-start drums, distorted thrusts of bass and guitar, and people shrieking, chattering, yelling and groaning goodnaturedly. For a vague reference point, the Boredoms' essential notions fall somewhere between the Butthole Surfers, the B-52's and a band of bag ladies. You have been warned.

[i]

BORGHESIA

Love Is Colder Than Death (It. Materiali Sonori) 1985

Their Laws, Our Lives (It. Materiali Sonori) 1986

No Hope, No Fear EP (Play It Again Sam) 1987 •

Escorts And Models (Play It Again Sam) 1988 •

Resistance (Play It Again Sam) 1989 •

CLICK CLICK/BORGHESIA

Doublebill (Play It Again Sam) 1988

Understandably for a trio of sociology and philosophy students who began as a theater group, Borghesia's music is arty, grandiose and pretentious; however, as a band emerging from a repressed society (Yugoslavia) to create its own movement (the New Slovenian Art scene, along with Laibach), Borghesia is also intriguing and provocative.

Lacking Laibach's fascistic bent, Borghesia also uses symphonic keyboard arrangements and morbid beats to create a similar Teutonic and military feel. The group's early output is quite rare: cassette-only releases (including one, apparently, of purely classical music) and two European albums, Love Is Colder Than Death and Their Laws, Our Lives.

Borghesia's trans-Atlantic calling card, the No Hope, No Fear mini-album, presents a group whose classical background merges comfortably with a digital sensibility. Though certainly not easy listening, the six tracks are far more mainstream than might be expected of a group so far removed from the familiar environs of rock and pop.

Escorts and Models is far better. This collection of songs about the darker side of sex combines melodic vocals with spoken phrases (only partly in English), utilizes samples to excellent effect and embraces both funereal tempos ("Beat and Scream") and industrial disco ("A.P.R."). A tantalizing musical venture by any standards, it proves that, in their genre, Borghesia have the skills and creative tools to compete with the world's best.

Exposure to Western audiences through touring and (self-produced) videos resulted in the mutated 12-inch cover of Sonic Youth's "She Is Not Alone." Borghesia then returned to their own culture for Resistance, loosely an album of protest songs. Dropping the playful aspects of Escorts and Models, this venture is sinister through and through, an often unsettling voyage into the heart of totalitarianism. The beats pound ominously, the lyrics are direct and the choruses have a martial feel. While Borghesia is clearly capable of doing the commercial tango, Resistance is a battle with evil.

Doublebill is a joint 12-inch shared with England's Click Click: Borghesia's side consists of two mixes of "Naked Uniform Dead" (from Escorts) and two non-LP cuts.

[tf]

ADRIAN BORLAND AND THE CITIZENS

See Sound.

BOSS HOG

See Pussy Galore.

ANNE RICHMOND BOSTON

See Swimming Pool Q's.

BOUNTY HUNTERS

See Nikki Sudden.

DENNIS BOVELL

Brain Damage (nr/Fontana-Phonogram) 1981

BLACKBEARD

Strictly Dub Wize (nr/Tempus) 1978 (nr/Ballistic-UA) 1978

I Wah Dub (nr/More Cut-EMI) 1980

DENNIS BOVELL AND THE DUB BAND

Audio Active (Moving Target) 1986 •

Guitarist Dennis "Blackbeard" Bovell has long been a reggae musician and producer of high standing. (He co-founded Matumbi, defunct for several years now but still remembered as one of England's first and best self-contained reggae bands; try their Point of View LP on EMI America.) Bovell also happened to have been a school chum of white jazz-pop keyboardist Nick Straker and musician/producer Tony Mansfield (New Musik, Captain Sensible, etc.), with whom he maintained contact; such eclectic musical connections have enabled him to bring a fresh perspective to the production of early new wave bands like the Slits and the Pop Group.

This same eclecticism informs his dub LPs in conceptual outlook and willingness to take chances beyond the usual electronic overkill. Bovell creates strong instrumentals that are mainly written and arranged for dub; the catchy melody lines are dissected but not disintegrated. Strictly Dub Wize (mostly performed by Bovell, with some help from Matumbi and others) exhibits cleverness and humor by the bagful (one track even bases itself on "Surrey with the Fringe on Top"!).

I Wah Dub carries Bovell's creation of aurally pungent tracks infused with musical witticisms from merely excellent to brilliant. Aside from some drumming, the odd piano part here or melodica toot there, Bovell plays everything.

Brain Damage and Audio Active are also both consistently enjoyable, though less spectacular: neither uses much dub at all. The former adds a mixed bag of boogie-woogie, rock'n'roll and R&B to the reggae, and Bovell's homely but good-humored vocals adorn several tracks. (A bonus dub LP—all new tracks, similar to I Wah Dub, though not as engrossing—is included.) Good lightweight groove music, ideal for summer.

The later record—a band effort, including Straker and Matumbi's horn duo—is mostly vocal and almost all reggae. Surprisingly, the instrumental and dub tracks are less interesting than the vocal tunes; Bovell's songwriting has grown and his singing's matured. If Eddy Grant stuck to reggae for most of an LP it might sound like this. Durably likable, it goes by too darn fast—all ten tracks are between three and four minutes long.

[jg]

DAVID BOWIE

Man of Words/Man of Music (Mercury) 1969

The Man Who Sold the World (Mercury) 1970 (RCA)

1972 (Rykodisc) 1990 •

Hunky Dory (RCA) 1971 (Rykodisc) 1990 •

The Rise and Fall of Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders from

Mars (RCA) 1972 (Rykodisc) 1990 •

Space Oddity (RCA) 1972 (Rykodisc) 1990 •

Images 1966–1967 (London) 1973

Aladdin Sane (RCA) 1973 (Rykodisc) 1990 •

Pin-Ups (RCA) 1973 (Rykodisc) 1990 •

Diamond Dogs (RCA) 1974 (Rykodisc) 1990 •

David Live (RCA) 1974 (Rykodisc) 1990 •

Young Americans (RCA) 1975 (Rykodisc) 1991 •

Station to Station (RCA) 1976 (Rykodisc) 1991 •

Changesonebowie (RCA) 1976 •

Low (RCA) 1977 •

Starting Point (London) 1977

Heroes (RCA) 1977 •

Stage (RCA) 1978

Lodger (RCA) 1979 •

Scary Monsters (RCA) 1980 •

Changeswobowie (RCA) 1981 •

Let's Dance (EMI America) 1983 •

Golden Years (RCA) 1983 •

Tonight (EMI America) 1984 •

Fame and Fashion (RCA) 1984 •

Never Let Me Down (EMI America) 1987 •

Sound + Vision (Rykodisc) 1989 •

Changesbowie (Rykodisc) 1990 •

TIN MACHINE

Tin Machine (EMI) 1989 •

Throughout his lengthy career, David Bowie has worked in many widely disparate musical areas, and virtually all of them have proven enormously influential, even if sometimes it's taken years for the rest of the rock world to catch up with him. Nonetheless, the mercurial star continues to shift gears, styles and fashions almost as often as shirts and, by example, helps keep pop and rock developing and changing. (Unfortunately, long after he's abandoned some excessive dalliance or another, his camp followers trundle on, missing the ephemeral and transitory essence of Bowie's work.) Even if only as the source of unapproachably hip songs to cover, Bowie has played an essential role in glam-rock, new wave, post-punk, neo-soul, dance music, etc.

Although he actually began recording in the late '60s, we join the Bowie show in progress at the dawn of the '70s, when he dropped some of his more theatrical Anthony Newley affectations and got down to rock'n'roll cases (The discography omits some of the less significant compilations and repackages, as well as film soundtracks, collaborations, EPs and spoken-word records.)

The Man Who Sold the World begins Bowie's affair with guitar-heavy rock'n'roll, courtesy Mick Ronson. Tony Visconti's compressed production gives the album an utterly synthetic audio quality; few records this simply played sound as studio-created. In retrospect, the grim futurist imagery of "Saviour Machine," "The Supermen" and "Running Gun Blues" seems far more prescient than the thrilling but unadventurous band's music. Still, a shockingly strong debut for the electrified Bowie. (Besides illustrating the album's various covers, the Ryko reissue adds a previously unreleased track and the "Holy Holy" single from 1970, as well as both sides of the 1971 Arnold Corns single: early versions of "Moonage Daydream" and "Hang on to Yourself," both of which would get full play on Ziggy Stardust.)

Hunky Dory was a detour of sorts, briefly returning a seemingly innocent Bowie to his hippie-folkie-cabaret days for the catchy "Changes" and the obnoxiously precious "Kooks," plus such atypically direct tributes as "Song for Bob Dylan" and "Andy Warhol." But the album also contains the redemptive "Life on Mars," "Queen Bitch" and "Oh! You Pretty Things," all essential cornerstones in the burgeoning glam-sci-fi-decadence world Bowie was assembling. (The reissue adds an alternate mix of the album's "Bewlay Brothers" and a demo of its "Quicksand," as well as a second version of the previous LP's "Supermen" and an unreleased '71 song, "Bombers.")

Bowie began his fey alien role-playing in earnest on Ziggy Stardust, a classic rock'n'roll album. He introduces this new persona via the pseudo-biographical title track; otherwise, songs paint a weird portrait of an androgynous (but sexy) world ahead. Armed with supercharged guitar rock and truly artistic production (Bowie and Ken Scott), and mixing rock'n'roll stardom imagery with a more general Clockwork Orange outlook, the peerless set (including "Suffragette City," "Hang on to Yourself," "Rock'n'Roll Suicide" and "Moonage Daydream") outlines some of the concerns that underpinned a lot of rock songwriting in the '70s and '80s. (The reissue—also available in a deluxe edition with a slipcase and book of liner notes—adds demos of the title track and "Lady Stardust," the otherwise unreleased "Sweet Head," a '71 B-side, "Velvet Goldmine," and a remix of the 1972 single "John, I'm Only Dancing.")

Bowie's label then dredged up an oldie, reissuing 1969's lightweight Man of Words/Man of Music as Space Oddity (after the memorable lead-off track, but clearly in the hopes of cashing in on Ziggy's sci-fi content). The Ryko edition adds a 1970 B-side ("Conversation Piece") and a two-part single version, with Mick Ronson's first appearance, of the album's hippydippy "Memory of a Free Festival"). In another dose of déjà vu, an American corporate relative of Bowie's old UK label put together a two-disc set of even earlier recordings (primarily from the 1967 David Bowie LP), titling it Images 1966-1967. Years later, London condensed Images into the single-record Starting Point.

Having peaked so gloriously with a character that could not last indefinitely, Bowie adjusted Ziggy a bit on Aladdin Sane and came up with a weird set of tunes—some tremendous, some minor—and a distant, unpleasant left-field studio sound. "Panic in Detroit," "Watch That Man," "The Jean Genie" and "Drive-In Saturday" are some of his greatest songs, painting bleak pictures of detached existences, with cinematic strokes and killer riffs. Rather than singing about apocalypse, Bowie captures the barren feel of a dead world, and feeds it into the music. Aladdin Sane is also notable for allowing a serious crooner side to re-emerge—as on "Time," a foreshadow of future developments. That said, it must be noted that Bowie's revisionist cover of "Let's Spend the Night Together" is utterly misguided.

In a surprisingly guileless gesture, Bowie next made an all-covers album of songs by great mid-'60s English bands. Although not easily related creatively to Bowie's creative flow, Pin-Ups is a wonderful, loving tribute that contains generally ace renditions of classic but, in America at least, largely unknown songs by the Pretty Things, Pink Floyd, Them, Mojos, Merseys, Kinks, Yardbirds, Easybeats and Who. If nothing else, Bowie's reverent consideration helped give the songs and artists much-deserved cachet in the new rock world. (The Rykodisc edition adds two worthless items: a previously unissued rendition of Bruce Springsteen's "Growing Up" and a drippy version of a Jacques Brel/Mort Shuman composition—"Port of Amsterdam"—that had been used as a B-side.)

Bowie then jettisoned his band and drafted a new bunch of sidemen to further explore his trendily somber vision of a doomed future on Diamond Dogs. Although the LP contains one of Bowie's most incredible and concise songs—"Rebel Rebel," perfectly describing his followers and their role in the new society—and such significant items as "1984" and "Rock 'n Roll with Me," it also has a pompously overblown and underdeveloped concept. In retrospect, Diamond Dogs isn't so bad, but it does suffer significantly from eccentric, seemingly unfinished, production and strident sound. The 1990 reissue addresses the latter concern with much-improved remastering, unexpurgates the cover painting to its intended form and adds two tracks: an intricate demo of the album's "Candidate" and 1973's previously unreleased soul stomp "Dodo."

Bowie's first concert record, the two-record David Live, was recorded in Philadelphia at two 1974 shows with a ten-piece band featuring guitarist Earl Slick. Featuring a fine song selection broadly drawn from the preceding albums, the program also includes renditions of the Stax classic "Knock on Wood" and "All the Young Dudes," a song Bowie had graciously given Mott the Hoople. The reissue adds "Time" and "Here Today, Gone Tomorrow."

Dropping his gimmicky costumes, Bowie donned a fine suit and made Young Americans, an album mainly composed of phony (but pleasant) Philadelphia soul/rock mixed with other oddities, like a truly awful collaboration with John Lennon, "Fame." It took five years for the British new wave, finally bereft of their own new ideas, to ape Bowie and start reflecting African-American idioms into their work.

Following that brief infatuation, Bowie launched an experimental phase that directly influenced far more bands, especially the "new romantics" and arty minimalists. Station to Station is a strangely impersonal mixture of chilly show ballads, techno-pop and whatever was passing for disco that year. The album features the hit "Golden Years," but also the experimental and challenging "TVC15." It also marked the beginning of Bowie's artistic distance from his former rock-idol role.

That trend was formally instigated with Low, on which Bowie arranged to co-opt the modernistic sensibility of Brian Eno (his collaborator on three consecutive studio LPs) and present a selection of tracks that are not so much songs as word-paintings or, in many cases, simply mood pieces. Moving from the grandiosity of Young Americans to the art-noise sketches here, Bowie took heart from intellectual, bare-bones rock bands like Wire and, in turn, helped legitimize and promote such spartan stylings.

As the follow-up to Low, Heroes has slightly fleshier production, though nearly one full side is comprised of whizzing synthesizers and amorphous textural noodling. Robert Fripp contributes lead guitar, and his presence adds a bit of sinew to the overall sound, something lacking in the less-forceful Low. The album leans heavily on chilly, European affectations (with a large debt owed to Kraftwerk), but also has room for a genuine and spectacular pop single, the atmospheric, concertedly European title track (also released in French and German).

Bowie's second double-live LP, Stage, features a Carlos Alomar/Adrian Belew guitar lineup and includes hits ("Ziggy Stardust," "Fame") as well as Eno-era album tracks ("Warszawa," "Beauty and the Beast").

Lodger, the third installment of the Bowie-Eno trilogy, finds Bowie drifting back into a solid song-oriented context. Though much of the material seems to be stream-of-consciousness, there are a couple of pure poppers, such as "D.J." and "Boys Keep Swinging," that recall a more commercial time. Also of interest is Bowie's version of "Sister Moonlight," rewritten as "Red Money."

Scary Monsters is Bowie's most consistent LP since the pre-Low period, a culmination of the styles that had been showcased individually on previous discs. The tone is up-front, a confrontation with the real world of alienation Bowie always ascribed to his fictional settings. Scary Monsters contains two soon-to-be standards: "Ashes to Ashes" and "Fashion."

Having tired of years of acclaim matched with only sporadic, middling glimmers of the kind of success that superstars are supposed to enjoy, Bowie changed labels and made Let's Dance, a calculated effort (with the production assistance of Nile Rodgers) to get in step with the sound of today, rather than tomorrow or yesterday, his usual habitats. Not surprisingly, Bowie succeeds at whatever he sets his mind to, and the record was a worldwide smash. "Let's Dance," "Modern Love" and "China Girl" may not be the Thin White Duke's finest creations, but they do hit a solid compromise between art and commerce, and don't harm his reputation nearly as much as expand his audience (and bank balance).

Several years later, Bowie regained the rights to his back catalogue and attempted to arrange for his entire oeuvre to be reissued by his new label. The plan backfired, and all of the RCA albums—on vinyl, tape and CD—went out of print. Fortunately, Bowie was able to strike a deal that led to a full-scale, top-notch reissue program, beginning in 1989 with the extraordinary Sound + Vision boxed set, a beautifully appointed collection of classics, obscurities, previously unissued outtakes, 1972 concert recordings, etc. Except for the inclusion of too many tracks from the live albums, this is a monumental and fascinating way to rediscover Bowie.

After a mega-tour to consolidate the album's huge success, Bowie banged out Tonight, a casual, smug cookie-cutter job geared for easy chart ascent. (What other recording challenges are left for Bowie? He's tried self-indulgent art and go-for-the-jugular commercialism, scoring just what he wanted on both fronts.) In its losing defense, the album does include a duet with Tina Turner and a remarkably swell pop hit, "Jazzin' for Blue Jean," that recalls far earlier times in his career.

The styleless Never Let Me Down was released to general indifference and critical derision. Although this casual loud-rock outing—Peter Frampton and Carlos Alomar share guitar responsibilities with Bowie—seems on first blush to be slapdash and slight, the first side is actually quite good, offering provocative pop-culture lyrics delivered with first-take enthusiasm and carefree backing. "Day-In Day-Out" is silly but charming in its way; the verses' catchy ticktock pop on "Beat of Your Drum" makes it resemble a Cars song; the Lennonish title track is equally weird and likable. Bowie has rarely sounded so unconcerned and relaxed. The inferior second side starts off with the subsequent tour's fantasy-land nonsense theme song ("Glass Spider") and ends with Iggy's "Bang Bang," a cute digression in keeping with the record's flip attitude.

After that fiasco, Bowie went off and formed a collaborative modern-rock quartet with guitarist Reeves Gabrels and the fraternal rhythm section of Hunt and Tony Sales. Taking pages from Bowie's loose-sounding work with Iggy as well as Diamond Dogs, Tin Machine's first album (a follow-up was reportedly recorded in late '89 but still not released by early '91) is loud and blunt—occasionally a bit brutish—with provocative songs that are credible but (with the exception of "Baby Can Dance" and "Crack City") not especially memorable. While the results of the experiment are equivocal and it's hardly a significant item in Bowie's catalogue, as a noisy and exciting rock album, Tin Machine is better than most.

The Changesonebowie compilation covers a lot of stylistic ground in eleven tracks: from "Space Oddity" and "Changes" to "Rebel Rebel" and "Golden Years." Changestwobowie is weaker, but still has such amazing tracks as "Sound and Vision," "Starman," "D.J." and "1984." The eighteen-track Changes-bowie, issued to coincide with the 1990 greatest-hits tour, includes all of the first Changes LP (replacing the original "Fame" with a remix), adds "Fashion" and "Ashes to Ashes" from the second, and then tops it off with such tunes as "Heroes," "Let's Dance," "China Girl," "Modern Love" and "Blue Jean." Fame and Fashion—drawing only from RCA albums—straddles all three, with a half-dozen or so in common with each and only one song ("TVC15") that doesn't appear on any of the others. The pointless and unnecessary Golden Years repeats Fame and Fashion's "Fashion," "Golden Years" and "Ashes to Ashes," but also contains things like "Joe the Lion," "Wild Is the Wind" and "Scary Monsters." [jw/1]

See also Adrian Belew, Iggy Pop, Lou Reed.

BOW WOW WOW

Your Cassette Pet [tape] (nr/EMI) 1980

See Jungle! See Jungle! Go Join Your Gang Yeah! City All Over, Go Ape Crazy (RCA) 1981

The Last of the Mohicans EP (RCA) 1982

I Want Candy (RCA) 1982

Twelve Original Recordings (Harvest) 1982

When the Going Gets Tough the Tough Get Going (RCA) 1983

The Best of Bow Wow Wow (nr/Receiver) 1989 •

ANNABELLA

Fever (RCA) 1986 •

Bow Wow Wow may have been easily dismissed by some as rock entrepreneur Malcolm McLaren's creation, but the band deserved better. Combining musicians lured away from Adam and the Ants (with whom McLaren had briefly worked) and fifteen-year-old singer Annabella Lwin, the ever-provocative McLaren formed the band, launching their career via a 45, "C-30, C-60, C-90 Go," which espoused the virtues of home taping at a time when the band's record company (and virtually all others) were beginning to bitterly oppose it. True to McLaren's precepts (although it should be noted that tapes at that time were not as commonly copied as discs), Your Cassette Pet is a tape-only collection of eight songs. Except for "I Want My Baby on Mars" and a painful rendition of "Fools Rush In," the material is marked by Annabella's breathless ranting and incessant drumming style "borrowed" from the African Burundi tribe. The results are cheerful if smarmy.

The first full-length album, See Jungle! See Jungle!, isn't as wound up as Cassette Pet, but does show artistic growth. By downplaying the leering football chants, Bow Wow Wow is able to investigate subtler lyrics and rhythms. And fueled by drummer Dave Barbarossa, they pack quite a wallop.

Last of the Mohicans is a four-song EP whose producer (Kenny Laguna, of Joan Jett fame) and lead-off track (the Strangeloves' "I Want Candy") were chosen presumably for their American commercial potential. If nothing else, the sound is cleaner than before.

The discographical plot thickens with I Want Candy, released in two distinctly different versions. The American LP is comprised of the Mohicans EP, four tracks from See Jungle! (three of them remixed) and two new cuts. The UK album of the same title makes Your Cassette Pet available on vinyl, except for "Louis Quatorze." It also includes a few British single sides and the US-only EP, with its re-recorded "Louis Quatorze." Got that?

Not to be outdone, EMI's American affiliate issued Twelve Original Recordings. This is essentially the British I Want Candy LP minus several tracks. Pay your money and take your choice.

McLaren and Bow Wow Wow parted company in 1982 and the all-new When the Going Gets Tough was recorded free of his machinations. On their final album, Bow Wow Wow delivered much the same musical barrage as before, but without any of the propagandistic pretense. The band subsequently ejected Annabella and regrouped as the Chiefs of Relief. The Best of Bow Wow Wow neatly compresses Bow Wow Wow's entire career—with hits and album selections from Your Cassette Pet through When the Going Gets Tough—onto a single sixteen-track album.

Having outgrown her traumatic youth, Annabella's solo album is basically high-gloss rubbish, despite the efforts of six very different producers (including Slade's Jim Lea, hip-hop heavy John Robie and Zeus B. Held). It's not that Annabella can't sing, it's just that she's foundering here without purpose or personality. Even a cover of Alice Cooper's "School's Out" goes appallingly wrong. [si/i]

See also Adam and the Ants, Chiefs of Relief

BOX

The Box EP (nr/Gol Discs) 1983

Secrets Out (nr/Gol Discs) 1983

Great Moments in Big Slam (nr/Gol Discs) 1984

Muscle In EP (nr/Doublevision) 1985

Muscle Out (nr/Rough Trade) 1985

One of the few bands capable of effectively combining the spontaneity and musicianship of jazz with the urgency and rough-edged sound of rock, the Box were a five-piece spin-off from Sheffield industrial funksters Clock DVA. Comparisons to Captain Beefheart, Gang of Four, the Minutemen and Ornette Coleman are all appropriate; execution is first-rate (especially by ex-Clocks Paul Widger on guitar and saxophonist Charlie Collins), the material frantic.

The Box EP contains five manic cuts, setting instruments on wild collision courses behind Peter Hope's vocals. Secrets Out improves on that formula by injecting unexpected subtleties and an underlying murkiness that give even more impact to the hyperactive guitar/sax counterpoint. A solid, frenzied album guaranteed to keep listeners on their toes.

Great Moments in Big Slam, however, is quite a letdown. The pace is slower and the band really doesn't get a chance to cut loose, but that's not the problem so much as the heavy-handed percussion and grossly exaggerated vocals which dominate the production. After releasing the Muscle In EP, the Box announced a trial separation to pursue other projects. The posthumous Muscle Out was recorded live at the Leadmill in Sheffield. [dgs]

See also Cabaret Voltaire.

BOY GEORGE

Sold (Virgin) 1987 •

Tense Nervous Headache (nr/Virgin) 1988 •

Boyfriend (Ger. Virgin) 1989 •

High Hat (Virgin) 1989 •

The Martyr Mantras (Virgin) 1991 •

Following Culture Club's dissolution—not to mention a public bout with drug addiction and a series of lurid and tragic tabloid scandals—formerly flamboyant frontman Boy George (O'Dowd) attempted to resume his career but could only come up with the wretched Sold. Away from his former bandmates, George and Club producer Stewart Levine whipped up a forgettable, overblown concoction possessing none of the flair of the band's better work. Indicative of the Boy's total creative bewilderment, the album's dubious high point is an absurd reggaeified version of Bread's "Everything I Own" (styled after a Ken Boothe rendition which topped the British charts in 1974).

The singer's next American album, stitched together from two overseas releases (one of which didn't even come out in England), finally appeared as High Hat. Under any title, it's slick, assembly-line R&B with nary a shred of personality. How odd that a performer who built a huge career on stylized outrage should end up making music this anonymous. Four tracks produced by former Prince drummer Bobby Z (including the almost-successful tortured-diva move "Whisper") show a bit more musical and lyrical character but, in this context, that's not saying much.

The Martyr Mantras, a dance-oriented compilation of non-LP singles and newer tracks recorded with a variety of producers (including one collaboration with ex-Culture Club confrère Jon Moss), is a significant improvement. Though most of the material is more functional than inspired, the uncluttered extended dance-mix settings allow George to deliver some genuinely soulful vocal performances, particularly on the disco number "Generations of Love" (included in two versions) and the ballad "One on One." Of equal note is the return of his sociopolitical conscience on "No Clause 28," an effective and good-humored anti-oppression rant.

See also Culture Club. [i/hd]

BOYS

The Boys (nr/NEMS) 1977 (nr/Link Classics) 1990 •

Alternative Chartbusters (nr/NEMS) 1978 (nr/Link Classics) 1990 •

To Hell with the Boys (nr/Safari) 1979

Boys Only (nr/Safari) 1980

YOBS

The Yobs Christmas Album (nr/Safari) 1980 (nr/Great Expectations) 1989 •

Too unseriously pop-minded for the punks and too punky for the power-poppers, well received nearly everywhere in Europe except at home in England, beset with label woes in the UK and name confusion in the US, the star-crossed Boys were perennially in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Norwegian expatriate Casino Steel (the band's keyboard player and co-writer of much of their first three albums) was already a veteran of this sort of thing, having been a member of the Hollywood Brats, a London glitter band styled after the New York Dolls.

The Boys' first album is an inconsistent (if promising) mélange of Steel's Bratism, standard punkarama and the stirrings of a Beatle (and other pop) influence. Alternative Chartbusters, though, presents infectious rocking tunes played with irreverent élan, featuring Duncan "Kid" Reid's engagingly adolescent readings of the mostly humorous lyrics (often, as on To Hell with the Boys, playing the punk schlemiel), culminating in a pair of classic pop-punk singles, "Brickfield Nights" and "First Time." The third album (recorded in the tiny Norwegian town of the punny title) delivers more of the same, but with slicker and fuller sound—organ in addition to piano, more dual guitars—and more variety. Sadly, reverses (among them, Steel's deportation) took their toll, and the Boys, as a quartet, made a fourth album that's flatter than stale soda.

Under a not-very-obscure pseudonym, the Boys recorded an LP of Yuletide favorites (plus their own seasonal compositions) in various variations on pop-punk, sometimes just cute, but mostly skipping irreverence and heading straight for sheer tastelessness, e.g., "Silent Night" by Nazi-punks and "Twelve Days of Christmas" translated by "Or" brigands into locker-room scatology. Subsequently, Boys guitarist Honest John Plain cut an LP, New Guitars in Town, with Lurker Pete Stride, supported by other members of both bands, who had formed an alliance of sorts. [jg]

See also Lurkers.

BOYS NEXT DOOR

See Birthday Party.

BPEOPLE

See Alex Gibson.

BRADFORD

Shouting Quietly (Sire) 1990 ●

Bradford's Ian H. is a talented chap. He writes better-than-average melodic pop-rock songs (mostly about life and love in northern England), his lyrics display a wit and verbal ability worthy of Elvis Costello and he sings them in a way that'll remind you a lot of Morrissey (Bradford comes from a Manchester suburb, not the nearby town for which the group is named, and were discovered by producer Stephen Street—who did the honors here—opening a show for Morrissey). So why isn't Shouting Quietly a better album? Consider the title. The record is just too low-key for its own good; the band never delivers the punch to make the songs involving. These days, shouting quietly just may not be enough. [ds]

BILLY BRAGG

Life's a Riot with Spy vs. Spy (nr/Utility) 1983
(nr/Utility-Gol Discs) 1983

Brewing Up with Billy Bragg (CD Presents) 1984

Between the Wars EP (nr/Gol Discs) 1985

Life's a Riot Etc (CD Presents) 1985

"Days Like These" EP (nr/Gol Discs) 1985

Talking with the Taxman About Poetry (Gol Discs-Elektra) 1986 ●

Back to Basics (Gol Discs-Elektra) 1987 ●

The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1987 ●

Help Save the Youth of America EP (Gol Discs-Elektra) 1988 ●

Workers Playtime (Gol Discs-Elektra) 1988 ●

The Internationale (Utility-Elektra) 1990 ♠

Playing a solitary electric guitar and singing his pithy compositions in a gruff voice, Billy Bragg reintroduced the essence of folksinging—not the superficial trap-pings, but the deep-down Woody Guthrie activist/adventurer archetype—to the modern rock world.

Although his tools are utterly simple, Bragg is capable of enormous strength and depth in his writing and performing, spinning off touching, warm love songs as well as trenchant social satire and socialist political commentary.

On the seven tracks of Life's a Riot (recorded originally as songwriting demos), Bragg waxes tender ("The Milkman of Human Kindness"), bitter ("A New England") and sarcastic ("The Busy Girl Buys Beauty"), keeping things blunt and one-take spartan, making it an ultimate no-frills pop record. Combining the wordplay wit and strong emotions of Elvis Costello with the grumpy melodic charm of Paul Weller, it's a small, articulate masterpiece.

Brewing Up, a relatively ambitious full-length undertaking with a tiny bit of organ and trumpet (not to mention—gasp!—overdubbed guitars and vocals), finds Bragg retaining all of his rugged pop appeal while sharpening his pen. The songs focus on romance, offering nervous but perceptive angles on love and lust ("Love Gets Dangerous," "The Saturday Boy," "A Lover Sings"). He also shreds Fleet Street journalism with "It Says Here."

Bragg then turned his attentions to another traditional subject for angry young men with guitars: politics. He's done countless benefit concerts, played in Communist countries and, via Red Wedge, the musicians' organization he helped found, campaigned for the Labour Party. Between the Wars, an extraordinarily powerful 7-inch EP, is Bragg at his finest, singing of England's peacetime recessions ("Between the Wars"), chronicling a 17th century rebellion ("The World Turned Upside Down") and reviving the 1940s union classic, "Which Side Are You On."

"Days Like These," a subsequent three-song single, shows Bragg's deepening commitment to socialist political activities. This latter-day Woody Guthrie belts out sincere (if occasionally awkward) constructs like "I see no shame in putting my name to socialism's cause/Nor to seek some more relevance than spotlight and applause."

Talking with the Taxman About Poetry ("the difficult third album") is a great leap forward, the deft application of understated instrumental accompaniment on some of Bragg's best-ever songs. "Greetings to the New Brunette" (widely known as "Shirley") is an airy love song with serious underpinnings; "Levi Stubbs' Tears" tells chillingly of a tragic couple, colored with a touch of flugelhorn, trumpet and percussion; "Ideology" consciously paraphrases Dylan's "Chimes of Freedom" for a scathing look at the old-boy buddy club of British government; rinky-tink piano provides the setting for "Honey, I'm a Big Boy Now," a sharp-eyed appraisal of marital failure; "Help Save the Youth of America" is a powerful—and not ill-considered—indictment from abroad. The only false step is a cover of the Count Bishops' tuneless "Train Train," which interrupts the flow of Side One.

Subtitled "live and dubious," the 1988 EP, issued to coincide with an American tour, contains four live recordings (including the title track, captured in Moscow, complete with translated intro), "There Is Power in a Union," done bluegrass style with accompaniment by the Pattersons, an alternate studio version of "Days Like These" and a leaflet promoting voter registration and electoral responsibility. Life's a Riot Etc is a handy American-only release that combines all of the first mini-album with Between the Wars for a Bragg then-and-now extravaganza, complete with lyric sheet. Back to Basics goes that effort one better by putting Life's a Riot, Between the Wars and Brewing Up on two discs, billed as "the first 21 songs from the roots of urbane folk music." The Peel Sessions EP was recorded live in 1983 for radio broadcast and contains renditions of "A New England," "Love Gets Dangerous," John Cale's "Fear" and a hilarious Britain-specific exploration of "Route 66."

On the Costello-esque Workers Playtime, veteran folk-rock producer Joe Boyd stretches Bragg's sonic palette, setting that undisguisable voice and irrepressible wit into utterly appealing frames without undermining his homespun integrity. (Frequent sidewoman pianist Cara Tivey again plays a major role.) Although Bragg's political consciousness is such that the proletarian Chinese art cover absurdly carries the slogan, "Capitalism is killing music," most of these excellent new creations ("She's Got a New Spell," "The Price I Pay," "Life with the Lions") are about the ups and downs of personal affairs. When he mentions Marx in "The Short Answer," a truly beautiful love song, it's only to locate Mary in the dictionary. Indicative of Bragg's unpretentious maturity, the cynical "Waiting for the Great Leap Forwards" (which invokes Camelot and Castro, and quotes Mott the Hoople to boot) offers this sardonic couplet: "Mixing pop and politics he asks me what the use is/I offer him embarrassment and my usual excuses."

No such self-effacement troubles Bragg on The Internationale, a well-meaning but misbegotten seven-song collection of left-wing anthems and Bragg's own dubious contributions to the genre. An a cappella tribute to Phil Ochs that rewrites "I Dreamed I Saw Joe Hill Last Night" is a sanctimonious embarrassment, and Bragg's ambitiously orchestrated rendition of "The Internationale" is neither impressive nor amusing. Likewise, the tra-la-la merriment with which Bragg sings "The Marching Song of the Covert Battalions," his ode against imperialism, fails to achieve the desired ironic effect. [i]

BRIAN BRAIN

Unexpected Noises (nr/Secret) 1980

Fun with Music! EP (Plaid) 1985

Time Flies When You're Having Toast (Moving Target) 1987 •

Although Brain—or, more accurately, Martin Atkins—was the drummer in Public Image for a time (more recently he's toured with Ministry), his solo career has taken a much less dour direction. So while Unexpected Noises—mostly his own work—is of little consequence, at least it attempts to be anarchic and funny rather than anarchic and glum. Biggest problem here is the poor production, which leaves the sound muddled and flat.

Five years later, Atkins emerged from a period of inactivity and returned to the concert circuit and vinyl world in Brian Brain (the Group), an outfit including original Go-Go's bassist Margot Olavarria. Fun with Music! is a four-song 12-inch recorded in New York.

Brain's body may be in America (the cut-up tribal chant of "U.S.A." is a jaundiced cultural appraisal) but his brain is on clean living: two numbers pitch anti-drug-use messages. Interestingly, the ex-PiLer does a song called "Happy?" two years before the album of that name.

The subsequent Time Flies album (which sounds a bit like a modernized cross between Captain Sensible and John Otway) reprises a pair of songs from the EP and adds eight more, all recorded with Olavarria, guitarist Geoff Smyth and others. The rhythm-heavy hip-hop/massed-drums tracks—with jungle ambience, found sounds and other sonic ephemera keeping things appropriately offbeat—are a bit short on melody, but not concept or wit. Atkins isn't a great singer, but he has a lively mind and an absurdist outlook to keep things stimulating even when the music drags. [i]

See also Ministry, Public Image Ltd.

BRAINS

The Brains (Mercury) 1980

Electronic Eden (Mercury) 1981

Dancing Under Streetlights EP (Landslide) 1982

The Brains' story is typical of many independent bands who signed to not-so-swift big labels. Led by lanky Tom Gray, this Atlanta-based quartet first garnered widespread attention with a striking homemade single, "Money Changes Everything." The Brains subsequently recorded two LPs for Mercury, but neither sold a speck. Following a divorce by mutual consent, the group returned, poorer and wiser, to the independent label scene.

On both albums, producer Steve Lillywhite concocts a thick, heavy sound that subjugates Gray's synthesizers and Rick Price's aggressive guitars to the tunes themselves. And for good reason: Gray's songs are tart accounts of love and confusion perfectly suited to his dry, sardonic voice. The Brains offer a rougher and less glib variant of the Cars' ironic sensibility, which is probably why they never achieved widespread popularity. Gray and crew unsettle rather than divert.

The Brains includes a re-recording of the cynical "Money Changes Everything" and "Gold Dust Kids," a pithy, unsentimental portrait of decadence. Electronic Eden features the bitter romanticism of "Heart in the Street," covered (badly) by Manfred Mann and "Collision," a humorously tasteless look at a brain-damaged car-crash survivor.

The four-song EP is more of the same intense longing and hidden passion. If the Brains sound a bit weary, chalk it up to the record biz blues. Dancing Under Streetlights isn't the best starting point, but it's a worthy continuation. The Brains have since disbanded. (As an undoubtedly lucrative footnote, Cyndi Lauper covered "Money Changes Everything" on her first LP.) [jy]

GLENN BRANCA

Lesson No. 1 (99) 1980

The Ascension (99) 1981

Symphony No. 1 (Tonal Plexus) [tape] (ROIR) 1983

Symphony No. 3/Gloria (Neutral) 1983

Symphony No. 6 (Devil Choirs at the Gates of Heaven) (Blast First) 1989 •

GLENN BRANCA/JOHN GIORNO

Who You Staring At? (Giorno Poetry Systems) 1982

Many artists have had their music described as a wall of sound, but few have deserved it as much as New York composer/guitarist Glenn Branca. One of the first to realize that a classical-rock fusion need not involve technique-crazed keyboardists soloing away to the accompaniment of rehashed Brahms or Stravinsky, Branca writes music of orchestral richness that retains—intact—all of rock's danger, urgency and impact.

With his roots in the downtown no-wave movement of the late '70s, Branca's Lesson No. 1 was the first release on the influential 99 label. Slow, repetitive harmonic changes and hidden sub-motifs invite comparisons to minimalists like Philip Glass, but Branca's music is more dissonant, primitive and—above all—loud.

The Ascension is the closest he's ever come to an out-and-out rock album. Atop pulverizing bass/drum combinations, Branca and three other guitarists build a thick, layered mass of shifting textures, sometimes all on one chord, sometimes in a dense cacophony of six-string clusters. Suffice to say, it packs quite a wallop.

Branca's side of the joint disc with poet John Giorno is music commissioned for a dance piece (Bad Smells) by Twyla Tharp. Except for very brief sections of quiet, most of it is resembles The Ascension.

Only three of Branca's seven symphonies have been recorded and released commercially so far, but that's the format in which he is most effective. Played by large ensembles, the pieces incorporate a plethora of amplified instruments of his own design (primarily dulcimer-like things strung with steel wire and hammered with mallets) in addition to guitars, horns and a battery of percussion. He builds intense drones and ear-shattering crescendos while exploring the sonic possibilities of large tonal clusters and the resultant overtones. Symphony No. 1 alternates between one relentless, thundering chord and primal rhythmic pounding. As instrumental layers build, overtones clash to produce melodies of their own, and can even trick the listener into hearing instruments that aren't there. Symphony No. 3 adds homemade keyboards, giving an orchestral and almost Oriental sound to the piece—delicacy amidst the thunder. Both recordings are hindered in that it is impossible to capture the full effect of his live performances, where the volume generally runs around wake-the-dead level.

After a long recording hiatus, Branca's Symphony No. 6 (subtitled Devil Choirs at the Gates of Heaven) was released in 1989. Maybe an ear specialist suggested he turn things down a notch; several of the old ideas are in effect, but volume levels, compositional techniques and textures are much more varied than on previous works. No fewer than ten guitarists, ranging from Swans/Of Cabbages and Kings bassist Algis Kizys to conservatory-trained classicists, plug away at a million and one riffs, leaving space for fairly prominent keyboard parts. Branca doesn't renounce volume, but he arrives at it by way of crescendos rather than instant deafness. [dgs]

BRAND NUBIAN

One for All (Elektra) 1990 •

MASTERS OF CEREMONY

Dynamite (4th & B'way) 1988 •

Mixing delightful daisy-age soul, funk and go-go grooves with engaging rapid-fire rapping, this exceptionally talented New Rochelle, New York trio provides a nearly irresistible setting for its promotion of the Five-Percent Nation's bizarre Islamic racism. Some of the articulate tracks on the self-produced One for All push a positive message of education, self-preservation and peace, but others are loaded with the usual cryptic references to obscure religious beliefs that can run the party for nonbelievers.

Before forming Brand Nubian, rapper/producer Grand Puba Maxwell (Dixon) led the non-religious Masters of Ceremony. Dynamite displays some promising signs of life in some of the grooves (like the title track and the deconstructed PE style of "Rock Steady"), but most of the lyrics are pretty pedestrian. [i]

BRAVE COMBO

Music for Squares (Four Dots) 1981

World Dance Music (Four Dots) 1984

No Sad Faces (Four Dots) 1985

People Are Strange EP (Rogue) 1986

Musical Varieties (Rounder) 1987 •

Polkatharsis (Rounder) 1987 •

Humansville (Rounder) 1988 •

A Night on Earth (Rounder) 1990 •

Formed by Denton, Texas homeboy Carl Finch in 1979, Brave Combo are witty and wise purveyors (and perverters) of polkas and musics of many nations. A highly successful tour of local mental institutions honed their chops, and each record reveals an ever-more-adventurous and itinerant package of sounds. By exploring and exploiting the least hip music on god's green earth—the polka—Finch and Co. demonstrate that everything most people know about pop music is wrong.

The aptly titled debut album, Music for Squares, finds them grinding out polka, cha-cha, twist, waltz and tango standards and originals with rockish energy. On World Dance Music they began to take rock standards, such as the Doors' "People Are Strange," and twist them into weird ethnic shapes (such as the Romanian hora). You'll hear an African-ska version of a Perez Prado hit, as well as the usual assortment of cumbias, norteñas, schottisches and, of course, polkas. "If we missed your part of the world," suggests the cover, "please check future releases."

The live No Sad Faces contains an unforgettable "In-a-Gadda-Da-Vida," a cha-cha version of "O Holy Night," a ska take on "Little Bit of Soul" and much more. The Musical Varieties compilation is an excellently produced and generous introduction to the band which sets the stage for Polkatharsis, the Combo's brave return to its roots. They play hardball with eleven polkas—from "Happy Wanderer" to "Who Stole the Kishka"—on this all-trad collection, adding a couple of sweet waltzes and a schottische.

Like their European (conceptual) cousins 3 Mustaphas 3, the Combo has evolved from being merely a good joke into a fine band. On Humansville, the playing is tighter, the originals are serious (space is important, money isn't everything) and the conceits seem less forced. That's maturity for you.

Guaranteeing plenty of smiles, A Night on Earth follows the Brave Combo on another delightfully capricious stylistic smorgasbord (in English, Spanish and instrumental Italian) of witty originals (like the anti-complacency "Do Something Different") and a smooth cover of "Hey There" (Rosemary Clooney et al.). Imagine what might happen if these guys made a record with Kid Creole . . . [rg/i]

BREAKING CIRCUS

The Very Long Fuse (Homestead) 1985

The Ice Machine (Homestead) 1987

Smokers' Paradise EP (Homestead) 1987

BIG TROUBLE HOUSE

Afghanistan (Horse Latitudes) 1989

Mouthful of Violence (Horse Latitudes-Community 3)

1990 φ

Breaking Circus began as a vehicle for Steve Björklund, veteran of the '80-'83 Chicago punk explosion (as a member of the seminal Strike Under and, later, Terminal Beach). The eight-song 45 rpm Very Long Fuse is terse, post-punk vitriol set to a banging dance-beat drum machine. "The Imperial Clawmasters' Theme" and "Precision" are sharp, jagged and guitar-powered, unique for such dancefloor bop. (The closest stylistic reference is the Three Johns, whose songs Breaking Circus have played live.)

Björklund then relocated to Minneapolis and put together a more stable band-type environment, borrowing the rhythm section of Rifle Sport when that group isn't working. The Ice Machine contains sinister and methodical blows like "Song of the South," "Ancient Axes" and "Took a Hammering." Trading fire for poisoned darts, Ice Machine gets under the skin with repeated listenings.

Smokers' Paradise offers similar fare (complete with another imposing hammer adorning the cover), only better. The instrumental title track adds smoky, ghostly acoustic and tiptoeing piano, a walk through a haunted graveyard; the trademark saber-toothed guitars on "Eat Lead" and "Three Cool Cats" (not the 1959 Coasters hit) are equally hair-raising. An eerie and innovative pleasure.

Although the group split around '88, Björklund has since used the Breaking Circus name to release a solo single of Naked Raygun and U.K. Subs covers done as electro-pop. While the rhythm section continues on in Rifle Sport, second guitarist Phil Harder formed Big Trouble House, a trio in which his vocals lean more towards Steve Albini than Björklund; with constant tempo changes, Afghanistan's overall feel is less spooky and more meandering than Breaking Circus. A somewhat formative effort, this interesting and generally good album was largely overshadowed by the excellent "Watered Down" single (produced by Albini) that followed in '90.

Though as haphazard and as woefully inconsistent as its predecessor, Mouthful of Violence is indeed an improvement. With meatier production by Albert Garzon, the more succinct songs (like "Union Feed Grain Mill") show Big Trouble House capable of a rocking edge and intensity that compares favorably to the Did-jits. The CD also includes "Watered Down," an unreleased track and, for some reason, four tracks from Afghanistan. [r]

BREEDERS

Pod (4AD) 1990 •

In this appealing side-project supergroup, Kim Deal (the Pixies bassist, here playing guitar) and guitarist Tanya Donnelly of Throwing Muses are joined by bassist Josephine Wiggs (who left the Perfect Disaster soon after) and drummer Britt Walford (using the pseudonym Shannon Doughton) of Slint. Everybody sings. Deal, responsible for such Pixies highlights as "Gigantic" and "Silver," wrote most of Pod, the sound of which (as "engineered" by Steve Albini) favors the Pixies far more than the gentler Muses. Side One's a bit shaky, saved by a wry remake of "Happiness Is a Warm Gun" and Deal's blazing "Hellbound" (describing an aborted fetus that survives). But the second half of the album is damn near perfect, kicking off with the scrumptious lilting pop of "Fortunately Gone," churning through "Iris" (a wrenching account, with majestic guitars, of menstruation) and on to the intoxicating magical-realism of "Opened," the frankly sexual "Only in 3's" and Wiggs' Wire-y mutterings on "Metal Man." [ws]

BILLY BREMNER

Bash! (nr/Arista) 1984

Erstwhile Rockpile guitarist Bremner is far more talented than his low profile would indicate; insecurities have hampered him considerably. In many ways, Bash! is the Dave Edmunds album Edmunds never made (and more consistent than anything Dave's done since Repeat When Necessary, which included three Bremner songs). Billy's a bit poppier and a better, more prolific songwriter than his former bandmate.

Ex-Records drummer Will Birch produced and supplied the lyrics on Bash!, which also benefits from previously unrecorded donations (one each) from Elvis Costello (brilliant!) and Difford/Tilbrook (they should have finished writing it first). The album doesn't contain Bremner's Stiff 45, "When Laughter Turns to Tears," but still delivers the goods track after track. [jg]

See also Pretenders, Rockpile.

JACK BREWER BAND

See Saccharine Trust.

BRILLIANT

See Youth & Ben Watkins.

BRILLIANT CORNERS

Growing Up Absurd (nr/SS20) 1985

Fruit Machine EP (nr/SS20) 1986

What's in a Word (nr/SS20) 1986 (nr/McQueen) 1988

Somebody Up There Likes Me (nr/McQueen) 1988 •

Everything I Ever Wanted (nr/McQueen) 1988

Joyride (nr/McQueen) 1989 •

Bristol's Brilliant Corners are capable of the most joyous of pop sounds—bright, ringing guitars skipping through a mix of peppy drums, tight bass, trumpet and piano. By the same token, the group is also capable of the most depressing lyrics. Like Morrissey, singer/songwriter Davey Woodward has curious preoccupations—with death and dying and lost and unrequited loves. The Brilliant Corners' music is beyond reproach, but Woodward is one miserable boy.

Growing Up Absurd, while not as striking as it might have been, sets the course for the quintet's releases—bouncy pop with the unusual novelty of a full-time trumpeter. The Fruit Machine EP sparkles with invention: piercing guitar lines, nimble trumpeting and keyboards make "Meet Me on Tuesdays" and "Jim's Room" the best of these four tracks.

Brilliant Corners continued their creative expansion on What's in a Word, adding strings and female backing vocals. The band's greatest songs are here: "Laugh I Could've Cried," "A Very Easy Death" and "Egotistical Me." The delightful "Boy and a Cloud" suggests that Davey may not be as miserable as we think he is.

Somebody Up There Likes Me shows the Brilliant Corners at their most accomplished; musically and lyrically, they are unnervingly precise. A dozen ardent testimonials on life and love in the '80s—"She's Dead," "Never a Young Girl" and "With a Kiss" are a far cry from the trite pop ditties we've come to expect from this kind of musical backing. It's rare to find such soul-baring honesty in pop music.

Everything I Ever Wanted is a compilation of Growing Up Absurd and Fruit Machine. [ag]

BRITISH ELECTRIC FOUNDATION

Music for Stowaways [tape] (nr/Virgin) 1981

Music for Listening To: (nr/Virgin) 1981

Music of Quality and Distinction Volume One (nr/Virgin) 1982

HOT GOSSIP

Geisha Boys and Temple Girls (nr/DinDisc-Virgin) 1981

In search of more meaningful dance music, Martyn Ware and Ian Craig Marsh abandoned the about-to-be-enormous Human League in 1980 to form the more experimental (musically and structurally) British Electric Foundation. The core members—Marsh, Ware and singer Glenn Gregory—also work as Heaven 17, a "division" of B.E.F. Confused? While Heaven 17 is geared for dance funk'n'soul, B.E.F. (for a while, at least) pursued one-off concept projects with a variety of other people, like the suddenly vocal TV dance troupe Hot Gossip.

Music for Stowaways—released only on cassette—consists of moody instrumentals, ranging from funk-rock to icy Germanic synth-garde to electro-bop and sound experiments. Much of it was reissued on the seven-track Music for Listening To:, which also includes an extra track, "A Baby Called Billy."

Music of Quality and Distinction, B.E.F.'s first venture into pop experimentation, brings in a number of interesting people (including Tina Turner, Gary Glitter, Sandie Shaw and Paul Jones) to perform cover versions of well-known and not-so-well-known oldies, from "These Boots Are Made for Walking" and "Wichita Lineman" to David Bowie's "The Secret Life of Arabia" and Lou Reed's "Perfect Day." Older songs hold up better under this treatment than new ones but, overall, choices of singers and musicians are on the mark. Despite any social implications (or lack thereof), a good time. [sg]

See also Heaven 17, Human League.

DAVE BROCK

See Hawkwind.

BROKEN BONES

Dem Bones (nr/Fall Out) 1984 •

Seeing Thru My Eyes EP (nr/Fall Out) 1985

Live at the 100 Club (nr/Subversive Sounds) 1985

Bonecrusher (Combat Core) 1986

F.O.A.D. (Combat Core) 1987

Decapitated (nr/Fall Out) 1987 •

Losing Control (nr/Heavy Metal) 1989 •

This quartet (originally comprising ex-Discharge guitarist Bones, Baz, Oddy and Nobby) may not be good spellers, but they certainly have a clear idea which end of a guitar to bash. Playing at maximum stun volume, Broken Bones' lack of literacy presents no obstacle to the blunt protest songs with clear and indomitable rock power on Dem Bones. An early and distinctly British center ground between parochial punk (BB generally play too slow) and modern metal (but more topical and fiery), Broken Bones could be the modern answer to the MC5. Or just another would-be Black Sabbath.

By the time of the half-studio/half-live F.O.A.D. (suffice to say three of the initials stand for Off And Die), Tezz had taken over bass chores from Oddy and the band had grown older and louder, finding a niche in the pre-dinosaur echelon of indie metal. The seven studio tracks sound pretty routine—all muddy bottom and squalling guitars—while the boiling nine-song speed-metal/Oi! live side (London, 1986) is treblier but equally indistinct.

Decapitated, which shares a single CD with Dem Bones, compiles the contents of four singles (a dozen tracks in all), including 1983's "Decapitated" and the 1985 10-inch, Seeing Thru My Eyes. [i]

BRONSKI BEAT

The Age of Consent (London-MCA) 1984 •

Hundreds & Thousands EP (London-MCA) 1985 •

Truthdare Doubledare (London-MCA) 1986 •

Playing only electronic instruments and singing unequivocal gay lyrics in a window-rattling falsetto, this London trio burst full-blown onto a complacent music scene in 1984. Jimmy Somerville (who left the following year to form the Communards) has a piercing voice which he can modulate for greater appeal (as on "Junk"); the band plays a powerful and unique breed of techno-dance, with room for such digressions as George and Ira Gershwin's "It Ain't Necessarily So" and Giorgio Moroder-for-Donna Summer's "I Feel Love." Far more blunt and sexy (the cover image and sleeve notes are similarly plain-spoken) than Tom Robinson's old records (to which the group surely owes a cultural debt of gratitude), The Age of Consent is an invigorating, courageous and memorable album.

Underscoring the Bronskis' club and dance orientation, Hundreds & Thousands offers lengthy remixes of four album cuts ("Why," "Smalltown Boy," "Junk," "Heatwave") plus the non-LP "Run from Love" and "Hard Rain." Horns have been added, and all the tunes extended to the six-minute-plus range; the cassette and CD contain two more.

Replacing Somerville with John Jon, a competent but far less distinctive singer, Bronski Beat managed to make Truthdare Doubledare, a halfbaked progression from the first album. "Hit That Perfect Beat" is exactly the same kind of hi-NRG dance excitement favored by post-Bronski Somerville, but the rest of the record attempts to diversify in upscale dance directions that don't quite pan out. While the songs continue to address gay issues ("Dr John" is about AIDS; "We Know How It Feels" and "Punishment for Love" both concern societal pressures), the lyrics are vague and subtle enough to be overlooked by casual listeners. [i/tr]

See also Communards.

JACQUI BROOKES

See Fingerprintz.

BROTHERHOOD OF LIZARDS

See Cleaners from Venus.

DENNIS BROWN

See Gregory Isaacs.

BRYGADA KRZYYS

Brygada Kryzys (Polish Tonpress) 1982

Brygada Kryzys (nr/Fresh) 1982

This semi-underground (and I don't mean that figuratively) Polish band is not exactly in the mainstream of world punk rock, but does play a slightly toned-down version of high-octane guitar (and sax) raunch that compares favorably to bands from Bauhaus to the Sex Pistols. While not breaking any new creative ground, Brygada Kryzys is a fascinating and credible example of stylistic transliteration from one culture to a rather different one. [i]

BUCK PETS

The Buck Pets (Island) 1989 •

Mercurotones (Island) 1990 •

Blasting out of a suburban Dallas garage with guitars blazing, the Buck Pets made their debut in a fury of loudly textured hard rock. A bit punky in approach (guitarist Chris Savage knows his way around feedback; the bratty lyrics are sung with youthful verve) but scaled for stadiums, the quartet shares some traits with other young bands rooted in the likes of Led Zeppelin. While the songs on The Buck Pets are rarely memorable ("A Little Murder" is a neat exception), Ron St. Germain's dynamic production captures the exciting guitar sound in all its overmodulated glory. (The CD adds a bonus track.)

While most ex-punks head straight for metal's commercial slipstream, the Buck Pets actually pulled back on the arena tendencies and made a punky street-level second album. With Michael Beinhorn producing (and playing keyboards), Mercurotones reflects a strong Replacements influence, throws off the same sort of ram-bunctious riff-rock favored by Soul Asylum and employs acoustic guitars and a few acid-house shuffle rhythms. Indicative of how open to new ideas the Buck Pets have grown, "Libertine" (a track produced by the Dust Brothers) features horns and a syncopated dance beat [i]

HAROLD BUDD

See Cocteau Twins, Brian Eno.

BUDDY LOVE

See Alan Milman Sect.

BUFFALO TOM

Buffalo Tom (Hol. Megadisc) 1989 (SST) 1989 •

Crawl EP (Hol. Megadisc) 1990

Birdbrain (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1990 •

Sometimes jokingly called Dinosaur Jr. Jr., this trio from western Massachusetts features a brand of scree-hyped guitar rock based in the post-Burma/Dü tradition, and has spent a lot of its studio time with Dinosaur Jr.'s guitar-honey, "Jake" Mascis. Buffalo Tom's first LP actually came out in Europe before it was picked up by SST, but the second was released by a major label as a possible wedge into the college market. Buffalo Tom's oink has a kinda student/hippie charm, and the band's sound is moving away from its derivative beginnings into more original (if still distinctly college-rock) terrain. It's hard to imagine them ever spreading out too far, but the first album might provide a nice soundtrack for your next late-night pot party. (The Birdbrain CD includes two bonus cuts, including acoustic versions of the Psychedelic Furs' "Heaven" and Buffalo Tom's "Reason Why.") [bc]

BUGGLES

The Age of Plastic (Island) 1980 •

Adventures in Modern Recording (Carrere) 1982

After "Video Killed the Radio Star" changed the course of electro-pop forever, it was straight downhill for the Buggles as a group. The two members, however, proved a lot more durable on their own: Geoffrey Downes went on to grand success with Yes and Asia; Trevor Horn became a hit record producer (for ABC and Malcolm McLaren) before founding ZTT Records and foisting Frankie Goes to Hollywood on an unsuspecting world.

While The Age of Plastic was a disappointment to fans of the Buggles' cogent 45s, Adventures amounts to little more than a self-explanatory post-mortem. Both albums are technically stunning, reasonably catchy and crashingly hollow. [i]

See also Art of Noise, Frankie Goes to Hollywood.

BULLET LAVOLTA

Bullet LaVolta EP (Taangl) 1988 •

The Gift (Taangl) 1989 (RCA) 1989 •

Gimme Danger EP (Metal Blade-RCA-Restless) 1990 •

On its initial outing, this Boston five-piece spews up a metallic-hardcore rainbow comprised of equal parts AC/DC and Circle Jerks. Small in stature yet possessing a wail bigger than Moby Dick, Indiana banshee Yukki Gipe makes up for his lack of singing ability with sheer scream pyrotechnics. By no means groundbreaking, the raucous six-song debut is an excellent intro to a band gleefully making the kind of racket your parents always told you to turn off. (The cassette contains a bonus track.)

Bullet LaVolta's assault continues on The Gift, a swell, chandelier-shattering collection of powerfully noisy rock songs punctuated by blasts from the lethal twin guitars of Clay Tarver and Ken Chambers (on loan from his other band, Moving Targets). The best cuts—the vaguely psychedelic yowlathon “Blind to You” and the near-pop title song (which cops part of its melody from “You Shook Me All Night Long”)—fairly define the notion of punk-metal crossover, a fact that helped BLV to a major label deal shortly after The Gift's release. (The RCA reissue adds two songs from the EP; the Taang! CD appends the whole thing.)

Apparently intended as a stopgap until the second LP, Gimme Danger is actually a worthwhile purchase that delivers two new explosive studio tracks (“Every Hungry Rabbit” and “Transparent Man”) along with three live numbers, including Kiss’ “Detroit Rock City.” [db]

See also Moving Targets.

BUREAU

See Dexy's Midnight Runners.

J.J. BURNEL

See Stranglers.

T-BONE BURNETT

Truth Decay (Takoma) 1980 (nr/Demon) 1986 •
 Trap Door EP (Warner Bros.) 1982
 Proof Through the Night (Warner Bros.) 1983
 Behind the Trap Door EP (nr/Demon) 1984
 T Bone Burnett (Dot-MCA) 1986 •
 The Talking Animals (Columbia) 1988 •

Singer, songwriter, ace producer (Los Lobos, Marshall Crenshaw, etc.), Christian moralist and pal of Elvis Costello, T(-)Bone Burnett has wielded a steady and growing influence on the music scene since the late '70s. Whether his inconsistent records leave any lasting mark or not, he's likely to make his presence felt in some role for a long time to come.

Burnett debuted on disc as a member of the Alpha Band, part of the extended family surrounding Bob Dylan during his mid-'70s Rolling Thunder period. Following three Alpha Band LPs, he went solo on what remains his best full-length album, Truth Decay. The loose rockabilly and blues grooves offer a sympathetic backdrop for Burnett's sweet (countryish)'n'sour (Dylanish) vocals, as he delivers romantic laments and scathing commentaries on the sorry state of contemporary life. His moral essays generally don't grate (“Madison Avenue” being an exception), thanks to the sheer musicality of the sounds.

The Trap Door EP is even better, with the gleaming folk-rock of “Hold on Tight” and “I Wish You Could Have Seen Her Dance” making an exhilarating tonic for troubled souls. And the sly, sarcastic “Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend” gets his point across perfectly.

Guess the boy's head got turned by too many good reviews and famous fans, 'cause things then got tainted with smug self-righteousness. Proof Through the Night boasts a stellar supporting cast that includes Ry Cooder, Richard Thompson and Pete Townshend. However, the big arrangements and epic pretensions grow tiresome, especially his attempts to encapsulate an era in “The Sixties,” “Hefner and Disney,” et al. Burnett's got some valid points, but who made him judge and jury?

While Behind the Trap Door may be a sequel to his successful EP, it plays more like outtakes. A waste. Far better is T Bone Burnett, a sparse, largely acoustic country LP that marks his first outing without a hyphen. Songs tend to be more personal than preachy, with the standard “Poison Love” and “Oh No Darling” among the highlights. (The CD adds three bonus Burnetts.)

The Talking Animals is a return to the mainstream attempts of the Warner discs, and features creative input by such folks as Bono and Tonio K. Some of the songs rock tougher than anything he's done before (see “Monkey Dance” and “You Could Look It Up”); others succeed only in scaling new heights of pretension. Sung in four languages, “Image” could be a Brecht castoff, while “The Strange Case of Frank Cash and the Morning Paper” is a tedious five-minute spoken-word tale. Skip instead to “The Killer Moon,” a mid-period Beatles soundalike, and the aptly titled “Relentless.” All in all, worth hearing, though one wishes this talented jerk weren't so impressed with himself. [jy]

BURNING SENSATIONS

Burning Sensations (Capitol) 1983

After a one-album stint in the Motels, ex-Pop guitarist Tim McGovern formed an intriguing but unrealized rock band with pan-cultural aspirations. A few of the songs (most notably the wonderful “Belly of the Whale” and “Afrobilly (Live It Up),” which conflates a vague adaptation of high-life and noise-guitar) make real use of the group's assets and ambitious ideas; the rest of the record (like covers of Creedence's “Down on the Corner” and Hendrix's “I Don't Live Today”) just sink into an unfocused fog. Several of Burning Sensations' six members went on to play in the more world-oriented Bonedaddys, for whose first album McGovern co-wrote one song. [i]

See also Bonedaddys, Pop.

BURNING SPEAR

Marcus Garvey (Mango) 1975 •
 Man in the Hills (Mango) 1976 •
 Garvey's Ghost (Mango) 1976 •
 Dry & Heavy (Mango) 1977
 Live (Island) 1978
 Social Living (nr/Island) 1978
 Hail H.I.M. (nr/Burning Music-EMI) 1980
 Farover (Heartbeat) 1982 •
 Fittest of the Fittest (Heartbeat) 1983 •

Resistance (Heartbeat) 1984 •
 Reggae Greats (Mango) 1984 •
 People of the World (Slash) 1986 •
 Mistress Music (Slash) 1988
 Live in Paris: Zenith '88 (Slash) 1989 •
 Mek We Dweet (Mango) 1990 •
 100th Anniversary [CD] (Mango) 1990 •

For more than 20 years, Winston Rodney—better known as Burning Spear—has been one of reggae music's most consistent and enduring forces, if not its most essential embodiment. Singing in a unique, soulful growl, the beloved Spear is known for his commitment to the African chant style, as well as his potently heavy, penetrating sound. He has largely devoted his life and art to the teaching of black history, in particular the work of Marcus Garvey. (Like Garvey and Bob Marley, Rodney was born in St. Ann's, Jamaica.)

Spear's recording career began in 1969, but he became a local legend in the mid-'70s with the release of "Marcus Garvey" and the classic album of the same name. Soon after, a London appearance that found him backed by members of Aswad made him the toast of England, and he has remained a major international figure ever since.

All three of Spear's early-'80s albums on Heartbeat are excellent. Farover contains two of his best songs: "O'Jah" and "Jah Is My Driver," with his haunting vocals and trance-inducing music. Fittest of the Fittest is another typical Spear effort, highlighted by the title track. Keyboard stabs, creative percussion and intriguing arrangements provide a solid background to his cries and moans of passion. The soulful and sensuous Resistance (which got a Grammy nomination) matches his voice to a stellar horn section, with Burning Band drummer Nelson Miller providing a strong backbone. The record contains some of his most memorable songs, including the title track, "Queen of the Mountain," "We Been There" and "The Force." Turning in a surprising new direction, "Love to You" finds Spear scatting and singing almost like a bluesman.

Signing to Slash, Spear made one of 1986's most far-reaching reggae records, People of the World. Taking its title from the Starship hit, "Built This City" relocates the idea to Kingston and shifts the music to reggae, and combines Spear's lyrical gifts with the incredible instrumental sounds of the Burning Band. Featuring an all-female horn section, they manage to integrate a multitude of musical styles—borrowing from calypso, rock, jazz and African—while staying within the dub context. The trumpet solo on "Winner," the sax on "Little Love Song" and the blues jammin' on other tracks combine to make this quite an LP.

Mistress Music finds the production (by Spear and Miller) and orchestration reaching a new level. In a lyrical departure, the album predominantly contains love songs (not that it doesn't include the tributary "Love Garvey"). A Spear attempt at commerciality is almost a contradiction in terms, but the record does serve to expand his parameters.

Spear's concerts are legendary; he frequently reaches unknown heights in a hypnotic trance. The extraordinarily clean-sounding two-LP Live in Paris—his first concert album since 1978's Live (which was done in London, with Aswad behind him)—captures Spear in the throes of his 1988 tour, performing songs from Mis- trass Music and People of the World, as well as some early classics. The Burning Band lays out the groove and blazes the path for Spear's lift-off.

Spear returned to Mango (the label which issued his most classic works) for Mek We Dweet ("make we do it") Impeccably recorded at Bob Marley's Tuff Gong Studios in Kingston, Spear delivers a message that's both state-of-the-union and state-of-art. With a vision that encompasses both families and the greatest crises of social injustice, Spear focuses on a panorama of topics, repeatedly underscoring the album's roots theme, preaching respect and awareness for heritage and origins.

100th Anniversary is a CD pairing of Marcus Garvey and its dub counterpart, Garvey's Ghost. Although never issued in the U.S., Hail H.I.M. is worth seeking out, as it contains two Spear classics—"Columbus" and "African Postman." [aw]

CHARLIE BURTON & THE CUTOUTS

Is That Charlie Burton ... or What?!! (Wild) 1982

CHARLIE BURTON

Don't Fight the Band that Needs You!!!! (Wild) 1983

CHARLIE BURTON AND THE HICCUPS

I Heard That (Wild) 1985

Green Cheese (Wild) 1990 ♪

This crazed rock'n'roller from Lincoln, Nebraska does it the old-fashioned way: he and three bandmates (bassist come and go but guitarist/pianist Phil Shoemaker and drummer Dave Robel are on all of these self-released albums) play wonderfully unpretentious hopped-up/stripped-down rockabilly/R&B originals, with offbeat, often funny, lyrics. Burton's a colorful vocalizer from the unstoppable howler school; the music barrels along with loose-limbed energy yet never runs off the road. Nothing fancy or remotely contemporary—just gutsy and great! (And don't forget those exclamation points!!!)

The first album has touching odes to cigarettes ("The Pack Song") and Elvis ("Breathe for Me, Presley!"), as well as a disconcerting song about dog bites ("Rabies Shots"). The sound is thick and muddy—just the way it oughta be. Don't Fight the Band That Needs You!!!! is marginally fancier (maybe it's just the addition of piano and a guest violin on one song that makes it sound more accomplished) but just as great. Charlie's in a distinctly Presleyesque mood here, crooning the romantic "It's Not Polite" and hiccuping through the cynical "I, 4 1, Don't Care." Strangest creation: "Succubus." Most winsome thought: "(Can't Find My) Niche."

Talk about slick: I Heard That's lyric sheet is typed! Produced to a nice clear turn by Missouri's estimable Lou Whitney, the album—solid but restrained fun with above-average lyrics—takes Charlie and 'Cups up the country and into unstylish traditional pop. "All Time Low" takes a page from the Johnny Cash songbook; the catchy "Is That Wishful Thinking (On My Part)" has a blistering lap-steel solo, while "Road Kill" ("god's will/my thrill") is tight trucker-country rock.

We'll overlook the high-falutin' weirdness of Charlie Burton on compact disc to note that Green Cheese (produced by Shoemaker) sets to pumping out rock and country with redoubled vim and a new taste for puns. Alongside such sure-to-be-classics as “Brand New Mom” and “Grl with the Artificial Heart,” Charlie cracks cheap jokes like “Party Trained” and “(You’re Not Playing Fair) Elise!!,” complete with the relevant Beethoven citation. Highbrow, lowbrow or nobrow, Charlie Burton comes from a cultural state all his own.

[1]

KATE BUSH

The Kick Inside (Harvest) 1978 •
 Lionheart (EMI America) 1978 •
 Live on Stage EP (nr/EMI) 1979
 Never for Ever (EMI America) 1980 •
 The Dreaming (EMI America) 1982 •
 Kate Bush EP (EMI America) 1983
 Hounds of Love (EMI America) 1985 •
 The Whole Story (EMI America) 1986 •
 The Sensual World (Columbia) 1989 •
 Aspects of the Sensual World EP (Columbia) 1989 •
 This Woman’s Work (nr/EMI) 1990 •

Kate Bush’s literate, masterful, enchanting records have won her enormous popularity, even if she can be overbearingly coy and preciously self-indulgent. Over the years, she has become increasingly ambitious, turning what might have been a career dominated by others into a singleminded and fascinating pursuit of her own muse. The young piano-playing singer on The Kick Inside bloomed into a fully autonomous artist.

The Kick Inside is dominated by Bush’s startling falsetto and such imaginative songs as “Them Heavy People,” “Wuthering Heights” and “Kite.” Top-notch sessionmen and Andrew Powell’s sparkling production provide a rich setting for the songs. The record’s huge popularity didn’t seem to faze Bush, who returned before the end of the same year with another well-crafted album, Lionheart. Subtler, more jazz-inflected arrangements keep it less immediate, but the cinema-minded “Hammer Horror” and theater-minded “Wow,” as well as the fondly nationalistic “Oh England My Lionheart,” make it memorable.

Bush’s next release was a live 7-inch EP of four songs from her first two albums. Demonstrating newfound studio expertise, she arranged and co-produced Never for Ever, which yielded three British hits (“Breathing,” “Babooshka” and “Army Dreamers”) and further proved her compositional depth. Songs about dead rock stars (“Blow Away”), a murder (“The Wedding List”) and a tribute to the “Violin” are among her strange lyrical concerns. A credit line thanking Richard Burgess and John Walters for “bringing in the Fairlight” gains significance in hindsight, given how integral the sampling instrument subsequently became to her music-making.

Self-produced, The Dreaming offers Bush’s first truly rock-oriented work, tinted with strong rhythms and clever Fairlight sounds. Almost free of her little-girl voice, Bush is revealed here as a highly skilled, controlled singer capable of abundant drama and personality. While the artistic resemblance to Peter Gabriel—in terms of what can be done artfully within the song form—is obvious, it’s all Kate Bush and perhaps her first really extraordinary album.

Hounds of Love divides into separately titled halves. The “Hounds of Love” side contains one of Bush’s most impressive songs, “Running Up That Hill (A Deal with God),” plus other similarly complex and enticing creations; “The Ninth Wave” side offers an overextended contemplation on drowning—impressive, but not really enjoyable.

Kate Bush is an American mini-album: one track from the live EP plus a pair of cuts from The Dreaming and one each from the two preceding LPs. The Whole Story is a fine career compilation (not in chronological order) of a dozen singles, from “Wuthering Heights” (with new vocals) to 1986’s energetic “Experiment IV.”

After four years of LP silence, Bush reemerged on a new label with The Sensual World, a major effort that was (incorrectly) expected to become her American commercial breakthrough. Early mentor David Gilmour is back on guitar; other such luminaries as Alan Stivell (Celtic harp), Davey Spillane (uilleann pipes), Eberhard Weber (bass) and the otherworldly Bulgarian Trio Bulgarka (backing vocals) also contribute. The title track ushers the listener into a lush, erotic space where Celtic and Middle Eastern sounds mingle with lyrics inspired by Ulysses’ Molly Bloom. It’s an enchanting welcome, but the album never fulfills its promise. The rest varies from cool delicacy to overwrought byzantine indulgence. Ultimately, The Sensual World is a noble disappointment, never achieving the intended directness, too restrained and enigmatic to reward the listener’s emotional investment.

Aspects of the Sensual World includes an instrumental version of the album’s title track plus three unreleased songs, all of which appear on This Woman’s Work, a luxurious, extensively annotated boxed set: eight CDs or cassettes (nine LPs) that contain the six original albums plus 29 B-sides, 12-inch mixes, video versions and live tracks. [tr/ws]

BUSH TETRAS

Rituals EP (Stiff) 1981
 Wild Things [tape] (ROIR) 1983
 Better Late Than Never [tape] (ROIR) 1989

FLOOR KISS

Goodnight Moon EP (Fr. Sourmash-L’Invitation au Suicide) 1985

LOVELIES

Mad Orphan (109) 1988

Arising from the New York post-rock scene (Pat Place had been one of James White’s Blacks), the Bush Tetras attempted a synthesis of African sensibilities (as perceived by white Americans) with the modern dance to form a global tribal music. The 12-inch Rituals (produced by then-Clash drummer Topper Headon) sets songs against a funk/reggae beat with horns and punchy guitar work tossed in liberally. “Can’t Be Funky” and its doppelgänger, “Funky Version,” are the most explicitly Third World tunes; “Cowboys in Africa” rushes along with punk intensity and “Rituals” employs a threnody pace.

The Wild Things cassette is a concert compilation of late '82 performances in and around New York. The band is in fine ferocious form, and Cynthia Sley spits and scowls her vocals as if the songs really meant something. The material reprises most of the Tetras' slim recorded repertoire, plus a couple of appropriately savage covers.

Better Late Than Never gathers together all of the Bush Tetras' studio work—Rituals, two prior singles and two otherwise unreleased demos (the earlier of which finds the group pushing a funky and reasonably accomplished dance groove)—on one digitally remastered cassette. On the band's last session (from '83), Place and Sley are backed by a new rhythm section.

After leaving the Tetras, drummer Dee Pop and his singing wife, onetime John Cale sidewoman deerfrance, launched Floor Kiss with former 8 Eyed Spy guitarist Michael Paumgardhen and a bassist. Hampered by crude self-production, the band's six-song 12-inch pairs simple rock-cum-power pop backing and breathy vocals in service of reasonably diverting material. A minor pleasure that might have developed into something.

The Lovelies are Sley's quintet with guitarist Ivan Julian (ex-Voidoids/Outsets), an unpleasant pairing of his common rock and her uncommon voice. On the "Thrash" side of Mad Orphan (the Mad Orphans were a Lovelies precursor), the flat, muddy production manages to hide Julian's guitar sparks but not Sley's artlessly abrasive singing. On the "Gash" side (what a charming title), keyboards, lower volume and more musical vocals (especially when multi-tracked) make several of the songs far more palatable. [sg/i]

See also Outsets.

BUTCHER SHOP

See Beasts of Bourbon

BUTTHOLE SURFERS

Butthole Surfers (Alternative Tentacles) 1983

Live PCPPEP (Alternative Tentacles) 1984

Psychic ... Powerless ... Another Man's Sac (Touch and Go) 1985 •

Cream Corn from the Socket of Davis EP (Touch and Go) 1985 •

Rembrandt Pussyhorse (Touch and Go) 1986 •

Locust Abortion Technician (Touch and Go) 1987 •

Hairway to Steven (Touch and Go) 1988 •

Double Live (Latino Bugger Veil) 1989 •

Widowermaker! EP (Touch and Go) 1989 •

"The Hurdy Gurdy Man" EP (Rough Trade) 1990 •

Piuhgd (Rough Trade) 1991 •

JACKOFFICERS

Digital Dump (Rough Trade) 1990 •

PAUL LEARY

The History of Dogs (Rough Trade) 1991 •

There are few experiences in this life that leave one feeling as sullied as a spin through the grooves of a Butthole Surfers record. Unlike so many nouveau scuzzbos, Austin's Buttholes don't descend into the depths of squalor to make a point about the human condition—they just like it down there. Spotches of Paul Leary's guitar noise and Gibby Haynes' tortured screams are these enigmatic Texans' bread and butter. When the noise revs up really fast, it sounds almost like hardcore, but this band relies more on filth than speed or power. The Butties inflict and exorcise pain like other people eat potato chips, and whatever debts they owe to Flipper and PiL would probably be forgotten if they'd just go away. There's clearly no one like 'em.

The debut mini-LP (also issued on colored vinyl under the title Brown Reason to Live) poses its threat to the social order through a varied thrash-to-Beeheart-blues attack and an inspired inspiring set of lyrics. "The Shah Sleeps in Lee Harvey's Grave" is the obvious anthem while, on "Suicide," Gibby sets political matters aside for an intensely personal statement: "I'm not fucking kidding man, it hurts!" On the other hand, "Hey" is almost subdued, Feelies-style material—extremism sometimes takes the oddest forms, don't it?

The seven-song Live PCPPEP offers denser and dirtier treatments of some of the first record's non-hits. The biggest improvement is the new brother and sister standup drumming team. Another Man's Sac (originally pressed on clear vinyl) shows an added creative sensibility—you were expecting them to develop into Hall and Oates? The faint-at-heart may not survive this assault, but then they probably don't deserve to.

The 12-inch Cream Corn EP hauls more sediment and sludge up from the gutter and onto the turntable, hitting its high point with "Moving to Florida," a cloying ear nuzzle imparted over Crampsian dirtbilly. (The CD of Another Man's Sac and the cassette of Rembrandt Pussyhorse both tack on the EP's four songs.) Mixing deranged blues, metal-punk and an overriding sense of anarchy, these loonies don't make guitars scream, they make 'em vomit and choke on it.

Rembrandt Pussyhorse takes a gonzo psychedelic approach that is (dare it be said) downright arty in its bizarre sonic experimentation. With some of the bowel-grinding dregs toned down, piano, organ, violin and a plethora of guitar techniques make the album a real diversion. Of special note is a cover of the Guess Who's "American Woman," which, in the Butties' bloody hands, sports a huge drum sound and metallic guitar, with tinny, atonal voices—imagine Nile Rodgers producing the Residents.

Locust Abortion Technician—which typically offers absolutely no information about the parties responsible—ebbs and flows like organic waste, an unpredictable flux of noise, movie score politeness, grating grunge-rock, fake folk, chirping birds, voices, tape manipulations and words, done at various recording speeds. "Sweat Loaf" launches the record with silence, speaking and then manic rock gusto; "22 Going on 23" ends it with grinding radio vérité.

With an incredible cover and numerous nods to the '60s, Hairway to Steven is as varied as it is entertaining: the program includes acoustic guitars competing with bowling alley sounds, half-speed vocals mixed (shades of "Third Stone from the Sun") with Hendrix guitar psychedelia, live (maybe) cowbunk storytelling, straightforward (well . . .) melodic songsmithery and flat-out audio hysteria. Reactionary times demand inspirational rebels like the Butties.

The double-live Double Live is a self-released authorized bootleg, a monumental nineteen-song (29 on CD) sampling of the Surfers' oeuvre (plus an R.E.M. cover!), recorded—for the most part—as clearly as such distorted music ought to be. Largely removed from the manipulative possibilities of the studio (although things do manage to turn very weird on “The One I Love”), the Butties aren’t the ultimate sonic bizzaros, but Gibby’s madman vocals plus the chaotic onslaught of two drummers and Leary’s endless guitar noise still make this a reasonable facsimile of party night at the nut-house.

Three of the four new songs chucked up on Widowermaker! cover the usual terrain, with processed vocals, gross-out lyrics, vehement guitar noise and buzzing sound effects. But then there’s the restrained melody and delivery of “The Colored F.B.I. Guy,” on which a quiet bit of feedback is as strident as things get.

The Butties’ only 1990 product was an adequate if witless remake of Donovan’s “Hurdy Gurdy Man,” issued with an inane stripped-down house mix—thereby proving that, even in the iconoclast’s world, there are rights and wrongs. Instead, Gibby and bassist Jeff Pinkus spent their time on a side project, releasing an album as the Jackofficers. Uniting samples, beats, noise and occasional lyrics, Digital Dump applies the Surfer sensibility to dance music but comes up on the imaginative end of ordinary. Steady electronic rhythms and electronic keyboards pin the duo down to the same sound and structures as everybody else, reducing whatever is thrown into the mix—whether it’s Oliver North’s voice, Mission Impossible music, chipmunk vocals, noise guitar or sex sounds—to a colorful variation on very common themes. Only the crazed “Swingers Club” and “Don’t Touch That,” both of which more or less transmute Butthole Surfers music whole onto synthesizer, really demonstrate the concept’s potential.

Considering how long it’s been since the band’s last studio LP, the uneven Pioughd (pronounced “p-o’d”) is a well-produced disappointment that wastes too much time on halfbaked ideas like “Hurdy Gurdy Man” and “Revolution,” one part of which consists of an obtrusive stew of synthetic strings, noise-guitar, a ringing phone and police sirens over which Gibby keeps calling out Garry Shandling’s name. Besides that nonsense, and “Lonesome Bulldog,” a comedic cowboy ballad in three parts, Pioughd stoops to a spot-on parody of the Jesus and Mary Chain (funny, but so what?). The reassuring appearance of several slabs of typical Buttholian psychoacoustics (one of which sounds like a Move song in hell) prove that our mad anti-heroes aren’t getting soft; still, Pioughd lacks a certain psumbthaennng. (The CD bonus, “Barking Dogs,” is an extended sound collage with brief canine contributions.) [J/L]

See also Fearless Iranians from Hell.

BUZZCOCKS

- Spiral Scratch EP (nr/New Hormones) 1977 + 1981
- Another Music in a Different Kitchen (nr/UA) 1978 •
- Love Bites (nr/UA) 1978 •
- A Different Kind of Tension (nr/UA) 1979 (IRS) 1989 •
- Singles Going Steady (IRS) 1979 •
- Parts One, Two, Three EP (IRS) 1984 •
- Total Pop 1977–1980 (Ger. Weird Systems) 1987 •
- The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1988
- Lest We Forget [tape] (ROIR) 1988

- Live at the Roxy Club April ’77 (nr/Absolutely Free) 1989 (nr/Receiver) 1990 •
- The Fab Four EP (nr/EMI) 1989 •
- Product (Restless Retro) 1989 •
- The Peel Sessions Album (nr/Strange Fruit) 1989 (Strange Fruit-Dutch East India) 1991 •

Inspired by the Sex Pistols, Manchester’s Howard Devoto and Pete Shelley formed the Buzzcocks in 1976, specializing in high-energy, staccato delivery of stripped-down pop songs. With John Maher (drums) and Steve Diggle (bass), the Buzzcocks cut Spiral Scratch, the UK’s first self-released punk record. Though ragged and rudimentary, the 7-inch features the frantic, minimalistic pop stylings that would characterize the group’s work and, with songs like “Breakdown” and “Boredom,” remains a seminal artifact of ’70s DIY.

Devoto departed shortly thereafter to form Magazine. Garth Smith joined, taking over bass while Shelley switched to vocals (in addition to guitar) and Diggle to lead guitar. The band signed to United Artists and, after one frenetic and controversial single (“Orgasm Addict”), sacked Smith; the arrival of Steve Garvey fixed the lineup that would remain unchanged throughout the band’s original existence.

Another Music in a Different Kitchen expands on the stark three-minute pop song and themes of confusion, alienation and betrayal, adding a new emphasis on harmony and humor and a growing coordination of the players in contrast to the earlier inspired chaos. “Fast Cars,” the jagged waltz “Sixteen” and the tom-tom pounder “Moving Away from the Pulsebeat” are all mini mindblowers.

Love Bites demonstrates both the Buzzcocks’ perfection of their particular brand of pop and their disillusionment with its restrictions. Producer Martin Rushent clarifies the elements of the sound even further, and Shelley’s songwriting continues to improve, including the band’s highest-charting UK single, “Ever Fallen in Love” (later covered badly by Fine Young Cannibals). Other cuts, like “Sixteen Again” and “Real World,” would have made great pop singles as well, but much of the album (which includes two instrumentals) finds the Buzzcocks mired in repetitive structures.

A Different Kind of Tension makes tentative maneuvers into the new, as the Buzzcocks attempt to throw off the yoke of pop music. This schizophrenic album features some of Shelley’s finest songs, notably “You Say You Don’t Love Me” and “I Believe.” With Diggle providing some of the material, the band reaches a zenith of effortless craft, especially on Side Two (subtitled “The thorn beneath the rose”), where Shelley dives into the challenging waters of paranoia, self-conscious despair and harrowing uncertainty, climaxing on the title track. That’s followed by “I Believe,” a seven-minute summation of reasons to be cheerful continually undercut by a chorus of “There is no love in this world any more.” Powerful stuff.

After three more singles in ’80 and ’81 (later compiled as the Parts One, Two, Three EP), Shelley decided to go solo and the Buzzcocks came to an end. Maher and Diggle went off to form Flage to a Convenience; following a brief stint on Shelley’s ’81 solo tour, Garvey moved to New York and eventually quit the music business.

Singles Going Steady is a stunning compilation of the band's eight classic UA 45s, proving conclusively that the Buzzcocks were an amazing singles band, perhaps one of the best ever. From the teen angst of the Devoto Shelley "Orgasm Addict" to the 20th-century malaise of "Something's Gone Wrong Again," the songs are across-the-board great, and the album is a non-stop hit parade.

Containing all six tracks (written half-and-half by Shelley and Diggle) from the group's last efforts, Parts One, Two, Three is a postscript to Singles Going Steady, a transition away from big-pop structures into a more elusive, subversive form that still possesses plenty of octane and odd hooks. "What Do You Know?" introduces horns; the relaxed pace of "Running Free" and the odd "Are Everything" (later covered by Heaven 17) are equally novel. (IRS later issued a CD combining Parts One, Two, Three and A Different Kind of Tension.)

Total Pop, an offbeat German collection, draws from Singles Going Steady, One, Two, Three, Love Bites and Tension, adding the band's two live tracks ("Breakdown" and "Love Battery") from The Roxy London WC2, a classic 1977 scene document. (The CD and cassette have three bonus cuts.)

The Peel Sessions EP, which dates from September '77, contains only three songs: "Fast Cars," "(Moving Away from the) Pulsebeat" and "What Do I Get." The long-delayed Lest We Forget is a fine-sounding live compilation tape recorded at—with one Mancunian exception—various US gigs in 1979 and 1980.

Live at the Roxy Club April '77, the first in an archival series of releases of recordings made at the legendary London venue, is eminently skippable. Unlike Lest We Forget's maturity, this documents the Buzzcocks at a weak point, playing one of the first gigs without Devoto. The band is an engaging shambles—sloppy, out of tune, sometimes downright awful.

Released as a teaser for the Product boxed set, The Fab Four EP consists of four consecutive A-sides (all included on Singles Going Steady), from "Ever Fallen in Love" to Diggle's "Harmony in My Head."

Product is brilliant. Except for the Spiral Scratch EP, this three-CD (or three-cassette or four-LP) extravaganza, complete with a detailed historical booklet, contains the Buzzcocks' complete studio works: every track of the band's three albums and twelve singles. The boxed set also includes "I Look Alone," a fantastic basher that was an outtake from the Parts One, Two, Three series, and eight songs from a 1978 gig at London's Lyceum. All better than Lest We Forget, these tracks offer the best released evidence of the band's wall-of-guitar concert power.

The release of Product was one of the factors that contributed to the Buzzcocks' 1989 reunion. Shelley, Diggle, Maher and Garvey undertook brilliant tours of the US and England. (Drummer Maher then returned to his Volkswagen repair business, replaced for subsequent dates in Australia and Japan by ex-Smith Mike Joyce.) It appears nearly certain that the Buzzcocks will resume recording in the '90s.

The Peel Sessions Album (which subsumes the previously issued Peel EP) offers four different looks at the band between 1977 and 1979. While the regular studio recordings are generally better than these radio broadcasts, there is a searing "E S P." that is more gripping than the version on Love Bites, while two instrumentals from the same LP and Tension's "Mad Mad Judy" are all notably—and nicely—dissimilar to their subsequent renderings. [sg i jr]

See also Howard Devoto, Flag of Convenience, Magazine, Pete Shelley, Teardrops.

BUZZ OF DELIGHT

See Oh-OK

DAVID BYRNE AND BRIAN ENO

My Life in the Bush of Ghosts (Sire) 1980 + 1980 •

DAVID BYRNE

Songs from the Broadway Production of "The Catherine Wheel" (Sire) 1981 •

Music for The Knee Plays (ECM) 1985

Rei Momo (Luaka Bop-Sire) 1989 •

The Forest (Luaka Bop-Sire-Warner Bros.) 1991 ◊

DAVID BYRNE ET AL.

Sounds from True Stories (Sire) 1986

RYUICHI SAKAMOTO, DAVID BYRNE AND CONG SU

The Last Emperor (Virgin Movie Music) 1988 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Brazil Classics Vol. 1: Beleza Tropical (Fly-Sire) 1989 •

Brazil Classics Vol. 2: O Samba (Luaka Bop-Sire) 1989 •

Brazil Classics Vol. 4: Tom Zé (Luaka Bop-Sire) 1990 ◊

Brazil Classics Vol. 3: Farró Etc./Music of the Brazilian Northeast (Luaka Bop-Sire) 1991 ◊

As a Talking Head, David Byrne—guitarist, songwriter, singer—has long shown an inquisitive, intelligent interest in unusual applications of, and exploratory cultural variations on, pop music. His solo musical work revolves around transfiguring pop through the infusion of alien elements or by injecting it into foreign situations. My Life in the Bush of Ghosts, a continuation of his (and the band's) collaboration with Eno, blends found vocal tapes with electronic music centering on Third World (notably African) rhythms to interesting effect and uneven results. (After strenuous Islamic objections were raised, the record was reissued with "Very Very Hungry" in place of "Qu'ran.")

Byrne created the music on The Catherine Wheel for a dance production by the renowned Twyla Tharp. Listeners can get either a selection of tracks on the album, or the complete score on the cassette version. The pace and instrumentation on the poppier material bears a strong resemblance to Talking Heads' work of the Remain in Light period, with volatle rhythms and jazz inflections; other songs are more experimental, drawing heavily on Eno's ambient and tape-editing techniques.

Byrne next forayed into theatrical music by writing and producing the Dixieland-infected horn score for The Knee Plays, a section of director/avant-garde opera conceptualist Robert Wilson's stage work The Civil Wars. Inspired by the Dirty Dozen Brass Band, Byrne created angular pieces that remove the swing from ragtime, turning New Orleans jazz into engaging machine music over which he occasionally recites lyrics.

Although Talking Heads released an album of songs to coincide with Byrne's True Stories, a soundtrack record of incidental music for the film was also issued. Byrne produced and wrote the majority of Sounds from True Stories (subtitled "Music for Activities Freaks"), earning his star billing while performing on just two tracks. The rest of the musical cast—the Kronos Quartet, Carl Finch (of Brave Combo), Steve Jordan, Terry Allen, the Heads, Prairie Prince and others—plays his (and their) instrumentals in a panoply of styles, from country to polka to electronics to jazz.

Working individually on separate segments of it, Sakamoto, Byrne and Cong Su shared a Golden Globe award and an Oscar for the score of Bernardo Bertolucci's The Last Emperor. Byrne's segment—fifteen instrumental minutes on Side Two—avoids trite Oriental clichés while managing to adequately evoke the cultural locale with gongs, strings and woodwinds. Lovely.

Having made his artistic peace with North America, Africa and Asia, Byrne next turned his continental attentions southward, compiling and annotating two albums of contemporary Brazilian pop (singers like Milton Nascimento, Gilberto Gil and Caetano Veloso) and dance music. (The third, a one-artist anthology, was numbered out of order; Brazil Classics Vol. 3 didn't appear until early '91.)

Almost free of his usual intellectual aloofness, the summery Rei Momo (produced by Steve Lillywhite and performed by a large group of top Latin players) is lively and enjoyable, with an infectious light feel, lyrics that have nothing to do with the record's style and appealing songs (including three co-written with Johnny Pacheco or Willie Colon) that make little effort to sound Latin. Instead, Byrne uses percussion, rhythms and appropriate instrumentation (not to mention occasional backing vocals in Spanish) to give exemplary tunes like "Dirty Old Town," "Marching Through the Wilderness" and "Make Believe Mambo" a delightful dash of salsa. [sg/i]

See also Talking Heads.

CABARET VOLTAIRE

- Extended Play EP (nr/Rough Trade) 1978
"Mix-Up" (nr/Rough Trade) 1979 (Mute-Restless) 1990 •
Live at the YMCA 27-10-79 (nr/Rough Trade) 1980
(Mute-Restless) 1990 •
Three Mantras (nr/Rough Trade) 1980 (Mute-Restless)
1990 •
The Voice of America (Rough Trade) 1980
(Mute-Restless) 1990 •
1974-1976 [tape] (nr/Industrial) 1980
3 Crépuscule Tracks (Rough Trade) 1981
Live at the Lyceum [tape] (nr/Rough Trade) 1981
(Mute-Restless) 1990 •
Red Mecca (Rough Trade) 1981 (Mute-Restless) 1990 •
2 X 45 (nr/Rough Trade) 1982 (Mute-Restless) 1990 •
Hail Live in Japan (Rough Trade) 1982 (Mute-Restless)
1990 •
The Crackdown (nr/Some Bizzare-Virgin) 1983 •
Johnny YesNo (nr/Doublevision) 1983 (Mute-Restless)
1990 •
Micro-Phonies (nr/Some Bizzare-Virgin) 1984 •
Drinking Gasoline (Caroline) 1985
The Arm of the Lord (Caroline) 1985 •
The Drain Train EP (Caroline) 1986 (Mute-Restless)
1990 •
The Golden Moments of Cabaret Voltaire [CD] (nr/Rough Trade) 1987 •
Code (EMI Manhattan) 1987 •
Eight Crépuscule Tracks (Giant) 1988 •
Listen Up with Cabaret Voltaire (Mute-Restless) 1990 •
The Living Legends (Mute-Restless) 1990 •
Groovy, Laidback and Nasty (nr/Parlophone) 1990 •

PRESSURE COMPANY

- Live in Sheffield 19 Jan 82 (nr/Solidarity-Paradox) 1982

RICHARD H. KIRK

- Disposable Half-Truths [tape] (nr/Industrial) 1980
Time High Fiction (nr/Doublevision) 1983
Black Jesus Voice (nr/Rough Trade) 1986
Ugly Spirit (nr/Rough Trade) 1986

PETER HOPE & RICHARD KIRK

- Hoodoo Talk (Native-Wax Trax!) 1987 •

STEPHEN MALLINDER

- Pow-Wow (nr/Fetish) 1982
Pow-Wow Plus (nr/Doublevision) 1985

The prolific Cabaret Voltaire is one of the most energetic, progressive and dissonant forces in modern music. Working primarily in the electronic form, specializing in found sounds and tape manipulations, Cabaret Voltaire has relentlessly pushed at the outer edges of style, shedding an early primitivism for a subsequent accessibility that plays on the (almost) familiar. Coming from the industrial city of Sheffield, they have spent years attempting to make a music that reflects their experience and perceptions.

Extended Play launched Cabaret Voltaire—Richard H. Kirk (guitar, synth, horns, clarinet), Stephen Mallinder (bass, vocals) and Christopher Watkins (organ, tapes)—and gave an early boost to Rough Trade (it was the label's third single). It highlights the Cabs' main features—unpredictable sounds and eerie, disembodied vocals manipulated over a very physical beat—and is particularly notable for a distorted cover version of Lou Reed's "Here She Comes Now."

The more professionally produced "Mix-Up" has better coordinated use of electronics, increasing the bizarre intensity of the sound. Bass, guitar and flute are evident (but deformed) in the mix, and Cabaret Voltaire makes visible use of other people's material, as with the Seeds' "No Escape"

Live at the YMCA (as well as the later Live at the Lyceum tape) dispels any notions of Cab Volt as a sterile studio group. Wisely, they don't seek to precisely duplicate their recorded sound, but convert it into outright dance music that is almost improvisational in nature. Though the live recordings are more fragmented than their studio counterparts, they compensate for it in added energy.

Three Mantras is the group's first explicit venture into non-Western musical forms. The Arabic material used is successfully developed into a chant, and then its structure is applied to a new work. The record also marks a shift in technique, as musical demands take precedence over production to strange and beautiful effect.

The Voice of America is an uneven release, combining older material with much more assured newer work, such as the political "The Voice of America/Damage Is Done," which uses found tape and sparse electronics to juxtapose the repressive and libertarian aspects of American life. The new material shows much greater focus and cleaner production than the older, with the mantra technique rising in place of the former chaotic electro-noise.

For serious fans, 1974-1976 is a series of curious and intriguing false starts and experiments from the band's earliest days.

3 Crépuscule Tracks captures the band in transition between their found-vocals/art-noise period and a commitment to dance-floor electronics. "Sluggin' fer Jesus (Part One)" is a masterful combination of the two, as a right-wing TV preacher demands large cash contributions over a powerful, trance-inducing synth beat.

On Red Mecca, the trio tightens its focus to produce an album more coherent than its predecessors, underscored by a reworking of Henry Mancini's score for Orson Welles' Touch of Evil. As their music reaches a new level of maturity and polish in both production and performance, Cabaret Voltaire focus and extend their film noir theme through all the material, making this an odd, deceptively accessible record.

Two 12-inch EPs packaged as an album, 2 X 45 picks up the trends begun on Red Mecca and compresses them into a new form. Also interesting is the move away from obvious electronics and manipulations to a more naturalistic sound, with emphasis on acoustic instruments, like saxophone and clarinet. This is the closest the group has come to making a rock'n'roll album.

Like earlier live albums, Hai! Live in Japan marks time, playing with recent developments, funky in nature and far more coherent than Live in Sheffield. The latter was a one-off show to raise funds for the Polish Solidarity union, and was released under the Pressure Company name for contractual reasons. Disordered and trenchant, it is a reminder that the band is still capable of electrifying cacophony.

In 1983, Cabaret Voltaire signed with that noted asylum for eccentrics, Some Bizzare, a move criticized by some as a sell-out. The resulting LP, The Crackdown, is perhaps the most left-field record ever accused of commercial compromise. Sticking mostly to a funk format, the songs are more structured than those on 2 X 45, and the band displays a plethora of high-tech but dark electronic textures. Probably the strongest of their many albums.

Johnny YesNo is a soundtrack to Peter Care's film about a junkie. Released on the band's own Doublevision label, it was recorded in 1981, prior to Chris Watkin's departure. Like most soundtracks, it's not designed for careful listening, and consists primarily of eerie electronic noodling. Micro-Phonies is similar to The Crackdown, except that the sound is a bit sparser and decidedly more rhythm-conscious. Much of the material would be very much at home coming from a beat-box, particularly "Sensoria" and "James Brown," the 12-inch remixes of which are both highly recommended.

Drinking Gasoline is a double 12-inch (running over 30 minutes) recorded primarily as a video soundtrack. The four numbers are entirely interchangeable, the sort of hard electro-funk found on previous LPs. Fans will enjoy it, but the Cabs seem stuck in a rut, an unsurprising problem after so many releases. The Arm of the Lord (reissued on CD as The Covenant, The Sword and the Arm of the Lord) proves that no band could be so productive without a few tricks up its sleeve. Titled after an American neo-Nazi religious zealot organization, the record crossbreeds trademark electro-rhythm attack with odd breaks, varied tempos, the return of eerie found voices, unpolished production and harsh dissonance. "I Want You" and "Motion Rotation" actually have catchy melodies—a band first!

The Drain Train, a two-disc 12-inch, consists mostly of three not vastly different versions of a track quite similar to other recent material. The other two tracks don't do much groundbreaking, either. Code's admission of outside assistance (Bill Nelson on guitar and Adrian Sherwood as co-producer) makes for some interesting but rather subtle touches, as the band reaches for crystal-clear, state-of-the-art sound. But the material is a stylistic reprise of The Arm of the Lord: tempos are varied quite a bit, but each track has the same feel. Artsy British industrialists or computerized hip-hoppers?

Obviously sensing the need for a rest and a rethink, the duo took their first extended vacation following

Code. The late '80s saw the release of several compilations. Those nostalgic for the Cabs' white noise and distortion period will appreciate The Golden Moments of Cabaret Voltaire (and agree with the title) and Eight Crépuscule Tracks. The first is a CD-only release of material from the band's Rough (Trade) days, there's nothing more recent than 2 X 45, and most of it predates that. The juxtaposition inherent in digital reproduction of primitive music makes it a very interesting collection. Eight Crépuscule Tracks draws from the same approximate time frame, taking the original 3 Crépuscule Tracks and adding some singles and a previously unreleased cover of "The Theme from Shaft," which sounds as if it was recorded around the time of Voice of America.

The two-LP/two-CD Listen Up with Cabaret Voltaire is an essential item, containing rarities and unreleased selections spanning the length of the Cabs' recorded history. Even the previously released material is obscure, rescued from NME compilation cassettes, early Factory samplers and videos; the "new" cuts would have stood proudly in contemporaneous works—"This Is Our Religion," for instance, would have fit in perfectly on Voice of America, while "Enough's Enough" or "Why" could be from any recent LP.

The Living Legends consists of A- and B-sides from the band's days as a trio on Rough Trade, fourteen tracks that underscore the enormous influence Cabaret Voltaire's music has had on virtually every industrial and/or experimental band of the past decade. (Three items overlap Golden Moments, which is mostly culled from albums.) Real treats include the disassembled cover of the Velvets' "Here She Comes Now" and the prehistoric "Is That Me (Finding Someone at the Door Again)," recorded live in 1975.

Three years after Code—by which point many had presumed the group no longer existed—Kirk and Mallinder returned with Groovy, Laidback and Nasty. Recorded partly in Chicago, the LP employs a number of co-producers and backup singers, all sorts of house-style arrangements and Mallinder's warmest and most tuneful vocals ever; the result is an entirely updated Cabaret Voltaire, a group whose dance music has never sounded better. An EP of four remixes plus one extra cut is also included. Welcome back.

Both members have done solo work, which is especially interesting as it allows identification of who brings what to the band. Mallinder's Pow-Wow mini-album is dominated by muscular bass and drum combinations, tapes and his husky voice. On his own, he seems to prefer electronically treated acoustic instruments rather than synthesizers. Pow-Wow Plus repackages that record with the addition of 1981's "Temperature Drop" single. Kirk's Time High Fiction is a one-man double album recorded over a three-year period; it's richer in texture (mostly electronic) and less rhythmic than his partner's work. The two-side-long "Dead Relatives" is even more dissonant than anything the two have done together.

Kirk released a pair of solo LPs in 1986: Black Jesus Voice and Ugly Spirit. (Both were combined on a single cassette under the title of the former.) Black Jesus Voice is not a drastic departure from Cabaret Voltaire; rhythmically similar but with slightly harsher sounds. Most of the vocals are from tapes rather than sung by Kirk himself. Ugly Spirit changes gears completely, however, and takes a sound-sculpture approach with often very effective results.

In 1986, Kirk joined forces with former Box singer Peter Hope for Hoodoo Talk, which wasn't released until two years later. Playing all the instruments, Kirk provides varied but familiar synth/guitar/drum machine patterns, from busy, booming rhythms with swelling layers of noise to minimalist sound bites. Hope adds disjointed, vaguely nightmarish lyrics sung in the same ingratiating, exaggerated way that made later Box material such rough going. The desire to spend studio time with someone new after so many years is understandable, but this probably would have worked better with Mallinder as a Cab Volt LP. [sg/dgs]

CHRIS CACAVAS AND JUNKYARD LOVE

See Green on Red.

JOHN CALE

Vintage Violence (Columbia) 1969 •
Church of Anthrax (Columbia) 1971
The Academy in Peril (Reprise) 1972 (nr/Edsel) 1986 •
Paris 1919 (Reprise) 1973
Fear (Island) 1974 •
Slow Dazzle (Island) 1975 •
Helen of Troy (nr/Island) 1975
Guts (Island) 1977
Animal Justice EP (nr/Illegal) 1977
Sabotage/Live (Spy) 1979
Honi Soit ... (A&M) 1981
Music for a New Society (ZE-Passport) 1982
Caribbean Sunset (ZE-Island) 1984
John Cale Comes Alive (ZE-Island) 1984
Artificial Intelligence (Beggars Banquet-PVC) 1985 •
Words for the Dying (Opal-Warner Bros.) 1989 •
Even Cowgirls Get the Blues [tape] (ROIR) 1991

KEVIN AYERS—JOHN CALE—ENO—NICO

June 1, 1974 (Island) 1974 •

LOU REED/JOHN CALE

Songs for Drella (Sire-Warner Bros.) 1990 •

ENO/CALE

Wrong Way Up (Opal-Warner Bros.) 1990 •

John Cale's musical career since leaving the Velvet Underground—after two albums on which his viola-scrapping and genuine musical training played a pivotal role—has been diverse and unpredictable, exploring both classical/avant-garde “serious” music as well as more shoot-from-the-hip rough rock. Throughout, the inscrutable Welshman has surrounded himself with able and distinguished cohorts, and has produced music of real challenge and quality.

His first solo efforts after the Velvet were effectively collaborations: Vintage Violence, with Garland Jeffreys and New York rock group Grinder's Switch; Church of Anthrax, with avant-garde titan Terry Riley; Academy in Peril, with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra. Also in much the same vein, Cale made Paris 1919 with backing by members of Little Feat. It wasn't until he signed to Island that his music became weird and abrasive, signifying a partial return to the chaos of his Velvet days.

His first such release was as a member of the June 1, 1974 project, a one-off concert documented on an LP and featuring Kevin Ayers, Brian Eno and Nico as well as Cale, Robert Wyatt and others. It's a wonderful album, with Cale taking a vocal on “Heartbreak Hotel” and elsewhere contributing viola and piano.

Cale emerged into pre-new wave weirdness with Fear, an aggressively wild record made with assistance from the likes of Eno and Roxy Musician Phil Manzanera. Clean production only heightens the anxiety inherent in Cale's voice and created by the skittering, modified guitar sounds. “Fear Is a Man's Best Friend” and “Gun” build a claustrophobically intense aura; quieter efforts like “Ship of Fools” only slightly diminish the queasiness level. A brilliant record full of neat surprises and great, unsettling songs.

Slow Dazzle adds Chris Spedding to the lineup and pursues some curious pathways: “Heartbreak Hotel,” recast as a haunted-house dirge; “Mr. Wilson,” an homage to the Beach Boys' Brian; “The Jeweller,” a recitation reminiscent of the Velvet's “The Gift.” More restrained, but no less entrancing than Fear.

Helen of Troy, featuring Phil Collins as well as Spedding and Eno (but not Manzanera), is a gripping, morbid collection of songs, including Jonathan Richman's “Pablo Picasso,” powered by Cale's commanding vocals and whining slide guitars, and “Leaving It All Up to You,” which has a reference to Sharon Tate that caused it to be removed from the album when first issued; it was subsequently replaced. A dark and pained album.

Animal Justice—three cuts on a 45 rpm 12-inch—features what remained of a touring band after half had quit in protest of a legendary onstage chicken-chopping incident. The EP's leadoff track (“Chicken Shit”) concerns that brouhaha; the other songs are a pointless version of Chuck Berry's “Memphis” and a stunning Cale original, “Hedda Gabbler.” Guts is an excellent collection of tracks from the three preceding LPs.

Sabotage/Live, recorded onstage at New York's CBGB in June 1979, presents almost all new material. The sound's just passable, and the album never jells. Honi Soit used an outside producer (Mike Thorne) for a change and a totally new band as well; some tracks are good, but it's not on a par with Cale's best. With Music for a New Society, Cale retreated from nakedly aggressive music and turned to a more orchestrated style that owes something to his early pre-punk efforts, like Paris 1919. Cale's lyrics, however, have rarely been as grim or violent as they are here. The arrangements prominently feature keyboards and the music effectively matches the darkly moody subject matter.

Caribbean Sunset is Cale's least interesting album to date. Even if the puzzlingly muddy self-production hadn't stifled everything but his jagged-edged vocals, the songs themselves are too flimsy to support his words or passion.

Perhaps sensing this, Cale released Caribbean Sunset back-to-back with another LP showcasing his in-concert strengths with the same band. Though he self-defeatingly begins and ends Comes Alive with half-assed studio efforts, that's the extent of the disappointment. The live core of the album consists of gripping versions of vintage material like "Fear" and "Leaving It All Up to You," a death-rattling "Heart-break Hotel" performed solo at the electric piano, a bouncily tongue-in-cheek "Waiting for the Man" as a tip of the hat to Lou Reed, and a couple of Sabotage Live songs minus the overly metallic sound that made them almost unlistenable on that LP. Cale should record all his material this way: live and with a solid band.

Artificial Intelligence has the solid band: a trio of James Young, Graham Dowdall and David Young. It also has Cale co-writing lyrics with journalist Ratso Slobman, whose Dylan fixation comes through clearly on the articulately verbose "Everytime the Dogs Bark" and other songs. Elsewhere, a mild island lilt suggests a well-read Jimmy Buffett. Moody and contained, but energetic and occasionally stimulating, A.I. is a reasonable if unspectacular addition to Cale's extensive catalogue.

After an extended recording hiatus, Cale reappeared in non-rock mode with the classically oriented Brian Eno-produced Words for the Dying. The album is divided into three sections: the 31-minute "Falklands Suite" (Cale singing four Dylan Thomas poems with a Russian orchestra and a Welsh choir), a two-part piano solo ("Songs Without Words") and "The Soul of Carmen Miranda" (a ghostly semi-pop collaboration with Eno). Though Words for the Dying doesn't equal Cale's most intense work, it's not meant to, and marks a welcome return to action for this perennially underrated artist [i/mf/hd]

See also Brian Eno, Lou Reed.

ROBERT CALVERT

See Hawkwind.

CAMOUFLAGE

Voices & Images (Atlantic) 1988 •
Methods of Silence (Atlantic) 1989 •
Meanwhile (Atlantic) 1991 ◊

Considering that British synth-pop has its roots in German prog-rock, there's something faintly just about this Hamburg trio's real-or-Memorex Depeche Mode imitation on Voices & Images. Although several songs do digress from the overtly familiar, there's little chance that anyone favorably disposed towards Speak & Spell (and unperturbed by the notion of hand-me-downs) won't like this.

The DM sound reappears frequently on Methods of Silence, but Camouflage adds other elements that are less specifically derivative. Every track incorporates guest guitar; electronic piano, oboe, sax and cello also make beneficial appearances. While the maturing trio's functional but mediocre songwriting (the lyrics, in English, rarely hit the mark) limits its ability to develop, the intriguing inter-generational leap of covering New Musik's "On Islands" at least suggests an alternate path to explore. [kl]

LUTHER CAMPBELL FEATURING THE 2 LIVE CREW

See 2 Live Crew.

STAN CAMPBELL

See Specials.

CAMPER VAN BEETHOVEN

Telephone Free Landslide Victory (Independent Project-Rough Trade) 1985 •
 Take The Skinheads Bowling EP (Pitch-A-Tent-Rough Trade) 1986
 Camper Van Beethoven II & III (Pitch-A-Tent-Rough Trade) 1986 •
 Camper Van Beethoven (Pitch-A-Tent-Rough Trade) 1986 •
 Vampire Can Mating Oven EP (Pitch-A-Tent-Rough Trade) 1987 •
 Our Beloved Revolutionary Sweetheart (Virgin) 1988 •
 Key Lime Pie (Virgin) 1989 •

MONKS OF DOOM

Soundtrack to the Film: "Breakfast on the Beach of Deception" (Pitch-A-Tent-Rough Trade) 1988
 The Cosmodemonic Telegraph Company (Pitch-A-Tent-Rough Trade) 1989 •

JONATHAN SEGEL

Storytelling (Pitch-A-Tent-Rough Trade) 1988 •

Because they understand why middle-Eastern ethnic music isn't really all that different from rock'n'roll, and because they realize that the indie-rock underground is every bit as stupid and petty as the mainstream, the mere existence of playfully eclectic post-hippie California surrealists Camper Van Beethoven validates the very concept of pop music. Unselfconsciously absorbing inspiration from any musical style that strikes them, and adding leader David Lowery's dizzy absurdist lyrics, Santa Cruz's Campers make records that suggest what the Grateful Dead might sound like if they had a sense of humor and knew how to write pop songs.

The band has gradually downplayed the giddy shifts in style that distinguished their early LPs, integrating their disparate influences into a more cohesive individual voice. Still, the Camper catalogue is a remarkably consistent one, showcasing a unique aesthetic that seemed to emerge fully developed on Telephone Free Landslide Victory.

In addition to the underground in-jokes "Take the Skinheads Bowling" (the EP of which pairs that college-radio hit with five non-LP tracks of varying length) and "Where the Hell is Bill?," Telephone includes a wooly cover of Black Flag's "Wasted" and self-explanatory instrumentals like "Border Ska," "Yanqui Go Home," "Balalaika Gap" and "Mao Reminisces About His Days in Southern China." The 20-track II & III features lots of country references and a hoedown version of Sonic Youth's "I Love Her All the Time," plus the raga-pop "Circles," the phony anti-rock protest anthem "No More Bullshit" and the delightful "ZZ Top Goes to Egypt."

Camper Van Beethoven displays a more integrated band style and an emerging political consciousness on "Good Guys & Bad Guys" and "Joe Stalin's Cadillac"; there's also a respectful cover of Pink Floyd's "Interstellar Overdrive" and "Une Fois," the most impressive Indian-cajun fusion in recent memory. (A 1987 CD combines Camper Van Beethoven and Vampire Can Mating Oven.)

Closing out the band's indie-label career, the six-song Vampire Can Mating Oven collects up some enjoyable odds and ends, including a jolly remake of Ringo Starr's "Photograph."

Judging by Our Beloved Revolutionary Sweetheart, Camper Van's move to the majors didn't dampen the combo's iconoclasm, and the addition of a sympathetic producer (Dennis Herring) has made for a more ambitious sonic palette. Highlights include the catchy, self-deflating "Never Go Back" (previewed on the Vampire Can Mating Oven EP), the picturesque "Eye of Fatima," the Zep-like "Waka" and an oldie, "O Death," borrowed from '60s kindred spirits Kaleidoscope.

Key Lime Pie—the group's final album prior to an acrimonious breakup—is a decidedly bittersweet swansong, trading the exuberance of prior outings for a crushing sense of disillusionment. Still, the record's gloomy vibe makes for sporadically interesting listening on "When I Win the Lottery," the appropriately titled closer ("Come on Darkness") and particularly the stunning "Sweethearts," a resigned assessment of the Reagan era. A cute remake of Status Quo's 1968 "Pictures of Matchstick Men" seems to have wandered in from another album.

The mostly instrumental first Monks of Doom LP is a side project featuring three Campers—guitarist Greg Lisher, bassist Victor Krummenacher and drummer Chris Pedersen—and Ophelias guitarist David Immerglück (who became an end-time Camper) playing mildly psychedelic improvisational guitar rock, with occasional forays into jazzy ethnicism. The more song-oriented Cosmodemonic Telegraph Company is a big improvement over its predecessor, with the Monks having developed a distinct identity apart from their parent bands. Drawing on a seemingly bottomless well of mainstream-rock and avant-garde clichés, they produce personalized art-rock that's both artful and rocking, with covers of Eugene Chadbourne and the Residents that are conceptually consistent with the quartet's surprisingly concise originals.

Longtime Camper violinist Jonathan Segel—who left the band during the early stages of Key Lime Pie—released the 28-track Storytelling double-LP while still a member of the group. The leisurely song cycle moves easily between quiet folk tunes, gentle psychedelia and flat-out prog-rock, with the multi-instrumentalist getting musical help from all four Monks of Doom and various other San Francisco scenesters. Though Segel is only a passable vocalist, his matter-of-factly gee-whiz lyrics are functional, and the music makes for fine late-night/pre-dawn listening. [hd]

See also Eugene Chadbourne, Harm Farm, Ophelias.

CAN

Monster Movie (nr/UA) 1969 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Soundtracks (nr/UA) 1970 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Tago Mago (nr/UA) 1971 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Ege Bamyasi (UA) 1972 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Future Days (UA) 1973 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Limited Edition (nr/UA) 1974

Soon Over Babaluma (UA) 1974 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Landed (nr/Virgin) 1975 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Unlimited Edition (nr/Caroline) 1976 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Opener 1971–1974 (nr/Sunset) 1976

Flow Motion (nr/Virgin) 1976 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Saw Delight (nr/Virgin) 1977 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Out of Reach (Peters Int'l) 1978 ●

Cannibalism (nr/UA) 1978

Can (nr/Laser) 1979 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Cannibalism 1 (Ger. Spoon) 1980 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Incandescence 1969–1977 (nr/Virgin) 1981

Delay 1968 (Ger. Spoon) 1981 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ●

Onlyou [tape] (Ger. Pure Freude) 1982

Prehistoric Future—June, 1968 [tape] (Fr. Tago Mago) 1984

Rite Time (nr/Mercury) 1989 ●

Cannibalism 2 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ◊

Cannibalism 3 (Spoon-Mute-Restless Retro) 1990 ◊

HOLGER CZUKAY

Movies (nr/EMI) 1980

On the Way to the Peak of Normal (nr/EMI) 1982

Der Osten Ist Rot (nr/Virgin) 1984

Rome Remains Rome (nr/Virgin) 1987 ●

Radio Wave Surfer (nr/Virgin) 1991 ●

HOLGER CZUKAY/ROLF DAMMERS

Canaxis (Ger. Spoon) 1982

A German group that arose during the psychedelic movement of 1968 from jazz, avant-garde and rock sources, Can (essentially Holger Czukay, Irmin Schmidt, Jaki Liebezeit, Michael Karoli) developed (and perfected) electronic collage in rock music and actively absorbed a number of musical traditions into their eclectic work. In addition to providing an example of individualistic behavior remote from commercial music, Can's output influenced a number of more modern figures, including Pete Shelley and John Lydon, while Can's Holger Czukay has worked with musicians as disparate as Eurythmics and Jah Wobble.

Monster Movie is a decent 1969 psychedelic album that reflects the influence of early Pink Floyd, and displays the sparse, repeating percussion patterns that became a trademark. Synth and fuzzbox guitar wail over Liebezeit's drums and Czukay's bass. As with most of Can's later releases, vocals are present but secondary.

By Soundtracks, Can had refined its sound, bringing the rhythms further to the foreground and working guitar and synthesizer around them. Several tracks feature impressive psychedelic guitar textures; others tone the guitar down and concentrate on rhythm. The addition of Japanese singer Kenji "Damo" Suzuki (replacing the highly inappropriate American vocalist Malcolm Mooney) leads to several rather beautiful songs here.

Can burst free of its formalism on the double-album

Tago Mago, kicking out the jams on the nearly structureless "Aumgn," seventeen minutes of texture and eerie mood. Other tracks feature long improvisations built around hypnotic rhythm patterns, backwards vocals, tape effects and other innovations. (Ironically, the LP's shortest track, the four-minute "Mushroom," has become something of a post-punk staple.) At this point, Can began making the albums that would wield enormous influence on '80s groups as diverse as the Fall, Einstürzende Neubauten and Zoviet France.

Ege Bamyasi is a tighter, more sophisticated version of Tago Mago, though it lacks some of the earlier album's sense of excitement. The group integrates textures, rhythms and experiments into an almost jazz-like form on the two longer pieces, while also producing more concise songs of lyrical beauty like "Sing Swan Song" and "I'm So Green." One of Can's best.

Future Days is so laid back and sparsely beautiful that it could have been recorded in California rather than Germany. (Indeed, one of the four lengthy tracks is entitled "Bel Air.") Liebezeit's patterns are quicker and even more in the foreground, but played with great restraint. As Schmidt's synthesizer washes like ocean air, Karoli either twangs and picks guitar in the foreground or drones off in the distance. Mellow yet hardly boring, there's plenty going on here if you listen for it. Suzuki left following Future Days, and Karoli and Schmidt took on vocal responsibilities.

The quartet regained its abrasive edge on Soon Over Babaluma, which introduces reggae-like rhythms and Karoli's sawing violin. "Splash" uses insistent drums and distorted lead guitar, while "Chain Reaction" and "Quantum Physics," which jointly fill the second side, improvise guitar around quirky drums and all kinds of synthesizer noises.

Following the darkly perverse Landed, Can exposed a fascination with non-Western musics on Limited Edition, which unveils several pieces in the Ethnological Forgery Series, more of which appear on Unlimited Edition, Flow Motion and Can. The inclusion of Rosko Gee and Reebop Kwaku Baah in the group gave a Jamaican voodoo flair to Saw Delight that prefigured the reggae absorption of the Clash, the Police and other groups.

A relative degree of popular success with "I Want More" from Flow Motion strained the group to the point where they opted to break up. They have, however, reunited occasionally. Recorded in 1986 as a premature 20th anniversary commemoration, Rite Time finds Can again working with Mooney, fitting him into their sophisticated atmospherics as well as can be expected (i.e., hideously).

Opener and the two-disc Cannibalism both anthologize work from 1968 to 1973 (containing performances by both Mooney and Suzuki); the latter features five tracks in re-edited versions and liner notes by Pete Shelley, in which he credits Karoli as a pivotal influence. Cannibalism 1 is the same record minus two tracks. Delay 1968 features heretofore-unreleased work by the original group (meaning Mooney) from 1968/69, a weird mixture of accessible (but spacey) guitar psychedelia, fairly straight rock and funky soul vamps (!). Incandescence (enough with the corny puns already!) is also a compilation.

While Irmin Schmidt has issued a stack of would-be soundtrack albums on his own, of all the Canmen, Holger Czukay's solo career (including recent joint projects with David Sylvian) has proven the most internationally prominent as well as the most artistically inspiring. He first continued his tape collage experiments on the excellent Movies and then On the Way to the Peak of Normal, the latter with Jah Wobble guesting (Canaxis, which actually dates from 1969, consists of two long pieces of environmental mood music incorporating various ethnic components.)

Der Osten Ist Rot (The East Is Red), with Liebezeit and Conny Plank helping out, takes a lighthearted and often amusing tack, splicing found tapes to fairly straightforward songs that run the gamut from cabaret crooning to demented instrumentals. A wonderfully foolish excursion with serious undercurrents of political satire.

The guest sidemen on Czukay's winningly loopy Rome Remains Rome include Liebezeit and Karoli, making it virtually a Can reunion record, as well as Wobble and his associate, Olli Morland. Playing everything from guitar to french horn to radio, Czukay takes his usual jaundiced view, deflating musical convention ("Hey Baba Reebop" puts a hysterical electro twist on big-band swing) as he experiments with sounds, including a lot of vocals (some in English, many sung by a chameleon-like female chorus) this time. (The CD includes tracks from Der Osten Ist Rot) [sg/vsl]

See also Eurhythmics, David Sylvian, Jah Wobble.

CAPTAIN BEEFHEART AND THE MAGIC BAND

- Safe as Milk (Kama Sutra) 1967 (Buddah) 1970 ●
- Dropout Boogie (nr/Buddah) 1967
- Strictly Personal (Blue Thumb) 1968
- Trout Mask Replica (Straight) 1969 (Reprise) 1970 ●
- Lick My Decals Off, Baby (Straight) 1970 (Reprise) 1970 (Enigma Retro) 1989 ●
- Mirror Man (Buddah) 1970 + 1974 (nr/Demon) 1986 ●
- Clear Spot (Reprise) 1972
- Unconditionally Guaranteed (Mercury) 1974 (Blue Plate) 1990 ●
- Bluejeans & Moonbeams (Mercury) 1974 (Blue Plate) 1990 ●
- Shiny Beast (Bat Chain Puller) (Warner Bros.) 1978 (Enigma Retro) 1990 ●
- Doc at the Radar Station (Virgin) 1980 ●
- Ice Cream for Crow (Virgin-Epic) 1982 (Blue Plate) 1990 ●
- The Legendary A&M Sessions EP (A&M) 1984
- Safe as Milk/Mirror Man (nr/Castle Comm.) 1988 ●

CAPTAIN BEEFHEART

- The Spotlight Kid (Reprise) 1972
- The Captain Beefheart File (nr/Pye) 1977

CAPTAIN BEEFHEART WITH FRANK ZAPPA AND THE MOTHERS

- Bongo Fury (Discreet) 1975 (Rykodisc) 1989 ●

VARIOUS ARTISTS

- Fast'n'Bulbous (nr/Imaginary) 1988 ●

Possessor of a five-octave vocal range, fluent on saxophone and harmonica, intuitively musical enough to compose for, play (after a fashion) and even teach other instruments so as to enable sidemen to function in his rarefied musical world, Captain Beefheart (alias Don Van Vliet) is one of rock's genuine geniuses. He's also an accomplished poet, sculptor and painter. Starting with a mixture of blues and rock, Beefheart has dismembered and reassembled rhythms, song structure, harmony and tonality, adding in quantities of free jazz—all without getting academic, flashy or self-consciously pompous about it.

Beefheart's awesome yet idiosyncratic (as well as groundbreaking) talent has deeply influenced bands like Devo, Pere Ubu, the Residents, Public Image and others, each in a different way. Bridging the worlds of free-form jazz and modern rock, Beefheart has demolished conventions and paved the way for much of rock's recent adventurousness.

Awarded a two-single A&M contract as the grand prize in a Vox battle of the bands, Beefheart—from Southern California's Mojave Desert—made the first a regional hit with a footstomping version of Bo Diddley's "Diddy Wah Diddy," but A&M judged his album demos too unsettling to keep him on the roster. (Nearly 20 years later, the two original 45s plus one hitherto unissued track were packaged as The Legendary A&M Sessions; the producer, who also wrote one song, was David Gates, founder-to-be of pap-rockers Bread.)

Another label gave him a shot and, with 19-year-old guitar wiz Ry Cooder, Beefheart spewed out Safe as Milk, which cannily redefined what white boys could do with the blues, not to mention rock'n'roll. Although Buddha released it, the label—then best known as the purveyors of the bubblegum sounds of the 1910 Fruit-gum Co. et al.—evidently wasn't thrilled about it. Cooder departed just in time to force the cancellation of an appearance at the fabled Monterey Pop Festival.

Beefheart got another record deal with a hip, maverick independent label and recorded Strictly Personal, an even punchier and more irreverent version of what he'd essayed on Safe as Milk. But the LP was remixed while he was away on a European tour; Beefheart was understandably disgusted by the results. At this remove, however, the silly effects added without his consent merely date the record a bit; looking past that, it's virtually the equal of its more celebrated predecessor.

Beefheart may have felt like his third strike had been thrown while he wasn't looking, but along came childhood friend and former (albeit briefly) bandmate Frank Zappa, who'd wangled a custom label deal that allowed him to offer Beefheart complete creative control. What popped out was Trout Mask Replica, generally regarded as his first masterpiece. The minimalist rock blossomed, mated at times with free jazz. (Between cuts, he can faintly be heard telling visitors that he calls it "bush music.") The lyrics (and straight-up poetry) received, and warranted, increasing prominence. Decals was a consolidation of artistic gains that suffers only in comparison to Trout Mask. Both attracted enough attention that Buddha brought out Mirror Man, an LP consisting of four extended live tracks (from '65) that was derided as a sub-par exploitation move. Regardless, it's damn good stuff, and didn't do much exploiting, either: all three albums were commercial stiffs. (Two songs from Mirror Man were later re-recorded for Strictly Personal.)

The Spotlight Kid reverted to a simpler, bluester sound (à la the first two LPs), though sonically enriched by the Captain's subsequent explorations. Further changes and commercial pressures resulted in Clear Spot, which sported a more stylized, heavy-rock style (varied by an excellent, if uncharacteristic, Memphis-style soul number).

On the other hand, Unconditionally Guaranteed and Bluejeans & Moonbeams are even more simplified, sometimes to the point of inanity, and the musicians on the records don't seem to have a clue about Beefheart or his music. (The second—allegedly out-takes from the first—is actually better.) He made some money for a change and won new European fans, but some of the faithful felt he'd sold out.

Beefheart cut an album called Bat Chain Puller for Virgin, but legal problems prevented its release. With a new band that included ex-Mothers of Invention trombonist Bruce Fowler, he signed to Warners and released Shiny Beast, which incorporated much of the material first cut for Bat Chain Puller (and therefore used that name as a subtitle). It's a progression from Decals, as if the intervening albums had never happened, and stands as one of his best. The words are more direct than on Decals; the music smoother and more orchestral.

He then proceeded to top himself with Doc at the Radar Station. A minor shift in the band had toughened the sound, and the LP combined his continuing refinement with a touch of Clear Spot's hard-nosed attack.

Beefheart went still further with Ice Cream for Crow, the height of his career's most sustained upward creative swing, despite (because of?) a near-total lineup turnover right after the recording of Doc. Crow is Beefheart at his most distinctively and beautifully melodic, his most frightening and his most danceable. And it's apparently his musical swan song. The painter/sculptor has made the sad but understandable decision that visual, not audio, art is his best means of support—a depressing comment on the record business and our culture.

Fast'n'Bulbous offers twelve (fourteen on CD) versions of the Captain's songs, by the Scientists, Sonic Youth, XTC, That Petrol Emotion, the Membranes and eight lesser lights. As with all such tributes, the danger is that contributors often haven't a clue how to do justice to the subject, and wind up trivializing the artist being canonized; in this case, it's true in spades. Some reduce Beefheart to snappy garage rock, some (like XTC) just simulate the originals with the benefit of better sound. A good idea on paper, it lacks vision and effort in execution. [jg]

CAPTAIN SENSIBLE

Women and Captains First (nr/A&M) 1982

The Power of Love (nr/A&M) 1983

A Day in the Life of... Captain Sensible (A&M) 1984

One Christmas Catalogue EP (nr/A&M) 1984

Sensible Singles (nr/A&M) 1984

Revolution Now (nr/Deltec) 1989 •

CAPTAIN SENSIBLE/ BROTHERHOOD OF LIZARDS

Smash It Up Part 4 EP (nr/Deltec) 1990

When not playing guitar and keyboards in the Damned, the good Captain (Ray Burns to his parents) spent the early '80s making lighthearted hit records with producer Tony Mansfield. His two best weird'n' wonderful chart-toppers—the joke-rapping "Wot" and "Happy Talk" (from the musical South Pacific)—are included on Women and Captains First, alongside other equally ridiculous concepts ranging from country-western to cabaret. Aided and abetted by such divergent talents as Robyn Hitchcock and female vocal trio Dolly Mixture, Sensible's homely singing is ingratiating, if not always on key.

The Power of Love is less varied and novelty-filled, but nonetheless contains a few subtler gems: "It's Hard to Believe I'm Not" and "Secrets," both co-written with Hitchcock, "Stop the World" and "The Power of Love," all distinguished by Sensible's engaging vocals and silly/serious lyrics.

In a vain attempt to introduce Sensible to America, A Day in the Life compiles tracks from both English albums (plus a previously non-LP single) and has most of what you would want to hear by the lad. But you should also be aware of the seasonal EP, One Christmas Catalogue, which came complete with a plastic Santa beard and, amidst three great originals, Sensible's puzzling nearly straight version of Frankie Goes to Hollywood's "Relax." For completists, there's also Sensible Singles, a thirteen-cut collection that largely overlaps the albums.

Resuming his solo career in the late '80s, Sensible reached some sort of artistic peak on the excellent Revolution Now, an all-new album of originals (some co-written by Cleaner from Venus/Brotherhood of Lizards' Martin Newell) recorded with such comrades as Rat Scabies, Henry Badowski and Paul Gray. Although hampered a bit by Sensible's minimalist singing and the obvious use of synthesizers where real instruments would have sounded better, the record is still full of catchy melodies and nearly serious left-field lyrics. (Not to mention spoken-word TV bites that help express Sensible's chagrin at modern consumerism.) There isn't a bad song here, and the best ones—"Missing the Boat," "The Toys Take Over," "Revolution Now," "Phone-In"—cover amazing stylistic ground with ease and flair.

[i]

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY

See Wreckless Eric.

CARBON

See Elliott Sharp.

CARCASS

Reek of Putrefaction (nr/Earache) 1988 •
The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1989 •
Symphonies of Sickness (nr/Earache) 1989
 (Earache-Relativity) 1990 •

Although thought to be a Napalm Death side-project, Liverpool's Carcass was actually formed by guitarist Bill Steer, drummer Ken Owen and an Indian vocalist named Sanjiv in 1985, well before Steer joined Napalm. Participating in both bands more or less simultaneously, he and Owen were joined in '87 by bassist/biology student Jeff Walker, whose anatomy studies play a large role in his night job: claiming to be "particularly interested in the digestive system," his lyrics and album artwork are among the most revoltingly graphic imaginable. (For what it's worth, the three are devout vegetarians.)

Reek of Putrefaction contains sixteen tracks of the trio's distinctive "medi-core": skull-pulverizing riffs, cardiac-arrest time-changes, guttural vocals and charming titles like "Vomited Anal Tract," "Feast on Dismembered Carnage" and the fitting "Psychopathologist." Steer left Napalm Death in mid-'89 to concentrate on Carcass, and the ensuing Symphonies of Sickness contains ten tracks ("Excoriating Abdominal Emanation," "Cadaveric Incubator of Endoparasites," "Crepitating Bowel Erosion") of even more brutal grind. The two albums are combined onto one CD.

See also Napalm Death.

[ja]

BELINDA CARLISLE

Belinda (IRS) 1986 •
Heaven on Earth (MCA) 1987 •
Runaway Horses (MCA) 1989 •

Following the breakup of the Go-Go's, Belinda Carlisle stuck with guitarist Charlotte Caffey and recorded a mixed-up solo album whose cover shows the newly glamorized singer striking a stylish Cyd Charisse pose. Inside Belinda, however, the mock-girl groupisms, misbegotten Motown take-offs and lush quasi-Ronstadt rock are easy on the ears but utterly lacking in conviction or charm. Carlisle's voice was never the Go-Go's' strongest feature; with training, her skills have improved over the years, but she still isn't very appealing. Dull material and unimaginative production adds little to her first bid for acceptance as an adult artist.

Carlisle's second album—an absurd but stylistically focused big-budget studio concoction on which hit-bound rock-pop production numbers like "I Get Weak" and "Heaven Is a Place on Earth" mingle with such bizarrities as a lame cover of Cream's "I Feel Free"—turned her into a huge, meaningless star. The limits of Carlisle's voice are obvious on some songs; producer-mastermind Rick Nowels' slim repertoire of ideas (mainly loud electric guitars thrown against synthesized strings and heavenly backing chorus) is also a problem. The album's only hint of wit is Carlisle's credit for air guitar.

Again directed by Nowels, Runaway Horses is another hollow melodrama of contrivance and cliché. The record's calculated hooks are hard to resist, but Carlisle's studied delivery—check the exuberant title track, the pseudo-Latin "La Luna" and the idiotic "Leave a Light On" (to which George Harrison adds inappropriate slide guitar)—has all the come-on conviction of phone sex. Next stop: the Go-Go's reunion!

See also Go-Go's.

[i]

CARMEL

Carmel EP (nr/Red Flame) 1982
The Drum Is Everything (Warner Bros.) 1984 •
The Falling (nr/London) 1986 •
Everybody's Got a Little ... Soul (nr/London) 1987 •

Set Me Free (nr/London) 1989 •

Collected (nr/London) 1990 •

Brassy belter Carmel McCourt and her two-man band (drummer Gerry Darby and stand-up bassist Jim Paris), plus various organists, singers, drummers and hornmen, make the Mike Thorne-produced The Drum Is Everything a joyous and raucous outing that has a bit in common with nouveau jazz-pop crooners like Sade, but is far more adventurous and ambitious in scope. "More, More, More" and "Willow Weep for Me" are inspiring, near-gospel outbursts of enthusiasm; "Tracks of My Tears" (no, not that one) and "Stormy Weather" (yes, that one) show a bluesier, more reserved side that isn't as appealing in this setting. Carmel doesn't modulate all that well—for her, singing is a full-blooded pastime with no room for pussyfooting—and tends to overpower the more subtly played songs.

Using four different producers (including Brian Eno and Chris Porter), The Falling runs a similar gamut, from the sinuous blues of "I'm Not Afraid of You" to the boisterous chorus-and-horns ebullience of "Let Me Know" to "Mercy," a nothing song electrified by a bravura vocal performance. While Carmel's improved control is a plus, even the sparing use of electronic percussion seems like a serious breach of stylistic integrity. And the syncopated deconstruction of Randy Newman's "Mama Told Me Not to Come" is just too weird.

Carmel reunited with Thorne for the trio's glossed-up third album, which gives synthesizers a firm toehold in the arrangements. Taking a disappointing (and tense-sounding) detour towards urbane pop, McCourt allows guest keyboardist Ugo Delmirani to share in the songwriting, resulting in blander material with obvious commercial aspirations. If not quite a fatal artistic concession (the schmaltzy "Nothing Good," which she can't even sing, comes darn close to it), the misbegotten Everybody's Got a Little . . . Soul lacks most of what made its robust predecessors so rewarding.

Further removed from the early records' unaffected simplicity, the uneven Set Me Free lifts any remaining barriers to modern technology and slathers on the drum programs, MIDI processors and synthetic strings. With Delmirani thankfully out of the picture, McCourt and a variety of collaborators deliver a reasonably good set of songs, individually produced by Eno, Thorne, Pete Wingfield and Jim Parris (new spelling). Singing over a busy rush of danceable jazz-pop-rock, a seemingly reinvigorated McCourt comfortably throws her voice into high gear, cutting through the arrangements with ease. But putting on the melodramatic chanteuse act for songs like the grim "God Put Your Hand on Me" still doesn't suit her at all. The new Carmel may not be as wonderful as the old Carmel, but Set Me Free provides reason enough to keep listening.

The Collected compilation—a fair album summary that leans a bit too heavily towards Set Me Free material—has the added attraction of one alternate version and a duet Carmel sang with Johnny Hallyday on his 1987 LP. [i]

CARNEY-HILD-KRAMER

Happiness Finally Came to Them (Shimmy-Disc) 1987

What happens when uninhibited musicians get together for a creative brainstorm? Ralph Carney (sax, guitar) is a veteran of Tin Huey and the Swollen Monkeys. Daved Hild (vocals, drums) has percussionized with David Thomas. Kramer is the ex-Shockabilly bassist/keyboardist who runs Shimmy-Disc and plays in Bongwater and other groups. With such guests as Michael Cudahy (guitar; Christmas), the trio has a blast on Happiness, writing and playing up a raucous storm of flighty fun, arty seriousness and utter rubbish. That it's nearly impossible to tell which is which may be this one-off album's greatest achievement. [i]

See also Bongwater, Shockabilly, Swollen Monkeys, Tin Huey.

PAUL CARRACK

Nightbird (nr/Vertigo) 1980

Suburban Voodoo (Epic) 1982 •

One Good Reason (Chrysalis) 1987 •

Ace Mechanic (nr/Demon) 1987

The Carrack Collection (Chrysalis) 1988 •

Groove Approved (Chrysalis) 1989 •

One of rock's more circuitous success stories: Carrack was the lead-singing keyboardist in Ace, a pub-rock outfit before "pub-rock" became a rock press subgenre—strictly background music for soaking up suds. Ace hadn't the faintest idea what to do when Carrack's catchy (if banal) "How Long" became an international hit in 1975, and proved it with three LPs of boring laid-backism. Carrack hung on through Ace's dissolution and his all-too-pat first solo LP, Nightbird. He got a real boost, though, when Squeeze hired him to replace Jools Holland. It was only for the East Side Story album—just one Carrack lead vocal, but that's on "Tempted," one of Squeeze's most popular numbers. The song became a Carrack calling card, too.

That LP also brought him into contact with the Elvis Costello/Nick Lowe axis (EC produced the Squeeze LP, Lowe had produced Elvis, both were managed by Jake Riviera). Carrack and Lowe then formed Noise to Go, a Rockpilih arrangement in which the two alternated top billing. No surprise, then, that Suburban Voodoo sounds like the souled-up flipside of Nick the Knife—if anything, it's better. Yet it succeeds because of Lowe's production and composing presence, which complements Carrack's excellent voice with the kind of pop smarts that bring out his best.

Carrack next found employment with Mike & the Mechanics (Mike Rutherford's extra-Genesis sideline), and wound up singing strangely anonymous-sounding lead on that group's big hit, "Silent Running." This exposure got Carrack a 1987 touring-band job with Roger Waters after Pink Floyd's split.

Half of One Good Reason is decent-to-good, and the rest is mediocre-to-poor. Produced by former Hall and Oates overseer Christopher Neil, it's got more radio-music slickness than Carrack's had in years, but at the cost of some identity. (Although Carrack is clearly to blame for the demolition of "When You Walk in the Room.") It did yield a genuine not-bad pop hit ("Don't Shed a Tear").

Groove Approved is a pretty fair title: lots of good old-fashioned R&B grooves, often garnished with Carrack's tasty Hammond organ licks. Unfortunately, the synthetic drums sometimes slicken or stiffen the rhythm too much (they just don't get greasy, y'know?). Despite such co-writers as Lowe, Chris Difford, John Wesley Harding and ex-Doobie Michael McDonald, the songs aren't unforgettable, but they're mostly painless. Bassist T-Bone Wolk, with whom Carrack co-authored three tracks, produced.

The fourteen-track Demon compilation samples everything (Ace, Squeeze, M + the Ms, solo) Carrack recorded before signing with Chrysalis; that label's compilation covers the same stuff, but less of it. [jg]

See also Squeeze.

JOE "KING" CARRASCO AND EL MOLINO

Joe "King" Carrasco and El Molino (Lisa) 1978

Tex-Mex Rock-Roll [tape] (ROIR) 1989

JOE "KING" CARRASCO AND THE CROWNS

Joe "King" Carrasco and the Crowns (Hannibal) 1980

Party Safari EP (Hannibal) 1981

Synapse Gap (Mundo Total) (MCA) 1982

Party Weekend (MCA) 1983

Tales from the Crypt [tape] (ROIR) 1984

Bordertown (nr/Big Beat) 1984 •

Viva San Antone EP (nr/Big Beat) 1985

Royal, Loyal & Live (Rio's Royal Texacali) 1990 •

JOE KING CARRASCO Y LAS CORONAS

Bandido Rock (Rounder) 1987 •

Austin's Joe "King" Carrasco (né Teutsch) grew up in the Lone Star state under the spell of Tex-Mex border music. El Molino, his first band, straddled this tradition (with horns and marimba) and rock (with Doug Sahn's keyboard player, Augie Meyers, and songs like "Rock Esta Noche"). El Molino's only album (reissued a decade later on cassette as Tex-Mex Rock-Roll) is pleasant enough, but sounds pale compared to what followed.

Whether influenced by new wave or reverting to more adolescent taste, Carrasco traded in El Molino for the Crowns. This no-nonsense backing trio, dominated by Kris Cummings' cheesy organ, is built for speed. The Crowns' debut album touches on rockabilly ("One More Time"), polka ("Federales") and border influences ("Buena," "Caca de Vaca"). Their forte, though, is performing "96 Tears" under a variety of thin guises, all of them delightful ("Let's Get Pretty," "Betty's World," you name it). The tempos are revved-up punk, the feeling, Southwestern mestizo. (The Stiff LP has two numbers not on the American album, but Hannibal's release has three songs not on the English version, and a funnier cover as well.)

Party Safari is a four-song EP further displaying Carrasco's cultural dementia; the Crowns' next album, Synapse Gap, finds them only slightly more subdued. Besides re-recording two of Party Safari's songs, Carrasco dabbles in reggae rhythms and somehow got Michael Jackson (!) to sing along on "Don't Let a Woman (Make a Fool Out of You)."

In a last-ditch effort to sell out (well, to sell a few records at least), Carrasco made Party Weekend, a non-stop heap o' fun. Richard Gottelher produced it, and tunes like "Let's Go" and "Burnin' It Down" (not to mention a spiffy remake of "Buena") perfectly crystallize all of the group's strengths. Murderously infectious and upbeat—attitudinally the Southwest's answer to the Ramones—Party Weekend seemed perfectly designed to introduce the world to Carrasco's abundant talent and charm. But it didn't take off, and so Carrasco unceremoniously returned from his safari in the majors.

Joe's next release was the tape-only Tales from the Crypt, a marvelous set of demos from 1979 with embryonic (read: raw and exciting) versions of many of Carrasco's best tunes, from "Let's Get Pretty" to "Caca de Vaca" to "Federales." Although not intended as such, it's an ideal introduction to a world of boundless spirit and infectious fun.

By Bordertown, Carrasco's act is getting kind of, er, familiar: too many of the songs employ not only the same chords and melody, but a lot of 'em stick to the same Spanglicized rhyming patterns. Adding to the fatigue is a new-found political sensibility, yielding well-intentioned bores like "Who Buys the Guns" and "Current Events (Are Making Sense)." If you haven't been following the Carrasco saga for long, Bordertown is as good as any of his prior records; however, those with a large collection can survive without it.

Bandido Rock finds the increasingly politicized Carrasco (note retitled band) mouthing sentiments like "Juarez and Zapata/Stood for love of the people." Just a glance at the album's song list—including "Fuera Yanqui" and "Hey Gringo 'No Pasaran'"—confirms suspicions of monomania. Too bad, because the band, now mostly accordion-led, still sounds fine. But with only three out of ten songs in a yanqui 4/4, Bandido Rock is strictly for the musically converted and/or anyone ready to follow Joe into Nicaragua.

Enjoyment of Royal, Loyal & Live—recorded with a loud, tight quartet in early '89—has no such prerequisites. The seriously sweaty rock'n'roll show begins weakly with "Hey Joe" and that unofficial Texas anthem, "96 Tears," but then shifts into high gear as Carrasco—surging with contagious enthusiasm—delivers an impressive program of mostly new material. (The handful of JKC oldies are, thankfully, items like "Mañana" and "Parti [sic] Weekend" rather than more obvious and overplayed numbers.) Amid greater stylistic and rhythmic diversity than Carrasco's records usually muster, Bandido Rock alumnus Marcelo Gauna (accordion/keyboards) and Tom Cruz, a piercingly good lead guitarist, provide ample instrumental flavor. Joe King does the rest. [si/i]

CARS

The Cars (Elektra) 1978 •

Candy-O (Elektra) 1979 •

Panorama (Elektra) 1980 •

Shake It Up (Elektra) 1981 •

Heartbeat City (Elektra) 1984 •

Greatest Hits (Elektra) 1985 •

Door to Door (Elektra) 1987 •

RIC OCASEK

Beatitude (Geffen) 1982

This Side of Paradise (Geffen) 1986 •

GREG HAWKES

Niagara Falls (Passport) 1983

ELLIOT EASTON

Change No Change (Elektra) 1985

BEN ORR

The Lace (Elektra) 1986 •

For an example of shifting perceptions, consider the Cars. When their debut LP appeared in 1978, the Boston-based quintet was tagged as a prime commercial and critical prospect of the emerging post-punk phenomenon called new wave. In other words, they were cool and potentially popular. Then, presto! Upon release of an album, the Cars became an immediate smash and entered the ranks of platinum-sellers, where they remained. Quickly, they lost all artistic credibility among critics, despite their remarkable consistency on disc.

The Cars changed little after that first record established the ground rules. On their debut, singer/songwriter Ric Ocasek pursues the trail of ironic, sometimes wistful romanticism blazed by David Bowie and especially Bryan Ferry. "Good Times Roll," "My Best Friend's Girl" and other tunes contradict blithe surfaces with nervous undercurrents. As sparsely produced by Roy Thomas Baker, virtually interchangeable lead singers Ocasek and bassist Ben Orr ride a slick, pulsing current generated by Elliot Easton's skittish guitar, Greg Hawkes' poised synths and ex-Modern Lover David Robinson's booming drums. Here, and on subsequent albums, the alluring glibness serves as a gateway to underlying emotional anguish.

Candy-O's main flaw is that it offers the same accomplished style. Emotions are more directly expressed on the title track and the frankly sentimental "It's All I Can Do," but the polish remains. "Let's Go" and "Dangerous Type" express a muted ambivalence that allows the Cars to continue pleasing superficial listeners. Panorama tampers with the formula slightly, though not enough to jeopardize the band's enormous popularity. Many tunes are murkier and less immediate, giving greater play to the creeping desperation that permeates Ocasek's writing. More unsettling, though still highly listenable.

Shake It Up is the lightest album in the Cars' collection. The title track comes as close as they ever got to a conventional good-time tune, and others are less haunting than you might like Ocasek's songs to be. Highlight: the feverish, blatantly Roxyesque "This Could Be Love." Then the Cars took a group vacation.

For his first solo album, Ocasek enlisted Hawkes, handpicked musicians from various semi-underground bands (Bad Brains, New Models, Ministry, etc.) and created a moody collection of stimulating but only semi-commercial new songs. Beatitude bears an unavoidable resemblance to the Cars' sound, but the prevalence of synthesizer over guitar and an avoidance of choppy, driving rhythms make it different enough. While several Cars tracks have worked similar languid terrain ("Since You're Gone" on Shake It Up and "You Wear Those Eyes" on Panorama are two), Ocasek's solo approach is subtler and texturally richer; his lyrics here are also exemplary. Best track: "Jimmy Jimmy," a sympathetic portrait of a troubled teen.

Niagara Falls confirms keyboardist Hawkes' role in shaping the Cars' instrumental sound, but it's mighty dull fare all the same. Take away the band's lyrics, vocals and tension and you get this sort of muzak.

After that dalliance, the Cars reconvened for Heartbeat City, a more substantial LP than Shake It Up and the band's most commercially potent record to date. The disc yielded no less than three major hits: the dreamy "Drive," the ebullient "You Might Think" and "Magic," which might best be described as the Cars meet the Electric Light Orchestra. The lyrics are Ocasek's usual neurotic doodlings, though he shows more compassion for his "lost generation" characters than before.

Buoyed by that album's stellar performance, the Cars took another solo break. Easton's Change No Change is a minor work to be sure, but a surprisingly good record nonetheless. A more immediate and electric record than the band would ever dare make, it contains some pithy harmonies, some snarling boogie and even a Costello soundalike. Irrepressible Jules Shear co-wrote all the tunes.

Joined by co-producer/drummer Chris Hughes (ex-Ants), Ocasek drafted another set of famous friends (including most of his bandmates, guitarists Steve Stevens, Tom Verlaine and G.E. Smith) to help him imitate the Cars some more on This Side of Paradise. The man's stylistic consistency is indeed amazing. Orr's tepid record is also Cars-like, but with a lighter, more vocal-oriented feel and a warmly non-mechanical pop approach. That's not to say the songs—co-written by Orr and Diane Grey Page—are any good, but The Lace is nice and harmless.

The final Cars album, Door to Door, which Ocasek wrote and produced, is likable but irrelevant. (The group's audience evidently agreed: it was the only Cars LP to fall short of a million sales.) Ocasek has never before allowed this much noisy guitar rock to corrupt the chilly tension of the Cars' formula; the overenthusiastic intrusion on the group's familiar sound is noticeable but not unpleasant. [jy/i]

See also Jonathan Richman and the Modern Lovers, Suicide.

CHRIS CARTER

See Chris and Cosey.

PETER CASE

Peter Case (Geffen) 1986

The Man with the Blue Postmodern Fragmented Neo-Traditionalist Guitar (Geffen) 1989 •

Setting aside the rock approach of Case's former bands (the Nerves and the Plimsouls), the talented singer/songwriter/guitarist's eponymous solo debut is a portrait of the artist as a literate young troubadour, baggy suit, fedora and all. Downplaying the Plimsouls' frantic guitar jangle in favor of lean, diverse arrangements, Case and co-producers T-Bone Burnett and Mitchell Froom focus squarely on the material (some of it co-written by Burnett) and Case's soul-on-fire vocals. The barbed Americana of Case's best songs—"I Shook His Hand," "Steel Strings" (later recorded by Marshall Crenshaw), "Old Blue Car"—points to greatness around the corner. However, other tunes (the contrived "Small Town Spree," arranged by Van Dyke Parks, the sub-Mellencamp "Horse & Crow") demonstrate the need for a good editor. Peter Case closes with a good cover of the Pogues' "Pair of Brown Eyes," with Roger McGuinn on guitar.

Case's second solo effort fulfills much of the promise hinted at on its predecessor. The songwriting is more fluent and self-assured, as is his singing; with contributions from David Lindley, Jim Keltner and Los Lobos' David Hidalgo, the musical settings are more varied and distinctive. Case delivers some startlingly precise character studies ("Poor Old Tom," "Travellin' Light"), stark emotional dramas ("Put Down the Gun," "Two Angels") and sharply observed sense-of-place vignettes ("This Town's a Riot," "Entella Hotel"). Perhaps most notable, though, is the born-again artist's newfound deftness at bridging spiritual and secular concerns, which he does effectively on "Hidden Love."

See also Nerves, Plimsouls. [i/hd]

CATERWAUL

The Nature of Things (Lost Arts) 1987

Beholden EP (IRS) 1988

Pin & Web (IRS) 1989 •

Portent Hue (IRS) 1990 •

Formed in Phoenix, this talented, hard-to-pin-down band—a versatile rock/folk trio plus singer Betsy Martin (also the band's lyricist and occasional mandolin player)—made its debut on an indie album before relocating to Los Angeles and hooking up a bigger deal. Following a three-song trial run with Camper Van producer Dennis Herring on Beholden, Caterwaul (especially Martin, who can deliver a country croon, a cowgirl yodel and a chilling rock howl, but never does anything quite like the band's name) exorcised some extremist tendencies and continued on to Pin & Web. As self-centeredly enigmatic as early R.E.M. but with in-your-ear vocals and a different regional orientation, Pin & Web lacks top-notch songs, instead relying on clear, carefully crafted music (Mark Schafer is evidently an open-minded student at the Edge school of electric guitar textures) and Martin's exciting excursions. (The CD adds the two Beholden tracks not already included on the LP.)

The dramatic, full-blooded rock (balanced by acoustic mandolin interludes) of Portent Hue matches Martin's inventive vocals strength for strength, cutting an uneven path but scoring points along the way. Kevin Pinnt wallops the skins convincingly as Schafer weaves busy guitar patterns in which Martin can throw her many voices at various odd angles. When the band's songwriting is in full effect (as on "Alex' Aphrodisiac" or "Bulldosage") Martin's theatrics are a neat bonus; elsewhere (as on "Manna and Quail," where she performs amazing Siouxesque octave jumps) she's the whole show. [i]

CAT HEADS

Hubba (Restless) 1987 •

Submarine (Restless) 1988

(EX) CAT HEADS

Our Frisco (Twitch City) 1989

If anything, this San Francisco quartet suffers from an excess of talent: three members write, all four sing. Hubba is all over the place style-wise, from the agreeably noisy post-folk/rock of "Hangin' Around" to the stately romanticism of "Final Letter" to the mock-country of "Saved by the Bottle" to the playful hippie-punk of "Golden Gate Park." Most of it's quite good, but the jarring lack of focus makes the album an unnecessarily distracting listen.

The winsome Submarine, on the other hand, wisely concentrates on the band's strengths, sticking to more melodic material and allowing drummer Melanie Clarin (concurrently a member of Donner Party) to sing more. As a result, Submarine (co-produced by Dave Lowery of Camper Van Beethoven) consistently captures the haunting melody of Hubba's best moments (as on "Postcard" and "Sister Tabitha") without ditching the goofy humor ("Jiggy Sawdust/Gumshoe") or the melodic rock edge ("Upside Down," "Apologize").

Though the band split up after Submarine, charter members Sam Babbitt and Alan Korn recruited a third singer/guitarist/bassist and Flying Color's ex-drummer to record Our Frisco as the (Ex) Cat Heads. The inscrutably packaged and annotated album—an enjoyably casual-sounding set—is not all that different from the original band's quirky electric-acoustic mix. Former bandmate Clarin returns to sing harmony on the most memorable track, the cheerfully self-mocking "Anti-Song." [hd]

See also Donner Party, Harm Farm.

CATHEDRAL OF TEARS

See True Sounds of Liberty.

NICK CAVE AND THE BAD SEEDS

From Her to Eternity (nr/Mute) 1984 •

The Firstborn Is Dead (Mute-Homestead) 1985 •

Tupelo EP (Homestead) 1985

Kicking Against the Pricks (Homestead) 1986 •

Your Funeral ... My Trial (Mute-Homestead) 1986 •

Tender Prey (Mute-Enigma) 1988 •

The Good Son (Mute-Enigma) 1990 (Mute-Elektra) 1990 •

The Weeping Song EP [CD] (Mute-Enigma) 1990 •

ANITA LANE

Dirty Sings EP (nr/Mute) 1988 (Mute-Restless) 1989 •

NICK CAVE/MICK HARVEY/ BLIXA BARGELD

Ghosts ... of the Civil Dead (Mute) 1989 •

Following the Birthday Party's self-destruction, singer/lyricist Nick Cave formed the Bad Seeds as a new vehicle for his foreboding visions of love and death. While his passionate bellowing certainly fit in well with his former mates' wall of noise, From Her to Eternity sounds like the record he always wanted to make. The Bad Seeds—an all-star unit including ex-Magazine bassist Barry Adamson, ex-Birthday Party guitarist/keyboardist-turned-drummer Mick Harvey and guitarist Blixa Bargeld on loan from Einstürzende Neubauten—provide a sparse twisted-blues setting that gives Cave plenty of room for his vocal pyrotechnics. The guitars are bizarre but subdued, bass and drums slow and deliberate; rudimentary piano fills the gaps. While the album relies less on shock effects than any the Birthday Party ever made, the explosive parts are that much more effective. The title track, "A Box for Black Paul" and a chilling rendition of Leonard Cohen's "Avalanche" stand up to anything Cave did with the Birthday Party. (A contemporaneous single of "In the Ghetto" is also highly recommended.)

The Firstborn Is Dead takes Cave's fixations on the blues and Elvis Presley one step further, this time with somewhat mixed results. A resident of London and Berlin, the Melbourne native leaves himself open to accusations of romanticizing a culture he's never known, but this doesn't sound like a man singing out of ignorance. Slow-moving and perhaps as self-indulgent as it is heartfelt, The Firstborn is a mature work which may at first disappoint those awaiting another "Big-Jesus-Trash-Can," but the patient listener will find Cave's emotional range intact, albeit in a subtler setting. The American Tupelo EP takes the album's opening track as its title and adds "In the Ghetto," "The Moon Is in the Gutter" and a drastically different version of the old Birthday Party live staple, "The Six Strings That Drew Blood."

Kicking Against the Pricks is an all-covers LP on which Cave really makes his mark as a song stylist. He performs passionate takes of blues standards ("Muddy Water," "I'm Gonna Kill That Woman"), gospel ("Jesus Met the Woman at the Well"), rock classics ("Hey Joe," "All Tomorrow's Parties") and, surprisingly enough, "By the Time I Get to Phoenix." His voice has never sounded stronger, and no musical style among those selected is beyond his grasp. Some interpretations are faithful to originals, others (especially "All Tomorrow's Parties") are completely unique, and the album's success owes as much to the work of the Bad Seeds as it does to Cave's talents. (Thomas Wydler is now the band's drummer, with Harvey returning to his jack-of-all-trades role; the late Tracy Pew, Birthday Party's bassist, makes his final recorded appearance on "Hey Joe.") An almost flawless album.

Your Funeral . . . My Trial is an eight-song album issued as a pair of 12-inches. The expanded format enhances the production, which is the clearest and most up-front of any Cave release. That in turn augments the melodicism and increased energy level of the music. With the notable exception of the blunt "Hard on for Love," Your Funeral also stands as Cave's best lyrical effort. He takes the persona of old Nick the storyteller, and the images are haunting.

After a two-year hiatus, Cave and his troupe (a five-man ensemble, including Harvey, Bargeld and guitarist Kid Congo Powers) returned in 1988 with Tender Prey. One need not get any further than the opening track, "The Mercy Seat" (perhaps Cave's strongest song ever), to recognize that the LP is a scorcher. Cave's voice is mixed high and out front in the incredibly thick, bottom-heavy production (quite unlike the spartan sound of most of his previous discs). Even more surprising are his melodic vocals; without any forfeit of passion, it really sounds as if he's taken singing lessons. But nothing else has changed: "Deanna" is a Nuggets-style rocker, but the lyrics plot a murder spree in a Cadillac. (You were expecting moon-June-spoon?) Although the songs weaken a bit towards the end, this is a challenging work of extraordinary quality.

In the two years prior to The Good Son, Cave kicked a junk habit and finished his first novel, And the Ass Saw the Angel (a morbid tale originally conceived as a screenplay). Perhaps he mellowed by saving his own life or released his crazed energy via the book, but this is more akin to the Cave who covered "By the Time I Get to Phoenix." The Good Son is sedate and lachrymose, filled with religious references and orchestrated with strings, piano and background vocals. Recorded in Brazil, the opening "Foi Na Cruz" is sung partly in Portuguese; the most uptempo cut is the gospel-flavored "The Witness Song." Easy listening compared to other things he's done, but an emotional album not many other artists could have pulled off. (Initial quantities of the British album came with either a 7-inch single or a 5-inch CD containing acoustic versions of "The Mercy Seat," "City of Refugee" and "Deanna.")

Anita Lane's claim to fame is that she's Nick Cave's girlfriend and has supplied him with occasional lyrics for solo and Birthday Party records. (Her picture is on the back cover of From Her to Eternity, making it appear she was then a Bad Seed.) For those who need to know more than that, Dirty Sings is a four-song EP with spoken, groaned and badly sung Lydia Lunch-like vocals above slow-moving but interestingly arranged backing (anonymous musicians, but Cave's Bad Seeds are readily identifiable and receive songwriting credits). She covers Chic's "Lost in Music," but the "I'm a Believer" here isn't the Monkees tune. Dark without being too gloomy or morbid, Lane does have an intriguing presence on vinyl. Not a bad little record.

Besides the band's appearance in Wim Wenders' Wings of Desire (performing "The Carny"), Cave, Bargeld and Harvey composed and performed the soundtrack to Ghosts . . . of the Civil Dead, an Australian film (in which Cave had a dramatic role) about a maximum security prison in Marion, Illinois. The jail is brutal enough to be known as the new Alcatraz, and while the slow-moving accompaniment is eerie, it's not at all violent. Much of the LP is dominated by spoken accounts from guards and inmates and Bargeld's subdued industrial guitar; the oft-repeated main theme also includes cello, Lane's mostly lyric-less vocals and a shrill tin whistle. Probably effective within the context of the film, but two "songs" and little compelling content doesn't make for much listening allure. [dgs]

See also Barry Adamson, Birthday Party, Ein-stürzende Neubauten, (Die) Haut, Lydia Lunch.

CAVEDOGS

Taylor Country EP (Restless) 1990 ♢

Joyrides for Shut-Ins (Enigma) 1990 (Capitol) 1991 ♢

The Cavedogs know their psyche-power-pop and, on Joyrides for Shut-Ins, they turn up with multi-tracked Rickenbackers blazing. Producer Ed Stasium (and others who worked on the previously released singles included here) gives the trio a BIG sound; while quotes from summer-of-love sources (Move, Floyd, Beatles and Monkees to name but a few) abound you'll also hear enough echoes of the Jam, dB's, R.E.M. and the Smithereens to know the Boston-based trio has progressed past pure paisley. What it all adds up to is glorious power-pop with the emphasis squarely on power, though the three-part harmonies will please picky popsters no end. If the sheer energy and tunefulness aren't enough, you can have fun deciphering the lyrics behind the guitars. Occasionally, you'll be rewarded with gems like "We're just three white rich kids bitchin' 'bout the world. We think we got problems, but we ain't got problems" (from "La La La") that prove the Cavedogs know where it's at in the here and now.

The Tayter Country EP features the blistering title track (a single that also appears on the LP) and three more, including a version of "What's New Pussycat?" rife with power chords and feedback. [ds]

CELEBRITY SKIN

See 45 Grave.

CELIBATE RIFLES

But Jacques, the Fish? EP (Aus. no label) 1982
Sideroxylon (Aus. Hot) 1983 •
The Celibate Rifles (Aus. Hot) 1984 •
Quintessentially Yours (What Goes On) 1985
The Turgid Miasma of Existence (Hot-Rough Trade) 1986
Mina Mina Mina (What Goes On) 1986
Kiss Kiss Bang Bang (What Goes On) 1987
Roman Beach Party (What Goes On) 1987
Dancing Barefoot EP (What Goes On) 1988
Blind Ear (Aus. True Tone-EMI) 1989 •
Platters du Jour (Ger. Hot-Rattlesnake-Normal) 1990

EASTERN DARK

Long Live the New Flesh! EP (What Goes On) 1986
Girls on the Beach (With Cars) (Aus. Waterfront) 1990

DAMIEN LOVELOCK

It's A Wig, Wig, Wig World (Aus. Hot-Survival) 1988

CRENT

Crent (Aus. Waterfront) 1990

The antithesis of a sex pistol is a celibate rifle, but Australia's Celibate Rifles are anything but the opposite of loud, snotty and fast. A fusion between Detroit-style straight-ahead hard rock and Ramones pop, steeped in Stooges and Radio Birdman milk, the Rifles began as a party-time Sydney band, racing through deliberately silly and simple Ramonesque lyrics ("What about the kids? Get a baby sitter . . . and some kitty litter") with three fast/loud chords. But unlike the Ramones, the Rifles insert loud, sinewy guitar solos between the slash-'n'-burn verses and, on tracks like the 7-inch Jacques' "24 Hours," warped and warbly guitar effects.

By Sideroxylon, the Rifles had dropped most of early punk's stripped-down economy for the heavy guitar sound—more Hendrix than Kiss—that would follow them through the rest of their career. (An obvious Hendrix reference pops up in the middle of Sideroxylon's "God Squad.")

Three of the four tracks from Jacques and five of Sideroxylon's eleven were later issued as Quintessentially Yours. Mina Mina Mina is also a compilation, featuring four more Sideroxylon selections and all but "Electric Snake River" from The Celibate Rifles (aka Les Fusiles Célibataires). If that's not confusing enough, Sideroxylon and The Celibate Rifles are on a single CD.

Turgid Miasma sums up the band's past without reissuing any material and takes them in new directions (some of which they've never again tried). Split almost evenly between early-style fast, poppy rockers, metallic guitar excursions and a new style which encompasses everything from piano through zither and glockenspiel, Miasma is anything but turgid. Lead singer Damien Lovelock adds a sinisterly effective soft deadpan to his vocal repertoire—a deep, dark grumble which meshes into the guitar texture in "No Sign" and stands out in contrast with the bright chugga chords at the opening of "Conflict of Instinct." Miasma is one of the Rifles' most interesting LPs.

Let their new-found studio prowess convince fans they had a secret craving to become sons of Steely Dan, their next release, Kiss Kiss Bang Bang, is a straight-ahead live album recorded at New York's CBGB. Most of the material comes from Celibate Rifles and Miasma, with covers of the Only Ones' "City of Fun" and Radio Birdman's "Burn My Eye." No keyboards. No soft thinky-feely moments. Just hearty rock'n'roll.

Roman Beach Party and Dancing Barefoot take the band in an even harder direction, back to the metallic '70s music they first admired. On "The More Things Change" and "Junk" (from the Barefoot EP), loud twists of feedback meet fuzzy scuzzy chords that are deep and dark—heavy as molasses and powered by 200 proof adrenaline. "Dancing Barefoot" itself couples twisted solos with Patti Smith's lyrics about heroin for an acid-hard '60s revivalist version of the song.

Despite the noisy washes of swirling wah-wah/fuzz/feedback guitar, the rough'n'ripping Blind Ear transcends any particular stylistic era for a bracing adult punk rush. Alternately wry, angry and compassionate, the intelligent lyrics concern politics, global responsibility, losers (like drug-dealing "Johnny") and progress (check the ultra-catchy "Wonderful Life" and the new-age spoof "Dial Om for Murder"), giving the exciting music a good run for album honors.

The double-album Platters du Jour career retrospective begins with "Kent's Theme" (which incorporates the Marlboro jingle) and the rest of Jacques and runs through the Dancing Barefoot EP. With numerous band classics (mostly singles), rarities, outtakes and informative annotation by guitarist Dave Morris, this is the ideal starting point for discovering (or rediscovering) the Rifles.

When bassist James Darroch left the Rifles in 1984, he formed the Eastern Dark, a trio in which he played guitar and sang. The five-song EP, released shortly after Darroch was killed in a 1986 automobile accident, has plenty of noisy electric excitement, but his songwriting isn't quite strong enough to make the band special. Mixing acoustics and electrics in a Woodentopsy rush, "I Don't Need the Reasons" comes the closest. Girls on the Beach is a two-record set of live performances, plus a pair of unreleased studio tracks from '85.

Lovelock is backed on his first solo album by colleagues from the Rifles and friends from the Church. The record by Crent, a slightly adventurous side duo formed by Rifles guitarist Kent Steedman, is promising but dull, fitting a few clever bits in amid such trippy but pointless '70s rock exercises as the side-long "9K?" jam. [e/i]

See also New Christs.

CERTAIN GENERAL

Holiday of Love EP (Labor) 1982

November's Heat (Fr. L'Invitation au Suicide) 1984

These Are the Days (Fr. New Rose) 1986

Cabin Fever (Fr. Barclay) 1988

Jacklighter (Fr. Barclay) 1990

CERTAIN GENERAL/BAND OF OUTSIDERS

Far Away in America (Sourmash) 1984

Far Away in America (The Live Side) EP (Fr. L'Invitation au Suicide) 1985

BAND OF OUTSIDERS

Up the River EP (nr/Flicknife) 1985

Everything Takes Forever (Fr. L'Invitation au Suicide) 1985

I Wish I Was Your Kid EP (nr/Flicknife) 1985

Longer Than Always EP (Fr. L'Invitation au Suicide) 1985

Act of Faith (Fr. Barclay) 1986

Acts of Faith (Sourmash) 1987

Armistice Day (Nocturnal) 1989

CORVAIRS

Temple Fire EP (Sourmash) 1984

Sad Hotel EP (Sourmash) 1985

Rio Blanco (Cryptovision) 1988

Hitchhiker (Fr. New Rose) 1989 •

PHIL GAMMAGE

Night Train (Fr. New Rose) 1990 •

Kneel to the Rising Sun (Fr. New Rose) 1991 •

MARC JEFFREY/PLAYTIME

Marc Jeffrey/Playtime (nr/Conviction) 1990 (Behemoth) 1991

While every one of these bands has indisputably defined its own singular identity, the restless, incestuous pool of members and intents forming the core of each renders them analogous to a single beast with multiple heads pointing in different directions. Evolving from late-'70s CBGB teenage power-poppers the Limit, Band of Outsiders began by self-releasing a no-big-deal '81 single of spiky two-guitar indie rock. A year later, hot downtowners Certain General came out with their five-song debut, Holiday of Love, a fresher and more immediate mix of spartan semi-funk, drifting/scattershot guitar and male/female vocals akin to a reserved Peter Murphy (admittedly a contradiction in terms) duetting with Exene. Despite a borderline tendency to then-typical new wave conventions, the songs still sound fresh—even refreshing—today, as befits what must be the only record in history to be co-produced by Peter Holsapple and Michael Gira.

Come 1984, with both bands established as NYC club regulars, they joined forces to form Sourmash Records and release Far Away in America, an album to which each contributed two live and two studio songs. By this point, the groups had grown closer in sound; Band of Outsiders in particular evincing an atmosphere and range barely hinted at on the previous 45.

Minus drummer/co-vocalist Marcy Saddy, Certain General eschews much of their jagged arhythm for a more straightforward pop moodiness on November's Heat, which includes new versions of several Far Away songs. The album emphasizes the band's morose poetic imagery (especially vocalist Parker DuLany) in a manner paralleling R.E.M. (with whom they'd shared tiny stages) while continuing to chart a characteristically oblique course.

That same year, Band of Outsiders released the six-song Up the River, further developing a sound that compared favorably to both Television and the then-nascent Cali-zona bands (True West, Green on Red, Thin White Rope): heartland songsmithery with guitars in uneasy collaboration and/or comfortable rivalry. Dropping the raucous but poorly recorded live cover of "Child of the Moon," the remaining Up the River songs reappeared on Everything Takes Forever, along with the two Far Away studio tracks and three outtakes from those sessions.

The all-new I Wish I Was Your Kid offered their best material to date, particularly the somnolent yet barbed title cut. Bringing all of the group's preceding efforts to a head, Longer Than Always is a soft, sizzling set of songs to sing through clenched teeth while handcuffed in the back seat of a patrol car.

Certain General, meanwhile, had more or less crumbled, prompting guitarist Phil Gammage to nab a new rhythm section and take center stage in the Corvairs. Temple Fire is quite similar to latter-day Certain General, albeit less arty and tortured (thanks to his Gene Pitneyesque vocals). The latent/blatant Morricone/Scotty Moore rhythms retreated a bit for Sad Hotel, an undistinguished and ill-conceived extended dance track backed by a competent surf instrumental and little else of consequence.

Reflecting the bands' growing European following, New Rose released These Are the Days, a half-finished compendium of material recorded by Parker DuLany and a new backing group (notably Sprague Hollander), under the Certain General name. By 1988's Cabin Fever, the band had effectively condensed to just the duo plus incidental musicians; Hollander produced this slick and seamless set of lyrically haughty, musically specious tunes. Jacklighter offers superior material and comfortable production by (alternately) Fred Maher and Lloyd Cole, positing the band as neo-soft-rockers, comparable to Giant Sand if that group were drained of all grit and attack.

Back to Band of Outsiders: Act of Faith recycles all three tracks from I Wish I Was Your Kid in different versions, along with a new "Conviction" from the live half-album. Acts of Faith (the pluralized US edition) drops two tracks and adds the Longer Than Always EP in its entirety. Like the subtler concurrent New Zealand bands couching their pop in muted tones and colors, Band of Outsiders relied not so much on hooks or abandon as an ensnaring ambience.

Armistice Day catches Band of Outsiders in a November 1988 one-shot reunion—eighteen months after their split—airing the archives, but also doing a few newies and covers. Recorded in allostereo, the miserable US pressing undermines the relaxed versions of—inexplicably—the band's non-hits, focusing mostly on less-memorable material. A visiting Nikki Sudden plucks a few guitar chords and warbles indiscernibly on the last two tracks; Jeremy Gluck did the liner notes. (Members of the BOO/CG axis had previously played on both Sudden and Gluck records and tours, and continue to do so.)

The Corvairs released their first full LP, Rio Blanco, in 1988, a distillation/reduction of Gammage's career to date, as produced by Fleshstone Keith Streng. With all the initial spikiness gone, the Corvairs here play familiar rock'n'roll, from worn heels to fuzzy chins. Hitchhiker spreads out a bit sonically, allowing for a better sounding version of the same old thing. In its finer moments, Hitchhiker presents a likable band playing forgettable material.

The opposite is true of Gammage's solo debut, Night Train, wherein a more fluid and versatile group (comprised largely of familiar gene-pool faces) puts some personality into oddly underwrought darkside Americana echoing Nick Cave's fascinations minus the melodrama. Which might well make Gammage this generation's Hank Williams.

Meantime, Band of Outsiders singer/guitarist Marc Jeffrey—on his way to becoming this generation's Nick Drake—delivered his best LP yet. On Playtime, he delves deeply into melancholy, utilizing axis backing for non-rock instrumentation and approaches, neatly avoiding any maudlin and/or baroque temptations. Playtime unfolds like a series of stark confessionals, morose romanticism curiously reminiscent of Peter Perrett's England's Glory; low-key, unfinished yet attractive blueprints just waiting for that dose of electroshock to kick them into the annals of greatness. [ab]

EXENE CERVENKA

See X.

EUGENE CHADBOURNE

- There'll Be No Tears Tonight (Parachute) 1980 •
- Chicken on the Way [tape] (Parachute) 1983
- The President: He Is Insane (Iridescence) 1985
- Country Music of Southeastern Australia (RRRecords) 1986 •
- Country Protest (Fundamental Music) 1986 •
- 198666 EP (Ralph) 1986
- Calgary Exile [tape] (Parachute) 1986
- Megadeath [tape] (Parachute) 1987
- Third World Summit Meeting [tape] (Parachute) 1987
- Corpses of Foreign Wars (Fundamental Music) 1987 •
- Tucson, Arizona [tape] (Parachute) 1987
- LSD C&W (Fundamental Music) 1987 •
- Kill Eugene (Placebo) 1987
- Fuck Chuck [tape] (Parachute) 1988
- I've Been Everywhere (Fundamental Music) 1988 •
- The Eddie Chatterbox Double Trio Love Album (Fundamental Music) 1988 •
- Wichita, Kansas [tape] (Parachute) 1988
- Country Music in the World of Islam (Fundamental Music) 1990

EUGENE CHADBOURNE WITH EVAN JOHNS AND THE H-BOMBS

Vermín of the Blues (Fundamental Music) 1987 •

EUGENE CHADBOURNE WITH CAMPER VAN BEETHOVEN

Camper Van Chadbourne (Fundamental Music) 1987 •

On his compulsive own, the guitarist/leader of the late, lamented Shockabilly has spewed forth a ceaseless stream of records and cassettes (the latter on his own Parachute label) that easily represent the oddest version of country and folk music ever. While the notable left-winger's guitar playing is looser than clams, it harbors wildly unique energy. The North Carolinian is also the master of several different voices, some of them deceptively sincere. Harsh, funny, irritating and packed with ideas, Chadbourne often suggests a politically correct Frank Zappa.

There'll Be No Tears Tonight lovingly takes on thirteen country-western standards. Eugene acts out his "free improvised country & western bebop" with several game free-music experts on everything from Carl Perkins' "Honey Don't" to Merle Haggard's "Swingin' Doors." The results are hilarious and touching.

The President contains Chadbourne's own politically charged ditties, many in a Phil Ochs-ish bag. His targets include Jerry Falwell, Women Against Pornography and his arch-nemesis, Senator Jesse Helms.

Country Music of Southeastern Australia mixes ten country standards and ten originals, played free-form style with such noted noisemongers as Rik Rue, John Rose and David Moss. Country Protest features the quintessential Chadbourne cover-version collage, "Medley in C." He's joined by Lenny Kaye on steel guitar and the Red Clay Ramblers for 11:25 of everything from "Imagine" to "TV Party" to "Dang Me" to "The Shah Sleeps in Lee Harvey's Grave."

The 7-inch 198666 EP, released on the Residents' label, is a rustic little artifact containing country-folk renditions of "You Can't Roller Skate in a Buffalo Herd" and four other songs.

Corpses of Foreign Wars is an all-protest vehicle featuring Violent Femmes Victor DeLorenzo and Brian Ritchie; highlights include a wonderful Phil Ochs medley and originals that range from verbal assaults on despicable neighbors to the "KKKremlin." Somehow, it all fits together.

Chadbourne then cleaned out his closet, using the two-record LSD C&W as the merry receptacle. Much of the material here—including a Beatles medley, "In a Sentimental Mood," a Roger Miller medley and other free-jazz, blues and rock faves—derives from mid-'80s sessions featuring former Shockabilly members Kramer and David Licht, plus John Zorn, Tom Cora, Toshinori Condo and many others. It also includes some of EC's finest originals sung solo. LSD C&W is the most of EC on vinyl, and possibly the best.

Chadbourne goes it alone on Kill Eugene (the complete title of which is Dear Eugene What You Did Was Not Very Nice So I Am Going to Kill . . .), although a nutty old lady on the radio and a few appreciative audiences (for the tracks recorded live) do make guest appearances. Covers on this mostly acoustic outing include "8 Miles High," "Purple Haze," "Oh Yoko," "Lucifer Sam," "Ramblin' Man" and the Peewee's Playhouse theme, which gets a topical rewrite as "Ollie's Playhouse."

Top-notch Austin stompers Evan Johns and the H-Bombs provide authentic rock'n'roll accompaniment on Vermín of the Blues, which covers ground from Count Basie to the Count Five, along with Chadbourne's usual amusing rants.

Eugene almost comes off as a father-figure on the joint Camper Van Chadbourne, although he easily out-eccentrics the Santa Cruz eclecticians. Check out their Zappa medley, the long-inevitable cover of Pink Floyd's "Careful with That Axe, Eugene," Tim Hardin's "Reason to Believe," Joe South's "Games People Play" and Chadbourne's own witty'n'wise originals.

Though not credited as such, the Double Trio Love Album—one side of Chadbourne originals and a side of Tim Buckley songs—is more or less a second volume of Camper Van Chadbourne whimsy. Unfortunately for Chadbourne fanatics, he relinquishes the driver's seat for the bulk of this road trip. There's a bit more politicking (and a few inside jokes), but the real flaw (as Eugene's lectures so often warn) lies in the democratic process.

I've Been Everywhere (credited to the Doctor Eugene Chadbourne) is as near to pure autobiography as the avant-rock form will allow; Eugene trots out both his (many) noise-making apparati and some of his most tender licks in a collection of songs that cut deep. In another way, so does Country Music in the World of Islam. This salvo, aimed pretty squarely at the evils of United States foreign policy, finds both Chadbourne's medium and message growing shrill—but it's hard to discount his arguments.

Chadbourne's voluminous tape cache is truly astounding, in terms of scope and overall quality. Sure, there are some duds among the dozens of selections the man himself proffers by post, but even a blind stab is likely to yield something of interest. A few samples:

Chicken on the Way ranks with the best of his fully structured cassette releases. Recorded around the time of Shockabilly's birth, there's really no reason this couldn't be a bona fide vinyl album (although that would preclude the finger-lickin' fast-food packaging). Calgary Exile's mélange of obscure and/or unreleased tracks from '75-'76 is a little tougher sledding (so to speak). Recorded when Mr. C. was indeed exiled (by Selective Service persecution) to friendlier tundra, it's nonetheless a useful document of his "outside" material.

Megadeath is one of the least song-oriented collections here. Bits of a surreal AM-radio talk show pitting Eugene against some bewildered North Carolinian homemakers provide breathers between the (mostly) rake-and-plunger—he's played pickup-equipped versions of both for years—material. Third World Summit Meeting is a virtual obscure-rail pass through a plethora of little-explored ethnic styles. The individual numbers tend to drag but, in small doses, this is fascinating.

Both Tucson and Wichita document live sets from those cities (the Arizona tape actually combines a pair of shows) in all their rollercoaster glory. Tucson is a bit milder and more pensive (in part due to its solo circumstances), while Wichita osterizes anarcho-syndicalist rhetoric, bitter, almost Lenny Bruce-like barbs and plenty of feedback to fine effect. And though it's not clear who "Chuck" is, he abets Chadbourne on a crazy-quilt of material, including works by Charlie Parker and Duane Eddy. [rg/dss]

See also Camper Van Beethoven, Evan Johns and His H-Bombs.

CHAINSAW KITTENS

See Defenestration.

CHAMELEONS (UK)

Script of the Bridge (MCA) 1983 •
What Does Anything Mean? Basically? (nr/Statik) 1985 •
Strange Times (Geffen) 1986 •

The Fan and the Bellows (Caroline) 1989 •
Tripping Dogs (nr/Glass Pyramid) 1990
Tony Fletcher Walked on Water (nr/Glass Pyramid) 1990
The Peel Sessions (nr/Strange Fruit) 1990 (Strange Fruit-Dutch East India) 1991 •

SUN AND THE MOON

The Sun and the Moon (Geffen) 1988 •
Alive; Not Dead EP (nr/Midnight Music) 1988

This stylish Manchester pop quartet somehow managed to bring something of its own to much-traveled terrain, making songs like the melodic "Up the Down Escalator" and the far denser "Don't Fall" moody and memorable. Bassist Mark Burgess recalls Psychedelic Fur Richard Butler's world-weariness in his singing; the band's playing is, however, generally lighter in tone and simpler in design than that band's. Script of the Bridge isn't a great album, but it has very appealing moments. (US and UK editions differ.)

What Does Anything Mean? Basically? is even better, with much stronger production underscoring both the band's direct power and the ghostly atmospherics of its icy church keyboards and delay-ridden guitars. More than just songs, the Chameleons build meticulous puzzles, forests of sound with heartfelt melodies. "Intrigue in Tangiers" and "On the Beach" show the muscle beneath the beauty, while "Perfume Garden" and "One Flesh" spring with such fresh life they're instantly enveloping.

Strange Times was produced by Dave Allen, who instills a dark edge in the normally bright sound. The dreamy undercurrents add a luster to the three epic tracks, "Caution," with its odd 6/8 time swing, "Soul in Isolation," an emotional piece of knowing loneliness, and "Swamp Thing," a delicious, building masterpiece. "Time" and "In Answer" are aggressive, no-holds barred post-punk rockers that such sound architects as these are supposed to be neither capable of or inclined towards, and they add a breathless whoosh to the proceedings. (Early US copies came with a not-to-be-missed six-song bonus 12-inch containing such covers as the Beatles' "Tomorrow Never Knows" and Bowie's "John, I'm Only Dancing.")

After the Chameleons split up in the summer of '87, Burgess and drummer John Lever joined with a pair of guitarists to form a new quartet, the Sun and the Moon, which debuted in mid-'88 with an eponymous album that sounds a lot like the Chameleons. Burgess evinces even more imploring emotionality than in the past, and it's a very solid LP, if no challenge to the Chameleons' general brilliance (inventive guitarists Dave Fielding and Reg Smithies are greatly missed).

The Sun and the Moon followed that record with the much-improved Alive; Not Dead EP, which sounds like a new group rather than a second-rate Chameleons. More acoustic and dreamy, three of the four songs are gently soothing, and almost submerge Burgess' sophisticated melodies. A raucous, madcap bluster through Alice Cooper's "Elected" (peppered with speeches from The Prisoner and updated anti-Tory lyrics) closes out the record.

Despite this promising relaunch, the Sun and the Moon fell apart in April '89. The group has since reassembled (without Burgess) as Weaveworld; Burgess has staked out a solo career. Fielding and Smithies have formed the Reeps (with a drum machine) and have released two singles, including a stunning rendition of the Kinks' "See My Friends."

Meanwhile, archival Chameleons material continues to leak out. The Fan and the Bellows is a set of '82 demos, mostly produced by Steve Lillywhite. Statik had attempted to release the album as early as '86, but the Chameleons went to court and blocked it. With no band left to maintain the legal challenge, the LP finally appeared in 1989. Though the primitive post-punk doesn't sit comfortably with the three real Chameleons LPs, The Fan and the Bellows nevertheless documents a stage in the group's creative development.

Burgess then formed Glass Pyramid Records and began (against Fielding's objections) releasing old Chameleons material in '90. Tripping Dogs is a live rehearsal from '85; not terribly earthshaking in light of better-known studio versions, but interesting for its early versions of two songs that later appeared on Strange Times.

Far more exciting is Tony Fletcher Walked on Water (named in tribute of the band's late manager), which collects the original group's last tracks: four long songs that are among the Chameleons' best. The epic sweep of "The Healer" and the chaotic "Free for All" pick up from Strange Times, and capture the band peaking as it shattered.

No controversy surrounds The Peel Sessions LP, a collection of three appearances ('81, '83 and '84) in a special sleeve by Smithies, artist for all of the band's covers. This mix of primal Fan and the Bellows-era material and full-bloom incandescence is well worth hearing. [i/jr]

JAMES CHANCE

Theme from Grutzi Elvis EP (ZE) 1979

JAMES CHANCE AND THE CONTORTIONS

Live aux Bains Douches (Fr. Invisible) 1980

Live in New York [tape] (ROIR) 1981

Soul Exorcism [tape] (ROIR) 1991

CONTORTIONS

Buy (ZE-Arista) 1979

JAMES WHITE AND THE BLACKS

Off White (ZE-Buddah) 1979

Sax Maniac (Animal) 1982

JAMES WHITE AND THE CONTORTIONS

Second Chance (ZE-PVC) 1980

JAMES WHITE

Flaming Demonic (nr/ZE-Island) 1983

VARIOUS ARTISTS

No New York (Antilles) 1978

Arriving from Milwaukee with a saxophone on his knee, James (Siegfried) Chance/White/Black quickly became the linchpin of the budding New York no wave movement, appearing in Teenage Jesus and the Jerks with Lydia Lunch. More than any of his contemporaries, Chance turned harsh, abrasive music into an art form; at one time or another, almost everyone of any importance on the New York art-rock scene was in his band.

No New York, produced by Brian Eno and shared by three other bands, features four tracks by Chance and the Contortions (drummer Don Christensen, guitarist and future Bush Tetra Pat Place, guitarist Jody Harris, bassist George Scott III and keyboardist Adele Bertel) at their most cacophonous, shattering the limits of taste and anti-commerciality with a mixture of punk and jazz. Recommended in all its jangle. Buy lacks the jagged edge of the No New York material, but expands the Contortions into a first-class, no-holds-barred act, with every note and vocal oozing out Chance's deranged contempt for man and society in passionately cold renditions of normally pleasant dance music, epitomized by his anthem "Contort Yourself."

Theme from Grutzi Elvis separates Chance's haranguing, bitter vocals from what turns out to be unusual, colorful music. Notably, Chance sings a subdued, oddly touching version of "That's When Your Heartaches Begin." Live aux Bains Douches features Chance and the Contortions live in Paris; Live in New York demonstrates that there is real emotion energizing Chance's savage, solipsistic music. (A decade later, ROIR brought out a second live tape, this one from Holland, 1980.)

Off White is a set of funky, demented disco tunes performed with Scott, Harris, Christensen and Place. Though milder and more accessible than his Chance-work, Off White plays freely with his attempts at sexual ennui ("Stained Sheets") and racial ambiguity ("Almost Black"), and features a wonderfully weird and erotic version of Irving Berlin's "(Tropical) Heat Wave." Recommended. After White/Chance left the label, ZE compiled material from Off White and Buy to make Second Chance.

Sax Maniac, which he produced, proved that several years' absence hadn't harmed White at all, and that he is a wonderful, inventive sax player. Similar in all respects except personnel to Off White, Sax Maniac (complete with a cover of "That Old Black Magic") is a fevered masterpiece of white funk. [sg]

See also Bush Tetras, Defunk, False Prophets, Jody Harris, Teenage Jesus and the Jerks.

SHEILA CHANDRA

See Monsoon.

CHANNEL THREE

CH3 EP (Posh Boy) 1981

Fear of Life (Posh Boy) 1982

I've Got a Gun (nr/No Future) 1982

After the Lights Go Out (Posh Boy) 1983

Airborne EP (Enigma) 1984

Last Time I Drank... (Enigma) 1985

Cerritos' Channel Three (aka CH3) was one of the Southern California suburban hardcore bands signed to the pioneering Posh Boy label. An aggressive, speedy mixture of West (Black Flag) and East (early Ramones), the CH3 EP and Fear of Life album are fairly typical genre fare, and not very inspired at that. The young quartet's lyrics predictably concern school, girls and the angst of growing up middle-class. The one-take-live-in-the-studio feel of After the Lights Go Out benefits from crisp, balanced sound and charged-up performances. Singer-guitarist Mike Magrann's wordy originals are routine enough that a burning version of the Stones' "Stupid Girl" is easily the record's highlight.

The trio on Airborne is far more proficient and creatively developed than any prior CH3 lineup; the songs—three of the four written by Magrann with ex-Stepmother Jay Lansford (who likely has a lot to do with the band's improvement)—are strong aggro-folk of some note.

The even-better Last Time I Drank finds the Magrann/Lansford writing/singing partnership firing on all rockets. Putting a mature post-punk sensibility to melodic hard-rock with an occasional Southwestern twist, CH3 comes through with an exciting record that packs a punch yet keeps both feet on the ground. Making memorable music this energetic without collapsing into raucousness or resorting to metallic precision isn't easy, but every song on the album finds a way to do it. Perhaps the Aerosmith cover ("Lord of the Thighs") is a clue. Of all the early punk bands, CH3 is one of the few that outgrew the genre without sacrificing its credibility. [i]

CHANT

Three Sheets to the Wind (Safety Net) 1985 •

Two Car Mirage (Safety Net) 1990 •

On their first album, Florida's four-man Chant plays energetic and sparkling Southern folk-pop with a strong R.E.M. influence. The peppy tempo and flat-picked guitars of "All Behind Me" make that band's overwhelming impact evident from the very start; Walter Czachowski's husky (but articulate) singing furthers the comparison. But the loose-limbed guitar jam of "... For You," the striking country feel of "Heaven Assumes" and a spectacular cover of "Little Black Egg," the classic late-'60s obscurity by Florida's Nightcrawlers, help give Three Sheets to the Wind a legitimacy all its own.

Recorded in '87 (good) and '88 (very good) by two different lineups, Two Car Mirage contains more fine examples of the Chant's unpretentious Byrdsy rock: sturdy and appealing originals energetically played and sung with plenty of guitar sparkle. The CD includes all but one song from the first album. [i]

TRACY CHAPMAN

Tracy Chapman (Elektra) 1988 •

Crossroads (Elektra) 1989 •

Singer/songwriter Chapman's powerful lyrics and extraordinarily powerful voice give her first album—unquestionably the most impressive solo debut of 1988—the impact of a rock wrapped in cotton. Tasteful electric backing and simple, clear production allows the uncomplicated songs to be the record's focus, and what a sharp image they draw! "Fast Car" considers the obstacles to escaping urban poverty; "Behind the Wall" paints a chilling picture of domestic violence; "Talkin' Bout a Revolution" has the uplifting symmetry of a classic folk anthem. Meanwhile, songs about romance ("Baby Can I Hold You," "For My Lover," "For You") leaven the anger with undiminished intensity and conviction.

Acknowledging the intrusive challenge of sudden and massive success, Chapman resiliently channeled the threat to her own privacy and independence (most bluntly addressed in the title song) into broadly relevant songs of personal freedom (romantic, social and political) on the highly satisfying second album. Beyond that, Crossroads—which features more varied and expansive arrangements—maintains her tasteful artistic commitment to social protest, supporting Nelson Mandela ("Freedom Now") and idealism ("All That You Have Is Your Soul"), while drawing a critical bead on governmental neglect ("Subcity") and upward mobility ("Material World"). But Chapman saves the most affecting lyrics on Crossroads for relationships, where her wounds and anxieties fill the resonant songs with love and loneliness. [i]

CHARGED G.B.H

Leather, Bristles, Studs and Acne EP (nr/Clay) 1981 + 1990 •

City Baby Attacked by Rats (nr/Clay) 1982

(Clay-Combat) 1987 •

Leather, Bristles, No Survivors and Sick Boys ...

(Clay-Combat) 1982 •

City Baby's Revenge (Relativity) 1984 •

The Clay Years 1981 to 84 (Clay-Combat) 1986 •

Diplomatic Immunity (nr/Clay) 1990 •

G.B.H

Oh No It's G.B.H. Again! EP (Combat Core) 1986

Midnight Madness and Beyond ... (Combat Core)

1986 •

No Need to Panic! (Combat) 1987 •

Wot a Bargin' EP (Combat) 1988 •

No Survivors (nr/Clay) 1989 •

A Fridge Too Far (nr/Rough Justice) 1989

From Here to Reality (Restless) 1990 •

First appearing in 1980, Birmingham's G.B.H (Grievous Bodily Harm)—Charged was appended to prevent confusion with a British metal band of the same name—quickly joined the top ranks of England's second-generation buzzsaw punk firmament. Enraged if not especially enlightened, the quartet tears through City Baby Attacked by Rats with chops and venom, throwing off sparks on dubious numbers like "Slut" and "The Prayer of a Realist." Leather, Bristles, No Survivors and Sick Boys compiles the similarly titled 1981 EP and two subsequent releases in a bracing storm of morbid speedcore. Ignore the dismal lyrics and enjoy the sweeping, trebly adrenaline rush.

The photos on City Baby's Revenge show singer Colin Abraham and guitarist Jock Blyth sporting extraordinary hair-like extremities; the record is, conversely, marginally more restrained and less garishly violent than before. "Vietnamese Blues," "Christianised Cannibals," "Diplomatic Immunity" and other songs display a refined and more intelligent political punk sensibility, along with a slightly slower and easier-to-grasp sound. A blazing Stooges cover ("I Feel Alright") adds to the fun; on the downside, "Womb with a View" is an inexcusable anti-feminist diatribe.

With G.B.H. off to another label for a few years, Clay issued a compilation: tracks from EPs, singles and the albums, plus a strong pair of previously unreleased items, "Children of Dust" and "Do What You Do"— which fairly condenses the band's primal punk catalogue. Four years later, the label also issued Diplomatic Immunity, a poorly mastered and undocumented 21-song compilation that repeats all but the two rarities from The Clay Years and adds seven other selections from the band's first three albums.

The speaker-busting Oh No EP is one of the most explosive rock records ever, a blistering quartet of tunes that are easily among G.B.H.'s best. The unexpectedly melodic "Malice in Wonderland" is a revelation that pairs the old sound of Generation X and the Pistols with Megadeth production. Wow!

Taking a sidestep on Midnight Madness, G.B.H. replaced the shrill top with a thundering bottom and mixed speedmetal rhythms in with the breakneck hardcore tempos. It's still essentially a punk record, and a pretty good one at that, although the notion of these hard hooligans writing songs about New York's Iroquois Hotel, horror movies and international touring is a bit disconcerting. The inclusion of "Limpwristed" shows the still undeveloped state of the band's egalitarian humanitarian sensibilities.

G.B.H. got themselves a new drummer with twin bass pedals and went all metal on No Need to Panic! Echo on the vocals and blurry guitar on top of an over-eager rhythm section typify the sonic approach; sporadic spoken bits, sound effects and TV bites don't add as much as the band might imagine. Another reason not to be cheerful: the dull and unfocused lyrics.

Avoiding Panic's ill-advised fripperies, the four new songs on Wot a Bargin' are simply more thundering trash metal; winding up to deliver a killer blow, G.B.H. can't get themselves tight or focused enough to make any real impact. Much the same problem plagues the self-produced From Here to Reality, an album on which glimmers of melody and an accessible rock sensibility are buried in an endless roar of undifferentiated noise. Get these guys a real metal producer and stand back! [i]

CHARLATANS (UK)

The Only One I Know EP (Dead Dead Good-Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1990

Some Friendly (Dead Dead Good-Situation Two-Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1990 ♪

Friendly neighbors of the Stone Roses/Happy Mondays rave-pop scene, this young quintet from Northwich (equidistant from Manchester and Liverpool) uses Hammond organ, an evocative echo chamber and the neopsychedellic fad's maddening drum beat to effectively flavor tuneful '60s-styled numbers. Not as lame as Inspiral Carpets or as danceably ambitious as Happy Mondays, the Charlatans keep things simple, assuring maximum chart potential with a light, unchallenging approach. Equipped with Tim Burgess' appealing voice and Rob Collins' varied organ work, the Charlatans have the tools for major flavor-of-the-month stardom.

The four-song EP's catchy title track—which sounds an awful lot like Deep Purple's version of "Hush"—was a huge British hit, and helped move the Charlatans well ahead of the critically favored Stone Roses in the commercial stakes. Although not originally included on Some Friendly, the song was added to the album's American issue, joining the moody "You're Not Very Well," the dense "Then" (another UK hit), the jumping "Sonic" and several other likably disposable diversions with prickly lyrics. [i]

CHARLES DE GOAL

Algorithmes (Fr. New Rose) 1981

Ici l'Ombre (Fr. New Rose) 1982

3 (Fr. New Rose) 1984

Double Face (Fr. New Rose) 1986

Stylish but awkward, this French artist is at his best on weird, moody synthesizer workouts—those songs that rely on choppy guitar and weak singing aren't as effective. A version of Bowie's "Hang on to Yourself" (on Algorithmes) is skittish and tense, but not especially different from the original; its inclusion seems purposeless.

Ici l'Ombre has very little in the way of electronics; most of the tracks use only electric guitar, bass and drums. Among the haphazard collection of styles played poorly here: garden-variety punk ("Atout Mineur"), glum solemnity ("Rouge sur Blanc"), acoustic piano ("Face/Coma"), gothy noise ("Self Control") and squiggly synth-pop ("Kling Klang"). Hopeless.

Charles gets his cabinet properly organized on 3, but the well-produced and reasonably focused mixture of guitars, synthesizers and Linndrum still isn't very entertaining. Dramatic singing doesn't improve the weak material; while the cute melodic rock ("Hop Hop Hop," "Technicolor") and a clumsy English cover of Wire's "A Question of Degree" are amusing enough, the barren dance experiments that otherwise fill the album are fairly dismal. [i]

RHYS CHATHAM

Factor X (Ger. Moer Music) 1984

Die Donnergötter (Ger. Dossier) 1987 (Homestead) 1989 •

Do It Twice (Ger. Dossier) 1988 •

For years, folks even marginally acquainted with NYC's downtown music scene have been treated to an ongoing dialogue about which came first, the chicken or the egg. What's unique about this particular debate is that the chicken and egg themselves—Rhys Chatham and Glenn Branca—have been doing all the shouting about just which composer/performer caught the no wave first. One thing's for certain: Chatham's tightrope walk across the rock/classical gorge began firmly on the "legitimate" side, so his work has often courted rockists with an assumed thumbs-up from "serious" music fans—the reverse of Branca's approach.

Factor X is an aberration. The volume's certainly there, but the free jazzers who are called upon to deliver the goods simply don't have that swing (with the notable exception of drummer Anton Fier, at his most authoritarian here).

Die Donnergötter comprises three wildly different pieces (written and recorded several years apart). The earliest, "Guitar Trio" (on which Chatham and future Ordinaire Joe Dizney are axepeople) is the most visceral, with a slack, extended-time structure that pulls taut at the most unexpected moments. "Waterloo, No. 2" dispenses with guitars entirely, using an art-damaged drum and trombone corps (Chatham again) to create a rather rote bit of militaria. The side-long title track, however, is a real jewel. Using six guitars playing interlocking melodies, Chatham weaves an intricate tapestry that's alternately ear-splitting and nearly Eastern in its delicacy (not to mention a recurring theme that sounds exactly like the coda of "Marquee Moon"). Participants in the piece include future members of the Band of Susans.

Recently, Chatham has upped the pain-threshold ante by performing a piece ("An Angel Moves too Fast to See") with one hundred electric guitars. Get the fuses and the earplugs ready! [dss]

See also Band of Susans.

CHEAP TRICK

- Cheap Trick (Epic) 1977 •
- In Color (Epic) 1977 •
- Heaven Tonight (Epic) 1978 •
- At Budokan (Epic) 1979 •
- Dream Police (Epic) 1979 •
- Found All the Parts EP (Epic) 1980
- All Shook Up (Epic) 1980 •
- One on One (Epic) 1982 •
- Next Position Please (Epic) 1983 •
- Standing on the Edge (Epic) 1985 •
- The Doctor (Epic) 1986 •
- Lap of Luxury (Epic) 1988 •
- Busted (Epic) 1990 •

At a time when heavy metal had lost its menace and was fading into side-show stupidity, Rockford, Illinois' Cheap Trick blew out of the Midwest, where they had long been dominating clubs and bars, and set about proving that commercial rock writ large enough for football fields could also be relaxed, witty and sarcastic. Rick Nielsen stepped right through the guitar hero stereotype, wringing out glorious garbage while upholding the punk ethos by refusing to take the pose seriously. Although the quartet went wrong by buying into the expectations raised by large-scale success, Trick's early records and live performances positively influenced a generation of future bands growing up American in the late '70s. Many of today's post-punks (Replacements, Soul Asylum, Das Damen, Redd Kross, etc.—even Big Black went to the trouble of covering "He's a Whore" on a 1987 single) took something from them. While the self-important, phony and coldly efficient Kiss also influenced the same generation, Cheap Trick managed to make rock stardom look like fun, providing an alternative American archetype at a time when big-league success was almost a guarantee of total timidity and tedium.

After proving that a certain dose of commercial savvy was cool, Cheap Trick discovered that too much could be deadly. Failing to keep pace with what they had launched, the quartet wound up as dinosaurish and irrelevant as the arena reptiles they had originally displaced.

Drawing primary inspiration from the Move and Beatles, Cheap Trick synthesized a loud and brilliant rock powerdrive and backed it up with shows that, while formulaic and gimmicky in the extreme, had all the punch and spirited good humor that older, tired arena bands lacked. Cheap Trick is an absolute stunner, an immediately recognizable onslaught of Tom Petersson's

8- and 12-string basses, Nielsen's guitar overachiever theatrics, Robin Zander's nuclear assault voice and Bun E. Carlos' Watts-like steady drumming. Well-honed songs explode under Jack Douglas' all-electric production. "Taxman" turns the Beatles upside down with a twist; "He's a Whore" rocks with a ragingly melodic chorus; "The Ballad of TV Violence (I'm Not the Only Boy)" displays a healthy nasty streak by concerning Chicago mass murderer Richard Speck (albeit in the vaguest terms); "Oh Candy" laments a depressed male friend's suicide. One of the world's all-time greatest albums. (But don't put too much faith in the fabricated biography of the liner notes by future superstar novelist Eric Van Lustbader.)

In Color (And in Black and White), produced by Tom Werman (who went on to score metal with Ted Nugent, Mötley Crüe and Poison), is another spectacular record which reduces the buzzy guitar raunch in favor of a cleaner, more clearly pop-oriented sound. Trick maintained its anti-establishment coolness by including "Downed," an undisguised paean to barbiturates, and offering the bitchy "You're All Talk." Meanwhile, the LP contained the band's first hit single: the twinky "I Want You to Want Me."

Heaven Tonight hit a new pinnacle with the brilliant "Surrender" and a new low with the gimmicky "On the Radio." In between, the LP covers the Move ("California Man"), conveys the ambience of depressant use in song ("Heaven Tonight") and paraphrases arena rock in the leering "Stiff Competition."

As a result of burgeoning Asian popularity, the band's Japanese label recorded a pair of April 1978 Tokyo shows and released a live album, At Budokan. The concert version of "I Want You to Want Me" caught American radio programmers' attention and they jumped on the record—especially a dynamic rendition of Fats Domino's "Ain't That a Shame"—forcing its domestic release the following year and providing the group's first hit album.

Dream Police (also available on picture disc) continues the dedication to diversity. The wimpy ballad "Voices" and the paranoid mega-produced title track are pure pop; "Gonna Raise Hell," meanwhile, builds a rock disco groove with a powerful bass riff and overlays melodramatic vocals about the massacre at Jonestown, fading out with Zander's anguished shrieks. "I Know What I Want" is quintessential three-chord rock with a delightfully goofy Petersson vocal; the magnificent "Need Your Love" starts out slow and restrained, but builds to an intense boogie-based climax that closes the LP—and the essential segment of Cheap Trick's career.

As if to celebrate that juncture, a four-song 10-inch EP (later repackaged as a 12-inch) was released with a previously unissued track from each year, 1976–1979. "Take Me I'm Yours" is a worthwhile studio number; "Daytripper," ostensibly recorded live, lets the group display its affection (if not exactly reverence) for the Beatles.

The George Martin-produced All Shook Up is a bewildering array of production tricks, inferior material, halfbaked experiments and self-conscious mimicry of the Faces and the Rolling Stones. A few songs ("Baby Loves to Rock," "Can't Stop It but I'm Gonna Try") do withstand the overall botch, but the LP—Petersson's last—remains best unheard. One on One, produced by Roy Thomas Baker, is more realistic in its aspirations but suffers from second-rate material. Only the lascivious “She’s Tight” and the obligatory ballad (“If You Want My Love”) make strong impressions in this lackluster outing. New bassist Jon Brant adds nothing to the group’s sound.

Nielsen had played with post-Rundgren remnants of Nazz around 1970, so the choice of Todd as the producer of the refreshing Next Position Please was a circle closer of sorts. (Given Cheap Trick’s evident studio uncertainty the LP could have been titled Next Producer Please.) Returning somewhat to the straight rock-pop of In Color, but with Rundgren’s unique imprint, songs like “Borderline,” “I Can’t Take It,” “Won’t Take No for an Answer” and Rundgren’s contribution, the stunning “Heaven’s Falling,” make it a welcome return (almost) to form. On the downside, the LP also contains an atrocious self-produced version of the Motors’ “Dancing the Night Away” inserted at the label’s unfortunate insistence. The cassette adds “You Talk Too Much” and the slide-guitar blues festival, “Don’t Make Our Love a Crime.”

The next two LPs find Cheap Trick flailing about with skimpy ideas, no self-confidence and little enthusiasm. Reuniting with Jack Douglas for Standing on the Edge yielded a likable rote ballad (“Tonight It’s You”), a charged riff-rocker (“She’s Got Motion”) and one good pop tune (“This Time Around”), all co-written with professional song doctor Mark Radice, who also plays the LP’s keyboards. The Doctor, produced by metal-man Tony Platt (who mixed Standing on the Edge), is loud and abrasive, with the barest of worthy tunes (“Rearview Mirror Romance,” “The Doctor,” “Good Girls Go to Heaven”) and almost no trace of lyrical personality.

Petersson rejoined the group in time for Lap of Luxury, Cheap Trick’s creative nadir and (natch) commercial renaissance. Produced by the bombastic Richie Zito, with songs from all sorts of hacks (Nielsen only co-wrote four; Petersson and Zander collaborated on two others), the album gets off to a great start with “Let Go” but runs straight downhill from there. The hit-bound version of “Don’t Be Cruel” is a nice touch, but no great achievement; “Wrong Side of Love” indicates they can still rev up the engines. Despite the promise of the original lineup and the sales figures, this album runs on empty.

Reclaiming some of the songwriting responsibility on the similarly structured but less obnoxious Busted, Cheap Trick demonstrates a facility for connecting the dots on the contemporary compositional template: the band’s own “Can’t Stop Fallin’ into Love” is interchangeable with Lap of Luxury’s treacly store-bought hit (“The Flame”). Still, several of the original rockers (“I Can’t Understand It,” “Busted”) are encouraging to the point of enjoyability, despite worthless lyrics and deep-seated insincerity. But the appearance of two miserable demographic song-factory ballads, a guest role for Foreigner’s Mick Jones, an uninspired Roy Wood cover (now that’s a low) and a self-conscious Hard Day’s Night-era Beatles knock-off are continued evidence of the bottomless well of insecurity that keeps anything risky or inventive from appearing on a Cheap Trick record. [i]

CHEEPSKATES

Run Better Run (Midnight) 1984

Second and Last (Midnight) 1986

Remember (Ger. Music Maniac) 1987 ●

It Wings Above (Ger. Music Maniac) 1988 ●

Waiting for Unta (Ger. Music Maniac) 1989 ●

Perry Como: Songs Vol. 1 EP (Ger. Music Maniac) 1989

Confessional (Ger. Music Maniac) 1990 ●

HERRERA & THE HANDOUTS

A Handout from a Cheeps skate (Midnight) 1989

SHANE FAUBERT

Kalkara (Ger. Music Maniac) 1989 ●

The mercurial Cheeps skates began life as an anomaly on New York’s garage-rock scene: when most of their peers were scouring exurbia for vintage paisleys and vinyl (the more primitive the better, on both counts), this low-key quartet was creating some of the most carefully crafted pure pop to escape from those Seed-y halls. Run Better Run, dominated by Shane Faubert’s bouncy (but not overly retro) Farfisa organ and clear, expressive voice, attests to the group’s originality. Usually smart, occasionally precious songs like “Gone for Good” and “That’s When I Say Goodbye” are reminiscent of the Zombies’ art-school pop. Refreshingly cover-free (all four members write; three swap lead vocals), the disc is a timeless pleasure.

The original lineup split while recording the follow-up (hence the title), and the attendant tension is audible. The songs are looser in structure (though not overlong) and rely a bit too heavily on David Herrera’s whammy-bar fills. The diffusion does yield some positive by-products, notably Herrera’s “Good Life” (essentially a rewrite of Neil Young’s “Barstool Blues”) and bassist Tony Low’s “Every Man’s a King,” the album’s best song. Still, novices should stick to the debut.

After a year’s hiatus, Faubert and Low revamped the band as a trio and recorded Remember, a spare, atmospheric collection of dark pop that would forever put the revivalist tag behind them. Although the songs are still shaded with Farfisa, Faubert proves himself a very good guitarist in the Roger McGuinn vein on songs like “Backwards Boy” and the moody “Better off Alone.” It Wings Above is more intricate (there are swatches of saxophone and glockenspiel) and a bit brighter. Songs like the stunning “Goodbye Princess” and “From Light to Pouring Rain” occasionally swirl in a heady Game Theory (or even “Ride My See-Saw”-era Moody Blues) direction.

Recorded live in Berlin, Waiting for Unta indicates that the Cheeps skates might have more aces in their deck. Besides their well-documented pop intuition, the trio—here augmented by ex-Wind guitarist Lane Holland (né Steinberg)—reveals a harder, Quicksilver-like side with plenty of guitar interplay. And just to keep everyone off balance, the set closes with a spot-on rendition of the Everly Brothers’ “Bye Bye Love.” To further complicate critical matters, the band’s next release consisted of six songs popularized by Perry Como. “Catch a Falling Star,” “Round and Round” and the rest are handled with a blend of subtle irony and heartfelt appreciation worthy of NRBQ. Perfect for parties.

The aptly titled Confessional is the edgiest Cheeps skates disc yet, with stark shifts between the sugary ("Bear Down," "Come Close to Me") and the cyanide-laced ("Sorry," "It's Up to You") being made between almost every pair of tracks. Newly added second guitarist Rich Punzi makes his presence felt with some heartily feedback-drenched riffs.

Original guitarist Herrera indulges his dual fascinations—spacey, Santana-styled jamming and British blues—on his solo LP. If you can bypass the fact that he has nothing even resembling a singing voice, you'll find his fluid playing more attuned to the former (as evidenced by "Frog Booth"). Handout's meanderings, however, merit little more than a cursory listen.

Faubert, on the other hand, stakes out a patch of territory midway between early solo John Cale and the more mannered work of R. Stevie Moore. Strings, stately keyboards and minimal, orchestral percussion dominate the drony, hypnotic Kalkara, which serves as a rejoinder to—rather than an alternately arranged rehash of—his poppier work within the band. [dss]

CHELSEA

Chelsea (nr/Step Forward) 1979
Alternative Hits (nr/Step Forward) 1980
No Escape (IRS) 1980
Evacuate (IRS) 1982
Just for the Record (nr/Step Forward) 1985
Original Sinners (nr/Communique) 1985
Rocks Off (nr/Jungle) 1986
Backtrax (nr/Illegal) 1988
Underwraps (nr/IRS) 1989 ●
Unreleased Stuff (nr/Clay) 1989

Dismissed by more than a few as a bad joke, the never-say-die Chelsea was one of the few original punk groups to forge a unique sound and survive. Their distinctiveness stems from the grunt'n'groan vocals of Gene October, the guiding force and only constant member through enough lineup changes to rival John Mayall's role in a different musical realm.

Even in the early days, Chelsea didn't pursue the buzzsaw punk stereotype, instead favoring a less-fevered, sometimes lumbering intensity, redolent of an ignorant, lower-class background. Chelsea does offer plenty of thrills, however. James Stevenson's guitar enlivens slashing rockers like "I'm on Fire," and October constantly seems about to burst from the pressure. On a cover of Jimmy Cliff's exquisite "Many Rivers to Cross," he renders a vivid portrayal of someone suffering extreme pain who can't articulate it properly. It's poignant.

Alternative Hits (aka No Escape), produced by onetime Who manager/producer Kit Lambert, consists largely of tracks originally (and better) heard on singles. Collected on an album, these songs betray the band's lack of versatility. But at least it includes Chelsea's electrifying debut 45, "Right to Work."

Evacuate brings Gene October about as far into the modern age as he can go. In a bid for relative respectability, the bull-in-a-china-shop approach is toned down a bit. Somehow, it just doesn't seem right.

Like a beaten punch-drunk fighter who doesn't know enough to lay down, Chelsea slips further with its 1986 studio LP, Rocks Off. The record opens with an eyebrow-raising candied Hare Krishna chant, followed by its only enjoyable song, "Fools' Paradise," an engaging, harpsichord-laced ballad that might have been a radio hit in a more hospitable dimension. October's voice fits the flavor of the song, his clumsiness conveying an appropriate sense of confusion. From there, Chelsea retreats into "Revolution #9": a Beatles title, a Stones riff and 999's sound. The remainder is utterly pedestrian and dismal. Some legends are best left in the past.

Underwraps begins and ends on weird notes: "Somebody Got Murdered," a surprisingly accurate replica of the Clash song (from Sandinista!), and a coherent rendition of "Let the Good Times Roll," on which some of Chelsea is joined by ex-Clash drummer Topper Headon and original Police guitarist Henry Padovani (who sounds like he hasn't been practicing much lately). In between, October and his three current cohorts run warm (the Professionals soundalike of "Nice Girls," the mid-speed '77 punk of "Life of Crime") and cold (most everything else, all of it simple rewrites of familiar melodies) in a generic exercise that couldn't mean anything to anyone other than relatives and girlfriends. [jy/icm/i]

CHEMICAL PEOPLE

So Sexist! (Cruz) 1988 ●
Ten-Fold Hate (Cruz) 1989 ●
The Right Thing (Cruz) 1990 ●
Overdosed On ... (nr/Vinyl Solution) 1990

Hooky punk to the last decimal place: pure pop for impure people. While reveling in pornography (see the first few LP covers), LA's Chemical People nonetheless uphold a simpler, purer comic-book music and style. Energetic and insistent yet clean and uncluttered (without being didactically straight-edge), Chemical music is hardly unfamiliar or unexpected, but a hi-test sugar rush (not unlike the Descendents' caffeine crank) that will make latent pogoers snap their rods.

So Sexist! (with intro and outro by notorious horn-dog Tesco Vee) is split into sides "Blair" and "Dave," the former documenting the group's relatively unremarkable beginnings as a four-piece led by the titular guitarist/vocalist, while the flip marks the uneven launch of the real Chemical People, with drummer Dave Naz (worthy; also of the Last) taking charge of the songwriting and Mike Ness-like vocalizing.

Ten-Fold Hate (cover star: Tajia Rae) leaps ahead with immeasurably better production and tunes, more power and personality. The Right Thing only continues the trend (excepting the pom-queen idolatry, abandoned when it began to overshadow the music), while Overdosed consists of the second through fifth of the band's 7-inch EPs, augmented by one new studio track and three cuts recorded in '89 at CBGB.

With Jeff Dahl as frontman, the Chemical People transformed into the Chemical Dolls on "Sympathy for GG," a recent one-off 7-inch of GG Allin covers to benefit the imprisoned raver. [ab]

See also Last.

CHEQUERED PAST

Chequered Past (EMI America) 1984

Although listening to this run-of-the-mill Bad Company arena rock may not, a glance at the credits indicates why Chequered Past was one of the most depressing groups/albums of recent years. Clem Burke and Nigel Harrison (both ex-Blondie) and Steve Jones (ex-Pistols) formed three-fifths of the band, proving conclusively that even talented new wavers, no matter how idealistic and rebellious, were merely a few years away from becoming just as bogus as the musicians they originally set out to dethrone. [i]

See also Blondie, Sex Pistols.

NENEH CHERRY

Raw Like Sushi (Virgin) 1989 •

After stints singing with Rip Rig + Panic and Float Up CP, Cherry (born of a Swedish artist and an African percussionist, she uses the surname of her stepfather, renowned trumpeter Don Cherry) teamed up with UK hip-hop producer Bomb the Bass for the single "Buffalo Stance." An infectious, sassy and savvy pop/rap hybrid, "Buffalo Stance" benefited as much from Cherry's persona—sexy and autonomous sensualist with a social conscience and crossover appeal—as it did from the jingly/scratchy backing track, singalong chorus and what-does-that-mean? title.

Raw Like Sushi, the album that followed, never matches the single's initial rush, but when it hits (about a third of the time) it's funky, refreshing fun. Cherry's more convincing when she sticks to the sex and sass—among the LP's memorable moments are "Ouvé Risqué Locomotive" (a churning paean to coitus and commitment) and the breathless protests of "I came already" at the end of "So Here I Come." But "The Next Generation" amply demonstrates Cherry's ability to make a statement without sacrificing a sense of fun. You wind up admiring her so much you wish the album were a little better. [gk]

See also Rip Rig + Panic.

CHESTERFIELD KINGS

Here Are the Chesterfield Kings (Mirror) 1983
stop! (Mirror) 1985 + 1987

Don't Open Til Doomsday (Mirror) 1987

Night of the Living Eyes 1979-1983 (Mirror) 1989 •

The Berlin Wall of Sound (Mirror) 1990 •

Drunk on Muddy Water [CD] (Mirror) 1990 •

Unless you check the copyright date, you'll swear that this upstate New York band with pudding bowl haircuts and Beatle boots existed two decades back. The Kings' faithful re-creation of '60s guitar rock and garage punk (the first album's material is strictly covers, most of it so esoteric that only a fanatic record collector would recognize more than one or two tunes) is so spot-on that it's impossible to discern from the real thing. In their chosen idiom, the group's records are as consistent and reliable as early Ramones.

The Kings' staggeringly true alternation of mersey-beat and sneery trash remains uncompromised on stop!; surprisingly, the high proportion of originals scarcely diminishes the lifelike effect. (Two extra songs were added when Mirror remastered stop! for its 1987 reissue.)

The shag haircuts on the cover of Don't Open Til Doomsday offer fair warning that the quintet (having undergone a lineup adjustment) has loosened the stylistic strings. Leavening the slavish fundamentalism with a little modern sonic character, they hit on something comparable to late-'70s Flamin' Groovies. As a concession to the less obscure-minded, the waning proportion of non-originals draws on T-Bone Burnett and Ray Davies and Dee Dee Ramone. The album is enthusiastically played and cleanly recorded but, once a band has painted itself up such a stylistic tree, musical development may mean a straight path down. (Esoterica note: "They were never born/they were thrown out of hell" is inscribed in the run-off groove.)

Night of the Living Eyes temporarily avoids the issue of musical direction by reaching into the vaults, compiling material (all covers, natch) recorded in the four years before the Kings started making LPs: both sides of their first three singles, a rehearsal outtake featuring manager/label chief/cult-figure-in-his-own-right Armand Schaubroeck and an early-'83 NYC live set. A fine document of the band's savage youth.

The Berlin Wall of Sound finds frontman Greg Prevost and bassist Andy Babuik, joined by two new members, making further moves towards a more contemporary approach. Save for a version of Bo Diddley's "Pills" and another Dee Dee tune, the songs are all originals. Sporting a raw, Stony sound that suits swagging tunes like "Love, Hate, Revenge" and "(I'm So) Sick and Tired of You" (not to mention the rather questionable "Richard Speck"), Berlin Wall presents the Chesterfield Kings as a fine, non-anachronistic hard-rock band. For weirdness' sake, there's also "Coke Bottle Blues," a distinctly bizarre stab at delta-blues fetishism.

The band apparently liked that track enough to attempt an entire album's worth of twelve-bar standards: Drunk on Muddy Water, released in a numbered limited edition of one thousand. Though Greg (billed here as Yardbird) Prevost is no Leadbelly, the loose, lo-fi renditions of classics by Muddy, John Lee Hooker, etc. are entertainingly demented. [i/hd]

CHICKASAW MUDD PUPPIES

White Dirt (Wing-Texas Hotel-PolyGram) 1990 •

8 Track Stomp (Wing-Mercury) 1991 •

Thirsty for a little Southern musical comfort, amateur swamp-grunge variety? This conscientiously rustic Athens, Georgia duo of Ben Reynolds (electric guitar, vocals, percussion) and Brant Slay (vocals, harmonica, percussion) may not be authentic anything, but their brief debut LP's carefully cruddy sound (produced by Michael Stipe and John Keane) and rudimentary performances do convey the backporch feel of a couple of boys singing, stomping and banging out rough tunes with raw spirit (and an echo chamber). If White Dirt could kick up anything besides a little atmosphere, there might be a reason to recommend it.

The full-length 8 Track Stomp, produced separately by Stipe and Chicago blues legend Willie Dixon, fits more songwriting effort into the duo's minimalist clatter-and-strum fantasies and comes out substantially more invigorating. Slay's yip'n'holler vocals find a real home in "Night Time (Ain't Got No Eyes)," the Stonesy "Superior" and Dixon's "Moving So Fast"; the restrained pop of "Cold Blue" shows the Puppies in a captivatingly pretty light. Now there's something to stomp about. [i]

CHIEFS OF RELIEF

Chiefs of Relief (Sire) 1988 •

Bow Wow Wow guitarist Matthew Ashman (now also a vocalist) formed the Chiefs of Relief as the post-Annabella version of that band, but it took a few years before anything came of it. By that time, he had teamed with ex-Pistols/Professionals drummer Paul Cook and, joined by a bassist and keyboard player, begun playing a pop-safe hybrid of rap, beatbox funk and loud rock. At times resembling a tamer Big Audio Dynamite (a bit too closely), the Chiefs are nonetheless an agreeable dance-powered outfit that draws on the varied experiences of its creative team to kick the songs into fun gear. Richard Gottehrer's production accommodates the assorted directions handily, making Chiefs of Relief an easy pill to swallow. [i]

See also Bow Wow Wow, Professionals, Sex Pistols.

BILLY CHILDISH

See Pop Rivits, Thee Mighty Caesars.

D.J. CHUCK CHILLOUT & KOOL CHIP

Masters of the Rhythm (Mercury) 1989 •

Venerable old-school DJ Chuck Chillout and his rapping partner Kool Chip run a graduate class in hip-hop tradition on Masters of the Rhythm, a solidly entertaining party record that skirts rugged language and any ideas more serious than "Rhythm Is the Master." Over modest beats that sample Kool and the Gang, Cameo, Herbie Hancock and Talking Heads' "Once in a Lifetime," the duo drops energetic rhymes on familiar topics (with relevant soundbites from Public Enemy, the Fat Boys and Run-DMC), reliving rap's recent past with engaging enthusiasm. [i]

CHILLS

The Lost EP (NZ Flying Nun) 1985 (Homestead) 1988 •

Kaleidoscope World (nr/Creation) 1986 (Homestead) 1990 •

Brave Words (NZ Flying Nun) 1987 (Homestead) 1988 •

Submarine Bells (Slash-Wamer Bros.) 1990 •

New Zealand's Chills make lightweight, non-controversial pop with such fresh-scrubbed integrity that it's hard not to like them. Guitars may twinkle like harps and jangle over angelically whispery vocals but somehow the love songs are never gooey. Goopy bands do not write lines like "Oh god this white ward stinks, sterilized stench of sticky death, sniveling relatives at the feet of another moist corpse, but that corpse is Jayne and Jayne can't die" (from Brave Words' "16 Heartthrobs"). Sappy sentimentalists aren't honest enough to admit "I'd like to say how I love you but it's all been said in other songs" as singer/guitarist Martin Phillipps (after a decade, the only original Chill) does on the same album's "Night of Chill Blue."

The Chills write mostly love songs. They love women, rain, the Otago Peninsula at the southern tip of New Zealand's southern island and their leather jackets. They even love to be hurt because out of hurt comes growth. They love cool, clean production with sparkling high notes, keeping just enough homestyle dustiness to avoid slickness. At times, their music seems like a low-budget answer to the Moody Blues. Other times they sound like they just stepped out of a renaissance market square with folkly acoustic guitars and delicate drums.

Kaleidoscope World is the record for Chills and Kiwi-pop purists, as it compiles most of the band's early singles and compilation tracks on one disc; the CD version of the belated American release adds the Lost EP, both sides of a subsequent 12-inch and two songs from a compilation. If nothing else, the record—in any format—is worth owning for 1982's "Pink Frost," one of the most haunting songs about death ever recorded by a pop group, and the band's masterpiece.

Sympathetically produced by Gary Smith, Submarine Bells (a far better album than the flawed Brave Words) graduates the Chills from being just a first-rate singles band. Andrew Todd's ghostly keyboards abound on such graceful yet eerie gems like "Effloresce and Deliquesce"; a tinge of knowing, slow heartbreak slings its way through "Part Past Part Fiction" and "Don't Be—Memory." Others, like the should-have-been-a-smash "Heavenly Pop Hit" (quite) and the splendidous title track, show a decided late-'60s Brian Wilson influence. And for all of the Chills' charm, pristine textures and cool atmosphere, Phillipps' roots in late-'70s punk still show in such uncharacteristic blasters as "The Oncoming Day" and "Familiarity Breeds Contempt." [e/jr]

ALEX CHILTON

Singer Not the Song EP (Ork) 1977

Like Flies on Sherbert (Peabody) 1979 (nr/Aura) 1980

(Ger. Line) 1981 •

Bach's Bottom (Ger. Line) 1981 + 1985 •

Live in London (nr/Aura) 1982 •

Feudalist Tarts EP (Big Time) 1985 •

Document (nr/Aura) 1985

No Sex EP (Big Time) 1986

Stuff [CD] (Fr. New Rose) 1987 •

High Priest (Big Time) 1987 •

Black List (Fr. New Rose) 1990 •

19 Years: A Collection of Alex Chilton (Rhino) 1991 •

BIG STAR

#1 Record (Ardent) 1972

Radio City (Ardent) 1974

#1 Record/Radio City (nr/Stax-EMI) 1977 (nr/Big Beat)

1987 (Ger. Line) 1987 •

3rd (PVC) 1978 (nr/Aura) 1978

Sister Lovers (PVC) 1985 (Ger. Line) 1987 •

Big Star's Biggest [CD] (Ger. Line) 1987 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Alex Chilton's Lost Decode (Fr. Fan Club) 1985

A seemingly unlikely figure for a new wave progenitor, Memphis-born ex-Box Tops singer Chilton nonetheless exerted tremendous influence on many groups via his unconventional early '70s recordings with Big Star. If not the best of Big Star's three LPs, #1 Record is at least the most cohesive. Recorded in 1972, when its Beatlesque four-part harmonies, early Byrds/Kinks guitar sound and crisp, tight, live-sounding production were decidedly out of vogue, the album was an early rejection of then-dominant bloated "progressive" rock, which had already fallen victim to the giant ego-tripping of not-so-giant talents.

Where #1 Record is a collaborative effort in every sense of the word (Chilton co-wrote and shares lead vocals with the talented Chris Bell; all four members sing), Radio City is more a showcase for Chilton's increasingly quirky talents. Bell had left the group (he died in a December 1978 car crash), and Chilton, whose gruff tenor epitomized the Box Tops' Top 40 sound, sings at the very top of his range, straining at times to reach high notes in his own songs. The well-organized production values of #1 Record give way to a more emotional and spontaneous sound, a middle ground between Lennon's Plastic Ono Band and early Sun records. If the material on Radio City is spotty, it's never uninteresting, and the best songs—"September Gurls" and "Back of a Car"—are as good as any rock-'n'-roll produced in the first half of the '70s. (While Big Bear's joint CD of #1 Record/Radio City deletes two tracks from the first album, the German Line edition contains both complete LPs.)

Recorded in 1974 but unreleased until 1978—by which time Big Star had broken up—3rd, reissued much later under its original title of Sister Lovers, is almost a Chilton solo album. Alex, Big Star drummer Jody Stephens and a host of Memphis friends and sessioneers (Jim Dickinson and Steve Cropper among them) comprise the band. Capturing Chilton at a point when his creative powers were still strong enough to effectively chronicle the spiritual pain which would eventually sideline him for an extended stretch, it's an eclectic mix, alternately depressing and uplifting, ugly and beautiful. Though the various released versions were assembled without input by Chilton or producer Dickinson, 3rd/Sister Lovers is—in its own fragile, ragged way—Chilton's most compelling (not to mention influential) album. Unlike the halfbaked material he'd produce during the ensuing decade, 3rd/Sister Lovers does a brilliant job of balancing madness and genius, with classic tracks like "Holocaust," "Dream Lover" and "Stroke It Noel" standing as some of the most chillingly beautiful music ever produced in the pop medium. (The Aura and PVC versions originally featured different track selections; the PVC and Line CDs each include the same seventeen songs, but in a different sequence and with different cover art.)

Between the release of Radio City and 3rd, Chilton had recorded an album's worth of material in a series of stormy sessions in Memphis with rock critic/musician Jon Tiven producing. Chilton was reportedly so out of it during the recording that Tiven ended up playing all the guitar. Some of the results of those sessions were released in 1977 on an Ork Records EP: Singer Not the Song includes versions of the titular Stones song and a 59-second "Summertime Blues," plus a couple of decent Chilton co-compositions that might have sounded better under other circumstances. In 1981, the EP's contents plus more material from the same wild sessions (including five more minutes of "Summertime Blues") were released in Germany as Bach's Bottom. Only the really faithful will want to know.

Despite leading bands in New York (with Chris Stamey) and Memphis between 1975 and 1979—the years when he was rediscovered and lionized by critics and musicians—Chilton released only one single (1978's "Bangkok"/"Can't Seem to Make You Mine") during that period. Live shows did serve to increase his reputation as an erratic and eccentric performer, and the 1979 release of Like Flies on Sherbert painfully confirmed the degradation of a once-major talent. Produced in Memphis by Dickinson, the LP sounds (not surprisingly) like a bunch of drunken louts running amok in a studio. Some potentially good Chilton material is trampled to death in the process, as well as some covers. In short, it stinks. (The 1980 British edition on Aura apparently utilized the wrong master tapes; the original mix from the tiny Peabody release, most widely available on a German Line issue, is far superior.)

Live in London captures a 1981 performance at Dingwalls on what is, for Chilton, a fairly good night. Backed by the Soft Boys rhythm section (Matthew Seligman and Morris Windsor) and Vibrator Knox on guitar, Chilton runs through material from all three Big Star LPs and Like Flies on Sherbert. Although characteristically sloppy and erratic, the album has moments that indicate there may be life in the old boy yet.

After spending several years drying out and laying low in New Orleans and Memphis, Chilton returned to active duty in late 1984, touring with a new pair of sidemen and recording his first new studio release in many years. Feudalist Tarts is a delight, six sides marked by control, easy confidence and entertaining variety. Chilton even sounds like he's enjoying the work for a change. Among the originals are a humorously raunchy blues, "Lost My Job," and the absurdist jivey "Stuff" (with horns); covers include a slow, lazy take on Carla Thomas' "B-A-B-Y" and a funky slide number from the Slim Harpo songbook. The EP is a bit insubstantial, but most encouraging.

Big Star's Biggest is a good eighteen-track sampler drawn from all three of the band's albums; Document is a thirteen-cut 1985 compilation covering both Big Star and solo tracks. Lost Decade is an interestingly conceived collection of '70s work: one disc of rare and semi-rare Chilton solo recordings (some predating Big Star) plus an album's worth of material Chilton produced for singer Scott Adams and three other obscure artists. Stuff is an amazing French CD-only collection that contains all of Feudalist Tarts, the three songs on the 1986 "No Sex" 12-inch and seven more solo items, including "Bangkok" and its B-side, a version of the Seeds' "Can't Seem to Make You Mine."

Having influenced scores of garage rockers from the Replacements (only one of several bands to write a song about him) on down, Chilton can be forgiven for calling his next album High Priest. The record—which contains only four Chilton compositions—finds him tackling virtually every type of song you can imagine him playing (and some you wouldn't, like "Volaré"), from the Memphis soul of his Box Tops days to Brill Building pop to Jimmy Reed-style blues to gospel to Big Star to a twisted version of the Bill Justis instrumental "Raunchy," all lovingly delivered in a casual live-or-near-live garage style. What it lacks in polish, it more than makes up in charm, verve and just plain ol' soul. This could be what rock'n'roll is all about. (Big Time's American CD adds all of Feudalist Tarts. "No Sex" and one of its two B-sides. In France, where those EPs had already been collected on the Stuff CD, New Rose affixed four previously unreleased bonus tracks, including a knowingly creepy remake of Porter Wagoner's "Rubber Room.")

The six-song Black List continues in High Priest's archivist/craftsman/lounge-lizard mode, with a slinky blues cover ("I Will Turn Your Money Green"), a cheerfully nonsensical take on Ronnie and the Daytonas' "Little GTO" and the laconic social commentary of Chilton's own "Guantanamerika."

With the benefit of clear annotation and the inclusion of a Troggs cover recorded for a New Rose compilation, 19 Years, Chilton's first proper American retrospective, is basically culled from 3rd, High Priest, Feudalist Tarts and Like Flies on Sherbert, with some of the same esoterica collected on Stuff. The cassette contains fourteen tracks; the CD goes five better.

See also Panther Burns. [ds/i/hd]

CHINA CRISIS

Difficult Shapes & Passive Rhythms, Some People Think It's

Fun to Entertain (nr/Virgin) 1982 (Virgin) 1987 •

Working with Fire and Steel EP (Warner Bros.) 1983

Working with Fire and Steel Possible Pop Songs Volume

Two (Warner Bros.) 1983 •

Flaunt the Imperfection (Virgin-Warner Bros.) 1985 •

What Price Paradise (Virgin-A&M) 1986 •

Best Kept Secret EP (nr/Virgin) 1988 •

Diary of a Hollow Horse (Virgin-A&M) 1989 •

The China Crisis Collection (nr/Virgin) 1990 •

The weird title of the first album by this Liverpool group—essentially a duo of Gary Daly (words, keyboards, vocals) and Eddie Lundon (guitar and music), plus Dave the percussionist—does convey a sense of what China Crisis is about. The rhythms—R&B, funk, reggae, Afro-gypsy, bossa nova—are so gently, modestly, melodiously proffered that it goes down too smoothly. Then you notice that the dreamily enunciated sentiments interface the political and the personal, with hopeful dreams and admissions of self-doubt and inner struggle. The cohesive feel is maintained despite four different producers; China Crisis' sturdy intellectual backbone emerges often enough to avoid wimpiness.

Working with Fire and Steel has just as much going for it. Sax and/or oboe (!) appears on all but two tracks, with more horns on occasion and even strings (real and synth). Mike Howlett's production, plus a new drummer and a permanent bassist, help the group attain a bit more sonic snap; the lyrics are less tortured, if just as thoughtfully and melancholically personal. (The EP of the same name unites two versions of the title track with a pair of pretty, wistful instrumentals originally released as British 45 B-sides.)

Flaunt the Imperfection was produced by Steely Dan's Walter Becker but, while displaying a bit of Dan influence (see "The Highest High" and "Black Man

Ray," both memorable pieces of modern art-pop), it's far more obviously a refinement of the band's own style. The lyrical art seems so artless, the musical airiness so effortless; like the first album, it's almost too subtle for its own good. (Almost.)

By What Price Paradise, Daly had handed the keyboards over to a fifth band member, but that had no audible, directly traceable influence compared to the switch to the production team of Clive Langer and Alan Winstanley. The sound has more edge to it, yet is somehow less delicate, less distinctive than on previous albums. In fact, the vocals (lead and backing) on one track are so different that the group is nearly unrecognizable. Still, it pretty much is China Crisis; if the songs occasionally seem more conventionally written, they're still attractive, even almost (gulp) commercial. What'll they think of next?

On Diary of a Hollow Horse, aside from three tracks overseen by Mike Thorne, a return to Becker is what. While Thorne uses a sparser sound, Becker often opts to add sax, flute, extra guitar and female backing vocalists. But the album is more familiarly typical of China Crisis (again with a taste of musical Danishness), and grows with repeated plays. In an uncharacteristic break with the usual conscious self-control, the group releases some tension in the nearly anthemic (by these standards) "All My Prayers." Diary is no match for their finest work, but a gratifying effort all the same.

The China Crisis Collection is a balanced overview, but contains only one track from the '89 LP.

[jg]

CHOIR INVISIBLE

Choir Invisible (Frontier) 1981

Sea to Shining Sea EP (PVC) 1984

FLYBOYS

The Flyboys EP (Frontier) 1980

Drummer Danny Benair, onetime mainstay of LA's Quick and later in the Three O'Clock, was—between those two outfits—one-fourth of Choir Invisible, known as the Flyboys when they released the trebly EP which was Frontier's first record. The band bears some resemblance to early U2 on Choir Invisible—credit the guitar work by Thames Sinclair (later half of a duo called Wonderwall)—but singer John Curry's melodramatic voice doesn't put the songs across convincingly. There's variety and depth, but also some problems that need to be resolved.

Adding a keyboard player and switching drummers, Choir Invisible made the much-improved Sea to Shining Sea, adopting a lush dance-synth style that sounds very British. Feigning the same mid-Atlantic accent (but pruned of its excesses), Curry's voice better suits this material, although he's still not a great singer. Sinclair's textures keep the midtempo tunes from dragging too much; he is a great guitar player. "I Walked Away," with its surprising Association-like harmonies, is the best of the disc's six offerings. There's nothing essential here, but it's more amusing than records by many likeminded outfits, and there are certainly enough of them. [i]

See also Flesh Eaters.

CHORDS

So Far Away (nr/Polydor) 1980

No One's Listening Anymore (nr/Unicorn) 1988

The Jam parented a 1979-'81 UK mod revival, as Secret Affair, the Purple Hearts, Merton Parkas, Gas, Lambrettas, Mods and Jolt all scrambled to join the hit parade. Though each left behind credible singles, only the Chords (no relation to the '50s doo-wop band) had the punk balls that made the Jam more than '67 wannabes. The Chords have been better remembered than most of their contemporaries, cited by no less than the Stone Roses as an early influence.

So Far Away's crashing power-pop singles ("May-be Tomorrow" and "Something's Missing") approach the same tuneful heights as such contemporaneous Jam tunes as "Going Underground" and "Funeral Pyre." The album otherwise joins inspired originals ("It's No Use," "I'm Not Sure," "Happy Families") with two properly reverent oldies ("She Said She Said" and "Hold on, I'm Coming") updated in a twin guitar attack led by Chris Pope.

Recorded live at London's Rainbow in June 1980, No One's Listening Anymore captures the Chords at the height of their popularity. The concert versions don't improve on the walloping originals, but the album does showcase a punchy stage quartet, and the packaging includes concert posters and a band chronology.

After unwisely sacking popular vocalist/guitarist Billy Hassett (cousin of bassist Martin Mason) and replacing him with an ex-Vibrator, the Chords released a pair of excellent 45s and then folded in November 1981, leaving an album's worth of second-LP demos that occasionally turns up in bootleg racks. [jr]

CHRIS AND COSEY

Heartbeat (nr/Rough Trade) 1981 (Wax Trax!) 1990 •

Trance (nr/Rough Trade) 1982 (Wax Trax!) 1990 •

Songs of Love + Lust (nr/Rough Trade) 1984 (Wax Trax!) 1990 •

European Rendezvous (nr/Doublevision) 1984

Techno Primitiv (nr/Rough Trade) 1985 (Wax Trax!) 1990 •

Take Five EP (Can. Netwerk) 1986 •

Exotika (Can. Netwerk) 1987 (Netwerk) 1990 •

Action (nr/Licensed) 1987

Trust (Bel. Play It Again Sam) 1989 (Netwerk) 1990 •

Chris and Cosey (Bel. Play It Again Sam) 1989 •

Allotropy (Staaltape) 1989 •

Reflection (Wax Trax!) 1990 •

Pagan Tango (Wax Trax!) 1991 •

CREATIVE TECHNOLOGY INSTITUTE

Elemental 7—The Original Soundtrack (nr/Doublevision) 1984

CHRIS CARTER

Mondo Beat (nr/Conspiracy Int'l) 1986

COSEY FANNI TUTTI

Time to Tell (nr/Cathexis) 1988

CORE

Core (Can. Netwerk) 1988 •

CONSPIRACY INTERNATIONAL

Collectiv One [CD] (Austrian CTI) 1988 •

Rising in the very early '80s from the corpse of Throbbing Gristle, Chris Carter and Cosey Fanni Tutti (aka CTI, the Creative Technology Institute) infuse their electronic mantras with the beat of the factory to create a desolate industrial vision. Much of the work on Heartbeat follows solidly in Throbbing Gristle's footsteps, with found voices playing over pulsating synthesizer sounds, while the remainder strives towards lightweight Kraftwerkian metal pop. (The cassette has extra tracks.)

Trance's songs unfold more slowly and deliberately, only reaching their final rock forms after passing through stages that frequently bear an uncanny resemblance to Gregorian chant warped into the future. As the title suggests, the mood is dark and contemplative; within the inventive and apparently emotionless electronics lie deep wells of terror and claustrophobia. Worth looking into.

Songs of Love and Lust has a distinctively icy sound, with precise, percussive synths not very far to the left of Depeche Mode. Cosey's cold, distant voice, paying only passing attention to intonation at times, fits in perfectly amidst the machines. The problem is the songs—they're highly repetitive and go nowhere. (Five of the LP's nine tracks exceed five minutes.) Considering the pair's background, this record takes few chances.

CTI's Elemental 7, the soundtrack to a long-form video, consists primarily of tempo-less washes of synthesizers, bordering on '70s-style space rock. Not very listenable as an album. European Rendezvous is a live set recorded throughout the continent in 1983.

Techno Primitiv is interchangeable with Songs of Love and Lust, dominated by unchallenging, mechanical electro-pop. Tempos and textures vary, but each track has an air of familiarity. One could possibly find some interest if the production were at least good, but the album has a really dead sound.

Still without a US record deal, Chris and Cosey signed with Canada's Netwerk and released Take Five in 1986. It begins with "October Love Song," a song worthy of the Human League; the four other tracks fall between that approach and the pair's previous work. The production is much improved (two numbers are remixes of early material).

The liner notes on Exotika explain, "Today we have tremendously diverse kinds of music," but the grooves contain very little to demonstrate that these two are actually aware of that fact; each (lengthy) cut is an electro-Eurodisco variation on the same theme, introduced long ago. Again, the sound is nice, but other bands have done (and overdone) this same stuff much better. Chris and Cosey are just about up to the point of being permanently dismissible. (The Exotika CD adds Take Five.)

Trust earns them a temporary reprieve. The tracks are more diverse than those on Exotika, and Cosey's voice doesn't, for once, sound like a recorded message, which makes a world of difference. "Watching You" might go on forever, but at least she gives the impression of feeling the lyrics' paranoia. The title cut is a haunting, predominantly spoken tone poem more reminiscent of the less abrasive moments of Throbbing Gristle; other tracks concentrate on sexuality and get fairly funky—in a sense. (The CD adds a remix of the song "Hypnotika.")

The long, repetitive grooves on Pagan Tango are—structurally at least—not that dissimilar to industrial music. (In other words, Chris and Cozey are catching up to their own influence.) But as the techno dance beats and synthesized washes are trancey/pretty rather than bludgeoning/cruel, Cozey's insignificant vocal contributions seem more instrumental than intellectual.

The Reflection compilation contains two selections each from the duo's four Rough Trade LPs. The earlier work is refreshing to hear, as it serves to remind that Chris and Cozey have produced a variety of quality material over the years. Collectiv One compiles twelve tracks from 1983-'85.

Core is a project in which the duo collaborates with a half-dozen other artists, among them Robert Wyatt, Boyd Rice and Coil (thereby reuniting with former Gristle-mate Peter Christopherson). The variety of colleagues is reflected in the material: Chris and Cozey (as CTT) allow others plenty of input. "Feeder," recorded with Coil, sounds cinematic; "Unmasked" is a chilling ballad with Wyatt; a cut with Rice marks a return to their industrial roots. Very little of Core revisits previous C&C releases; even a cut without guests steers clear of familiar territory, and features a (real? Fairlighted?) orchestra. An unexplained minute or so of quiet electronics separates each track. Very impressive.

[sg/i/dgs]

CHRIS D.

See Divine Horsemen, Flesh Eaters.

CHRISTIAN DEATH

- Only Theatre of Pain (Frontier) 1982 •
- Deathwish EP (Fr. L'Invitation au Suicide) 1984 •
- Catastrophe Ballet (Fr. L'Invitation au Suicide) 1984 (lt. Contempo) 1987 (Nostradamus) 1990 •
- Ashes (Nostradamus) 1985 (Ger. Normal) 1988 •
- The Wind Kissed Pictures EP (lt. Supporti Fonografici) 1985 (Nostradamus-Chameleon) 1986 •
- The Decomposition of Violets [tape] (ROIR) 1985 (lt. Contempo) 1990 •
- An Official Anthology of "Live" Bootlegs (nr/Nostradamus) 1986
- Atrocities (Ger. Normal) 1986 •
- Jesus Christ Proudly Presents Christian Death (Ger. Normal) 1987
- The Scriptures (nr/Jungle) 1987 •
- The Wind Kissed Pictures (past & present) [CD] (lt. Supporti Fonografici) 1988 •
- Sex and Drugs and Jesus Christ (nr/Jungle) 1988 (Nostradamus-Dutch East India) 1989 •
- The Heretics Alive (nr/Jungle) 1989 (Nostradamus-Dutch East India) 1990 •
- All the Love All the Hate Part One: All the Love (nr/Jungle) 1989 •
- All the Love All the Hate Part Two: All the Hate (nr/Jungle) 1989 •
- The Wind Kissed Pictures (past present & future) (lt. Supporti Fonografici) 1990 •
- Insanus, Ultio, Proditio, Misericordia Que (lt. Supporti Fonografici) 1990 •

POMPEII 99

- Look at Yourself (Nostradamus) 1981
- Ignorance is the Control EP (Nostradamus) 1982

Formed originally in Los Angeles as a theatrical shock-horror outgrowth of the punk scene (guitarist Rikk Agnew was a recent refugee from the Adolescents), Christian Death has survived to flourish into a multinational organization with a vast catalogue of pretentious gothic records.

Only Theatre of Pain is hampered by singer Rozz Williams' ghastly voice, but the loud/not-too-fast music is appropriately doomy'n'gloomy, with inventive arrangements and clear sound to capture the mood in full B-movie fidelity. The lyrics irreverently address horror topics and religion: they're overwrought and dumb (the backwards masking of "Mysterium Iniquitatis" being one clever exception) but easy to overlook in the wash of inspired rock noise. (The CD appends the menacing synth-rock "Dogs," rescued from the first Hell Comes to Your House compilation, as well as Deathwish—a grainy-sounding five-song EP of pre-LP demos that includes early versions of three songs that made it onto the original album as well as two punky tracks that didn't.)

Fronting an entirely different lineup on the stylish-looking Ashes, Williams evidently learned to temper his harsh voice by burying it low in the mix. Unfortunately, keyboardist Gitane DeMone also sings, creating a bit of internal controversy over which key any given song should employ. The ponderous Bauhausian music, which sets its solid foundation on David Glass' drumming, is more mature and sophisticated; lyrics (some in German) drop religion for vague evocations of medieval debauchery and evil. The Decomposition of Violets, a contemporaneous live tape of that same lineup onstage in Hollywood, is loud and enthusiastic but suffers greatly from the blatant overuse of synthesizers and terribly recorded vocals.

With guitarist Valor taking over the vocals and songwriting, Christian Death became a trio on The Wind Kissed Pictures. Occasionally colored by gusty vampire movie ambient effects, the clear, open music makes the would-be decadence of "Believers of the Unpure" and the title track easier to endure, if not actually enjoy. Valor's singing, alone and combined with DeMone's, is also something of an improvement, although his lyrics are actually worse than Williams'. The American edition adds an English-language "Lacrima Cristi," while the first Italian CD, lengthened to The Wind Kissed Pictures (past & present), adds three cinematic instrumentals. The third Italian version, The Wind Kissed Pictures (past present & future), adds the Italian and English renditions of "Lacrima."

Taking the band's name as its literal mission, Valor set out to destroy organized religion. Thus motivated, he began to really distinguish himself as a pompous prat on Atrocities, Christian Death's darkhearted return to the somber cesspool of slow-paced grimness. "Herein contained are the emotional remains of millions," his liner notes to the impenetrable concept album exclaim, but that's hard to believe. Jesus Christ Proudly Presents (another dubious assertion, to be sure—proudly?) is a lavish box set, spreading a concert's worth of live cuts and an interview over six 7-inch EPs.

Raging ego and unchecked ambition allow Valor to attempt a laughable comparative history of religion on The Scriptures, subtitled "A Translation of World Beliefs by Valor." (Thanks, Val!) After beginning the LP with a fundamentalist preacher, V. goes on to crib lyrics from the Bible and sing—with an audibly straight face—of Huns, horsemen and Ma'gog, pontificating in a most truly offensive manner. The trio also manages to cover a Jimi Hendrix song ("1983") and play the relatively incidental (but agreeable) rock music with a bit of outside assistance. The original pressing included a bonus 7-inch single of "Jezebel's Tribulation" and "Wraeththu," both also added to the CD.

Christian Death claims to have assembled An Official Anthology by collecting and culling illicit concert recordings made of them between 1981 and 1986. Shows from London, Amsterdam and Los Angeles are included, as are three previously unrecorded tracks.

Like its British edition's intentionally offensive cover photograph (of the messiah jacking up), the contents of Sex and Drugs and Jesus Christ are awful, a rudimentary and barely musical mix of (what sound like synthetic) drums, bass and loud guitar that could have been knocked off in an afternoon by just about anybody with hands. Lyrically, Valor and DeMone continue to prattle crypto-religious imprecations and apocalyptic mumbo jumbo. To get an idea just how bad this is, try singing "Your church makes me vomit into the vertiginous abyss" or "In the chambers of unguiculate sacciform/From the Almighty avenging words of pernicious thoughts" and see where it gets you.

Recorded as a five-piece at the Marquee London in mid-1989 (hence the prominence given to material from Sex and Drugs), The Heretics Alive contains on-site interviews with fans explaining their fondness for—and understanding of—Christian Death. Given the devilishly grungy sound and sloppy, impotent performances, the irrational comments make a better case for the band than anything else on the record.

After DeMone departed to pursue her jazz club singing in Holland, Valor made some changes. Aided by a drummer and new multi-instrumental cohort Nick the Bastard, he came up with an ambitiously simpleminded concept project, released as two separately packaged LPs. All the Love, which begins with a Martin Luther King quote—now that's artistic presumption—takes an ambivalent stance on the subject of l'amour, from respectful ("We Fall Like Love") to hostile ("Love Is Like a Bitchin' in My Heart," revising the Holland/Dozier/Holland classic without credit) to bent ("Deviate Love"). The casually played, occasionally atmospheric music likewise shifts gears (none of them especially accomplished or attractive) without ever finding one worthy of attention.

All the Hate, a third-rate heavy metal record whose cover shows a swastika in a black heart ringed by Jewish stars, uses shock value symbols, inflammatory lyrics and sound bites of Hitler and the KKK in a supposed commentary about the evil that men do. Hardly. While "Climate of Violence" does indeed mention numerous historical forms of prejudice, from Jim Crow laws to Salman Rushdie, Valor merely lists them without comment; the sound of Nazi salutes is equally meaningless in this lame context. Strip away the pretense, and All the Hate is just a standard lurid metal manic fantasy, with only one redeeming item. In "I Hate You," Sevan Kand (Valor and Gitane's five-year-old son) unleashes a bratty British-accented spew of four-letter words and cranky opinions ("I hate going to bed/And I hate stinging nettles/And I hate . . ." ad nauseum) in a fine pre-pubescent echo of punk-rock solipsism.

Insanus, Ultio, Proditio, Misericordia Que is a compilation.

Before joining Christian Death, the Valor/DeMone/Glass crew had been a band known as Pompeii 99. Also part of the LA death-rock scene, the group released an album and EP that are—unsurprisingly—very similar to Christian Death. Pompeii 99 was scheduled to do a European tour opening for Christian Death; when Rozz Williams lost his group, the two bands merged under the better-known name. [i/gef]

See also Adolescents.

CHRISTIANS

The Christians (nr/Island) 1987 (Island) 1988 •

Colour (Island) 1990 •

ROGER CHRISTIAN

Checkmate (nr/Island) 1989 •

Brothers Garry and Russell Christian (formerly an a cappella soul trio with Roger, another sibling) and ex-Yachts helmsman Henry Priestman (who left It's Immaterial to join them) comprise the core of this Liverpool group. (Roger Christian appeared on the group's earliest singles, but quit prior to the first Christians album and eventually surfaced as a solo act.)

Sonically, The Christians is a treat, with airy harmonies floating angelically above and around Priestman's crisp keyboards and percolating percussion, while Garry C. sings with restrained soul about life in a (depressed) Northern town. Unfortunately, the messages of songs like "Forgotten Town," "When the Fingers Point," "Hooverville" and "Ideal World" are almost undermined by the prettiness and pop sparkle of it all, as if they've muted the passion the songs require in an effort not to overstate the case. With a few more memorable melodies and a bit more punch, this record might have been something special. (As it was, the LP spent well over a year in the UK charts.)

Colour continues in the same vein as The Christians, and the same criticism applies. If anything, the sound is even prettier here, but the generally overlong songs lack the dynamics needed to keep them interesting. As well-intentioned as the Christians are—and to their credit, the group's sound is definitely distinctive—they seem locked into an MOR sheen that, despite moments of real beauty, inevitably turns tedious. [ds]

CHRISTMAS

In Excelsior Dayglo (Big Time) 1986

Ultraprophets of Thee Psykick Revolution (IRS) 1989 •

On their first album, an enjoyable folk-rock escape into wry absurdity that owes an emotional debt to Redd Kross (repaid in 1990 when guitarist Michael Cudahy co-wrote a song for that band's Third Eye LP), Boston's kooky Christmas eulogizes Pee-wee Herman, "Tommy the Truck" and "Pumpkinhead." Drummer Liz Cox and guitarist Michael Cudahy alternate appealing lead vocals over simple, well-played music that is far from skeletal. If the trio comes up a bit short on identifiable personality here, considerable wit and ability almost make up for it.

Following a relocation to Las Vegas, Christmas released Ultraprophets, an across-the-board improvement with better songs, fuller production and a stronger Xmas spirit than the first record. The excellent "Stupid Kids," "This Is Not a Test" and "My Operator" are all catchy, melodious rock with Cheap Trick undertones and bizarre lyrics; the incongruity of Cox's Bangesque vocals (supported nicely by Cudahy's singing) adds both direct and ironic merits to "Richard Nixon," "Warhog" and "Great Wall of China." But as alluring as the record can be, Christmas never seems as off-the-wall weird as it ought to be, and half of the songs don't amount to anything. [i]

CHROME

The Visitation (Siren) 1977
 Alien Soundtracks (Siren) 1978 (Touch and Go) 1990 •
 Half Machine Lip Moves (Siren) 1979 (Touch and Go) 1990 •
 Read Only Memory EP (Siren) 1979
 Red Exposure (Siren) 1980
 Inworlds (Siren) 1981
 Blood on the Moon (Siren) 1981 •
 3rd from the Sun (Siren) 1982 •
 No Humans Allowed (Siren) 1982
 Chrome Box (Subterranean) 1982
 Raining Milk (Fr. Mosquito) 1983
 Chronicles (Ger. Dossier) 1984 •
 Into the Eyes of the Zombie King (Fr. Mosquito) 1984 •
 The Lyon Concert (Ger. Dossier) 1985 •
 Another World (Ger. Dossier) 1986 •
 Dreaming in Sequence (Ger. Dossier) 1987
 Live in Germany (Ger. Dossier) 1989
 Alien Soundtracks II (Ger. Dossier) 1989

HELIOS CREED

X-Rated Fairy Tales (Subterranean) 1985
 Superior Catholic Finger (Subterranean) 1989
 The Last Laugh (Amphetamine Reptile) 1989 •
 Boxing the Clown (Amphetamine Reptile) 1990 •

DAMON EDGE

Alliance (Fr. New Rose) 1985 •
 The Wind Is Talking (Fr. New Rose) 1985
 Grand Visions (Fr. New Rose) 1986
 The Surreal Rock (Ger. Dossier) 1987 •

DAMON EDGE AND CHROME

Eternity (Ger. Dossier) 1986 •

Under the innocuous name of Chrome, two San Franciscans—Damon Edge (vocals, synths, etc.) and Helios Creed (vocals, guitar, etc.), with part-time rhythm-section assistance by the Stench brothers of Pearl Harbor's band—created an often awesome series of pre-industrial LPs that explore a dark state of mind only hinted at by '60s psychedelia. Taking cues from Suicide, Can, Pink Floyd, Jimi Hendrix, the Residents and anyone who ever made home tapes in their bedroom, the pair's dense, chaotic science-fiction epics are vivid vinyl nightmares—a thick blend of mechanical noises, filtered, twisted voices and fantastic, bizarre lyrics—that flesh out a frightening world both absorbing and repellent. Though conventional song structures are preserved to the point where tracks can be distinguished (indeed, the duo's early efforts aren't all that far from semi-normal guitar rock), Chrome's strength is its ability to create sounds of horrible beauty that transcend discrete musical units. If Chrome isn't as conceptually out there or as ear-splitting as the noise-mongers and goth-rockers that followed, the duo's sonic intensity is still something to behold.

After the tentativeness of the first two albums, apart from early refinements, Edge and Creed pretty much stuck to the same uniquely nerve-shattering style—metal-drone-punk—throughout their time together. The utterly fearless are recommended to begin with the Chrome Box, a limited-edition set of six albums, including Alien Soundtracks, Half Machine Lip Moves, Blood on the Sun, No Humans Allowed and the previously unreleased two-disc Chronicles.

Following Chrome's dissolution in 1983, Creed and Edge each launched solo careers. Creed's first album finds him leading a noisy quartet that drops the science-fiction content but retains Chrome's sonic density and mild dissonance. Kind of low-rent and faintly cheesy, X-Rated Fairy Tales has to contend with Creed's ponderous singing and the superficial synthesized chaos; occasionally the LP wins. Superior Catholic Finger is much better, an inspired collage of found sounds, noise, tape manipulation and overdriven punky assault, played by a trio lineup that leans towards guitar, keyboards and drums. (The diminution of vocals is duly noted and appreciated.) Gonzo and gripping.

Produced by Jack Endino, The Last Laugh is a heaping helping of frenzied but terse psychedelia. Creed's gothic, incantory lyrics ebb and flow much like computer-era Gregorian chants—invoking spirits of Gehenna and sundry other fearsome creatures. While some stretches (like the skulking three-part opener) are heavily processed, selections like "Nirbasion Annasion" and "Road Out of Hell" would be palatable to fans of Voivod. Boxing the Clown adds the machine shop drumming of ex-Scratch Acid pounder Rey Washam which, if anything, clarifies the focus of obsessive tracks like "Hyperventilation" and "Go Blind." As Reefer Madness warned, one puff of Creed's powerful stuff will give you the fear!

Disintering the Chrome moniker for a series of new albums released by Dossier in the second half of the '80s was not a wise move on Edge's part; the only possible benefit is that dozens of disaffected cyberpunks might be inspired to learn the phone number of their local Better Business Bureau. In point of fact, the post-Creed Chrome LPs aren't terrible, they're simply not Chrome. Returning to the unabashed UFO (not the band)-isms of the pre-Creed Visitation, Edge couches his obsessions in ambient (albeit decibel-heavy) sonic cocoons. Live in Germany is the low point—and somewhat ironic, since the original band dissolved over Edge's refusal to tour.

Dossier has issued a number of CDs that pair up Chrome albums. Into the Eyes of the Zombie King is joined with Edge's first solo undertaking, Alliance; Blood on the Moon is on a disc with Eternity; Half Machine Lip Moves goes with Edge's The Surreal Rock; The Lyon Concert and Another World round off the selection. Meanwhile, back in the States, Touch and Go paired Half Machine with Alien Soundtracks.

[jy/i/dss]

CHURCH

Of Skin and Heart (Aus. Parlophone) 1981 (Arista) 1988 •

The Church (Capitol) 1982 (nr/Carrere) 1985 •

Temperature Drop in Downtown Winterland EP (nr/Carrere) 1982

The Blurred Crusade (nr/Carrere) 1982 (Arista) 1988 •

Sing-Songs EP (Aus. Parlophone) 1982

The Unguarded Moment EP (nr/Carrere) 1982

Seance (nr/Carrere) 1983 (Arista) 1988 •

Persia EP (Aus. Parlophone) 1983

Remote Luxury EP (Aus. Parlophone) 1984

Remote Luxury (Warner Bros.) 1984 (Arista) 1988 •

Heyday (Warner Bros.) 1986 (Arista) 1988 •

Starfish (Arista) 1988 •

Conception (nr/Carrere) 1988 •

Hindsight (Aus. EMI) 1988 •

Gold Afternoon Fix (Arista) 1990 •

STEVE KILBEY

Unearthed (Enigma) 1987 •

Earthed (Rykodisc) 1988 •

The Slow Crack (Aus. Red Eye) 1988 (Rough Trade) 1989 •

Transaction EP (Aus. Red Eye-Polydor) 1989

Remindlessness (Aus. Red Eye-Polydor) 1990

PETER KOPPES

Manchild & Myth (Rykodisc) 1988 •

From the Well (TVT) 1989 •

MARTY WILLSON-PIPER

In Reflection (Aus. Chase) 1987

Art Attack (Rykodisc) 1988 •

Rhyme (Rykodisc) 1989 •

At first, the Church seemed like a promising blend of the Beatles (musically) and early Bowie (vocally and lyrically). Peter Koppes and Marty Willson-Piper explored the guitar territory first mapped out by Harrison and Lennon, but in greater detail and with perhaps a more practiced—if less inspired—hand. Bassist Steve Kilbey chanted/sang articulate lyrics with a world-weary melancholy similar to early Bowie, but colder and less melodramatic.

The band's American debut, The Church, consists of most of Of Skin and Heart plus the best three songs from a subsequent double-45 release. (Arista's belated CD of Of Skin and Heart includes those three tracks as well.) The gorgeous guitar soundscapes and occasionally evocative verbal imagery seemed to promise bright things to come. The blatant Beatleness of "The Unguarded Moment" is so offset by its other virtues that it's easily the album's high point. Still, Kilbey's worst lyrical instincts flowered on The Blurred Crusade. You can add some Byrds and perhaps a touch of post-Floyd Barrett into the mix, but you can also toss in some pointless obscurity, non sequiturs and confessional windiness.

Lyrically, Seance is both more superficial and more straightforward, which is partly why it succeeds. At its best, the band achieves something akin to mid-'60s British pop psychedelia: nothing timeless, but a neat trip. The Church isn't as poppy here, and Seance's most obviously retroid psychedelic number ("Travel by Thought") is more atmosphere than song, but stuff like "Fly" and "Dropping Names" is still a groove (man).

(But the pistol-shot snare-drum sound on much of the LP is a real bummer.)

Remote Luxury, which combines the two preceding Australian EPs, has less range than Seance; its shimmering folk-rock textures are hampered once again by Kilbey's overly oblique lyrics. A step sideways at best.

Well-produced by Peter Walsh, Heyday (which was actually recorded as an album) is another step forward: straight-ahead guitar pop housed in an ironically paisleyfied cover. Although titles like "Tristesse" and "Myrrh" suggest otherwise, Kilbey's lyrics are engagingly vague and easier to comprehend. Likewise, the melodies are stronger and catchier than any since the first album.

The production of Starfish, by LA session guitarists Waddy Wachtel and Danny Kortchmar, may have something to do with its shortcomings. Superficially, the LP seems pleasant but thin; look past the ziplessness, however, and you'll discover the band's most consistently engrossing and memorable tunes yet. Even Kilbey's off-the-wall lyrics seem to be better integrated and more to the point (or some point, anyway). Willson-Piper's unexpected but delightful '60s Anglo-pop-rock concoction, "Spark," is a bonus.

The double best-of Hindsight offers a fairly balanced selection from the various albums, but more than half of the album consists of non-LP tracks. Many of those are pretty good, though, although some lyrics still arouse the usual reservations ("ornamental or warm and gentle/on the way to paradise," indeed). Following Starfish's enormous Stateside success, Arista issued the group's Australian albums and made them available on CD. (Conception is a ten-song compilation.)

Co-produced by the group and Wachtel, Gold Afternoon Fix is the most sonically pleasing Church album yet, varied but cohesive. For once, melodrama is effective, as on the opening "Pharoah." Also, Kilbey's lyrics are coherent and focused for almost the entire album, notably on the back-to-back "You're Still Beautiful" (a "walking picture of Dorian Gray" set to a strident beat) and "Disappointment" (a dreamy evocation of feeling out of phase with the rest of the world). The CD and cassette add two bonus tracks.

The Church's outside projects, at least the earlier ones, are more genuinely solo than most, with only small contributions from wives, girlfriends, brothers, etc.

Kilbey's Unearthed (originally an '86 Australian issue) is a mixed bag of songs (some solid, if short on polish) interlarded with brief, generally forgettable instrumentals. Earthed goes one better than all the other Churchmen's solo LPs: the band's prime lyricist concentrates on purely instrumental ideas, many of which would fall beyond the Church's purview, even with lyrics. While the worst of it sounds like intros in search of actual songs, the good stuff ranges from a sonic montage to a queer but fetching little waltz. (A 76-page booklet of poetry meant to complement the music accompanies some copies.)

The US version of The Slow Crack includes three tracks not included on the original Australian release, and it's a good thing too: "Transaction," the lead-off cut, is one of the most tightly focused rockers that Kilbey had done in or out of the band prior to Gold

Afternoon Fix. "Fireman" is enjoyable folk-rock-cum-wall-of-sound (guitars, synth, strings, sax). The rest of Side One is at least pleasant, but Side Two ranges from dull to dreary, even when he turns to Shakespeare for inspiration ("Ariel Sings") or the Bible for lyrics ("Song of Solomon").

The double-album Remindlessness (the single CD deducts two cuts) is Kilbey's best solo work to date. There's too much of it, and some tracks go on too long, but even his relative failures are more interesting than before. Lyrically, his "stories" are more to the point, but even better are his portrayals of people and situations, often enlivened by incisive lists of items ("Life's Little Luxuries," "The Amphibian"). What also makes it work are widely varied instrumental textures, which efficiently create atmospheres and moods (echoing the advances made by the group). In fact, sometimes the sound is so seductive that it doesn't matter what he's saying! And sometimes he doesn't say anything at all: several tracks are instrumentals, like the title track (a wordless progression on the big sound of "Fireman"). Well done. The Transaction EP contains the US Slow Crack's "Transaction," a track from Remindlessness and two unexceptional but otherwise unreleased items.

The songs on all three Willson-Piper albums are mostly softish folk-pop—virtually no real rock—with sparse instrumentation, sometimes (on the first two) without bass or drums. In Reflection seems like (justifiably) unused demos, while the other two are more clearly finished. Despite a cottony airheadedness that runs through all of his albums, Art Attack, which is extremely self-indulgent but frequently intriguing, is easily the most varied and stimulating of the three. "You Whisper" is like Peter Frampton imitating Elvis Costello gone psychedelic ("Your marzipan skin in a crystal stare/Your chocolate box of fears"); "Word" is eight-and-a-half minutes of one-syllable words spoken over a melody vaguely reminiscent of Pachelbel's "Canon." Cleverly created mood, willful obscurity or just plain twaddle? "Evil Queen of England" offers nifty lyrical bile accompanied only by an acoustic bass. (The US cassette and CD include six tracks from In Reflection.)

Rhyme dispenses with experimentation to return to folk-pop as a steady ration. It's much more polished than In Reflection and, after a while, a bit tedious, especially since Willson-Piper's lyrics are sometimes as obscure as Kilbey's, and sometimes just inane. But four tracks do mix it up a bit musically, including bouncy, exceptionally infectious pop-rockers for fans of Starfish's "Spark." Ignore the verses of "Melancholy Girl" and "Cascade," just revel in the sound.

Guitarist Peter Koppes' solo work has a strike against it straightaway: he can barely carry a tune (although he's trying). On Manchild & Myth, he's surrounded by other voices and buried in the mix (his monotone mumble can't cut through anyway), but that does nothing for the vocal melodies and lyrics. Worse, the LP's arrangements and production lack dynamism. The only good tracks on the album are two stylistically routine ones that are simply a cut above the rest and one atypically moody Eurosynth instrumental. (The US CD and cassette include his so-so 1987 three-track When Reason Forbids EP.)

From the Well, Koppes' next album, actually follows that Eurosynth direction more thoroughly, and profitably so. In fact, the whole LP is a step forward. No more burying his voice—although he's not averse to singing duets with his sweeter-voiced lady. Melodie (!)—and he no longer makes Leonard Cohen sound like Pavarotti (only just). The synth (drums and keyboard textures) plus bass and guitars often assume a dark tone, but the tunes aren't bad, and overall it's quite listenable, if a bit on the dark, moody side. [jg]

See also Hex.

CICCONE YOUTH

See Sonic Youth.

CINECYDE

Black Vinyl Threat EP (Tremor) 1978

Positive Action EP (Tremor) 1979

I Left My Heart in Detroit City (Tremor) 1982

Who Goes There? (Tremor) 1989

Detroit has been the site of several musical generations of punk; Cinecyde emerged on the local scene there in the late '70s, gigging and releasing records (by several bands as well as compilations) on their own label. Following a sneery pair of rudimentary 7-inch EPs and some singles, I Left My Heart unleashes enough raw power to stun, but a superior sense of song structure, the group's skilled musicianship and non-topical lyrics prevent it from falling into the stylistic clutches of simple hardcore or heavy metal.

Keeping the rock'n'roll faith (not to mention the first album's lineup!), Cinecyde issued a long-come second album in early 1989. Now more inclined to play loud power-pop than tuneful punk, Cinecyde has tempered the pace, but not the spirit or electricity of its music. Who Goes There? is a welcome return from these talented and sturdy Midwest musicians. (The LP doesn't include a subsequent sign-of-the-times 45, "Burn the Crack House Down.") [i]

CIRCLE JERKS

Group Sex (Frontier) 1980 •

Wild in the Streets (Faulty Products) 1982 (Frontier) 1988 •

Golden Shower of Hits (LAX) 1983 •

Wunderful (Combat Core) 1985 •

VI (Relativity) 1987 •

Singer Keith Morris left Black Flag after appearing on that group's debut single ("Nervous Breakdown") and formed this popular and durable LA slam band with ex-Redd Kross guitarist Greg Hetson. First immortalized on celluloid in The Decline of Western Civilization punk documentary, the Circle Jerks' vinyl success (via the film soundtrack and their own releases) came later. Typically crude and undisciplined, despite occasional offbeat choices of material (Wild in the Streets contains a hyper remake of Jackie DeShannon's "Put a Little Love in Your Heart"), these Jerks managed to become a live success; their shows generate some of the most intense slam-dancing and stage-diving anywhere. (In 1988, Frontier remixed and reissued Wild in the Streets, appending Group Sex to the CD.)

With a joyously tasteless urinal cover photo, Golden Shower of Hits offers a new batch of tuneless kinetic guitar rock, built around the funnier-in-concept-than-execution "Jerks on 45" medley, which dismembers a number of well-known wimp classics, including "Along Comes Mary," "Afternoon Delight," "Having My Baby" and "Love Will Keep Us Together."

Joined by a new rhythm section, Morris and Hetson cut Wonderful, a tepid self-produced imitation of a punk record by a band that, while bearing a passing resemblance to the Dictators, sounds old, tired and bored. Amazingly, the identical lineup is also responsible for VI, a far better high-burn collection (this one really sounds like the Dictators) that gets off to a great start with "Beat Me Senseless" and continues from there, going so far as to strip down and speed up Creedence's "Fortunate Son" for a fun cover. After eight years, the self-aware Circle Jerks have a sharp focus; the charged-up enthusiasm is tempered by a sense of musical responsibility. Some of the songs suck but, in general, VI is cogent, powerful and thoughtful—punk the old-fashioned way. [mp/i]

See also Bad Religion, Black Flag, Red Cross.

CIRCUS MORT

Circus Mort EP (Labor) 1981

These New Yorkers—led by future Swans founder/guitarist Michael Gira—sound like they want to back you into a corner and harangue you into a screaming fit. They're not some punks on a rampage, though—this is amphetaminized dance music with a faint European tinge and cool, discreet keyboards. As a hectoring vocalist, Gira is, under the circumstances, quite articulate. I'll be good—honest! [jg]

See also Swans.

CITIZEN FISH

See Subhumans.

GARY CLAIL

See Tackhead.

CLAN OF XYMOX

The Clan of Xymox (4AD-Relativity) 1985 •

Medusa (nr/4AD) 1987 •

XYMOX

Twist of Shadows (Wing-PolyGram) 1989 •

Phoenix (Wing-Mercury) 1991 •

Despite competent musicianship and complexity, this Dutch quartet's gothic dance gloom is more imitative than distinctive. On The Clan of Xymox, the right components are present but the record is disappointingly short on personality. Despite three alternating vocalists (deeply anguished to breathlessly fragile), jutting electric and acoustic guitars, sinewy bass and a wealth of synths, Clan of Xymox can't seem to make anything extraordinary happen, and only three songs approach memorability. What would have made a commendable EP founders as an album.

Medusa wallows even deeper in bland Eurodisco gloom; "Michelle," a bouncy psychedelic pop tune, offers the only relief. Obviously out of place on this depressing LP, that song would serve as an excellent starting point for Xymox's future endeavors.

"Evelyn," which opens Twist of Shadows, lifts the murk and clattering percussion from "Michelle" to reveal an attractive mixture of piano, electronics and stilted vocals. Elsewhere, the group works to locate a functional commercial form, keeping rhythms, melodies and arrangements accessibly simple and allowing Tony Visconti to score strings for two songs. As easily enduring as this album is, Xymox—here revealed as just another lightweight electronic dance band of the post-romantic era—still lacks any compelling personality. [ag/i]

JOHN COOPER CLARKE

Où Est la Maison de Fromage? (nr/Rabid) 1978

(nr/Receiver) 1989

Disguise in Love (nr/CBS) 1978

Walking Back to Happiness EP (nr/Epic) 1979

Snap, Crackle [&] Bop. (nr/Epic) 1980

Me and My Big Mouth (nr/Epic) 1981

Zip Style Method (nr/Epic) 1982

The first acknowledged new wave poet, Manchester's John Cooper Clarke created a genre all on his own, reciting trenchant, often hilarious poetry in a thickly accented, adenoidal voice; a deviant British precursor of rap. Looking like Blonde or Blonde-era Dylan (but skinnier) and suggesting a mindset lifted from Jack Kerouac or Lenny Bruce, Clarke exists with one foot in literature and the other in rock music, using both but succumbing wholly to neither. On most of his recordings, musical backing is provided by a nebulous organization known as the Invisible Girls, which—besides a nucleus of keyboardist Steve Hopkins and producer Martin Hannett—has included such name-brand players as Pete Shelley and Bill Nelson. When combined on vinyl, the two forces—Clarke as satiric commentator and the Invisible Girls as musical adventurers—make for a unique listening experience.

Où Est la Maison de Fromage?, originally released by an early Manchester independent, is a sloppy, ragged, (almost) unaccompanied, poorly recorded but enthralling hodgepodge—demos, rehearsals and recitations—of pieces that wound up on later albums. Clarke's major-league debut, Disguise in Love, contains such classic inventions as "(I Married a) Monster from Outer Space," "Psyche Sluts 1 & 2" and "I Don't Want to Be Nice." The collaboration between words and music works splendidly, although it should be noted that Clarke's approach doesn't vary on two tracks performed a cappella. The music leans heavily to electronics, but varies the sound with guitar and weird noises.

Walking Back to Happiness is a live recording released as a 10-inch EP on clear vinyl. For over twenty minutes, Clarke goes one-on-all against a generally appreciative but partially hostile audience, reciting, jousting, cracking deadly one-liners, dealing with hecklers and being captivating with scathing, funny numbers like "Majorca" (an attack on tourists) and "Twat." As a bonus, the EP closes with a studio track called "Gimmix."

Snap, Crackle [&] Bop. matches impressive packaging (the front cover, of the original edition at least, is a photo of a sports coat with working pocket containing a lyric book) with awesomely powerful songs like "Beasley Street," recalling nothing so much as Dylan's "Desolation Row." And while "Conditional Discharge" is a cheap pun about venereal disease, the notable "Thirty Six Hours" is Clarke's most songlike effort to date. On it, the Invisible Girls' backing matches the bard's intensity dram for dram, creating dense waves of electronics and electrics that fit the words perfectly.

Me and My Big Mouth collects Clarke's greatest non-hits, drawing equally from the three previous records, and suffices as an ideal introduction and overview.

Zip Style Method, still JCC's most recent release, finds him in a more upbeat humor, and includes a pair of love songs amidst the remorseless satire. The Invisible Girls are at their best, working in a number of idioms. More than any of the other albums, this seems to be a cooperative venture—more organically entwined than autonomous—between poet and players. That's a major development, because it makes Clarke's words stand out less, but convey more. There aren't any bad tracks; although the intensity level isn't up there with "Beasley Street," songs like "Midnight Shift," "The Day the World Stood Still" and "Night People" present different, entertaining sides to Clarke's musical persona. Clarke has continued to perform as a poet, but regrettably has not recorded anything of late. [i]

CLASH

The Clash (nr/CBS) 1977 (Epic) 1979 •
 Give 'Em Enough Rope (Epic) 1978 •
 The Cost of Living EP (nr/CBS) 1979
 London Calling (Epic) 1979 •
 Black Market Clash (Epic) 1980
 Sandinista! (Epic) 1980 •
 Combat Rock (Epic) 1982 •
 Cut the Crap (Epic) 1985 •
 12" Tape EP [tape] (nr/CBS) 1986
 I Fought the Law EP (nr/CBS) 1988 •
 The Story of the Clash Volume 1 (Epic) 1988 •
 Crucial Music: The Clash Collection (CBS Special Products-Relativity) 1989 φ
 Crucial Music: 1977 Revisited (CBS Special Products-Relativity) 1990 φ
 Return to Brixton EP [CD] (Epic) 1990 •

TOPPER HEADON

Waking Up (nr/Mercury) 1986

HAVANA 3 A.M.

Havana 3 A.M. (IRS) 1991 φ

That the Clash survived as long as they did and, in fact, proved commercially viable in both the UK and US is a clear testament to rugged integrity and a stubborn refusal to buckle despite enormous adversity, much of it self-induced. The Clash were formed to fall apart, but it took better than seven years for the inevitable Joe Strummer-Mick Jones bust-up to finally occur.

If any rock band ever insisted on doing it their way, the Clash takes first-place honors, despite the price their nonconformity exacted. Nonetheless (or as a result), they became enormously popular, even in America, where their Top 20 chart success stands as redemptive proof of an indomitable spirit. The Clash received no small amount of criticism over the years: damned for their integrity (or lack thereof); assailed for absorbing black musical styles; attacked for injecting politics into their songs, blamed for changing; blamed for not changing; ridiculed for having ideals; branded sell-outs, hypocrites, rockists, opportunists and worse. Through it all, the Clash consistently proved equal to the task of confounding everyone that ever followed or dealt with them, offering contradictory and inconsistent statements in classic Bob Dylan obfuscatory oratory and generally failing to act in their own self-interest.

With continuous chaos and controversy swirling around them, the Clash still managed to make some of the most brilliant, absorbing, potent and staggering rock 'n' roll of all time. Alone save for Elvis Costello and the Sex Pistols, Joe Strummer, Mick Jones and Paul Simonon (plus two different drummers) stand as new wave's original and most significant trendsetters; the original Clash never made an album that isn't worth owning.

The Clash, 1977's finest LP bar none, was not issued in the US until 1979, and then in radically altered form, adding subsequent single sides (the apocalyptic, autobiographical "Complete Control," the groundbreaking reggaeified "White Man in Hammersmith Palais" and others) and deleting four original tracks, making it paradoxically fragmentary but stronger. In the album's original form, the fourteen songs explode in a scathing frenzy of venom and sardonic humor, ranging in subject from unemployment ("Career Opportunities") to the underground music scene ("Garageland") to cultural imperialism ("I'm So Bored with the U.S.A.") to rebellion ("White Riot," "London's Burning," "Hate & War"). Strummer's incomprehensible bellow exudes focused rage, while Jones' flaming guitar work both sets and supersedes the style for countless derivators who followed. Since the original album lacks a lyric sheet (the US label couldn't resist adding one), the exact words were appropriately undiscernible, but there's no missing the power of the music. A full disc of classics, including the Clash's first stab at reggae: a brilliant rendition of Junior Murvin's "Police and Thieves." (Initially, the American LP also included a bonus 45 with two numbers recorded for The Cost of Living EP: Jones' rocking "Gates of the West" and Strummer's Dylanesque semi-acoustic "Groovy Times." The EP's "I Fought the Law" was included on the album itself.)

The pairing of the fiercely English and (then) anti-commercial Clash with American big-shot producer Sandy Pearlman (Blue Oyster Cult, but also the Dictators) proved controversial but fruitful on Give 'Em Enough Rope. By exchanging the band's garageland raunch for heavily overlaid, crystal clear guitars and drums, Pearlman delivered a supercharged rock sound and Strummer and Jones came up with some of their best songs—"Safe European Home," "Tommy Gun," "English Civil War," "Stay Free" and "All the Young Punks." The band's new-found studio sophistication did nothing to blunt their power—quite the opposite, especially in terms of Topper Headon's stunningly authoritative drumming—and their defiant confidence to mix in more liberal amounts of sensitivity and cleverness only adds to the album's appeal. Jones' vocal on "Stay Free" casts him as the tenderhearted member of the band but, as a guitarist, his work throughout goes against punk's early egalitarian precepts, proudly standing up as a genuine guitar hero for the new age.

The Cost of Living EP is a small but mighty 7-inch that contains the Clash's blistering remake of "I Fought the Law," a second (and otherwise unavailable) version of "Capital Radio" and the aforementioned "Gates of the West" and "Groovy Times."

London Calling established the Clash's major-league stature, regardless of commercial considerations. The two records, produced by the legendary (and now late) Guy Stevens (Mott the Hoople), stretch over an enormously expanded musical landscape with few weak tracks. Unlike most double albums, London Calling needs all four sides to say its piece; while not especially coherent or conceptual, the tracks share a maturity of vision and a consistency of character. Whichever way the band turns, the record bears their unique stamp—from the anti-nuclear throb of the title track to the updated blues oldie, "Brand New Cadillac," to the bebop of "Jimmy Jazz" and the anthemic "Rudie Can't Fail." And that's just the first side! Some of the other stunners are "Death or Glory," "Koka Kola," "Lost in the Supermarket" (Jones' spotlight), "The Guns of Brixton" (a powerful reggae rumble featuring Simonon), "Spanish Bombs," "The Right Profile" (about actor Montgomery Clift—how's that for a change of pace?) and "Clampdown," collectively proof positive that the Clash would not be limited by anyone's expectations. A masterwork.

The Clash's many singles contained as much exciting music as their albums, and a lot of non-LP tracks were issued along the way. Since very few of their early 45s were even released in the US, Epic assembled an odds-and-ends collection, Black Market Clash—nine tracks on a 10-inch platter, subsequently reissued as a 12-inch. Tracks appended to the US release of the first album were left off here; the two records collectively fill in the non-LP gaps through 1980. Essential items like "Capital Radio One" (the original), "Armageddon Time," "The Prisoner" and "City of the Dead" join interesting but less crucial tracks like covers of "Time Is Tight" and "Pressure Drop." Black Market Clash is a worthwhile and entertaining record, not a collection of inferior scraps.

Whatever self-restraint the Clash might once have had evaporated on Sandinista!, six sprawling sides (two CDs without any of the original record's inner artwork) of wildly varied styles and maddeningly uneven quality. Besides the proper songs—some of which are absolutely first-rate—there are silly (but entertaining) kiddie renditions of "Guns of Brixton" and "Career Opportunities," assorted self-indulgent toss-offs, audio experiments (the backwards "Mensforth Hill"), bizarre stylistic digressions ("Look Here" is swing jazz, "Let's Go Crazy" is mock-calypto and "The Sound of the Sinners" is ambiguous Strummer gospel), dub mixes and guest artists (toaster Mikey Dread, violinist/singer Tymon Dogg) taking center stage. You name it, it's here, with only the faintest structural outline holding the whole shebang together. Basically, Sandinista! unnecessarily saddles one-and-a-half great albums with an equal amount of material that ranges from disposable nonsense to endurance-defying crap.

Side One ("The Magnificent Seven," "Hitsville U.K.," "Ivan Meets G.I. Joe," "Something About England") and Side Four (Eddy Grant's "Police on My Back" given a devastating high-pressure rip, "The Call Up," "Washington Bullets") are the two strongest chunks, but there's good stuff ("Somebody Got Murdered," "Charlie Don't Surf," "Up in Heaven (Not Only Here)," "Corner Soul," Simonon's hideously sung "The Crooked Beat") strewn throughout. Overall, the wide stylistic swath is more provocative than rewarding; a better-focused album would have been much more powerful, both musically and politically.

Returning to a manageable one-disc format, Combat Rock found the Clash taking a new musical detour, absorbing and regurgitating American rap and funk with more conviction than ever before (Sandinista! contained a few test runs) and also becoming arty enough to invite poet Allen Ginsberg to appear on the record. A bizarre collection of material that seems to be diverging at a blinding rate, the dozen tracks proved extremely popular, yielding two bona fide US chart hits (the simple "Should I Stay or Should I Go?" and the danceable "Rock the Casbah"). Despite slick production possibilities (ace studio hand Glyn Johns "mixed"), the Clash sound more ragged than ever, getting dolled up only for the dance numbers like "Overpowered by Funk," which features a guest rap by Futura 2000. A perplexing but partially entertaining set of sounds from the world's most unpredictable rock band.

Although it wasn't well known at the time, the Clash had split into two musical camps. With commercial success tugging on one side, abiding fascination for "black music" on the other, and problematic idealism presenting a genuine challenge up the middle, the Clash finally rended, with Strummer and Simonon unexpectedly booting Jones out of the band. Joined by three young players, the remaining pair later toured and recorded Cut the Crap, ostensibly a Clash album. With one notable exception (a movingly mournful anthem, "This Is England"), Crap is just that, a painfully tired and hopelessly inept attempt to catch up with an elusive, fading legend. Strummer and manager Bernard Rhodes co-wrote the songs (a dead giveaway of major creative problems right there), but they needn't have bothered: Sham 69 outtakes would've been preferable to these prosaic, forgettable shouters. "We Are the Clash," indeed. Shortly after the album appeared, the lineup dissolved. Jones played with General Public in the studio during that band's formative months, and unveiled his new group, Big Audio Dynamite, to great critical acclaim, in late 1985. (The story doesn't quite end there: Strummer wound up taking a significant role in B.A.D.'s second album.)

Since then, it's been reissue time all the way. The first releases were a couple of British EPs: the cassette-only 12" Tape (extended mixes of "London Calling," "This Is Radio Clash," "Rock the Casbah" and three others) and the four-song I Fought the Law (with "City of the Dead," "Police on My Back" and "48 Hours"). The two-record Story of the Clash compilation followed, thankfully overlooking Crap's existence. The running order is far from chronological; still, the 28-song selection, despite some notable omissions, conveys the band's diversity and depth. The only rarity is the 1977 London tube interview portion of "Capital Radio One," originally released on an early giveaway flexidisc. Overall, the remastered sound quality is fairly clear and hot, even on the old stuff; liner notes by one Albert Transom (undoubtedly Strummer) may shed little light for neophytes, but are amusing enough. Suggestions for Volume 2: "Hate and War," "I'm So Bored with the U.S.A.," "The Prisoner," "Jail Guitar Doors," "All the Young Punks" and "Hitsville U.K."

More recent reissues: the Clash Collection's ten tracks (only one of them not on Story) favor songs that got American airplay ("Tommy Gun," "Train in Vain," "Clampdown," "Police and Thieves"). With no Story overlap, 1977 Revisited (aka A Collection of Rare Tracks & B-Sides) collates the four songs deleted from the first album's belated American edition, two non-LP tracks from The Cost of Living, "1977" and the live "London's Burning" from the backs of early singles and two less noteworthy B-sides.

The British chart-topping success of Beats International's "Dub Be Good to Me," a dance number built around Simonon's mighty bass riff from "The Guns of Brixton," prompted the release of Return to Brixton: the original track plus three useless house remixes by Jeremy Healy (ex-Haysi Fanytzee).

The following year, Simonon returned to action as the leader of Havana 3 A.M., a rootsy/modern Los Angeles quartet with local new wave perennial Gary Myrick and singer Nigel Dixon, formerly of English rockabilly band Whirlwind. The band's eponymous debut album—an exceedingly clever commercial sublimation of unassailable source material (rockabilly, reggae, punk, power-pop) stripped of any edge or conviction—is clearly the work of experienced pros making something presentably adult out of what they can recall of their long-gone youth. "The Hardest Game" sounds like Squeeze on an uninspired day; "Surf in the City" is a fairly obnoxious rewrite of Elvis Costello's "This Year's Girl" as if done by a Del-Lords cover band; the Stray Cats' "Blue Gene Vincent" is one tribute the late rocker could have done without.

Topper Headon, who vanished from the Clash and the music business soon after the release of Combat Rock, reportedly because of drug problems (Terry Chimes—"Tory Crimes" of the first LP—replaced him for live work), launched a solo career in 1986 with Waking Up. Ambitious and plucky but surprisingly underwhelming, this horn-soul album is so humble his drums aren't even mixed high enough. Despite an impressive talent roster (including ex-Blockhead and frequent Clash collaborator Mickey Gallagher and ex-Beck guitarist Bobby Tench), Headon's songs are amateurish, and the arrangements routine and uninviting; even another version of Booker T's can't-miss "Time Is Tight" doesn't hit a nerve. (Chimes went on to form the Cherry Bombz with former members of Hanoi Rocks and Toto Coelo.)

In March 1991, spurred by its use as a commercial jingle for Levi's jeans, "Should I Stay or Should I Go?" was re-released (with a Big Audio Dynamite II B-side!) and promptly topped the British singles charts, making it the long-defunct band's biggest UK hit ever. "Rock the Casbah" was also successfully reissued. [i]

See also Big Audio Dynamite, Mikey Dread, Ellen Foley, Ian Hunter, 101ers, Joe Strummer.

CLAWHAMMER

Poor Robert EP (Aus. Grown Up Wrong) 1989

Clawhammer (Sympathy for the Record Industry) 1990

Double Pack Whack Attack EP (Sympathy for the Record Industry) 1990

With a moniker cribbed from Captain Beefheart, you wouldn't suspect ex-Pontiac Brother guitarist Jon Wahl's new baby to mewl forth much in the way of pub-rock revivalism. And you'd be mostly right. Locked into a stupefyingly precise dada-blues-hard-rock fusion on Poor Robert, the quartet zooms along like a dragster doing 110 mph with cruise control (particularly on a hard-as-nails version of the Fab Four's less-than-robust "Everybody's Got Something to Hide . . .").

Unfettered by standard song structure on much of the first longplayer, Wahl's mercurial yelp skitters across measures like Richard Hell at his most dislocated. At times ("Papa's Got Us All Tied in Knots"), Clawhammer sounds like fellow Beefheart-throbs Half Japanese gone classic rock. Then again, at the end of the LP's closer, the group indulges in a spate of angular jamming that's like nothing so much as a newly unearthed Allman Brothers session. That they never actually parrot the good Captain is to their credit; that they can evoke his spirit as convincingly as on "Warm Spring Night" is nothing short of eerie.

On Double Pack Whack Attack, Clawhammer inflicts varied degrees of damage to Patti Smith's "Pumping," Pere Ubu's "Final Solution," Eno's "Blank Frank" and Devo's "Uncontrollable Urge." (There's talk of a cassette-only cover of the first Devo LP—in its entirety.) Definitely a band for these post-post-modern times. [dss]

CLEAN

Boodle Boodle Boodle EP (NZ Flying Nun) 1981

Great Sounds EP (NZ Flying Nun) 1982

Oddities [tape] (NZ Flying Nun) 1983

Live Dead Clean EP (NZ Flying Nun) 1986

Compilation (NZ Flying Nun) 1986 (Homestead) 1988 •

In-a-Live EP (NZ Flying Nun) 1989

Vehicle (Flying Nun-Rough Trade) 1990 •

GREAT UNWASHED

Clean Out of Our Minds (NZ Flying Nun) 1983

Singles (NZ Flying Nun) 1984

If all Flying Nun bands sound alike to you, don't feel bad: they're supposed to. Peter Gutteridge, for instance, began with the Clean, helped form the Chills, returned to join the Great Unwashed, then spent some time in the Alpaca Brothers and the Puddle. Clean drummer Hamish Kilgour continued on to the Great Unwashed and then formed Baiter Space (where he was joined by the formerly Unwashed Ross Humphries). Hamish also has a guitar-playing brother named David who was with him in the Clean and also involved in the Chills. The Clean's five-song Boodle Boodle EP was produced by Tall Dwarf Chris Knox, adding legitimacy to the sonic similarity between the two bands. The list goes on. Figuring it all out is like dissecting a family tree where every other bandmember is a Siamese twin. But if you could put all the information together to make some semblance of sense, you'd find the Clean somehow at the center of the whole story.

"Tally Ho!," a 1981 single, was Flying Nun's first release. A fuzz-encrusted do-it-yourself slice of rough pop with deliberately unmelodic, sing-songy male vocals and scratchy lead guitar, it jangles through dramatic pace changes before ending in sparse applause. Sales funded a follow-up EP, the equally poppy Boodle Boodle Boodle, which was meticulously recorded on Knox's home tape recorder. Those and other early tracks are assembled on Compilation, where the percussively hard-strummed acoustic guitar of "Billy Two" meets the hesitantly squirmy soft psychedelia of "Point That Thing Somewhere Else" (slow-paced single-stroke drum beat and sita-esque '60s guitar lines). A thoroughly enjoyable and lighthearted festival of pop fuzz, it ranges from the silliness of a Donald Duck guest appearance through artful backward-tracking.

What it doesn't do is show how great the trio was live. Live Dead Clean does. From the melodically scratchy guitar dips of "Happy Birthday John" (which Hamish Kilgour describes as being "about time passing, people dying and nuclear bombs going off") through the powerfully Western-tinged "Attack of the Teddy Bears," it's a high-energy (though sometimes lo-fi) excursion into pleasantly scraped pop guitar.

The first incarnation (actually, the one that made records) of the Clean didn't last long. Their whole vinyl career was over within eighteen months. But the split with bassist Robert Scott (who wound up forming the Bats) was amicable and, since the two founding Kilgours were still brothers, they became the Great Unwashed, the name a jokey response to numerous puns that had plagued the old band in reviews. The Unwashed had (pun unintentional) a cleaner sound than the original band but still made vigorously vibrant rock with poppy chords, avant twists, fragile vocals and infectious warmth. Clean Out of Our Minds has a loose and friendly feel, as the Kilgours strum autoharps and guitars, bang on household items and generally croon and ramble through charming little songs of no fixed structure with a lot more genial enthusiasm than concern for details.

On 13 July 1988, Scott and the Kilgours reunited for a concert at the Fulham Greyhound in London; five tracks from it were released as the In-a-Live EP. A seductively slinking spin through the band's early material ("Fish," "Anything Could Happen," "Flowers," "Point That Thing Somewhere Else," "Whatever I Do Is Right"), the performances are every bit as good as the '81-'82 tracks on Live Dead Clean. The guitars are as warmly fuzzy as ever; the darker bass sets off the shimmering leads. But where Live Dead was culled from technically crude sources, In-a-Live has the advantage of 16-track sound.

Vehicle, a new studio album of happy harmony, both vocal and instrumental, followed a year later. Texture is what it's about. Bass contrasts against the guitar's peal-through chime; although influenced by a decade's worth of dance club bands, the crisp, hard beat never turns robotic or rhythm-boxy. The album flirts with acoustic plinking, continues the band's use of warm electric organ and emphasizes casual harmonies in the boy-next-door vocals. They ain't the Beach Boys, but in the Clean's own strange way, Vehicle is an excursion of cool guitar sunshine, an audio dose of endless summer. [e]

See also Bats, Gordons.

CLEANERS FROM VENUS

Blow Away Your Troubles [tape] 1981

On Any Normal Monday [tape] 1982

Midnight Cleaners [tape] 1982

In the Golden Autumn [tape] 1983

Under Wartime Conditions [tape] (nr/Acid Tapes) 1984

(Ger. Model!) 1986 •

Songs for a Fallow Land [tape] 1985

Living with Victoria Grey [tape] 1986

Going to England (nr/Ammunition Comm.) 1987

The Brotherhood of Lizards [tape] 1988

Town and Country (Ger. RCA) 1988

BROTHERHOOD OF LIZARDS

Lizardland (nr/Deltic) 1989 •

Go ahead, call me prejudiced, but it seems that "English" and "eccentric" have more in common than just the letter e. It's easy to envision a nation of oddball limeys—encouraged by technology that lets loopy ideas flow straight onto poststudios—sequestered in their scattered rural cottages, brewing up cassette albums for the delectation of a select and similarly offbeat audience. While no match for America's national treasure, R. Stevie Moore, Martin Newell's work throughout the '80s offers a delightful diary of one man's pop obsessions.

The Cleaners from Venus—Newell (vocals, guitars, keyboards) and Lol Elliot (drums)—began issuing tapes in 1981, the fifth of which (Under Wartime Conditions) wound up becoming the band's first vinyl—in Germany. Rudimentary and casual, but musically substantial and indicative of anything-goes pop talent, the LP has elements of XTC, Mike Oldfield ("The Winter Palace" instrumental, which sounds like it's being played on water glasses, bears a resemblance to "Tubular Bells"), odd bits of talking and sonic ephemera and, significantly, a "Song for Syd Barrett."

Newell recorded the accomplished Living with Victoria Grey aided by a new collaborator (keyboardist Giles Smith); some of the songs from the tape were reworked onto the Cleaners' engaging first UK LP, Going to England. With wonderful Carnaby Street pop ("Living with Victoria Grey"), catchy TV kitsch ("Ilya Kurayakin [sic] Looked at Me," on which Captain Sensible plays guest guitar) and delightful '60s Farfisa-beat soul ("What's Going on in Your Heart?"), the album is gently nostalgic and entirely likable.

By the time of the relaxed and rustic pure-pop Town and Country, the Cleaners had added a bassist (Peter Nelson) and drummer and were pursuing an explicitly XTC-oriented sound (in Beatlesque settings) with some of Newell's smartest, loveliest English-culture songs: "Let's Get Married," "The Beat Generation and Me," "Tenpenny Hill" and "I Was a Teenage Idiot Dancer." Great!

Retiring the Cleaners moniker, Newell resurfaced the following year in the Brotherhood of Lizards, a duo in which Nelson (soon to join New Model Army) plays both bass and drums. Melodic and clever without fuss, Lizardland (the contents of which are unrelated to the cassette entitled The Brotherhood of Lizards) offers another dozen unprepossessingly poetic vignettes ("Market Day," "The World Strikes One," "Love the Anglian Way," "Dear Anya") of life in these British Isles. The bubbly '60s psychedelipop of "She Dreamed

She Could Fly," the catchy chorus of "It Could Have Been Cheryl" and the Turtlesque "ba-ba-ba" refrain of "The Happening Guy" are positively brilliant; the rest of the album is merely splendid. [i]

See also Captain Sensible.

JOHNNY CLEGG & SAVUKA

Third World Child (Capitol) 1987 •
Shadow Man (EMI-Capitol) 1988 •
Cruel, Crazy, Beautiful World (EMI-Capitol) 1989 •

JULUKA

Scatterlings (Warner Bros.) 1982 •
Stand Your Ground (Warner Bros.) 1985
The Best of Juluka (Rhythm Safari) 1991 ◊

In a well-intentioned gesture of political unity, singer/guitarist Johnny Clegg (an English academic raised in Zimbabwe and South Africa) joined forces with Sipho Mchunu, a black South African street musician, to form Juluka, a failed experiment in combining rock with Zulu chants and the mbaqanga sound of the South African township. The results, heard on both of the interracial group's Warner Bros. records, are a mush of sweet, laid-back California style harmonies over a loping backbeat, with mild anti-apartheid sentiments. (The Best of Juluka, which compiles the group's American albums with a sampling from its four African-only releases, dating back to 1979, paints an incrementally more compelling image of the group.)

Clegg's subsequent band Savuka (which retains two members—not Mchunu—from Juluka) is even more Western-oriented. The slick production of Third World Child relieves it of the simple, unassuming emotionality of township music, and the selfconscious, breast-beating lyrics of the title track and "Berlin Wall" suggest that Clegg's gunning for the Nobel peace prize while attempting to forge a calculated commercial sound. Too bad Paul Simon beat him to the bank.

By Shadow Man, Clegg is starting to sound a bit like Sting, a catchy pop hybrid of synthesizers and African percussion. Attempting to join the Anglo-American mainstream without abandoning his homeland (for which his love seems genuine enough), Clegg drops Zulu phrases and instrumentation like a social climber mentioning famous names at a party. Unfortunately, he can't have it both ways, and this fusion sounds more like an American effort to sound African than vice versa.

Like many other artists, Clegg was electrified by the tumultuous political events of the late '80s. Cruel, Crazy, Beautiful World has songs of both anger and optimism, presented with a more comfortable blend of musical idioms than ever before. (Although the Sting comparison still applies.) There's nothing traditional about Savuka's sound, but the stylistic weave serves both ingredients nicely for a change, and the album finds a satisfying midpoint between disparate cultures. [rg/i]

CLICK CLICK

Wet Skin and Curious Eye (Play It Again Sam) 1987 •
Rorschach Testing (Play It Again Sam) 1988 •
Bent Massive (Play It Again Sam) 1989 •

CLICK CLICK/BORGHESIA

Doublebill (Play It Again Sam) 1987

Snarling dyspeptic lyrics over beats that can only be described as dance-oriented (though I dread to think who would actually find this stuff conducive to booty-shaking), Bedfordshire, England's Click Click falls well short of Foetusian intensity and lacks the subtlety to get by on cleverness. Wet Skin and Curious Eye, a boring compilation of remixed singles ("Sweet Stuff," "Skrip-glow," etc.), finds brothers Adrian (synths, vocals) and Derek (drums) Smith, with help from a second synthesist, drummer/engineer Alan Fisch and a guitarist, working familiar tricks of the industrial trade with modest efficiency.

Doublebill pairs a long three-song Click Click 12-inch (the transitional "I Rage I Melt," plus two more non-LP items) with a Borghesia EP (Naked Uniform Dead) on the flipside.

Dropping the heavy rhythms and exaggerated vocals, Rorschach Testing brings the trio (Smith, Smith and guitarist Graham Stronach) into the realm of accessible techno-rock, suggesting a couple of Depeche Mode/Soft Cell fans on lithium. Neither appealing nor awful, tracks like "Perfect Stranger" and "Whirlpool" display skill but no imagination at all.

One LP was evidently enough light relief for Click Click. Adrian is partially back on the growl growl with Bent Massive, an otherwise more open-minded musical adventure. Dynamic synthesizer/guitar arrangements (with samples and surprising variety) generally leave rhythms in a subsidiary role (although not on "Moist," a mighty, ominous dance number); the tracks are less songs than sonic experiments with words. Not bad. [i]

GEORGE CLINTON

Computer Games (Capitol) 1982
You Shouldn't Nuf Bit Fish (Capitol) 1983
Some of My Best Jokes Are Friends (Capitol) 1985
R&B Skeletons in the Closet (Capitol) 1986
The Best of George Clinton (Capitol) 1986 •
The Cinderella Theory (Paisley Park-Warner Bros.) 1989 •

GEORGE CLINTON/ PARLIAMENT-FUNKADELIC

The Mothership Connection (Live from Houston) (Capitol) 1986

P-FUNK ALL-STARS

Urban Dancefloor Guerrillas (Uncle Jam-CBS Associated) 1983 •

INCORPORATED THANG BAND

Lifestyles of the Roach and Famous (Warner Bros.) 1988 •

This national treasure's musical concepts are so wide-ranging and generous that he's needed an entire roster of groups—creating dozens of albums—to work them out. During Clinton's '70s heyday, one of the two main exponents for his genius was Parliament (an outgrowth of the Parliaments, a doo-wop group dating back to the mid-'50s that had a 1967 hit with "(I Wanna) Testify"), which played idiosyncratic R&B with an initial emphasis on harmony vocals. Meanwhile, Funkadelic played exactly what its name implied—psychedelic funk. Clinton invented the form, and subsequent practitioners of it—from Prince to the Red Hot

Chili Peppers (whose second album Clinton produced) and beyond—are deeply in his debt.

Numerous members of the huge Parliament/Funkadelic crew have also wielded enormous influence. Having reinvented funk bass playing for James Brown in the late '60s, Bootsy Collins did it again for Clinton, and without keyboardist Bernie Worrell the lexicon of synth bass licks would be substantially thinner.

While Clinton really didn't distinguish himself as a great player or singer, his ideas (both verbal and musical) have always been audacious, uninhibited and ahead of their time. As the '70s went on, Funkadelic got deeper and deeper. The classic One Nation Under a Groove (1978) remains a touchstone for many musical cultures. In the meantime, Parliament got sillier and sillier, putting out albums replete with high voices and squiggly sounds. Still, P-Funk (as the whole shebang came to be known) hits—monsters like “Tear the Roof off the Sucker” (now an essential hip-hop sample) and “Flash Light”—are simply unstoppable.

Clinton closed the P-Funk umbrella in the early '80s, but continued to give up the funk under his own name. Computer Games' title gave the nod to the burgeoning wave of techno-funk that was beginning to overtake almost every other form of dance music; rather than reject the new technology, he adapted it here in his own unique way, resulting in the ace hit single, “Atomic Dog.” You Shouldn't-Nuf Bit Fish's title cut refers to the splitting of the atom—a scientific fish that shouldn't have bit, leading mankind into the terrifying age of nukes. The rest of the record is more lighthearted and dance-oriented and, like all of Clinton's records, boasts an all-star cast of funkateers, here including former Parliament vocalist Phillippe Wynne.

Clinton briefly convened the P-Funk All Stars in '83; Urban Dancefloor Guerrillas is a monstrous dance record pretty much defined by its single, “Generator Pump.”

Some of My Best Jokes Are Friends is a likable but fairly undistinguished effort featuring guest Thomas Dolby. What results from the pairing isn't quite tension, but one does get the sense that while Clinton wanted the (then) hot Dolby for added commercial viability, Dolby would like nothing better than to be Clinton.

R&B Skeletons in the Closet has vocals by ex-Miss America (and soon-to-be-a-star-solo-singer) Vanessa Williams; here immortal phrasemaker Clinton asked the musical question “Do Fries Go with That Shake?” Otherwise, it was business as usual, with very little of the roots alluded to in the title overtly evident in the grooves.

In 1986, Capitol issued an ersatz best-of that reproduced one whole side (but not the title track) of Fish. Unnecessary to be sure, but if it was the only Clinton record available, you'd find it entertaining enough. The Mothership Connection (Live in Houston) pairs a side of vintage live P-Funk with three selections (including “Atomic Dog,” which is also on The Best Of) from the Capitol studio LPs.

After laying low for a while (but doing theme music for The Tracey Ullman Show), Clinton resurfaced to co-produce the Incorporated Thang Band's Lifestyles of the Roach and Famous with Bootsy Collins. The following year, signed to Prince's Paisley Park label, he made the excellent (and slightly purple-tinted) The Cin- derella Theory, with guest shots by such young admirers as Chuck D. and Flavor Flav of Public Enemy. (The album includes another canine-based hit, “Why Should I Dog U Out?”) Various co-productions and an appearance on Prince's Graffiti Bridge soundtrack followed.

[gk]

CLINTS

No Place Like Home (Skyclad) 1989

This Southern California-based foursome's long-playing debut has certain commendable points, specifically Dan Matovina's dense, offbeat production and guitarist Clint Wade's strange, meandering songs (“The Grey Receiver,” “Mysterious Clints”). On the downside, fellow tunesmith/guitarist Clint Ambuter's earnest, soul-searching efforts are lyrically less interesting, and some of the arrangements have a dated new-wavy quality. While the Clints, to their credit, sound like no other band, this album is less than awe-inspiring. [sm]

CLOCK DVA

White Souls in Black Suits [tape] (nr/Industrial) 1980 (lt.

Records from Around the World) 1982 + 1990

Thirst (nr/Fetish) 1981 (nr/Doublevision) 1985

Advantage (nr/Polydor) 1983 (Wax Trax!) 1990 ●

Breakdown EP (Relativity) 1983

The Hacker/The Act [CD] (Wax Trax!) 1988 ●

Buried Dreams (Wax Trax!) 1990 ●

Appearing in 1980 and allied with industrial bands like Throbbing Gristle and Cabaret Voltaire, Sheffield's Clock DVA aped the sound of British white soul groups of the day on the wholly improvised White Souls in Black Suits—although the mock-soul energy is strangely vitiated by urban metal noise that distorts the songs around the edges. Eerie but captivating, with a punchy beat. (Although initially available only on cassette, White Souls was subsequently released on Italian vinyl.)

On Thirst, the band maintained an interest in dance music, but abandoned soul pretensions for electro-noise, and the album is a playground of startling, unearthly machine chants. Clock DVA's initial lineup then collapsed, losing most of its members to the Box. But leader Adi Newtown pressed on with new sidemen.

Advantage is their strongest, most powerful LP, a funky concoction of intense dance-powered bass/drums drive with splatters of feedback, angst-ridden vocals by Newton, tape interruptions and dollops of white-noise sax and trumpet. The band also digresses into devolved bebop. Released as a British single from Advantage, “Breakdown” also formed the basis for an American EP, which added an extended remix, another great LP cut and a mesmerizing take on the Velvet Underground's “Black Angel's Death Song.”

After the group dissolved again, Newton formed the Anti-Group, an industrial jazz project whose 1985 debut single was produced by Cabaret Voltaire. In 1989, he revived Clock DVA as a sample-oriented electronic tool for dramatic techno-cultural commentary. Taking cues from contemporary industrial groups but aiming much higher, both the music and the non-music on The Hacker/The Act are colorful and engrossing, an imaginative, dynamic and rhythmic blend of art and reality.

As opposed to the more oblique and challenging pieces ("The Hacker," "The Connection Machine") on the record, "The Act," "Re/Act" and "Re/Act 2" (three slight lyrical variations on the same track) are sung in relatively traditional fashion.

If you can survive the stifling intellectual pretensions of the package, Buried Dreams—an audio essay on death, fetishism and decadence—is another entertaining nightmare on wax. Both "The Act" and "The Hacker" make repeat appearances, preceded by creations ostensibly inspired by a genocidal 16th-century countess, Albert Camus and a case history from Psychopathia Sexualis. Regardless, the slow, moody synthesizer noises and unpleasantly treated vocals give the album a potent theatrical power. [sg/i]

See also Box.

CLOSE LOBSTERS

Foxheads Stalk This Land (Fire-Enigma) 1987 •
What Is There to Smile About EP (Fire-Enigma) 1988 •
Headache Rhetoric (Fire-Enigma) 1989 •

In a world overrun by samey janglepop, this Scottish quintet has managed to establish a distinctive sound by melding the aggro bounce of Britpunk's first wave with the mellower melodic strains of such groups as the Church. The band's four instrumentalists construct a dense wall of guitars and drums on which Andrew Burnett hangs his plaintive, dreamy crooning.

Foxheads is a fine introduction, an album full of sunny pogoable songs ("Sewer Pipe Dream" and the title track) and epic axe assaults (the eight-minute "Mother of God"). The succeeding EP offers a half-dozen additional tracks, showcasing an even more mature sense of melody (especially on the haunting "Let's Make Some Plans") and all-around songwriting excellence.

No news is good news on Headache Rhetoric, another fine record which highlights Graeme Wilmington and Tom Donnelly's full-bodied guitars and the sturdy rhythm section (Andrew's brother Bob and Stewart McFayden). The vocals still obscure the lyrics, but no matter. However you slice them, songs like "Lovely Little Swan" and "Nature Thing" stay with you long after the album has ended. [db]

CLUB FOOT ORCHESTRA

Wild Beasts (Ralph) 1986
Kidnapped (Ralph) 1987
The Cabinet of Doctor Caligari [tape] (Ralph) 1989
Nosferatu [tape] (Ralph) 1989

In the years since the Lounge Lizards and Pigbag first made jazz a fashionable post-rock commodity, things have settled down enough that this eight-to-ten-person San Francisco horn-based ensemble can take some of its basic style from '40s swing bands without making a heavy ironic statement. (That Club Foot Orchestra records for Ralph is more emblematic of the label's changes than any fringeworthiness on the band's part.) Trombonist Richard Marriott writes jazzy modern numbers that have nothing to do with Benny Goodman or Harry James, and the group arranges them for horns, violin, drums, etc. That's about it. The results fall somewhere between Frank Zappa and the Ordinaires; a bit bland at times, but generally good, imaginative fun.

Wild Beasts is strictly instrumental and features contributions from the late Snakefinger; Kidnapped is dedicated to him, and has fine vocals by clarinetist Beth Custer on some tracks. The latest two tape-only releases are Marriott's original scores composed for Ralph's videocassette issues of the 1919 and 1921 German cinema classics. [i]

CLUSTER

See Brian Eno.

COCKNEY REJECTS

Greatest Hits Vol. 1 (nr/EMI) 1980
Greatest Hits Vol. II (nr/EMI) 1980
Greatest Hits Vol. 3 (nr/EMI) 1981
The Power & the Glory (nr/EMI) 1981
The Wild Ones (nr/a.k.a.) 1982
Unheard Rejects (nr/Wonderful World) 1985
We Are the Firm (nr/Dojo) 1986
Live and Loud!! Bridgehouse Tapes (nr/Link) 1987

This obstreperous lot of working class kids from London's East End were discovered in the early days of post-Pistols punk by Sham 69 leader Jimmy Pursey, who co-produced their first album with Peter Wilson. The Rejects gained immortality of a sort on Vol. II by coining a name for UK skinhead rock with the chanted refrain of the song "Oi Oi Oi." Vol. 3 (reasonably subtitled Live & Loud!) was recorded in a studio with an unnaturally vociferous audience of fans adding background vocals to the quartet's fast rock'n'roll noise. Besides songs drawn from the first two LPs ("Join the Rejects," "Bad Man," "The Greatest Cockney Rip-off," "Hate of the City"), the album includes a sloppy rendition of "Motorhead."

While retaining the aggressiveness and spunk, The Power & the Glory took a big chance by trying such experimental ventures as acoustic guitar, melodies, musicianship and semi-tasteful artwork. The album contains impressive moments, especially noteworthy given the Rejects' prior blitzkrieg approach. Not stunning, but their best effort, and an LP of interest not solely to punk aficionados.

Having gotten "art" out of their systems (and switching labels), the Rejects' next move (subsequently not such an uncommon gambit for punk bands) was into heavy metal. Produced by UFO bassist Pete Way, The Wild Ones is unfortunately terrible; although the distance from teen punk sludge to adult metal sludge is not very far, this lot was much better suited for numbers like "Greatest Cockney Ripoff."

If the sound quality were even remotely adequate, the blistering 1981 London gig retrieved from the vaults for Live and Loud!! would be a real humdinger. What was originally planned as the group's Vol. 3 live album is an intense explosion of classic prole punk, flat-out renditions of the Rejects' early repertoire that are even more rousing than those cut live in the studio. [i]

COCONUTS

See Kid Creole and the Coconuts.

COCTEAU TWINS

- Garlands (nr/4AD) 1982 •
- Lullabies EP (nr/4AD) 1982
- Peppermint Pig EP (nr/4AD) 1983
- Head Over Heels (nr/4AD) 1983 •
- Sunburst and Snowblind EP (nr/4AD) 1983 •
- Pearly-Dewdrops' Drop EP (nr/4AD) 1984
- Treasure (nr/4AD) 1984 •
- Aikea-Guinea EP (nr/4AD) 1985
- Treasure/Aikea-Guinea (Can. Vertigo) 1985
- Tiny Dynamine EP (nr/4AD) 1985 •
- Echoes in a Shallow Bay EP (nr/4AD) 1985
- Tiny Dynamine/Echoes in a Shallow Bay (nr/4AD) 1986 •
- The Pink Opaque (4AD-Relativity) 1986 •
- Victoriland (nr/4AD) 1986 •
- Love's Easy Tears EP (4AD-Relativity) 1986 •
- Blue Bell Knoll (4AD-Capitol) 1988 •
- Heaven or Las Vegas (4AD-Capitol) 1990 •
- Iceblink Luck EP (4AD-Capitol) 1990 •
- Heaven or Las Vegas EP (4AD-Capitol) 1990 •

HAROLD BUDD/ELIZABETH FRASER/ROBIN GUTHRIE/SIMON RAYMONDE

The Moon and the Melodies (4AD-Relativity) 1986 •

The Cocteau Twins are actually a Scottish trio who, on their first album, add a borrowed drum synthesizer to vocals, bass and heavily treated guitar, producing atmospheric dirges with rich textures and little structure. Elizabeth Fraser's vocals are essentially tuneless, and the backing goes nowhere, but it's all artily agreeable enough for those with the patience to wade through the murk and mire. (The UK Garlands CD adds a 1983 John Peel radio broadcast and two previously unreleased studio tracks.)

Bassist Will Heggie then left (resurfacing in Lowlife), and Simon Raymonde joined Fraser and guitarist Robin Guthrie. Head Over Heels shows marked improvement, both in terms of songwriting technique and vocal performances. "Sugar Hiccup" (a different version of which appears on Sunburst and Snowblind) exhibits a stronger melodic sense, and Fraser's voice soars on songs like "In the Gold Dust Rush" and "Musette and Drums." The record also offers more varied tempos: the rather Bansheelike "In Our Angelhood" rocks more than anything the Cocteau had previously done.

Sunburst and Snowblind is a strong four-song EP, well-honed for those who'd rather meet the Cocteau Twins in smaller doses. Delicate, precious yet accessible, the instrumental backing is a little thinner and the vocals more confident. Head Over Heels and Sunburst and Snowblind were issued together on CD and cassette.

Pearly-Dewdrops' Drop strips down the sound a little further; "The Spangle Maker" and the title track even forgo much of the reverb that permeates their records. By this point, the Cocteau Twins had become ubiquitous figures in the alternative record charts and a major live attraction as well. Treasure stands as their finest hour. It contains no black and white sounds—just intriguing shades of gray—immersing the listener in a full range of emotions, with Fraser's now-powerful voice alternately full of sorrow, joy, calm and fury. The production is meticulously detailed; increased use of keyboards and drums provides a wider range of tone colors. All ten diverse tracks work well; "Persephone" and "Ivo" are particularly noteworthy.

After Treasure, the Cocteau ran a little short on new ideas. In 1985, they released three four-song EPs. Aikea-Guinea could pass as outtakes from previous albums, while Tiny Dynamine and Echoes in a Shallow Bay are virtually identical, in cover art as well as sound. On the following year's Victoriland, almost all the instrumental backing is psychedelic-tinged treated acoustic guitar. While that opens things up and gives Fraser's voice more room, the material again recalls earlier records. All of these works, if heard individually, are pleasant, effective mood music; taken as a whole, however, they're all cut from the same cloth.

The Moon and the Melodies enlists pianist/minimalist composer/Eno collaborator Harold Budd and gives him equal billing. Let's just say that the results don't exactly kick butt; the band's remaining redeeming feature, Fraser's voice, sounds noticeably uninspired on the (only) three tracks where she appears. Those familiar with the band's recent work, firmly entrenched in the dangerous realm of new age mush, will know what this one sounds like before the laser beam hits the CD.

Love's Easy Tears is four tracks of déjà vu. The Pink Opaque, a career-spanning compilation, was originally issued as a British CD; the vinyl version became the band's first American release. For Blue Bell Knoll, a 35-minute major-label debut, the band seemed content to stick with its well-defined formula of pleasant, florid aural wallpaper; the album is smoothly produced and utterly forgettable.

Whether it was Guthrie and Fraser's parenthood, Guthrie's outside production work with such groups as the Veldt and Lush or a visitation from aliens, something lit a fire under this somnolent band. Delivered at a point when the Cocteau were veering dangerously close to self-parody, Heaven or Las Vegas reasserts their artistic respectability and then some. The most obvious shock is that Fraser's lyrics are in understandable English (well, at least part of the time); there are more actual songs here than on their past half-dozen releases combined. While the pacing isn't drastically different, energetic playing, Fraser's deeper range and new-found expressiveness, and imaginative, less florid songwriting make Heaven or Las Vegas the first Cocteau Twins album to climb out of the trendy-muzak bin.

Iceblink Luck showcases a catchy song (with the clearest words of any Twins single yet) from the LP and two non-album tracks, including the nearly funky "Watchlar." The Heaven or Las Vegas EP includes one non-album track, the ambient "Dials." [dgs/ws] See also Lowlife, This Mortal Coil.

COIL

- How to Destroy Angels EP (Bel. Laylah) 1984 •
- Scatology (nr/K.422-Some Bizarre) 1984 •
- The Anal Staircase EP (Some Bizarre-Relativity) 1987
- Horse Rotorvator (Some Bizarre-Relativity) 1987 •
- Unreleased Themes from Hellraiser (nr/Solar Lodge) 1988 •
- Gold Is the Metal with the Broadest Shoulders (nr/Threshold House) 1988 •
- Unnatural History (nr/Threshold House) 1990
- Love's Secret Domain (Wax Trax!) 1991 •

CURRENT 93/COIL

Nightmare Culture (Bel. Laylah) 1985

Although its output has been sporadic, Coil is the most consistently excellent of the three groups formed from the dissolution of Throbbing Gristle. After TG disbanded in 1981, Peter Christopherson (keyboards, programming) worked with Genesis P-Orridge in Psychic TV, but split in 1982 to join John Balance (vocals, percussion), who was already recording under the name Coil. With frequent help from Clint (Foetus) Ruin and others, the pair exercises an obvious fascination with sonic textures and sound manipulation, and program some mean rhythms.

Scatology, the subject of which is a strange mix of fetish, fantasy and religion, finds Christopherson and Balance working with Ruin, Stephen Thrower and ex-Alternative TV guitarist Alex Fergusson. Most of the tracks are built around simple but forceful electronic percussion, with sampler and synthesizer overdubs adding a mood of spiritual despair and decaying grandeur. "The Sewage Worker's Birthday Party" uses sampled guitar feedback to create a melancholy mood piece of shocking beauty, showcasing the group's skill at audio sculpture.

With far richer production and almost none of Scatology's heavy rhythms, Horse Rotorvator (which contains two of The Anal Staircase's three cuts) is a mélange of electronic tone poems of varying textures and styles, from haunting drones to film noir jazz (complete with a Clint Ruin horn section) to quasi-Middle Eastern/African modalities. Rather than falling into the trap of making an academic exercise of the whole thing, though, Coil breathes life into the proceedings with upfront spoken/sung vocals and the use of acoustic instruments.

Composed for—but not used in—Clive Barker's 1987 horror film, Unreleased Themes from Hellraiser contains some of the best mood music recorded during the 1980s, slowly building layers of awesome creepiness. One side contains eleven short bits of incidental music, some of which are quite good, but most are too brief to leave a lasting impression.

Gold Is the Metal with the Broadest Shoulders collects outtakes and alternate versions of material from Hellraiser, Horse Rotorvator, Scatology, plus tracks from some of the many compilations on which Coil has appeared. While it doesn't hang together as well as the other albums, most of the eighteen tracks are well worth hearing. The versions here are often quite different—and sometimes notably better—than the originals. If nothing else, Gold offers an overview of Coil's history, from simplicity to sophistication.

Unnatural History assembles more ephemera from the Coil archives. The first three tracks, recorded with Boyd Rice, were originally released as one side of the Nightmare Culture album (shared with Current 93), and present a strange combination of noise experiments, Casio ditties and atmospherics. The collection also includes seventeen minutes of ambient gong music, designed "for the accumulation of male sexual energy," that initially appeared as a one-sided 1984 EP, How to Destroy Angels.

Love's Secret Domain makes some acknowledgment of related trends in modern music, with hip-hop scratching, acid house beats and other contemporary sounds thrown into the band's more characteristic ambient experiments. (The sore-thumb referent here is vintage Kraftwerk, which one track strongly resembles.) While the LP is occasionally ear-catching, Coil seems to be rather short on striking ideas and creative energy this time out, and a lot of the LP drifts by too blandly to notice. [sl dgs/i]

See also Psychic TV, Throbbing Gristle.

SCOTT COLBY

See Zoogz Rift.

COLDCUT

What's That Noise? (nr/Ahead of Our Time-Big Life)

1989 (Tommy Boy-Reprise) 1989 ●

London DJs Matt Black and Jonathan More were at the vanguard of the British warehouse party scene, and their dissection of popular dance music into "bootleg" records full of samples made them a name on trendsetters' lips from the start. Yet had these collagists never done anything after pairing the wailing of Ofra Haza to the slinky bass riff of Eric B. & Rakim's "Paid in Full" (on a commissioned remix of that number, some of which later ended up on M/A/R/R/S' "Pump Up the Volume" and is heard in a non-vocal form on What's That Noise?), they'd still have an enduring place in music history.

When the duo pulled in then-unknown singer Yazza to add celebratory vocals to their dancefloor cut "Doctorin' the House," Coldcut hit on a winning formula and became major instigators of the acid house scene. A Top 10 British hit in early 1988 and a classic of its time, the song didn't make it onto the US version of the duo's debut album (it had previously been issued Stateside on a different label); the improvement in the US release is the addition of Queen Latifah's vocals to "Smoke Dis One." If Coldcut should be noted for anything, it's their impeccable taste in singers: Junior Reid ("Stop This Crazy Thing"), Lisa Stansfield ("People Hold On") and Mark E. Smith ("(I'm) In Deep") of the Fall, who then proceeded to cover the album's "My Telephone" as "Telephone Thing." In between the vocal tracks are various "Beats & Pieces," as one title has it: samples, melodies and grooves that help flesh out What's That Noise?, a patchy but generally rewarding debut. [tf/gk]

JUDE COLE

See Records.

LLOYD COLE AND THE COMMOTIONS

Rattlesnakes (Geffen) 1984 (Capitol) 1988 ●

Easy Pieces (Geffen) 1985 (Capitol) 1988 ●

Mainstream (nr/Polydor) 1987 (Capitol) 1987 ●

1984–1989 (Capitol) 1989 ●

LLOYD COLE

Lloyd Cole (Capitol) 1990 ●

Bursting with promise as both singer and writer on his first LP, Scotland's Lloyd Cole puts the post-beatnik lyrical outlook of a young Bob Dylan to textured backing. Rattlesnakes' strength lies in Cole's well-constructed folk-rock tunes and casually emotive vocals; the four Commotions make a tight, talented unit capable of subtlety and power in many voices. Cole's prose occasionally overreaches (but never by much); lyrics that hit their mark do so sharply. Those hypersensitive to creeping Dylanitis will find Rattlesnakes a bit hard to accept; openminded adventurers will be immediately engrossed.

Easy Pieces, smoothly produced by Langer/Winstanley, succumbs to hazards threatened on the first LP. While the solid band remains unprepossessing, Cole's vocals are overly stylized; quoting Bolan and the Beatles, his lyrics veer towards meaningless self-importance. Given that it's not strikingly different from Rattlesnakes, Easy Pieces makes you wonder why you liked the band in the first place. (The CD has three extra tracks.)

Cole regained his footing and momentum on Mainstream: factoring in maturity and experience (his and the band's), it actually winds up a better album than the first. Subtly cast and deftly played arrangements that range from Aztec Camera airiness to fleshed-out light rock keep songs like "Sean Penn Blues" and "Mister Malcontent" from drifting into ponderousness; Cole's affecting singing is likewise finely wrought. The shimmering "From the Hip" and "Hey Rusty," an ace song that builds tension slowly, are highlights of this welcome return.

Moving to New York without the Commotions, Cole put the band concept in his past with 1984-1989. The compilation contains four cuts from each of the three albums plus a couple of non-LP B-sides—a decent retrospective, but it would have been better to pick the best songs overall rather than give each record equal representation.

For his solo debut, Cole reunited with Commotion keyboardist Blair Cowan (who'd left after Mainstream, and thus didn't miss any of Cole's recordings) and hooked up with Bob Quine and Fred Maher, early '80s cohorts of another major Cole influence, Lou Reed. (The album's bassist is Matthew Sweet.) Though there's no great stylistic difference between Lloyd Cole and his Commotions work, Maher's way with a groove helps Cole to swing just a bit freer than before, making this his warmest, most personal and confident outing to date.

Bloomsday, a band formed by two ex-Commotions—guitarist Neil Clark and drummer Stephen Irvine—surfaced in 1990. [i/ds]

EDWYN COLLINS

See Orange Juice.

HENRIETTA COLLINS AND THE WIFEBEATING CHILDHATERS

See Henry Rollins.

NICOLAS COLLINS

See Band of Susans.

PAUL COLLINS' BEAT

See Beat.

CHRISTINE COLLISTER

See Clive Gregson.

COLORBLIND JAMES EXPERIENCE

The Colorblind James Experience (Earring) 1987

(Fundamental) 1987 •

Why Should I Stand Up? (nr/Death Valley-Cooking

Vinyl) 1989 (Death Valley-Cooking Vinyl-Gold Castle) 1990 •

The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1989 •

COLORBLIND JAMES AND THE DEATH VALLEY BOYS

Strange Sounds from the Basement (nr/Death Valley-Cooking Vinyl) 1990

The Colorblind James Experience sounds like a polka band on an acid trip, which is to say that this wild bunch from Rochester, New York isn't like too many other bands in your record collection. But how to describe them . . . The Jazz Butcher meets Guy Clark? Robyn Hitchcock falls Asleep at the Wheel? Or maybe as the group that picked up where the Bonzo Dog Band's "Rhinocratic Oaths" left off? How about just saying they're unique, silly, surreal and wonderful.

On the self-titled debut, the Experience is a quartet led by the estimable Mr. James, who sings, talks and plays a mean vibraphone (and some guitar to boot). The album pretty much lays the groundwork for everything to come, as Colorblind delivers his story-songs over repetitious-but-very-sprightly figures, containing hints of country, blues, lounge jazz, polka and Tex-Mex in assorted permutations and combinations. The whole enterprise reaches its pinnacle on "Considering a Move to Memphis," wherein James ponders the consequences of relocation ("I'm considering a move to Memphis/That's Memphis, Tennessee/It worked for Elvis Presley/Why can't it work for me?"). "Dance Critters" and "Gravel Roads" explore the group's country side, while other numbers concern a visit by some German girls, camel walking, an inept circus attendant and more.

With the addition of two horn players, the Experience expanded to six pieces on Why Should I Stand Up?, but the general formula remains the same. If anything, the album is a little more country flavored than its predecessor, but there's also plenty of polka and even some rock'n'roll. (Though not on a song called "Rock-in' as Fast as I Can," about James' confrontation with angry fans shouting "Let's Rock!" at him.) Once again, it's the twisted songs that'll get ya.

The Peel session, recorded in '88, features two songs from Why Should I Stand Up? and a couple of non-album tracks. Easy to skip.

Strange Sounds from the Basement finds Colorblind and crew (now dubbed the Death Valley Boys, even though the only personnel change from the last Experience album is one trombonist) delving further into the country side of things, and relying more on traditional verse-chorus song structures than on ad infinitum repetition. Fortunately, the wit and bizarre subject matter remain unchanged. [ds]

COLOR ME GONE

See Marti Jones.

COLOURBOX

Colourbox EP (nr/4AD) 1983 •

Colourbox (nr/4AD) 1985 •

Although this London trio's music is not particularly avant-garde, the group does fit in with the uncompromising 4AD family due to their steadfast determination to totally redefine a musical style. Instrumentalists Martyn and brother Steven Young, along with vocalist Lorita Grahame, take soul places it's never been—and is unlikely to go again.

The eponymous EP—three hours of sessions edited down to a half-hour of hip-hop/scratch and reggae/dub experiments, with a graphic depiction of horses mating on the cover—largely earned its negative reception. The Colourbox LP, however, is a vast improvement, an eclectic display that embraces the entire realm of dance music: reggae, vibrant industrial, hard'n'heavy funk, '50s R&B. Screeching guitar on the near-metal "Maniac" segues into the highlight, a sparkling remake of the Supremes' "You Keep Me Hanging On." (The cassette of Colourbox is double-length, adding an LP's worth of remixes; initial quantities of the LP contained the same on a bonus disc.)

Other than the occasional one-off single, Colourbox remained unexpectedly dormant following the release of its LP. However, Steven and Martyn did achieve notoriety in 1987 due to their role in M/A/R/R/S (the "S" for Steven and the "M" for Martyn; the A and R come from the two members of A R Kane), the studio concoction responsible for the massively influential club smash "Pump Up the Volume." [ag]

COLOUR FIELD

Virgins and Philistines (Chrysalis) 1985 •

The Colour Field EP (Chrysalis) 1986

Deception (Chrysalis) 1987 •

TERRY, BLAIR AND ANOUCHKA

Ultra Modern Nursery Rhymes (nr/Chrysalis) 1989 •

Vocalist Terry Hall's post-Fun Boy Three band started out slowly, with just an eponymous single in 1984. But the trio's first album a year later was well worth the wait. Virgins and Philistines kicks off brilliantly with the mock-'96 Tears" organ intro to "Can't Get Enough of You Baby," itself a fine imitation of Georgie Fame-era beat music. The music mixes its metaphors, from stripped-down Fun Boys rock to samba, folk and jazzy '60s R&B; Hall's sharp tongue and the band's intelligent creativity make each track different. Of special note: a shimmering acoustic version of the Roches' "Hammond Song" and "Pushing Up Daisies," a vicious condemnation of celebrity. Drama, beauty, ideas and energy make Virgins and Philistines provocative, stylish and memorable.

The EP—unveiling an expanded four-piece lineup—contains a pair of live cuts ("Pushing Up Daisies" and "Yours Sincerely") plus four excellent new tracks, including the memorable "Faint Hearts," an almost psychedelic folk tune, and "Things Could Be Beautiful," a soulful rocker.

Hall is the only person pictured on the disappointing Deception, a subdued and mechanical-sounding LP that employs a guest drum programmer, a keyboard player and Tears for Fears guitarist Roland Orzabal. Producer Richard Gottehrer misplaces the resonant stylistic variety and energy that previously typified the group, leaving pale jazzy support—occasionally resembling a less constipated Dream Academy—for Hall's characteristically wispy singing. The material ("Badlands," "Confession," "Boyce/Hart's "She") isn't bad, but the facile arrangements leave Hall moaning up the wrong tree.

Ultra Modern Nursery Rhymes—the first album by Hall's new trio with Blair Booth (vocals/keyboard) and Anouchka Groce (guitar/vocals)—drapes his usual lyrical dyspepsia in superficially simple light pop music that's too subtle for its own good. While several songs recall the Fun Boys' old partnership with Bananarama (minus the rhythmic intensity), there are fewer echoes of Hall's subsequent adventures: the faint accents here are Dixieland, swing and Latin. Booth, who shares songwriting and lead vocals, is a versatile, sympathetic collaborator, but the album is a bit down-the-middle dull, lacking any strong stylistic personality. After years of making music neck-deep in atmosphere, Hall isn't served well by such understatement; as pleasant as these tunes are, none of them has the memorable mettle of his best. [i]

See also Fun Boy Three, Specials.

SHAWN COLVIN

Live Tape [tape] 1988

Steady On (Columbia) 1989 •

The career of this South Dakota-born New Yorker offers an object lesson in the danger of major labels. Colvin's eight-song Live Tape, recorded in Massachusetts in 1988, is as enchanting a collection of acoustic songs as one could imagine. Accompanying her extraordinary pipes with just a guitar, Colvin hurls herself into folksy material with an utterly distinctive, jazzy voice that flutters and swoops in a most affecting way. And aside from occasional forays into the Joni Mitchell/Suzanne Vega school of precious, self-indulgent lyrics, each of these eight songs is hauntingly, simply beautiful.

So what happened? Featuring new versions of six Live Tape songs, Steady On is bland, overproduced, radio-ready drivel. Vega producer Steve Addabbo and John Leventhal (Colvin's songwriting partner and guitarist) layer on schlocky session playing and synthesizers to the point where the individuality of Colvin's voice and songs is all but lost.

Colvin sang backup on "Luka," and Vega returns the favor here. It's ironic that while Colvin has more vocal range and expressiveness, not to mention melodic imagination, than Vega, Steady On attempts to emulate her. It's also worth noting that "Another Long One," the one track Colvin produced by herself, is the album's sparest and most moving moment. [ws]

COMATEENS

Comateens (Cachalot) 1981

Pictures on a String (Virgin-Mercury) 1983

Deal with It (Virgin-Mercury) 1984

This New York trio played a bouncy brand of dance rock rooted in chintzy '60s Farfisa organ pop and spooky horror-movie soundtrack music. The group first gained recognition in 1979 with a homemade single that featured a stripped-down version of Bowie's "TVC 15," which they re-recorded for their first LP. After a number of personnel changes, the lineup solidified at Lyn Byrd (keyboards), Oliver North (guitar, not international subterfuge), Nic North (bass) and synthetic drums. Comateens is a delightful distillation of the aforementioned influences, with neat contrasts between the thin-sounding synth fills and the chunky, rhythmic guitar. There's also a three-track 12-inch—on the same label—of the hypnotic "Ghosts," the pure pop "Late Night City" and the theme for TV's The Munsters, which pretty much sums up the Comateens' music.

Signed to a major label, the Comateens made Pictures on a String, which diverges into rock quirkiness and danceable commercialism, pushing a powerful disco beat on "Get off My Case," "Cinnamon" and other numbers. The rock-oriented material, especially the Beatlesque "Comateens," with its awesome fuzz-blizzard guitar solo, and a weird overdrive cover of the oldie "Uptown," are more intriguing; the dance tracks don't really go anywhere.

With a guest drummer and veteran hitmaker Pete Solley producing, Deal with It sublimates the big beat into various styles, much the way Blondie often did. Rather than base tunes on rhythms, these songs explore widely differing pop modes, welded to strong, emphasized drum tracks, resulting in a fascinating mix full of unexpected, delightful juxtapositions. This is the album that finally and fully realizes the Comateens' hybridizing potential.

After Oliver North's death in 1987, Nic North and Lyn Byrd continued to work together, recording for French Virgin under the name of West & Byrd. [ds/i]

COMMUNARDS

Communards (London-MCA) 1986 •

Red (London-MCA) 1987 •

JIMMY SOMERVILLE

Read My Lips (nr/London) 1989 (London) 1990 •

The Singles Collection 1984/1990 (nr/London) 1990 (London) 1991 •

When Scottish-born falsetto vocalist Jimmy Somerville split from Bronski Beat in 1985 and formed the Communards with classically trained pianist Richard Coles, many assumed the new group would take an even more determined political stance than the Bronskis' gay activism. Indeed, the pair participates in the Socialist Red Wedge movement but, graphics aside, you'd never know it from their records.

The first track on Communards is an over-the-top hi-NRG remake of "Don't Leave Me This Way," Thelma Houston's 1977 hit; the remainder mixes boring dance music with overly precious arrangements (strings, horns and the orchestral kitchen sink in spots) of songs that occasionally lean towards light opera. Except for those whose homophobia intrudes, the lyrics about sex and romance are merely tired and trivial. Worse, the group's best asset is squandered: Somerville's inimitable voice is totally unsuited for this halfbaked material. (The CD adds a song and a remix.)

Endorsing disco's ongoing commercial viability, the duo did a breathless version of "Never Can Say Goodbye" (following Gloria Gaynor's interpretation, not the Jacksons) on Red, a thoughtful, melodic album that is as likable as the first is cloying. Stephen Hague's keyboard-oriented Eurodance production (half of the record; Somerville and Coles did the rest) is more conducive to the much improved material, trimming the rococo excess for a slicker, more appealing sound.

By the end of 1987, the format-happy duo had issued 34 discrete singles and EPs. The deluge persevered until Somerville quit to go solo.

While reasserting his outspoken social and political stance, Somerville's first solo album maintains the non-stop modern dance momentum with catchy percolating hi-NRG grooves (played and produced by a variety of collaborators, including Hague and Steve Parr) over which he engagingly delivers romantic lyrics of love and loss. (The album also includes a version of Sylvester's "You Make Me Feel (Mighty Real)" and a French number which Somerville does twice.) The anthemic and catchy "Read My Lips (Enough Is Enough)" specifically addresses the fight against AIDS; "And You Never Thought That This Could Happen to You" artfully makes a gay-rights statement. Using the combined power of dance and pop to argue for rational behavior could be nightmarish, but Somerville pulls it off with amazing skill.

Covering all three phases (and four albums) of Somerville's career to date, The Singles Collection begins with "Smalltown Boy" and ends with "Read My Lips," sandwiching fifteen tracks by the Bronskis, Communards and JS solo in between. The only non-LP tune is a lovely soul-reggae cover of the Bee Gees' "To Love Somebody." [i]

COMPTON'S MOST WANTED

It's a Compton Thang! (Orpheus) 1990 •

This interracial quartet (two rappers, two writer/producers) from NWA's 'hood runs its low-key cold gangster raps (available in both explicit and expurgated editions) in a relentless stream of B-boy slang over swaying funky soul grooves. Beyond the high quality of the beats, It's a Compton Thang! seems like the over-anxious work of kid brothers trying to catch up with the big boys. CMW are a talented crew (check the kitchen sink production of the intense "I Give Up Nuthin'"), but if they weren't trying so hard to prove how cool they feel, they might find out just how cool they are. [i]

COMSAT ANGELS

Red Planet EP (nr/Junta) 1979

Waiting for a Miracle (nr/Polydor) 1980

Eye of the Lens EP (nr/Polydor) 1981

Sleep No More (nr/Polydor) 1981

Fiction (nr/Polydor) 1982

Land (Jive) 1983

Independence Day EP (nr/Jive) 1984

Enz (nr/Polydor) 1984

7 Day Weekend (Jive) 1985

Chasing Shadows (Island) 1987 •

DREAM COMMAND

Fire on the Moon (Island) 1990

Like Joy Division and the Cure, Sheffield's Comsat Angels mastered the art of atmospheric; only nominally involved in rock'n'roll at the outset, they were actually interested in creating haunting mood music. Firm beats play against melancholy melodies and hushed vocals to create the impression of eavesdropping on someone's inner turmoil, an approach which is morosely fascinating on Waiting for a Miracle (hailed in one UK paper as the greatest debut LP of all time, it remains a stunning masterwork) and tunes like "Total War" and "Independence Day" (both included live on the 1984 EP).

The Eye of the Lens 12-inch consists of four non-LP cuts (one later re-recorded for Sleep No More; the other three compiled on the Enz collection) highlighted by the surprisingly straight driving title track, one of the heaviest recordings of the group's career. The rest are dark, smoky and blood-curdling, a prelude to the second album. The Comsats at their best.

Sleep No More is a tightly wound hotbed of tension, frayed edges, shattered nerves and spilled coffee. Although criticized for its bleakness, its dark and disturbing tone, this is a fascinating, underrated and often misunderstood work, ambitious rather than accommodating or immediately accessible.

On the quartet's next album, Fiction, an unsettling sense of tension underlies Stephen Fellows' dejected vocals and guitar on "Ju-Ju Money" and "Zinger." However, even this artistic success raises questions about how much longer the band could prosper working in such a seemingly uncommercial style.

They did attempt to expand, trying their hand in the synth-pop market, a radical departure. Switching labels and getting their first American release, the Comsat Angels were forced to use the name C.S. Angels for the US. Land, produced by Mike Howlett, fails in an effort to cast them as a variant on A Flock of Seagulls, but it does contain a number of upbeat, memorable tunes that resemble a poppier, less serious Simple Minds. The subsequent EP takes two good songs off the LP and adds three early tracks; Enz is a compilation of pre-Jive releases.

The liner notes on the back cover of 7 Day Weekend are downright sad ("We had a stretch of good luck, which rapidly turned into bad . . ."); the music fortunately is more self-assured and dignified. Produced variously by the totally dissimilar James Mtume, Chris Tsangarides and Mike Howlett, there is scant sonic continuity, but that causes overall little damage.

Dissatisfied with their musical progress, the Comsats retrenched, switched labels (Island signed them on the advice of singer Robert Palmer) and totally abandoned their four-year synth-pop experiment. Chasing Shadows picks up where Fiction left off (in fact, the group has called it their fourth LP), with the return of thudding drums, booming bass and echo guitar, while mixing in some of the poppier melodies of the better tracks on Land and 7 Day Weekend. If not nearly as impressive as the early LPs, it's still a strong record with a few choice cuts, the best being "Under the Influence."

Finally tiring of the name game, Comsat Angels became Dream Command in '89. Unfortunately, the first album released under this new moniker is something of a dud. While the band's songwriting touch is still evident on "Venus Hunter," "Reach for Me," "Whirlwind" and "Phantom Power," the record is drowned in glossy production, a soul-sapping sound unheard even during the group's mid-'80s work. [jy/jr]

CONCRETE BLONDE

Concrete Blonde (IRS) 1987 ●

Free (IRS) 1989 ●

Bloodletting (IRS) 1990 ♠

DREAM 6

Dream 6 EP (Happy Hermit) 1983

Earle and Jim Mankey were, respectively, the original guitarist and bassist in Halfnelson/Sparks. When the band's other pair of brothers left for England without them, Earle wasted no time in becoming a well-known record producer. It took Jim a lot longer to re-enter the spotlight, but Concrete Blonde proved, at least commercially, to be worth the wait.

Jim's collaboration with singer/bassist Johnette Napolitano began in Dream 6, whose six-song 12-inch EP (co-produced by Earle) is an intriguing, unassuming item. Using the same organizational chart as the Police, Dream 6 draws on various styles, offering little personality besides the vocals, which are plain but pleasant.

Replacing drummer Micheal Murphy with Harry Rushakoff, Dream 6 became Concrete Blonde and released a terrible album that sounds like half-finished demos no one with ears would give a second listen. Napolitano's untrained voice is remarkably unattractive (especially when she tries too hard to ape Chrissie Hynde); the guitar work (Mankey and Napolitano) imitates everyone from Mark Knopfler to Andy Summers on duff songs that thrust along with neither focus nor flair. Even George Harrison's "Beware of Darkness" is left for dead in a pointless cover version.

Expanding to a quartet, Concrete Blonde—well on its way to becoming Napolitano's showcase—made the better-sounding Free, a loud, textured rock record with clunky drumming and occasionally overzealous singing. The weak material seems to spring from a late-'60s ex-hippie sensibility, an impression that isn't discouraged by the Phil Lynott cover ("It's Only Money"), the 1970 Leon Russell quote reproduced on the inner sleeve or the run-off grooves' yippie exhortations. The two songs that stand out are the sweet and catchy "Happy Birthday" and the grave stylistic miscalculation of "Roses Grow," a bizarre, inept stab at rap.

The third incarnation of Concrete Blonde finds Napolitano (now taking sole songwriting credit) and Mankey joined only by ex-Roxy Music drummer Paul Thompson. Erstwhile metal producer Chris Tsangarides makes a tentative attempt to move the group towards mainstream rock on Bloodletting, roughing up and punching up the sound a bit, adding instrumental and vocal layers without appreciably raising the band's volume. But the songs—almost all of which are about a recently failed relationship—haven't got the melodic content to hold the charge. The closest this record comes to Top 40 power is "Joey," a Heart-like ballad that rewrites "Love Hurts" with some really heinous lyrics. [i]

See also Sparks.

CONCRETE BULLETPROOF INVISIBLE

See Doll by Doll.

CONFLICT

Live at the Centro Iberico EP (nr/Xntrix) 1982
(nr/Mortarhate) 1984

It's Time to See Who's Who (nr/Corpus Christi) 1983
To a Nation of Animal Lovers EP (nr/Corpus Christi) 1983

The Serenade Is Dead EP (nr/Mortarhate) 1984

Increase the Pressure (nr/Mortarhate) 1984

The Ungovernable Force (nr/Mortarhate) 1986

Only Stupid Bastards Help EMI (nr/New Army) 1986

Turning Rebellion into Money (Mortarhate-Rough Trade)
1987

The Final Conflict (nr/Mortarhate) 1989

Standard Issue 82-87 (nr/Mortarhate) 1989

Against All Odds (nr/Mortarhate) 1989

I'm not sure what to think about the music of a band that informs me that "three members are vegetarians" and then rattles on the one—Paco—who isn't. The sleeve of the second album by these Crass-family Anglo-anarchists (Steve Ignorant, who became, along with mainman Colin Jerwood, one of Conflict's three simultaneous lead vocalists, was a founding member of Crass) also notes that the band "still wear articles of leather" but they've gotten down to "just boots," which "they will continue to wear until they are useless" but "will not buy more." I certainly respect people with a highly developed and self-disciplined political consciousness, but I can't shake the feeling that a record album should do more than announce how deep the musicians' commitment runs. In the real/rock world, only the young and the gullible expect their favorite bands to abide by lofty personal standards.

That aside, Conflict (not to be confused with an Arizona band of the same name which recorded for Placebo) is a pretty good political punk band, powered by fire and intelligence. It's Time to See Who's Who has incredibly ornate artwork and songs about media, Vietnam, vegetarianism (Smiths fans should note Conflict's "Meat Means Murder" here) and related issues. Increase the Pressure is a more proletarian production with black and white artwork; the LP itself is half-studio (dynamic) and half-live (raucous). This time out, the prominent issue illustrated on the graphics is Save the Seals; songs attack cruise missiles, the music press, the police, etc. with undiminished zeal and venom.

The Ungovernable Force, a self-descriptive slogan Conflict has repeated on subsequent releases, uses news reports, riot noises and spoken-word ingredients (as well as a musical quote from "Anarchy in the UK") in its relentless attack on Thatcher's England and its equally stubborn support of the Animal Liberation Front. Blistering.

The double-live Turning Rebellion into Money was recorded in April 1987 at a London show known as the "Gathering of the 5,000"; the back cover enumerates the progressive organizations sharing—as per the title's promise—the proceeds. The 32 artless punk tunes, a veritable best-of-Conflict collection, bark out with righteous guitar-and-sax rage at every topic imaginable, from specific events to assorted socio-economic-political issues. Only Stupid Bastards Help EMI is another live record.

Muddy sound and a horn player are the two distinguishing characteristics of The Final Conflict, a well-played but poorly recorded ten-track collection that looks inward, offering lyrics about the band: "I Heard a Rumour" repeats absurd gossip about Conflict's integrity, replying "Drop it/forget it/you've got it fucking wrong." (The Final Conflict cassette is backed with The Ungovernable Force.)

In mid-'89, Conflict issued two simultaneous albums. Standard Issue is an annotated compilation of album tracks and rare singles, including "Conflict," from the group's 1982 debut, and three powerful mid-tempo tracks from The Serenade Is Dead, a 1984 EP that actually reached the British pop charts. (The Standard Issue cassette is backed with Increase the Pressure) One side of the other record, Against All Odds, is given over to the extended titular piece, which begins with a chilling machine-guns-and-choir introduction and then continues into familiar speed-guitar raunch, only to turn quiet and slow halfway through. The remainder of the album is equally unpredictable, with somewhat more accessible songs that have actual melodies, electronic keyboards and sound effects. [i]

CONNELLS

Darker Days (Black Park) 1986 (Black Park-TVT) 1987 •

Boylan Heights (TVT) 1987 •

Fun & Games (TVT) 1989 •

One Simple Word (TVT) 1990 •

This North Carolina combo, led by guitarist/songwriter Mike Connell and his bassist brother David, possesses a fragile, vaguely Celtic melodic sense that nicely complements the introspective lyrics, making for music that combines the best impulses of Southern guitar jangle and the sensitive singer-songwriter tradition.

Darker Days broods a bit too intently, and suffers from Doug MacMillan's awkward, affected vocals. The band sounds too inexperienced to properly execute their sophisticated songwriting and arranging ideas, but enough obvious talent shines through to make the album a standout in the new-Southern-pop sweepstakes.

The Mitch Easter-produced Boylan Heights is altogether more graceful, as the band has matured into a distinctive enough unit to do justice to Michael's yearning collegiate considerations of love, war and alienation. MacMillan's vocals are likewise substantially more effective, lending emotional authority to swirling folk-rockers like "Scotty's Lament" and "Try," as well as fragile specters like "Pawns" and "Choose a Side."

On Fun & Games, producer Gary Smith gives the band a slightly harder-edged sound, to the benefit of such Mike Connell compositions as "Something to Say," "Upside Down" and "Hey Wow," whose intermittent lyrical preciousness is mitigated by their melodic invention. Five tunes written and sung by guitarist George Huntley, while stylistically compatible with the rest of the group's material, are much less satisfying.

England's Hugh Jones, who took over the production reins on One Simple Word, is apparently the arbiter the Connells have always needed, as this is the band's tightest, catchiest and least wimpy effort to date. The guitars ring out more distinctively than ever. Mac-Millan's singing is more confident, and the best songs—"Stone Cold Yesterday," "Get a Gun," the title track—are the strongest that the group has recorded. Even Huntley's contributions ("The Joke" and "What Do You Want?") are superior. [hd]

CHRIS CONNELLY

See Revolting Cocks.

CONTORTIONS

See James Chance.

CONTROLLED BLEEDING

Wall of China Love Letter EP (Souptime) 1979
Knees and Bones (Swed. Psychout) 1983
Body Samples (Ger. Dossier) 1984
Between Tides (Swed. Multimood) 1985
Head Crack (nr/Sterile) 1986
Curd (Ger. Dossier) 1986
Core (Subterranean) 1987
Songs from the Drain (Ger. Dossier) 1988
Music from the Scourging Ground (Bel. Play It Again Sam) 1988
Songs from the Grinding Wall EP (Wax Trax!) 1989 •
Songs from the Ashes (C'est la Mort) 1989 ◊
Les Nouvelles Mistiques de Chambre (Bel. Sub Rosa) 1989
Trudge (Wax Trax!) 1990 •
Controlled Bleeding [CD] (nr/Kunst = Kapital) 1989 •
Hog Floor (Subterranean) 1991 •

JOINED AT THE HEAD

Joined at the Head EP (Wax Trax!) 1990

One of the earliest and most prolific industrial noise bands, Controlled Bleeding—generally a trio led by multi-instrumentalist/singer Paul Lemos, who also teaches high school English—first existed in Boston in the mid-'70s but was reconvened in the New York City suburb of Massapequa, Long Island and began releasing cassettes of remarkable audio brutality around the turn of the decade. (The debut 7-inch, by an otherwise unrecorded incarnation of Controlled Bleeding, is in an entirely different vein; there's also a 1979 live-at-CBGB album by Body Sink, which was another early version of the band.) Since Knees and Bones (generally described as abrasive, aggressive and amateurish), Lemos has never looked back.

He has, however, looked sideways a few times. After several LPs of unmitigated aggression, the group began (around Between Tides) to explore quieter forms of atmosphere; by the point of their first domestic LP, the nearly vocal-less Core, the trio (Lemos, drummer Joe Papa and keyboardist Chris Moriarty) had developed into a sophisticated and intriguingly accessible outfit, capable of mixing semi-classical and semi-jazzy instrumentals with sepulchral pseudo-operatics and driving rock dynamism.

Despite this positive new direction, Controlled Bleeding didn't lose its taste for industrial noise, as demonstrated by "Crack the Body," the first of four Songs from the Grinding Wall. But that's only one facet of the EP, a mixed platter of considerable stylistic depth.

Leaving behind Core's ambient expeditions, Trudge is nonetheless diverse and extraordinarily entertaining, with substantial melodies and arrangements that are strong but rarely hyper-intense. The album covers a lot of ground: except for the typical profanity-laced lyrics about killing women and crushing lives (high school English, huh?), "Crimes of the Body" is perfectly delightful dancefloor techno-rock with a dramatic bridge. "The Fodder Song," previously issued as a 12-inch single, is a piledriver with growly vocals; "Healing Time" could be the soundtrack of a medieval war movie.

Hog Floor is a five-year retrospective of rarities and unreleased material; the cassette and CD contain three bonus tracks.

Attempting to separate the band's multiple personalities into clear-cut stylistic entities, Lemos and Moriarty launched Joined at the Head, a side project that is strictly for electronic club kids; the four-song EP offers orthodox Wax Trax! horrorshow noise, with distorted lyrics hissed/roared over simple, repetitive rhythm tracks.

Lemos has also assembled several compilations of other bands under the Dry Lungs title and released collaborative albums under other names. [i]

COO COO ROCKIN TIME

See Half Japanese.

COOLIES

dig..? (DB) 1986

Doug (DB) 1988 •

These Atlanta jokesters made an underground splash with dig..?, a collection of goofy Simon & Garfunkel covers (plus a version of Paul Anka's "Having My Baby"). Great concept for a frat-party set; the psychedelic-funk "Scarborough Fair" and surf-instrumental "Mrs. Robinson" would have made chuckle-worthy B-sides, but the idea of devoting an entire LP to such tomfoolery is a product of the same sort of thinking that produced Having Fun with Elvis on Stage.

Amazingly, the Coolies followed the one-joke dig..? with the brilliant Doug, a trenchant "rock opera" about a skinhead who murders a transvestite short-order cook, gets rich by publishing his victim's recipes, falls into paranoia and substance abuse and ends up in the gutter. The sad tale is related through ingenious knock-offs of the Who ("Cook Book"), John Lennon ("Poverty"), the Replacements ("Coke Light Ice"), rap ("Pussy Cook") and metal ("The Last Supper"), and in a comic book—not included with the cassette or CD, alas—designed by Jack Logan, of Pete Buck Comics fame. A quantum leap from its predecessor's one-dimensional silliness, Doug is a work of demented genius. [hd]

JULIAN COPE

World Shut Your Mouth (nr/Mercury) 1984 •

Fried (nr/Mercury) 1984 •

Julian Cope EP (Island) 1986
Saint Julian (Island) 1987 •
Eve's Volcano EP (nr/Island) 1987 •
My Nation Underground (Island) 1988 •
Skellington (nr/CopeCo-Zippo) 1989 •
Droolian (nr/MoFoCo-Zippo) 1990 •
Peggy Suicide (Island) 1991 ◊

Welsh-born Liverpool legend (now resettled in the ancient English town of Tamworth) Julian Cope called a halt to The Teardrop Explodes during 1983 sessions for the band's third album and decided it was time to set off on a solo career instead. Aided by the Teardrops' drummer and a guitarist, Cope took the songs he'd written and finished them as World Shut Your Mouth (which does not contain the song of that title), a highly inventive take on '60s psychedelia. Mainly blending weird sounds with charming pop, his acceptably inelegant voice and period organ playing add substantial personality to the non-nostalgic venture. The humorous and sensitive lyrics may be a touch too sensitive in spots, but Cope's openness and fanciful streak undercut any semblance of pretentiousness.

The title and sleeve photos (he's pictured on all fours, nude, under a huge tortoise shell) of Fried suggest Cope's Syd Barrett-like mental state at the time. This flaky collection is energetic and less stylized than the first; rocking forthrightness, intuitive musicianship and a strong backing quartet keep it from drifting away on disoriented meanderings like "Bill Drummond Said," "Laughing Boy" and "O King of Chaos." A fine, disturbing and bewildering document of a man on the edge.

The confident stomp of "World Shut Your Mouth," a brilliant 1986 British hit first issued in the US on the waters-testing Julian Cope EP and the following year included as the centerpiece of the triumphant Saint Julian album, proudly announced Cope's recovery and return to action. The rip-roaring eponymous EP adds two originals and brilliant covers of Pere Ubu ("Non Alignment Pact") and the 13th Floor Elevators ("I've Got Levitation"). Saint Julian, produced by Ed Stasium, proceeds from there, a loud and melodic collection of uniformly delectable tunes that reflect Cope's idiosyncratic personality and imagination.

My Nation Underground follows in the same vein as Saint Julian, with Cope sounding more confident and dynamic than ever, striking a brilliant balance between his dual personae as serious artiste and preening pop star. The album opens with an ingeniously apocalyptic reading of the Vogues' 1966 "5 O'Clock World" (intercut with the old Petula Clark hit "I Know a Place"). The originals are equally effective, examining various pet themes, most notably Cope's ongoing artist-as-con-man obsession.

Finally released as an authorized bootleg years after its recording (right after Fried), the mostly acoustic Skellington is a primal-scream folk record: twelve short, primitive and sporadically fascinating demoguality ditties. Basically a footnote for devoted fans, but an enjoyable and revealing one.

An equally far cry from Cope's usual well-crafted studio output is the mysterious Droolian, on which Cope's name does not actually appear. Walking the thin line between demystification and pretension that's inspired much of his work, the artist—with spare instrumental backing this time—messes around on thirteen songs with varying degrees of seriousness. In its own casual way, Droolian is nearly as compelling as Cope's official releases, with the addition of a mischievous sense of experimentalism.

The epic double-length Peggy Suicide brings all of Cope's charmingly artful eccentricities to bear on an over-the-top cavalcade that, while deeply uncommercial, amounts to a twisted artistic triumph, a passionate meditation on sanity and ecology. [1/hd]

See also The Teardrop Explodes.

STEWART COPELAND

Rumble Fish (A&M) 1983
The Rhythmattest (A&M) 1985 •
The Equalizer & Other Cliff Hangers (IRS No Speak) 1988 •

KLARK KENT

Music Madness from the Kinetic Kid (Krypton-IRS) 1980

ANIMAL LOGIC

Animal Logic (IRS) 1989 •
II (IRS) 1991 ◊

RAY LEMA

Nangadeef (Mango) 1989 •
Gaia (Mango) 1991 •

Though possessing competence on all the necessary instruments, not to mention a homely yet winning boy-next-doorish voice, Police drummer Stewart Copeland—in his first solo turn, a one-off in the guise of Welsh looney Klark Kent—turns in less a DIY showcase than a mildly amusing show of self-indulgence, pressed on ten inches of green vinyl in a K-shaped jacket, no less! There are plums to be found in the tongue-in-cheek pop-punk of "Don't Care" and a clever Zappaesque instrumental, "Theme for Kinetic Ritual," but the other six tracks are merely variations on those two styles.

Three years later, with the Police nearing an end, Copeland launched a career in film and TV soundtracks by writing, producing and playing (except horns and strings) the music for Francis Coppola's Rumble Fish. The atmospheric instrumentals downplay drums; some are strongly enough structured that they could support lyrics. "Don't Box Me In," an actual song co-written and vocalized by ex-Wall of Voodooer Stan Ridgway, is easily the album's highlight.

Copeland's second solo record is the soundtrack to an African safari video. Described on the sleeve as "a curious blend of musical snatches from Tanzania, Kenya, Burundi, Zaire, the Congo and Buckinghamshire," The Rhythmattest is variously a rock album with Africanisms layered on and a rock interpretation (or imitation) thereof. The blurry line between what is genuine and what Copeland has made of whole Anglo-American cloth is disturbing, to say the least, and there's obviously real African music where this dubious rock star contraption came from. Still, the invigorating record sounds lovely, especially thanks to his collaborator, Zairean vocalist Ray Lema. (Nangadeef, the veteran's subsequent American solo debut, offers an uneasy, occasionally attractive commercial blend of soukous, jazz, pop and computerized dance-funk.)

The Equalizer, another one-man-orchestra instrumental outing, collects Copeland music done for the titular TV show, along with unrelated but harmonious new compositions. Favoring keyboards (seemingly piano and organ; the sketchy credits indicate reliance on a Fairlight synthesizer) and strong rhythms, Copeland's technically impressive work here occasionally recalls some of Keith Emerson's lighter crypto-classical moments.

Copeland's next long-term project was Animal Logic, an ill-conceived sophisto-rock trio with singer/songwriter Deborah Holland and master bassist Stanley Clarke. On Animal Logic, the superstar rhythm section (which actually doesn't blend very well: Copeland is far more suited to work with a hacker like his old bandmate Sting than an overachiever like Clarke) takes an accomplished back seat to Holland, guest guitarist Michael Thompson and jazzy guests. A strange and uneasy blend of instrumental excellence and creative mediocrity.

See also Police.

[jg/i]

COP SHOOT COP

Headkick Facsimile EP (Jap. Supernatural Organization) 1988

Consumer Revolt (Circuit) 1990

Calculatingly deconstructing rock'n'roll in a manner spiritually akin to Pussy Galore (whose Jon Spencer briefly played metal percussion in the band Shithaus with Cop's Tod A.), if sonically opposite (CSC uses two basses and no guitar), Cop Shoot Cop shares the same taste for indulging in pain, filth, disillusion and discontent. Unfortunately, that stance reduces their otherwise potent strain of subversive diversion to a cliché of sorts. Rarely do they achieve the serrated poetry of decadence skirted most prominently these days by Nick Cave and Henry Rollins (after Burroughs and Bukowski), more often settling for a showoff revelry of attitude easily pegged as Little Black.

Consisting partly of ex-members of NYC sub-legends the Undead, Black Snakes and Dig Dat Hole, Cop Shoot Cop's wall-of-noise sampling, odd stuttered timings and belligerent anti-structures illustrate a conceptual ambition underscored by such psychotic psychedelic sound collages as "Disconnected 666," somewhat less structurally/sonically intricate than Pere Ubu's "Sentimental Journey" but drawn from the same dark core of industrial paranoia. Harking back in some ways to the days of New York no wave, Cop Shoot Cop are currently three toes idiot, seven toes savant—an improvement over their debut EP's ratio of five to five.

[ab]

TOM CORA

See Skeleton Crew.

CORE

See Chris and Cosey.

HUGH CORNWELL

See Stranglers.

CORPSE GRINDERS

The Legend of the Corpse Grinders (Fr. Fan Club) 1983
Valley of Fear (Fr. New Rose) 1984

A trivial footnote to New York's new wave underground, the Corpse Grinders were a useless hard rock group formed in 1977 by ex-Brats guitarist Rick Rivets and ex-Dolls bassist Artie Kane (who didn't stay for much of the Grinders' year-long existence). The original quartet's few recordings—which amount to badly dated sub-Dolls R&B-punk with impressively stupid lyrics—were posthumously compiled on The Legend, joining 1983 tracks by the reincarnated group.

The all-new Valley of Fear finds Rivets joining his Johnny Thunders-style guitar work and Bob Casper's ivory-tinkling in a diverse assortment of originals and a pair of credibly played Stones covers. Although much of the album is given over to boppy vintage rock'n'roll and acoustic ballads, the title track breaks away for lightweight goth with a hooky chorus. [i]

CORVAIRS

See Certain General.

COSEY FANNI TUTTI

See Chris and Cosey.

ELVIS COSTELLO

My Aim Is True (Columbia) 1977 •
New Amsterdam EP (nr/F-Beat) 1980
Taking Liberties (Columbia) 1980 •
Spike (Warner Bros.) 1989 •
Veronica EP (nr/Warner Bros.) 1989 •
Baby Plays Around EP (nr/Warner Bros.) 1989 •
Mighty Like a Rose (Warner Bros.) 1991 ♠

ELVIS COSTELLO AND THE ATTRACTIONS

This Year's Model (Columbia) 1978 •
Armed Forces (Columbia) 1979 •
Get Happy!! (Columbia) 1980 •
Ten Bloody Marys & Ten How's Your Fathers (nr/F-Beat) 1980 (nr/Demon) 1984 •
Trust (Columbia) 1981 •
Almost Blue (Columbia) 1981 •
Imperial Bedroom (Columbia) 1982 •
Punch the Clock (Columbia) 1983 •
Goodbye Cruel World (Columbia) 1984 •
The Best of Elvis Costello and the Attractions (Columbia) 1985 •
The Man: The Best of Elvis Costello (nr/Telstar) 1985 (nr/Demon) 1987 •
Elvis Costello EP (nr/Stiff) 1985
Blood & Chocolate (Columbia) 1986 •
Girls + £ ÷ Girls = $ & Girls (nr/Demon) 1989 (Columbia) 1990 •

THE COSTELLO SHOW

King of America (Columbia) 1986 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Out of Our Idiot (nr/Demon) 1987 •
The Courier (Virgin Movie Music) 1988 •

ATTRACTIONS

Mad About the Wrong Boy (nr/F-Beat) 1980 (nr/Demon) 1984

Elvis Costello has become the King Kong of contemporary music, looming so large over everything that admirers and detractors alike feel compelled to take note of his most trivial actions. A remarkable performer with a cutting voice, he's charted a consistently fascinating course in an intensely productive career and shows no sign of fatigue. He's arguably the most significant individual creative voice to emerge in rock'n'roll since Bob Dylan, and definitely one of pop music's most unforgettable characters.

My Aim Is True quickly established Elvis as an angry young man armed with cleverly worded insults and taut melodies. Although the backing (by American band Clover, sans future star Huey Lewis, the group's harmonica player) lacks his intensity, the bespectacled one's passion comes through full force. Many of the songs are already standards: "Watching the Detectives," a sizzling, disorienting excursion into reggae (not included on the original UK version of the LP); "Alison," a searing ballad, and "Less Than Zero," Elvis' first single and a wry attack on one of his preferred targets, fascism. The overall effect is that of an updated Buddy Holly, neurotic and tormented by sexual insecurity. For more information, consult "Miracle Man" and "No Dancing."

This Year's Model improves significantly on Costello's stunning debut by winding the music uncomfortably tight. Elvis gained confidence from the addition of an outstanding permanent backing band: Bruce Thomas on bass, Pete Thomas (no relation) on drums and Steve Nieve, whose piano and organ, rather than Elvis' guitar, generally fill in melodies. The album finds Costello's anger and insecurity grown harsh and nasty. The surging "No Action," "Pump It Up" (something of a rewrite on Dylan's "Subterranean Homesick Blues") and "Lipstick Vogue" bristle with ingeniously stated, hard-rocking vitriol. "Radio Radio" (not on the UK edition) became Costello's unofficial theme song, a daring and snotty attack on the powers that rule the airwaves.

Costello avoids sneering himself into a dead end on Armed Forces, with the help of producer Nick Lowe. The prettier, less demanding and more varied sound still allows him freedom of expression. The lyrically potent "Oliver's Army" borrows from Abba's pop lushness; "Accidents Will Happen" mixes a beautiful melody with a driving arrangement; Lowe's "(What's So Funny 'Bout) Peace, Love and Understanding" offers an unironic, unexpected and agitated plea for tolerance. Armed Forces was the "nicest" of Costello's first three LPs.

Get Happy!! marks the beginning of Elvis' concerted stylistic fiddling and his first serious attempt to shift the emphasis to the music and away from the overpowering persona. The watchword here is simplicity, with 20 short songs and borrowings from such soul greats as Booker T & the M.G.'s and Sam & Dave, whose "I Can't Stand Up for Falling Down" gets disheveled but earnest treatment. Other highlights include "Motel Matches," an early flirtation with Nashville country; the moving "King Horse"; and a rip-snorting version of the Merseybeats' "I Stand Accused." By lessening the intensity somewhat, Elvis comes up with a most personable LP. (The three non-LP tracks on the New Amsterdam 7-inch, billed to Costello alone and also available as a picture disc, later appeared on Ten Bloody Marys.)

Reflecting Costello's prolific nature, Taking Liberties collects an amazing twenty previously non-LP odds and ends in wildly divergent styles. (The UK counterpart, Ten Bloody Marys & Ten How's Your Fathers, is altogether different, part of a consistent plan to enforce alternate international releases. Originally issued only on cassette, it appeared on vinyl four years later and subsequently on CD.) Despite a few dull entries, there's plenty of remarkable stuff. The classic "My Funny Valentine" is a harbinger of Imperial Bedroom, "Talking in the Dark" gaily recalls "Penny Lane"; "Stranger in the House," dating from the period of This Year's Model, masterfully reflects his growing obsession with country music. Chaotic and marvelous.

Trust exhibits new self-confidence, blending some of the polish of Armed Forces with the straightforward delivery of This Year's Model. Though few tracks stand out individually, the LP packs a powerful, coherent punch. "Clubland" is an impassioned lament while "Lovers Walk" overlays a Bo Diddleyish motif with Latin piano and heaps of anxiety. On the fierce "From a Whisper to a Scream," Costello engages in a spirited dialogue with Squeeze's Glenn Tilbrook, reaffirming his presence in the real world.

Elvis was bound to goof eventually, and Almost Blue is a dud. This album of country cover versions, recorded in Nashville with veteran producer Billy Sherrill (Tammy Wynette, George Jones, just about everyone else), is surprisingly clumsy in light of Costello's previously demonstrated ability to come up with fine originals in the same genre. Curiously, he succumbs to the urge to over-sing instead of finesse the vocals, a mistake his obvious model, the late Gram Parsons, never made.

Imperial Bedroom is a resounding return to form, and indicates Costello's interest in becoming a classic tunesmith in the Tin Pan Alley tradition instead of just a venerated rocker. This is certainly his most subdued LP, with songs such as "Beyond Belief," "Kid About It" and "Town Cryer" more suitable to a cocktail lounge torch singer than a garage band. How time flies.

Punch the Clock is yet another tour de force. Produced by Madress architects Clive Langer and Alan Winstanley, the disc continues in the pop vein of Imperial Bedroom, but with considerably more attention paid to mixing up styles and textures. Hence you get politically motivated ballads like the brooding "Pills and Soap" and the ethereal, desperately angry "Shipbuilding" (co-written with Clive Langer), as well as swaggering raveups ("The World and His Wife"), classic Costello angst ("Charm School") and much more. Best of all is the lilting "Everyday I Write the Book," a winning tune worthy of being sung by Aretha Franklin (and the closest Costello's come to a US hit single).

By contrast, Goodbye Cruel World seems awkward and forced. The playing's overly baroque, the melodies mild and too much of Costello's edge is sublimated by the Langer/Winstanley cushion of sound. (On "The Only Flame in Town," for instance, they bathe a fine song in swanky saxophones and duet vocals by Daryl Hall, watering down Costello's individual power.) However, "Sour Milk-Cow Blues" has a cranky charm, "The Deportees Club" has old-fashioned Attractions' bite and "Peace in Our Time" brilliantly captures the chilling madness of nuclear politics. Otherwise, Costello sounds like he needs a vacation.

Perhaps the nineteen-song Best Of (the similarly extensive UK counterpart of which—initially offered via TV advertising on a discount label but later reissued by Costello's real record company—has only a dozen tracks in common) did the trick. Or maybe it was the decision to shelve the Attractions temporarily. Then again, maybe his burgeoning romance with (soon-to-be-ex-)Pogue bassist Cait O'Riordan was the reason.

In any case, the extraordinary King of America—billed as the Costello Show and recorded with coproducer T-Bone Burnett and a clutch of top American sessioners, including sidemen from another Elvis—returned him to masterful top form. MacManus (as he then wished to be known) banged together fifteen intelligent, mature creations in a variety of idioms, many recalling styles he had already tried and abandoned (C&W, R&B, nightclub sophistication) and some (folk, blues) not so familiar. The sound often recalls the Band in its unique blending of country and urban traditions; elsewhere, it's latter-day Elvis Presley, played by his own musicians. As articulate and clear-headed as he's ever been, MacManus dissects several major themes—the British perception of America, alcoholism, his own stardom—each from more than one vantage point. Not only do all these forays work individually, the songs fit together with surprising ease. In addition, he's never sung better, with such subtlety and control. A career highlight.

Released before the same calendar year's end, Blood & Chocolate brought the Attractions back into the picture, joined on a few tunes by guest vocalist O'Riordan. (More nomenclatural absurdity: while the name Elvis Costello appears on the front cover, the composer of all but one track is MacManus and the vocalist/guitarist is named Napoleon Dynamite.) Although the LP has no characteristic sound, overall theme or discernible organizational logic, the individual songs are quietly excellent—simply played gems performed with restrained enthusiasm, if little color. Eschewing any new stylistic statement, Elvis the unnameable ambles back into personal commentary with subdued eloquence. A bit underwhelming at first, but substantial nonetheless.

The 1987 Out of Our Idiot crypto-compilation serves up a brace of singles, B-sides, outtakes and side projects employing enough different monikers to justify the record's "various artists" billing. Besides assorted undertakings as Costello variations, the hodgepodge of good-to-incredible tracks credit such ensembles as Napoleon Dynamite & the Royal Guard, the Emotional Toothpaste and the Coward Brothers. Besides alternate versions of "Blue Chair" and "American Without Tears," and familiar-to-fans collaborations with Jimmy Cliff, T-Bone Burnett and Nick Lowe, the record's highlight is "So Young," an infectious bluebeat bouncer borrowed from Jo Jo Zep and evidently omitted from Armed Forces. The 21-track CD adds another E.C. & the Attractions outtake (1982's "Little Goody Two Shoes") as well as cuts by the MacManus Gang (from the Straight to Hell soundtrack) and the Imposter. (In another piece of film work, Costello—as Declan MacManus—scored, produced and played music for The Courier, in which O'Riordan has a starring role. His dramatic instrumental efforts occupy nearly a side of the soundtrack album.)

Costello bills himself as The Beloved Entertainer—stuffed and mounted—on the front cover of Spike, his first new album since Blood & Chocolate. Following King of America's blueprint, each of the fifteen tracks employs a different assortment of players, from the Dirty Dozen Brass Band (on "Deep Dark Truthful Mirror" and "Stalin Malone") to Paul McCartney (on the tender and touching "Veronica," one of two songs he and Costello co-wrote). Regardless of which sort of tasteful arrangement (Irish folk, acoustic pop, jazz, rock, jagged noise) or star collaborator (Chrissie Hynde, Christy Moore, Benmont Tench) he chooses for any individual song, however, the record is a testament to Costello's complete mastery. For most of the record, Costello is in rare form, conversing with the deity ("God's Comic"), ripping the lynch-mob mentality in a fact-based tale ("Let Him Dangle"), sending a withering blast at Margaret Thatcher ("Tramp the Dirt Down") and wallowing in romantic regrets ("Baby Plays Around," whose joint marital authorship lends a reassuring fictional sense to its troubled lyrics). For concerned Attractions fans, Pete Thomas puts in an appearance on one solitary song.

The two EPs taken from Spike contain four songs each. On 12-inch and CD-3, Veronica adds the album's CD bonus track ("Coal-Train Robberies"), a B-side (a cover of Clint Ballard's "You're No Good," on which E.C. plays kalimba and drum machine) and "The Room Nobody Lives In." Likewise, Baby Plays Around has "Almost Blue" (from Imperial Bedroom), "My Funny Valentine" (originally on the flip of "Oliver's Army") and "Point of No Return."

Taking discographical perversity to new extremes, the Girls + £ ÷ Girls = $ & Girls compilation (covering 1976-'86) was originally issued in the UK in four formats: as a 31-track double album, two individual cassettes with a combined 51 songs, a double-CD with 47 songs and a digital audio tape containing 31 songs. To compound the confusion, the different configurations aren't simply related: not all of the CD tracks, for example, appear on the cassettes. The American release skipped DAT and vinyl and stuck the cassettes together in a cardboard longbox, but preserved the alternate tape and CD programs. Building on a common—albeit not entirely logical—core of 36 familiar songs (selected by the artist, who also provided amusing liner notes), the tape and CDs offer two different views of the Costello catalogue, neither of them entirely fair or complete.

Despite his evident stylistic and intellectual ambition, Costello reveals some creative fatigue on the mildly disappointing Mighty Like a Rose, a collection of colorful stylistic threads woven into a frequently familiar fabric. One reason the catchy "Other Side of Summer" is so immediately likable is that it's strikingly self-derivative, recalling the Attractions' era right down to the vintage Steve Nieve piano and organ quotes. Except for a few subtle instrumental elements, the memorable "How to Be Dumb"—a ripping attack apparently aimed at Bruce Thomas for his tacky play-and-tell "novel," The Big Wheel—could very easily have been on This Year's Model. The raucous massed-drum "Hurry Down Doomsday (The Bugs Are Taking Over)" owes a more oblique debt to that same album. (And check the bass thrusters at the end of "Harpies Bizarre.") A remarkable simulation of the Band ("Playboy to a Man") is oddly effective; other highlights include the boppy "George and Her Rival" and the solemn piano-with-horns ballad, "Sweet Pear."

On their own in 1980, the Attractions sound more like Nick Lowe than their then-boss. The sixteen snappily executed ditties on Mad About the Wrong Boy feature bright, breezy surfaces and very little depth, which isn't so bad in light of the cheerful atmosphere. The title cut, "La-La-La-La Loved You" and others offer agreeably washed-out harmonies reminiscent of UK flower-power pop of the late-'60s. Decent. [jy/i]

See also Steve Nieve.

COUCH FLAMBEAU

Curiosity Rocks [tape] (no label) 1982

Mammal Insect Marriage (Ludwig Van Ear) 1983

The Day the Music Died (It's Only a Record) 1985

Rock with Your Sock On [tape] (It's Only a Record) 1987

Models EP (It's Only a Record) 1987

Ghostride (It's Only a Record) 1989

Education is a dangerous thing, and these Wisconsin smartboys have been in school far too long for public safety. Armed with Jay Tiller's rapier wit, dadaist visions, squawky voice and ear-busting guitar work, the group's records are hysterically funny exercises in eminently enjoyable noise-to-go.

The lyrics of Mammal Insect Marriage's opening track, "ADM 12," immediately make it clear you've checked into a real hellhouse of collegiate weasel weirdness: "I saw a car accident near the zoo. There were mangled bodies all over. I felt sick, but I found a finger. I still have it in my freezer." Recorded in seven fun-filled hours, Mammal Insect Marriage has thirteen additional warped and funny B-movie haikus. Brilliant and extraordinary.

The tape-only Rock with Your Sock On combines the entire contents of Curiosity Rocks (recorded and mixed in a single eight-hour session just months after the band's formation) and Mammal Insect Marriage. The former contains sketchy versions of "ADM 12" and "I Don't Want to Be an Eddie," as well as "Mobile Home," "Satan's School for Girls" and "Curtains for You," all of which resurfaced on Couch's third album.

The Day the Music Died gets off to a slow start with the instrumental title track, but revs into high gear with "We'll Go Through the Windshield Together," a romantic tale of vehicular homicide (complete with sound effects) told from the victim's perspective. Other highlights include the pessimistic "Life's Rough," a feedback-filled mantra that recasts an old 7-Up slogan ("You Hate It, It Hates You") and bassist Neil Socol's "Curtains for You," in which the protagonist makes a major educational discovery: "I hate Shakespeare/He's too hard to read/I wish he were dead/Oh, he is?"

Continuing as a duo (Socol and Tiller, who doubles on drums), Couch made the five-song Models EP, going easy on the radical sounds. Instead, the pointed cultural sarcasm of "Models," "White Boy Blues" and "Vipers" are laid over relatively easygoing music that paradoxically undercuts the lyrics by failing to match their absurdity. The one exception is "Song with a Message," a wimpy dance groove underlying a random series of messages left on Socol's answering machine.

Beneath the unpredictable lyrics and Tiller's brain-spasm vocals, Ghostride—a full sixteen-song dose—cranks up equally unpredictable (although tight and well-played) rock noise that flirts with metal. In Couch's world, nothing is ever perfect: "We're Not So Smart" describes the joy and heartbreak of being an underground rock group (the related "Scene Report" dismembers punk-rock poseurs), while "Think Twice" is equally realistic about the hazards of dating and "Summer Vacation" is, predictably, a complete disaster. Great! [i]

COUNT BISHOPS

Speedball EP (nr/Chiswick) 1975

Good Gear (Fr. Dynamite) 1977 (Fr. Lolita) 1984

The Count Bishops (nr/Chiswick) 1977 •

BISHOPS

Bishops Live (nr/Chiswick) 1978

Cross Cuts (nr/Chiswick) 1979

Although they never attained major popularity, hits or even a US release, the Count Bishops played a small but important role in the development of British punk. First, they provided a stylistic and chronological link between the raw R&B revivalism of Dr. Feelgood and early demi-punk flailings by Eddie and the Hot Rods. Second, the four-song 7-inch Speedball was the debut release by the first independent new wave label in England, Chiswick (which preceded Stiff by a matter of months).

The group's only recording with American (Brooklyn, no less) singer Mike Spencer (replaced by the gravel-throated Dave Tice soon after, for reasons that are audibly obvious), Speedball clearly defines the group's style. Combining rock-a-boogie raveups of mid-'60s-style material with mid-'70s chops and energy, the Bishops re-cover the same R&B and rock'n'roll songs favored by the first wave of British beat groups (Stones, Yardbirds, Kinks) and American punks (Standells, Strangeloves). The idea was obviously to recapture the rawness and spontaneity of that period and, although the concept is both limited and doomed almost by definition, Good Gear (probably drawn from live-in-the-studio demos) is so raunchy and spirited that it succeeds, even if it is essentially a copy of a copy.

Trouble set in with the first real album, The Count Bishops. How do you convey a style that works best after a few beers and really offers nothing new to vinyl? Even with two solid guitarists and a fine rhythm section, the Bishops were never quite able to resolve the problem. Though it sounds nasty as hell on Bishops Live (issued on both 12-inch and 10-inch vinyl), Tice's growl is hard to take over two sides of a recording made in the rarefied atmosphere of the studio. And where most bands use cover versions to fill space, the filler here is the Bishops' self-penned stuff. With rare exception, their originals are sub-Status Quo boogie, which just about destroys most of Cross Cuts. Following the death of guitarist Zenon de Fleur in an auto accident just prior to the release of Cross Cuts, the Bishops called it a day. [ds]

WAYNE COUNTY AND THE ELECTRIC CHAIRS

The Electric Chairs (nr/Safari) 1978
Storm the Gates of Heaven (nr/Safari) 1979
Things Your Mother Never Told You (nr/Safari) 1979
The Best of Jayne/Wayne County and the Electric Chairs (nr/Safari) 1982

JAYNE COUNTY

Rock 'n' Roll Resurrection (nr/Safari) 1981
Private Oyster (nr/Revolver) 1986
Amerikan Cleopatra (nr/Konnexion) 1987
Betty Grable's Legs! EP (nr/Jungle) 1989

Georgia-born transsexual County was a (male) fixture on the budding New York club scene in the early '70s, stretching the limits of vulgarity and outrage on stages alongside the New York Dolls. After writing and recording the theme song for the legendary venue Max's Kansas City, County migrated to England, just as the London punk scene was getting underway. Having been commercially unappreciated at home, County found a sympathetic British label and recorded a series of albums, none of which were ever released Stateside.

High camp posturing and foul-mouthed (but not unfunny) lyrics form the basis of County's work. Along with a skillful trio playing routine rock, The Electric Chairs finds County singing (with more enthusiasm than talent) touching ballads ("Eddie & Sheena," a minor hit single recounting a love story between a teddy boy and a punk), catty putdowns ("Bad in Bed") and trotting out the old narcissistic scene celebration of "Max's Kansas City."

Storm the Gates of Heaven has a great cover, was pressed on sickly colored lavender vinyl and showcases two new guitarists hired to replace one left behind. The songs are less contrived and more interesting; the beginnings of a band sound can be discerned. All in all, a vast improvement that even includes a smoking version of "I Had Too Much to Dream Last Night." Flying Lizard David Cunningham produced the subsequent Things Your Mother Never Told You with the same lineup, but came up with a flat-sounding, dull LP.

A New Year's Eve gig in Toronto yielded the live Rock'n'Roll Resurrection. Fronting a largely new band, Jayne (following the surgery) belts out a shambling selection of non-hits, including such gutter faves as "Cream in My Jeans" and "F . . . Off." Pretty dire. A nicely packaged best-of collection (pressed on white vinyl) finally brought together everything you'd ever want to hear by Wayne or Jayne.

In the mid-'80s, County made the self-produced Private Oyster (reissued as Amerikan Cleopatra). Proof that some things really never change, Jayne sounds exactly the same as ever on Betty Grable's Legs!: five songs recorded with an old-style rock trio. County still has the identical voice (and singing ability), songs like "Paranoia Paradise" are the same trashy junk she/he's always written and the hapless band sounds totally unaware that the '80s have come and gone. [i]

COWBOY JUNKIES

Whites off Earth Now!! (Can. Latent) 1986 (RCA) 1991 •
The Trinity Session (RCA) 1988 •
The Caution Horses (RCA) 1990 •

How slow can you go? No doubt that's what the unsuspecting listener will ask after a close encounter with Canada's Cowboy Junkies. Like folk-rockers on Quaaludes, this elegant Toronto quartet specializes in hushed, atmospheric tunes delivered at a dirge-like tempo. Whether you consider this an annoying gimmick or an ingenious creative strategy, there's no denying it's original.

Whites off Earth Now!! finds the quartet in the process of forging an identity. While Margo Timmins already practices floating vocals (see Sandy Denny for roots), the overall result is more boring than evocative. The LP is dominated by covers, including Springsteen's "State Trooper" and Robert Johnson's "Me and the Devil."

The ultimate three a.m. listening experience, The Trinity Session constitutes a quantum leap forward. Recorded on a single day in a Toronto church, this shimmering triumph has the impact of a deep, haunting dream. Timmins imitates a heavenly spirit on potent originals like "Misguided Angel" and (on the CD) "Blue Moon Revisited (Song for Elvis)," while more than doing justice to Lou Reed's "Sweet Jane" and Patsy Cline's "Walking After Midnight." A goosebump special.

Following the commercial as well as artistic success of The Trinity Session, the Junkies wisely concluded they'd already carried the catatonic approach to a logical conclusion. They became somewhat more aggressive emotionally and musically on The Caution Horses—with partial success. On one of the best tracks, "Sun Comes Up, It's Tuesday Morning," Timmins bitterly dismisses a lover to a snappy country tempo; the acid monologues "Cause Cheap Is How I Feel" and "Where Are You Tonight?" sustain the bad, riveting vibes. Elsewhere, the band is less impressive, spoiling the mood with erratic material and a leaden cover of Neil Young's "Powderfinger." [jy]

COWS

Taint Pluribus Taint Unum (Treehouse) 1987
Daddy Has a Tail! (Amphetamine Reptile) 1989
Effete and Impudent Snobs (Amphetamine Reptile) 1990 •

Peacetika (Amphetamine Reptile) 1991

Minneapolis' Cows don't fool around when it comes to raising a holy ruckus. Besides throwing off a frenzied psycho-guitar roar, the quartet takes a viciously crude view of the world (enunciated in a tuneless shout by Shannon Selberg, who also provides the Cows with the surprising sound of trombone and bugle), all mitigated by a wry undercurrent of humor. The badly recorded Taint Pluribus Taint Unum is an elementary introduction, a noisy storm of electrified steel wool that rushes through roughly cut songs like "Mother (I Love That Bitch)" and the instrumental "Summertime Bone" (Eddie Cochran sent to trombone hell) with more enthusiasm than effect.

A second ancient rock classic turns up on Daddy Has a Tail!, only the Cows' version of Johnny Kidd's "Shakin' All Over" has different lyrics: "Yo girl, I love it when you make my asshole bleed . . . I'm shakin' in my colon." Ha ha ha. Overall, this horrible exercise in juvenile dementia makes the Cows' first record sound like Dark Side of the Moon. With production that couldn't be worse if the studio had been underwater, the murky rumble of Thor Eisenstrager's overdriven guitar is an all-consuming swamp that muffles the entire effort.

Except for a mix that makes the distorted vocals nearly subliminal at times, Effete and Impudent Snobs shreds speakers with far more clarity and focus. Using trebly shards of layered guitar and thrusting fuzz bass, the Cows rock out snorting chunks of unhinged grunge with lyrics; some of the tracks ("Big Mickey," "Nancy Boy Cocaine Whore Blues," "Cartoon Corral") even coalesce into vague song shape. If you've ever been tempted to find out what it would be like to stick your head in a blender, don't bother—the Cows have already done it for you. [1]

CRACKERS

See Beat Rodeo.

CRAMPS

Gravest Hits EP (Illegal) 1979 •
Songs the Lord Taught Us (Illegal-IRS) 1980 •
Psychedelic Jungle (IRS) 1981 •
... Off the Bone (nr/Illegal) 1983 •
Smell of Female EP (Enigma) 1983 + 1990 (Dutch East Wax) 1991 •
Bad Music for Bad People (IRS) 1984 •
A Date with Elvis (nr/Big Beat) 1986 (Enigma) 1990 (Dutch East Wax) 1991 •
Stay Sick! (Enigma) 1990 (Dutch East Wax) 1991 •
All Women Are Bad EP (nr/Enigma) 1990 •

Predating and never quite participating in the early '80s rockabilly revival, the Cramps used that genre's primal sound as a jumping-off point for a uniquely weird pastiche of rock'n'roll, psychedelia and a monster movie/junk food/swamp-creature aesthetic. Led by uninhibited vocalist Lux Interior (Erick Purkhiser) and guitarist Poison Ivy Rorschach (Kirsty Wallace), the band had its roots in Cleveland but was actually formed in New York. After two self-released 45s in '77, the Cramps crashed the 12-inch barrier with Gravest Hits, reissuing all four songs from those records plus a fifth track from the same time, all produced by Alex Chilton.

Like a seance or voodoo session, the Cramps' music needs time to work its spell, and so the albums make a better introduction. Songs the Lord Taught Us is a delirious invocation to the demons behind rock'n'roll. Besides horror-comic originals like "TV Set," "The Mad Daddy" and "Zombie Dance," the band overhauls classics like "Tear It Up" and "Strychnine" to emphasize their Dionysian inheritance. A minimal approach—no bass, rudimentary drumming, Lux's monotonous vocals—underlines the music's incantatory power. (The 1989 CD adds four alternate versions of tracks from the LP and an otherwise unavailable original entitled "Twist and Shout.")

As a result of slower tempos, Psychedelic Jungle is not quite as intense; still, it contains prime Cramps psychobilly ("Goo Goo Muck," "Voodoo Idol," "Can't Find My Mind") as well as related phenomena ("The Crusher," "Rockin Bones"). The CD adds Gravest Hits.

On Smell of Female, a six-song live EP recorded at New York's Peppermint Lounge, the group's maniacal sense of humor comes through loud and clear on well-recorded mung like "Thee Most Exalted Potentate of Love" and "I Ain't Nuthin' but a Gorehound." The reissues (red vinyl on one label; CD and cassette on another) add three non-LP tracks, including alternate versions of "Beautiful Gardens" (originally on Psychedelic Jungle) and "She Said."

Amid rotating guitarists and disputes with their record label, the Cramps then temporarily submerged. IRS issued Bad Music for Bad People, a kiss-off collection of singles sides (both LP and non-LP) and other obscure gems, like the hilariously offensive "She Said." Meanwhile, the Cramps' foreign cult following was temporarily sated by Off the Bone, a fifteen-track compilation including all of Gravest Hits and the contents of Bad Music for Bad People, with two earlier album cuts replacing the latter's "TV Set" and "Uranium Rock."

The Cramps returned to the living dead in late '85 with a wonderfully smarmy single ("Can Your Pussy Do the Dog?"), followed by an all-new sex-crazed studio album, A Date with Elvis, dedicated to Ricky Nelson. A bit more professional (Ivy breaks tradition and plays bass as well as guitar) and less stylized than usual, but as happily crazed as ever, Elvis contemplates such Interior/Ivy designs as "What's Inside a Girl?," "(Hot Pool of) Womanneed" and "The Hot Pearl Snatch." (Although initially unreleased in the Cramps' homeland, A Date with Elvis was subsequently issued, with four bonus tracks collected from European B-sides, on CD/cassette by Enigma and colored vinyl by Dutch East.)

With fulltime bassist Candy Del Mar joining the lineup and Ivy in the producer's chair, Stay Sick! maintains the Cramps' high low-culture standards with colorful enthusiasm. While "Bikini Girls with Machine Guns," "All Women Are Bad" and "Journey to the Center of a Girl" all demonstrate Lux's ongoing bewildered bedeviling by the opposite sex, "Mama Oo Pow Pow" takes a good swig from the cultural trashcan that originally fueled the Cramps' wild-eyed vision. (The artistic reasons for covering "Shortnin' Bread" and "Muleskinner Blues" are, however, completely open to debate.) The CD adds a nifty version of Carl Perkins' "Her Love Rubbed Off." The 12-inch of "All Women Are Bad" contains three additional B-music tracks: "King of the Drapes," "Teenage Rage" and "High School Hellcats." [si/i]

See also Beasts of Bourbon, Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds, Electric Eels, Gun Club, Pagans, Veil, Zantees.

CRASH VEGAS

Red Earth (Risque Disque-Atlantic) 1989 •

This Toronto quartet (including Daniel Lanois' bass-playing sister, Jocelyn, once of Martha and the Muffins) plays a lovely brand of spartan atmospheric folk-rock that falls somewhere between the Cowboy Junkies and 10,000 Maniacs. On Red Earth, what's not played seems nearly as important as what is; the ample sonic space makes the sound feel big without a lot being played. It's a perfect setting for Michelle McAdorey's supple voice to shine, and it does. A cover of Buffalo

Springfield's "Down to the Wire" provides another good point of reference. Blue Rodeo's Greg Keelor (a former member of Crash Vegas) co-wrote nearly half the cuts. [ds]

See also Blue Rodeo.

CRASS

The Feeding of the Five Thousand, The Second Sitting (nr/Crass) 1978 •

Stations of the Cross (nr/Crass) 1979 •

Penis Envy (Crass) 1981 •

Christ—The Album (nr/Crass) 1982 •

Yes Sir, I Will. (nr/Crass) 1983 •

10 Notes on a Summer's Day (nr/Crass) 1986 •

Best Before (nr/Crass) 1986 •

PENNY RIMBAUD & EVE LIBERTINE

Acts of Love (nr/Crass) 1985

Lords of English punk's extreme left, the Essex-based Crass didn't just sing about anarchy in the UK—they did something about it. Formed in 1977 as a band much in the Sex Pistols/Sham 69 image, they saw themselves as a more righteous alternative to those bands, and soon evolved into an anarchist commune, a broadsheet publisher, several record labels and an information service. Crass espouse all the proper causes—anti-war, anti-nuclear, feminism, flushing out hypocrisy in organized religion—with blood-curdling vehemence on their own records and on the numerous singles and albums by likeminded bands they've released (or inspired). The group was frequently embroiled in legal battles with various government agencies but, in an era largely typified by apathy, Crass stands as a remarkably successful model of dead-serious political commitment in rock.

The Feeding of the Five Thousand is a reissue of the group's debut EP on Small Wonder. Fitting eighteen songs on a 12-inch 45, it is typical of Crass' shock tactics: the first cut is a sneering recitation of "Asylum," an irreverent dismissal of Christ as anybody's lord over droning guitar feedback. The rest is mostly raw faster-louder punk spiked with protest demagoguery, four-letter words and harsh Cockney ranting.

Stations of the Cross is even harder going—three studio sides and a live side containing a full seventeen numbers. Almost in spite of the oppressive, relentless punk bluster, Crass often wrote anthemic songs (like the ironic "Banned from the Roxy" and "Do They Owe Us a Living?" from Five Thousand), but over the course of this album (all of the studio material was cut in one day!), they blur into white noise. "White Punks on Hope" forcefully summarizes their scorn of punk as fashion; the Sham 69 parody, "Hurry Up Garry," is a wicked snipe at the music press.

Better production and more expansive arrangements distinguish Penis Envy. Drawing an ugly parallel between rampant sexism and man's rape of nature and society, the album bounces vibrantly from the strident bash of the ironic rape fantasy "Bata Motel" to the LP's unsettling church-organ coda.

Christ—The Album is quintessential Crass. This boxed two-record studio/live set comes with a 28-page booklet packed with emotionally charged fine print about the revolution and one man who died for it. Musically, it builds on the daring of Penis Envy, going so far as to include a mock string arrangement in "Reality Whitewash" without tempering the band's brute punk rage. The severity of their sound and the belligerent politics can be predictable, even petulant, but Christ—The Album proves the band's courage and conviction.

Yes Sir, I Will. is a bitter response to the Falklands War, a series of musical speeches covering the conflict and indicting Prime Minister Thatcher for the deaths. Although most of the backing is typically abrasive, a couple of passages are quite beautiful.

Drummer Penny Rimbaud and singer Eve Libertine put together Acts of Love, an album of romantic poetry, "in an attempt to demonstrate that the source of our anger was love rather than hate." After making a final album, 10 Notes on a Summer's Day, Crass retired from performing and recording (keeping the Crass label in business, and reissuing the band's catalogue on CD) to continue the struggle in more personal ways. The 20-song Best Before compilation begins with 1977's "Do They Owe Us a Living?" and runs through the band's singles before ending with that same song performed in 1984 at Crass' final gig. [df/i]

CRAWDADDYS

Crawdaddy Express (Vox) 1979

Still Steamin' (Ger. Line) 1980

Here 'Tis! (Vox) 1987

Mystic Crawdads (Ger. Wired-Line) 1989 •

This San Diego band delivers a 1979 record straight from 1964. Taking their name from the London R&B club where the Stones and Yardbirds began, the Crawdaddys copy those and other appropriate groups of the period (like the Pretty Things). Unfortunately, the group's sincerity and enthusiasm don't excuse lame renditions of various R&B and rock'n'roll classics, blues obscurities and two originals from the same mold; Crawdaddy Express may be a well-intentioned tribute, but it amounts to little more than nostalgia-mongering.

Over the course of the next five years, the Crawdaddys recorded one unreleased album and went through a batch of lineups (leaving drummer Dan McLain free to become Country Dick Montana and co-found the Beat Farmers). Three years after the band called it quits, the lost second LP (vintage 1984) was finally released, expanded with five previous outtakes. Offering a fair reflection of the group's early '60s eclecticism, Here 'Tis!—a sharper and more convincing LP than Express—relies heavily on singer Ron Silva's originals, but also covers Chuck Berry, Leiber/Stoller, soul legends and British Invasion stars. Mystic Crawdads is a compilation of early material. [wk/i]

See also Beat Farmers.

CRAWLSPACE

Silent Invisible Conversation EP (Aus. Grown Up Wrong) 1989

In the Gospel Zone (Bona Fide) 1989

Solitude Crawspace Head EP (Sympathy for the Record Industry) 1990

Mid-'70s fanzine guru (and former Gizmo) Eddie Flowers leads this loosely constructed Los Angeles aggregation through a variety of blaring, but somehow pacific improv-rock styles, all of which reinforce the band's implicit motto: "The chemicals go in before the name goes on." Silent Invisible Conversation takes its name from a line in the Can song ("Little Star of Bethlehem") that fills Side Two and hints that the three adrenal, Germs-ish tracks on the flip were but a stepping stone to the harder-to-shake stuff.

In the Gospel Zone peddles a much slower-working, but ultimately more lethal, brew. Ricocheting in white-water-rapids-of-consciousness fashion, between beatnik nihilism, full-leather-jacket biker hate-mongering and White Panther positivism, Flowers' rants reproduce the spirit of utter drug-rock derangement like no one since the (NYC) Godz. A public-service announcement for some, a call to arms for others. Solitude narrows the focus a bit, with the rambling "Solitude Smokestack Head" overtly advocating the use of cannabis (simultaneously discouraging it via the unmistakable evidence of brainpan burnout). The almost zen-like "Ocean = You," however, is actually quite beautiful. [dss]

See also Gizmos.

CRAZY BACKWARDS ALPHABET

See Henry Kaiser.

CRAZYHEAD

Desert Orchid (Food-EMI) 1988 •

Taking its cues from grebo mongrels Zodiac Mind-warp and the Love Reaction, this cheeky Leicester quintet—whose personnel employ such sobriquets as Porkbeast and Reverb—gleefully gooses heavy metal with a poppy irreverence that is absolutely infectious. Bolstered by two superb singles ("Time Has Taken Its Toll on You" and "What Gives You the Idea That You're So Amazing Baby?"), Desert Orchid is a fine debut that somehow manages to sound both fresh and classic. Producer Mark Freegard (who's worked with New Model Army) lends the requisite punch to songs like "In the Sun," "Down on You (Dragon City)" and a rambunctious cover of the Sonics' "Have Love Will Travel." [db]

CRAZY PINK REVOLVERS

See Spear of Destiny.

CREATIVE TECHNOLOGY INSTITUTE

See Chris and Cosey.

CREATURES

Wild Things EP (nr/Polydor) 1981

Feast (nr/Wonderland-Polydor) 1983

Boomerang (Geffen) 1989 •

Soon after the Banshees released Juju, Siouxsie Sioux and drummer Budgie, calling themselves the Creatures, collaborated on a five-song double-45 of voice-and-percussion pieces, including a nasty reworking of the Troggs classic "Wild Thing." The full-length Feast, however, is a dilettantish excursion into the only previously untested flavor-of-the-month: Hawaiian. The instrumentation incorporates marimba, while an ethnic choir adds bogus authenticity to the messy proceedings. Even worse, the lyrics are bad acid visions written by people evidently unfamiliar with their subject matter. The Creatures did make one great 1983 single, "Right Now" (covering an old Mel Tormé tune), which is not on the LP.

Six years passed before the duo issued another album. Recorded in Spain, Boomerang (thankfully) makes no attempt at contributing to the musical heritage of any world culture. Augmented by horns, harmonicas, synths, etc., the Creatures produce (along with Mike Hedges) a varied collection of fine, if not earth-shaking work. Each of the fourteen tracks has something different to offer, from the Euro-electronics of "Pluto Drive" to the bluesy "Killing Time." Budgie also gets to practice his marimba, steel drums and the like on several cuts. A much better idea the second time around.

See also Siouxsie and the Banshees. [rmp/dgs]

HELIOS CREED

See Chrome.

CREEPERS

See Marc Riley with the Creepers.

CREEPS

Enjoy the Creeps (Swed. Tracks on Wax) 1986 (Can.

Star) 1987

Now Dig This! (Ger. WEA) 1988 •

Blue Tomato (Atlantic) 1990 •

When organist Hans Ingemansson relinquished songwriting and lead vocals to guitarist Robert Jelinek in the mid-'80s, picking up a new rhythm section in the bargain, Sweden's premier modern beat-psych combo offhandedly changed names from the Backdoor Men to the Creeps and made a big splash in the small pond of garage punk devotees with the wickedly soulful and melodic Enjoy. The album includes several covers and numerous copped riffs, all interpolated into a powerful attack blatantly imitative of the Lyres while concurrently possessed of more range and greater attention to mood mechanics.

Several years later, the follow-up jettisoned virtually all the dirt and raunch in favor of an early funk bias to match the heavy soul pump and attitude now permeating the music. Still a terrific songwriter and strong vocalist, Jelinek rallied his backdoor troops in a high energy romp through the underside of the pop and "black" charts circa mid-to-late-'60s, albeit with '80s urgency and production values. An interesting development, but Now Dig This! isn't as good as the first LP, substituting style for rage, budget for exuberance.

Blue Tomato, the quartet's first LP with an outside producer, only exacerbates the problem, offering up '80s dancefloor style to further modify the gutsy, gusty organ-pumped brew for mall-goers in designer tags. Quite possibly the best Stax-oriented club band operating today, the Creeps are still a great loss in terms of compromised potential. [ab]

MARSHALL CRENSHAW

Marshall Crenshaw (Warner Bros.) 1982 •
Field Day (Warner Bros.) 1983
Our Town EP (nr/Warner Bros.) 1984
Downtown (Warner Bros.) 1985
The Distance Between EP (nr/Warner Bros.) 1986
Mary Jean & 9 Others (Warner Bros.) 1987 •
Good Evening (Warner Bros.) 1989 •
Life's Too Short (Paradox/MCA) 1991 ☐

Detroit native Crenshaw spent some time in a road company of Bealemania before moving (with drummer brother Robert) to New York, where his own songs became local new wave faves. Following an independent 12-inch with a major-label recording contract, Crenshaw made a debut album of sparkling, tuneful gems that are instantly memorable and remain every bit as enjoyable after a decade. Clean and crisp, free of frills and pretense, Marshall Crenshaw's scrubbed pop style makes the record sound like a test of studio audio quality. Notwithstanding the reasonable Buddy Holly comparisons (renewed when Crenshaw portrayed Buddy in 1987's La Bamba), songs like "Someday, Someway," "She Can't Dance," "Cynical Girl" and "Brand New Lover" make it clear that Crenshaw is an enormously talented original.

Field Day, rather overproduced by Steve Lillywhite, has a wallowing drum sound, lots of sonic holes and a few of Crenshaw's best songs. Although not an artistic success in toto, joyous numbers like "Whenever You're on My Mind," "All I Know Right Now" and "Our Town" mine Crenshaw's shuffle-pop resources effectively. Mindful of the criticism Field Day engendered, "Our Town" and two other tracks from it were given a simplifying remix by John Luongo, attached to a live oldie ("Little Sister") and issued as an impressive second-chance 12-inch in the UK.

With production assistance by T-Bone Burnett and a large bunch of savvy sidemen in place of his usual band, Crenshaw filled Downtown with extraordinarily memorable and intelligent pop songs in a number of musical veins. Easily the finest, most mature of his first three albums, Downtown swings with easy confidence through heartbreakers ("The Distance Between," "Like a Vague Memory"), lovmakers ("Yvonne," "Terrifying Love"), country laments and blues struts. It also features an incisive reading of Ben Vaughn's hauntingly wistful "I'm Sorry (But So Is Brenda Lee)." (The Distance Between 12-inch pairs two Downtown tracks with two songs from the first LP.)

Continuing on his onward and upward path, Crenshaw returned to the small-combo format, cutting the brilliant, often beautiful Mary Jean with two sidemen—brother/drummer Robert Crenshaw and longtime Joe Jackson bassist Graham Maby. Don Dixon's simple but full production sparkles, with just the right echo on the snare and spring in the strings. Even when shockingly manic guitar solos erupt in "Til That Moment" and "This Street," they work for the songs, not against them. Guest crooners (including Tom Teeley and Marti Jones) pitch in to enrich winsome, well-crafted tunes—"Wild Abandon"; "Mary Jean"; a thoughtfully reflective Crenshaw/Dixon composition, "Calling Out for Love (At Crying Time)"; Peter Case's atmospheric

(and metaphoric) ode to the guitar, "Steel Strings"—with exquisite harmonies that wordlessly convey both the ecstasy and misery of romance.

The frustration and anxiety caused by long-term commercial neglect haunts the lightweight Good Evening, a disappointing creative sidestep that smacks of compromise and a lack of inspiration (not to mention over-use of whiny slide guitar). Other than well-chosen and delightfully performed songs by Richard Thompson ("Valerie"), Bobby Fuller ("Let Her Dance"), John Hiatt ("Someplace Where Love Can't Find Me") and the Isley Brothers ("Live It Up"), the pickings are slim: two so-so Crenshaw songs, three fair collaborations and an unwelcome contribution by the dreaded Diane Warren.

Nicely produced by Ed Stasium, Life's Too Short—almost all originals—is a lightweight but consistent pleasure. No instant classics (although the dopey-enough-to-be-real romanticism of "Fantastic Planet of Love" comes close), but even the lesser tracks are just too much fun to pick on. Marshall (mostly with bassist Fernando Saunders and drummer Kenny Aronoff) stretches nearly every cut a bit longer than necessary (no track's less than four minutes, which used to be his upper limit), but the songs—including one by Chris Knox of the Tall Dwarfs—are strong enough not to sound attenuated.

Extracurricular activities: Crenshaw compiled and annotated Hillbilly Music . . . Thank God! and produced a 1989 album for Nashville's rocking Thieves.

[i/jg]

CRENT

See Celibate Rifles.

CRIME AND THE CITY SOLUTION

The Dangling Man EP (nr/Mute) 1985
Just South of Heaven EP (nr/Mute) 1985
Room of Lights (nr/Mute) 1986 •
Shine (Mute-Restless) 1988 •
The Bride Ship (Mute-Restless) 1989 •
Paradise Discotheque (Mute-Elektra) 1990 ☐

Although singer Simon Bonney had led a series of groups under this odd name, it was only in the wake of the Birthday Party—when guitarist Rowland S. Howard, drummer Mick Harvey and Howard's bass-playing brother Harry joined—that the Australian band gained international access and recognition.

The Dangling Man, a four-track disc, picks up where the Party ended—a slow, stripped-down, blues-flavored horror show. (Considering that Cave did much the same on his first solo recordings, one wonders if the band didn't break up out of boredom rather than any serious musical differences.) None of the songs really take off, but it does show promise.

With ex-Swell Map drummer Epic Soundtracks in the lineup, Harvey returned to his old BP role as multi-instrumentalist. Just South of Heaven is cleaner and more powerful: all six tracks work well. Howard's guitar is as strong as ever, but piano and organ figure just as prominently. A hauntingly beautiful record by a well-integrated band.

Room of Lights, Crime's first full-length LP, features a noticeably heavier and thicker sound. With the predominance of slow tempos, Bonney's somewhat unattractive voice and the overly serious lyrics, supplied mostly by violinist Bronwyn Adams, the disc is laboriously endurance-defying. The band seems to be somewhat stunted developmentally: these eight songs are merely variations on previously introduced themes.

Following Room of Lights and an appearance in Wim Wenders' Wings of Desire, Soundtracks and the Howards split to form These Immortal Souls; Bonney, Harvey and Adams resettled in Berlin where they recruited three local musicians (including Einstürzende Neubauten guitarist Alexander Hacke) and recorded Shine. With Adams' violin prominent throughout, the overall tone is surprisingly much lighter and livelier; "Fray So Slow" could almost be old Simple Minds. Several other tracks move along nicely and melodically. Listeners who mistakenly thought Howard had been the band's major creative force will be caught off-guard by this impressive disc.

After Shine, Crime and the City Solution took a decidedly artsy turn, but in an odd throwback direction. Although not as outrageously dramatic as, say, Doctors of Madness nor as elegant as post-Eno Roxy Music, those comparisons are not completely off base. The enhanced melodic sense is supplemented by Bonney's much improved vocals (or is it vice versa?) on the baroque Bride Ship. While the embellished, fussy production utilizes an intriguing sonic palette, tempos plod along incessantly and the end result is just a distant, detached-sounding band.

Paradise Discotheque is an improvement, with much more warmth and blood in the sound. Several cuts, especially the folksy "I Have the Gun," are produced simply enough to stand on their own merits. On the down side, the band reveals a penchant for multi-part suite-songs—"The Last Dictator" needs four segments and an entire side to get its point across. [dgs]

See also Birthday Party, These Immortal Souls.

CRIMONY

See D.C.3.

CRIPPLED PILGRIMS

Head Down—Hand Out EP (Fountain of Youth) 1984

Under Water (Fountain of Youth) 1985

Most of the music on this Maryland quartet's EP and album is fairly undistinguished folk- and garage-rock—sketchy songs roughly produced on two guitars, bass and drums. Lead singer Jay Moglia seems to be trying to convey something about how people underestimate themselves and settle for less than they're worth, and about the difficulty of honest self-expression. But either he gets too angry and the songs turn into shapeless inchoate rants, or he turns dreamy and blathers on without really saying much. Then, for a few beautiful and perfect moments on Under Water, he gets it right. In "Down Here," "Undone" and "Pretend Not to Care," the guitar chords slip softly by like leaves in a pool, and Moglia's tentative, unsure voice finds its balance of desperation and desire. Rough, sullen and unyielding, with a kick drum pounding like an accelerated heartbeat, "Oblivious and Numb" is his most beautiful and perfect moment of all. [kss]

CRISPY AMBULANCE

Live on a Hot August Night EP (Bel. Factory Benelux) 1981

The Plateau Phase (Bel. Factory Benelux) 1982

Open Gates of Fire [tape] (nr/CSBT) 1983

The Blue & Yellow of the Yacht Club [tape] (nr/CSBT) 1983

Sexus EP (Bel. Factory Benelux) 1984 •

Fin (Bel. Les Temps Modernes) 1984 + 1990 •

Crispy Ambulance [CD] (Bel. Factory Benelux) 1990 •

Manchester's Crispy Ambulance was one of the indie-label explosion bands that formed in the late '70s after such ensembles as Throbbing Gristle and the abrasively punky Mekons helped dig a niche for music that wasn't oriented to the rock'n'roll lifestyle or chart success. Despite a reputation as part of the city's gloom movement—thanks to an early association with Factory, a Joy Division gig at which Crispy Ambulance singer/synthesist Alan Hemsall subbed for Ian Curtis, and one studio foray with producer Martin Hannett—on the misleadingly titled Live on a Hot August Night 12-inch: two JD wannabe studio tracks that run a combined total of 22 minutes, including droning ambient passages—the quartet could actually be quite perky, even danceable, as on the posthumously issued "Sexus" single.

More soundsters than popsters, Crispy Ambulance at first produced landscapes of timbre and texture featuring canted vocals and sharp-edged guitar; the group later moved on to drawn-out moanings and synthesizer-produced textures mixed with shimmering guitar. At its best, Crispy Ambulance could create deceptively unobtrusive sci-fi scores; at worst, the music is little more than a pretentious sea of echoed din.

Recorded live (with occasionally dodgy sound) at various European shows in 1981 and '82, Fin shows just how active and abrasive the group's experiments with synthesizer and guitar textures could be, and acknowledges its stylistic foundations in a cover of Throbbing Gristle's "United."

Despite absurdly over-echoed percussion, Plateau Phase is pretty and introspective, with engrossing shifts in texture, tempo and tone and enough guts to ballast the gloomy elegance.

When the post-punk/gloom genre ended, so did Crispy Ambulance, closing up shop in late '82. (Although a subsequent incarnation named Ram Ram Kino put out a single on UK Temple.) In 1990, two CDs reissued virtually everything the group ever released (save for the two 1983 cassettes of live material and demos). Crispy Ambulance contains The Plateau Phase and both EPs; the new edition of Fin adds both sides of the band's 1980 debut single and a B-side. [e/i]

CRO-MAGS

The Age of Quarrel (Rock Hotel-Profile) 1986 •

Best Wishes (Profile) 1989 •

Although led by a Hare Krishna devotee, these New York hardcore kings neither jangle finger cymbals nor chant religious mantras on The Age of Quarrel, a blaze of state-of-the-art punk aggro. Vocalist John Joseph (co-lyricist with bassist Harley Flanagan) roars through humanist lyrics about peace, trust, independence and justice as the band keeps up the mid-speed speaker-shredding with two guitarists doing their best to update Ritchie Blackmore's throaty Deep Purple sound. Drummer Mackie regulates the tempo enough to ensure an adequate proportion of mosh parts (generally at the beginning of songs rather than the middle), but often unnerveingly sounds like he's playing an entirely different song from his bandmates.

With varied tempos, extended song lengths, more guitar solos and effectively threatening atmosphere, an overhauled lineup—now featuring Flanagan on vocals (in place of the departed Joseph) and ex-Kraut guitarist Doug Holland sharing the axe duties with Parris Mitchel Mayhew—made an effective stylistic transition from metallic punk to punky metal on Best Wishes. While most of the tightly structured tracks thunder along with little subtlety (except in the lyrics), Flanagan does deliver his devotional sentiments in "The Only One" with dramatic flair. [i]

See also Kraut.

CROSSFIRE CHOIR

Crossfire Choir (Passport) 1986 •
Back to the Wall (Track) 1988

A major American label signed this up-from-Florida New Jersey quartet but never released their album; after the band was dropped, tracks recorded in England with producer Steve Lillywhite were retrieved and issued (along with three subsequent items) as a belated debut. Although the group had built a club reputation for punky outrageousness, this is far more familiar fare: urgent pop/rock with keyboards and a hint of potential pomposity. The music isn't bad, but guitarist J Pounders' grating dramatic warble is more memorable than his songs.

Nicely produced by Ed Stasium, Back to the Wall reduces the group's weaknesses (mainly by cranking up the rhythm guitars and mixing down Pounders' voice), but still doesn't find anything particularly worthwhile in the music. A petulant chorus of "Why can't we be on MTV?" reveals the Choir's problem: more ambition than talent. [i]

CROWDED HOUSE

Crowded House (Capitol) 1986 •
World Where You Live EP (nr/Capitol) 1987 •
Temple of Low Men (Capitol) 1988 •
I Feel Possessed EP (Capitol) 1989 •
Woodface (Capitol) 1991 •

Songwriter/singer/guitarist Neil Finn's post-Split Enz group follows the trend of that band's later albums towards simplification. Despite occasional keyboards (added on disc by Finn and producer Mitchell Froom and onstage by ex-Enzman Eddie Rayner, who co-wrote one of the first LP's songs), the trio's sound is a bit thin. Yet the melodious mix of tunes about dreams and nightmares, aching for love and the aching love causes, does prove enjoyable and affecting, given time; for its modest first impressions, Crowded House gradually developed into a substantial commercial success. (The World

Where You Live EP is four LP tracks plus a non-LP bonus.)

On Temple of Low Men, Froom's growing rapport with the group (and greater ability to integrate his keyboards) yields fuller, more varied musical textures. Ironically, some melodies seem unfinished, or maybe deliberately oblique. So while the album sounds much better, the quality of the best material here still doesn't match the debut's standouts. Finn's painful or ugly stream-of-consciousness fragments contribute to the overall loss-of-innocence feel: "I Feel Possessed" leads off, followed by "Kill Eye" (late-period Beatles from hell) and "Into Temptation"—you get the idea. A pretty dark album from such a seemingly light band. One gem, "Never Stay the Same," however, scintillates with possibilities both good and ill. Richard Thompson provides a guest guitar solo on "Sister Madly."

Rather than just release "I Feel Possessed" as a CD single, Capitol added three Byrds classics faithfully reproduced onstage by Byrdhouse (the band backing Roger McGuinn, get it?). Nice, but for fans only.

Bassist Nick Seymour, who also painted both Crowded House album covers, happens to be the brother of Hunters and Collectors leader Mark Seymour. In late '90, Tim Finn joined his brother's band, and the quartet began working on its third album. [jg]

See also Split Enz.

CRUCIFUCKS

The Crucifucks (Alternative Tentacles) 1985
Wisconsin (Alternative Tentacles) 1987

DOC CORBIN DART

Patricia (Alternative Tentacles) 1990

In pursuit of the ultimately offensive band name, these confrontational Michiganders were so successful that their first album incorporates actual spoken-word comments and run-ins with the law over it. Unfortunately, little else about the record is amusing: rudimentary slow-to-mid-speed punk with a truly obnoxious vocals by Doc Corbin Dart and obvious topical songs like "Hinckley Had a Vision," "Cops for Fertilizer" and "Go Bankrupt and Die."

Eulogizing the cheese state (where it was recorded) on their second LP, the Crucifucks unveil a surprising bit of wit and musical development. Dart still sounds like Pete Shelley's tuneless nerd cousin, but intelligent, politically correct lyrics ("Laws Against Laughing," "The Savior") and well-recorded electric and acoustic guitar raunch ("Concession Stand," "Pig in a Blanket") make Wisconsin commendable to, say, fans of the Dead Kennedys.

Whatever the band might have achieved, Dart's solo album is an altogether darker and more disturbing affair. The simple rock and folk (by Dart and two other multi-instrumentalists) may sound lighter and more appealing, but the lyrics' self-analytic torrent of fear, bitterness and withdrawal turn the album into a harrowing real-life nightmare. Imagine a wobbly ex-Buzzcock singing his emotional problems on a psychiatrist's couch and you'll get a sense of this unsettling exploration into a damaged psyche. That Patricia is both articulate and—dare it be said—oddly entertaining is a testament to Dart's talent and honesty. [ii]

JULEE CRUISE

Floating into the Night (Warner Bros.) 1989 •

In 1985, Iowa native Julie Cruise was a talent scout for soundtrack composer Angelo Badalamenti when he began working with David Lynch on Blue Velvet. She fit the spacey-baby-doll sound the director wanted, and wound up recording "Mysteries of Love"—lyrics by Lynch and music by Badalamenti—for the movie. The song set a format which the three have repeatedly explored: on Cruise's album, her appearances on Twin Peaks, an inane "avant-garde" stage production and home video (Industrial Symphony No. 1) and the Twin Peaks soundtrack LP, which contains three tracks lifted directly from Floating into the Night. (Besides numerous film scores, Badalamenti—who had a minor hit in the '60s as Andy Badale and the Nashville Beer Garden Band—has written songs for George Benson, Patti Austin and others.) Admittedly, it's a supremely seductive sound, marrying walking bass lines to dark, enveloping film noir jazz and swelling strings, with Cruise's ethereal come-hither vocals cooing coolly through it all. As produced by the Lynch/Badalamenti songwriting duo, some of the tracks veer dangerously close to elevator music but others, like "Rockin' Back Inside My Heart," are truly idiosyncratic and contain moments of real drama. [ws]

CRUMBSUCKERS

Life of Dreams (Combat Core) 1986

Beast on My Back (Combat) 1988 •

Life of Dreams is second-rate New York (Long Island) hardcore with a metal crossover edge: the Crumbsuckers have the essential audio elements (speed, volume, chops, croaked vocals) but nothing much on their minds. The LP has one oddity—a discussion of the 1984 Presidential campaign in "Super Tuesday"—but otherwise offers such routine middle-class contemplations as "Live to Work" and "Bullshit Society."

Beast on My Back (aka B.O.M.B.) turns the Crumbsuckers on their heads, stylistically speaking. This time out, armed with a new flight-of-the-bumblebee lead guitarist and high-def production (Randy Burns, remixed by Genya Ravan), they're a speedmetal band with some recalcitrant 'core tendencies. The nine long songs (none under three minutes, two over five) have mosh parts and shouted vocals, but don't all rely on breakneck down-strumming or double-bass foot-pedaling. More impressive than listenable, B.O.M.B. is an exhausting ride to nowhere. [i]

CRUZADOS

Cruzados (Arista) 1985 •

After Dark (Arista) 1987 •

Despite the quartet's impressive non-mainstream pedigree—Tito Larriva and Chalo Quintana were in the Plugz, Steven Hufsteter was involved with various Kim Fowley-related ventures, including the Quick—Cruzados is a rather familiar-sounding melodic rock album with few distinguishing characteristics and no evident Southwest influences. Perhaps it's the fault of producer Rodney Mills, veteran of countless .38 Special albums. Or maybe the work these guys did on film scores or backing Bob Dylan on TV made them too slick. In any case, Cruzados is nothing to get excited about.

Envisioning chart possibilities in the post-Mellencamp world of simple heartland rock, the Cruzados replaced Hufsteter and augmented Mills with four more producers (including Waddy Wachtel) for their second LP. With guest appearances by everyone from the late Paul Butterfield to Pat Benatar to Don Henley, After Dark is a plain but solid effort. (Except for Larriva's "Time for Waiting," which sounds nauseatingly like the Eagles.) [i]

See also Havalinas, Plugz, Quick.

CUCUMBERS

Fresh Cucumbers EP (Fake Doom) 1983

Who Betrays Me ... and Other Happier Songs (Fake Doom) 1985

The Cucumbers (Profile) 1987 •

Charming, original pop from Hoboken, New Jersey. Guitarist Deena Shoshkes' lead vocal on "My Boyfriend" is Brenda Lee magic set to a dB's-like tune; elsewhere, the blend includes more edgy guitar work (by Jon Fried) and less fizzy charm. The other three songs on Fresh sacrifice some catchiness for added complexity, but all are likable.

The half-new quartet's Who Betrays Me is a full album of peppy melodies, thoughtful lyrics, semi-intricate guitar-based arrangements and appealing harmonies by Shoshkes and Fried. The spare "Everything Goes" blends a sultry melody and a fine dual vocal; "Desperation" sounds like an update on the Everly Brothers; "Walking and Talking" mixes and matches rhythms for a kicky B-52's effect; "Want to Talk" grafts on a mild Latin feel for a danceable slice of summer.

Recorded in London with a new bassist in the lineup, The Cucumbers leads off with a new version of "My Boyfriend" and then fails to deliver anything else equal to it. Overall, fancier production reduces the group's amateurish appeal and obscures its quirky personality; smoothed out and spruced up, the entirely presentable songs blur together. There are some acute lyrics, however: "My Town" is a clever ode to 'Boken, while "Shower" makes a cogent observation about men, women and water temperatures. [i]

CUD

When in Rome, Kill Me (nr/Imaginary) 1989 •

Elvis Belt (nr/Imaginary) 1990 •

Leggy Mambo (nr/Imaginary) 1990 •

Dadaistically detached from reality and self-consciously eclectic, Cud matches obscure lyrical wit and simple parodic music on the jukebox-blender longplaying debut. The 21-minute title track of When in Rome, Kill Me is a series of seven dry jokes (the Morrissey tweak of "Only (A Prawn in Whitby)," the quirky-pop "Bibi Couldn't See," the vintage Britbeat of "Push and Shove," the garage psychedelia of "When in Rome, Kill Me Again," etc.) all linked by spoken drama. Elsewhere, the Leeds-area quartet trundles merrily through blistering fuzz-rock ("Van Van Van"), Pink Floyd pop ("Alison Springs") and a careful Dexys imitation ("Wobbly Jelly").

The second LP mostly collects up Cud's unfocused and dull early singles (going all the way back to 1987—wow!) and covers. (Imaginary is the label behind the tribute album fad, and Cud has appeared on its share.) While a previously unissued high-speed interpretation of the Bonzo Dog Band's "Urban Spaceman" is annoying but worth hearing, Elvis Belt (which contains one new number and an early version of When in Rome's "I've Had It with Blondes") is unlikely to attract any new Cud-ettes.

Produced by XTC's Dave Gregory, Leggy Mambo brings Cud's surreality closer to serious accessibility with good playing, clear sound (finally) and less specific musical satire. Unfortunately, left to its own semi-nostalgic stylistic devices, Cud hasn't got enough personality or imagination to sustain an album. Despite a few cool pop tracks (the Buddy Hollyesque "Not Exactly D.L.E.R.C.," the inevitable Madchester spoofs of "Magic" and "Syrup and Sour Grapes"), Leggy Mambo is pointless and dull. [i]

CUDDLY TOYS

See Raped.

CULT

- Dreamtime (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1984 •
- Love (Sire) 1985 •
- Revolution EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1985
- Electric (Beggars Banquet-Sire) 1987 •
- Lil' Devil EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1987 •
- The Manor Sessions EP [CD] (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1988 •
- The Love Mixes EP [CD] (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1989 •
- The Electric Mixes EP [CD] (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1989 •
- Sonic Temple (Beggars Banquet-Sire-Reprise) 1989 •

SOUTHERN DEATH CULT

- The Southern Death Cult (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1983 •

DEATH CULT

- Death Cult EP (nr/Situation Two) 1983 •

RITUAL

- Kangaroo Court EP (nr/Red Flame) 1982

Less is more . . . or the saga of a British band whose fame grew as its name shrunk. The story begins in early '83, as the Southern Death Cult (from Bradford, a northern city near Leeds) has just broken up without releasing an album; various sessions and live takes were, however, compiled for a posthumous LP. As such, The Southern Death Cult paints an inconsistent picture of ominous and dense doom-punks with a serious power supply and few original ideas. The songs aren't much to brag about—drum-dominated drones at various tempos—and the performances, given their mongrel origins, are too muddy to really judge the band.

Singer Ian Astbury then formed Death Cult, which released two 1983 12-inches, one of them a four-songer containing "Brothers Grimm" and "Ghost Dance." (The EP's subsequent CD reissue contains the Death Cult's entire six-song oeuvre.) The following year, with its name finally reduced to just the Cult, the quartet got around to releasing a proper album. Dreamtime, an extremely intense and well-produced (by John Brand) outing, reveals Astbury's true intentions: hip heavy metal. Domineering drums blend with Billy Duffy's layered lead guitar figures and Asibury's drama-drenched vocals on pseudo-poetic songs that oddly connect with the Doors and other bands of the first psychedelic era. Impressive in its clear-headed strength and attractive for its electric sound, Dreamtime is, like a lot of metal, exciting but empty and not a little stupid. (Initial quantities came with a bonus live LP.)

Love also chugs along enthusiastically, awash in Duffy's guitars and Astbury's sweeping vocals. The material—except for the atmospherically powerful and catchy "She Sells Sanctuary"—is pretty naff, with simple chord riffs providing a loud bed for druggy melodies and too much pointless riffing. (A lot of the drive and precision is due to drummer Mark Brzezicki, on loan from Big Country.) The invocation of '60s hard-rock and grunge-punk bands is subtle enough not to be obnoxious, but the Cult's relevance to modern times remains marginal at best. A subsequent EP adds non-LP tracks to Love's "Revolution" (not the Beatles tune); The Love Mixes offers two variations on "She Sells Sanctuary" (including a dub dissection with—get this—baying wolves) and remixes of "Revolution," "Rain" and a track from the previous LP.

In these high concept times, it made perfect sense for the Cult to hook up with that great gazoo of '70s revisionism Rick Rubin, the production svengali behind numerous rap and metal acts, including the Beastie Boys and Slayer. On Electric, Rubin kitted out the Cult with a gargantuan drum sound and a frenetic guitar maelstrom, partially succeeding in having the band mimic AC/DC, although Astbury's vocals occasionally favor Leslie West on steroids, and the opening guitar of "Love Removal Machine" replicates the Stones' "Start Me Up." As sexually gratifying as it is cornball retro-moronic, Electric can lay claim to one of history's worst versions of "Born to Be Wild." Not too surprisingly, the first track, "Wild Flower," is virtually a rewrite of "She Sells Sanctuary." The Lil' Devil EP contains the LP track, two live cuts (including "She Sells Sanctuary") and the previously unreleased "Zap City."

The Cult didn't plan on making Electric with Rubin. After recording a dozen tracks with Steve Brown (the producer of Love), the band decided they didn't like the results and asked Rubin for a remix, which turned into a redo. Left holding an entire alternate version of the record, the Cult used four tunes from it for B-sides and then put five remaining tracks out as The Manor Sessions. For what it's worth, Brown's work is less clearly articulated and focused than Rubin's, but in truth the Cult is the Cult is the Cult. The Electric Mixes completes the collection with extended edits of "Love Removal Machine" and "Wild Flower," another LP track and lumbering radio session takes on "King Contrary Man" and the non-LP "Conquistador."

Fully anointed as major stars in the post-Zeppelin hard-rock universe, the Cult parted ways with Rubin and drummer Les Warner, making the platinum Sonic Temple with a guest skin-beater and ex-Payola Bob Rock as producer. Beginning with a remark borrowed from Pete Townshend (as documented in Monterey Pop), the album is standard-issue Cult: Astbury belows, Duffy squalls and bassist Jamie Stewart makes like John Paul Jones by doubling on keyboards. The closest the album comes to a stylistic groundbreaker—

“Eddie (Ciao Baby),” a pseudo-poetic tribute to Eddie Sedgwick complete with strings and an acoustic guitar intro—is one of the stupidest songs in the Cult’s low-brow compositional closet. Meanwhile, “Soul Asylum,” another idiotically clichéd lyrical display whose labored tempo makes it ideal for accompanying calisthenics, has nothing in common with the group of the same name.

Jamie Stewart, who was in on the formation of Death Cult and stuck with the Cult through 1989, began his musical career as the guitarist in a young Harrow post-punk band called Ritual. Following the 1982 “Mind Disease” 45, Kangaroo Court bears a strong resemblance to Theatre of Hate (a band which, coincidentally and simultaneously, included Billy Duffy for a year), with prominent sax riding over a simple doom drone. Ritual did record a full-length LP (Songs for a Dead King) which, like ToH and U.K. Decay, melded Brit-punk aggro and political/goth aesthetics; the record was never commercially released. While Stewart and drummer Raymond jumped on board the Death Cult train, two other Ritualists hooked up with ex-U.K. Decay guitarist Spon in 1983 to form In Excelsis. [i/gef]

See also U.K. Decay.

CULTURE

- Two Sevens Clash (Lightning) 1978 (Shanachie) 1987 •
- Baldhead Bridge (nr/Magnum Force) 1978 •
- Africa Stand Alone (nr/April) 1978
- Harder Than the Rest (nr/Front Line) 1978
- Cumbolo (nr/Front Line) 1979 (Shanachie) 1988 •
- International Herb (nr/Front Line) 1979
- Vital Selection (Virgin Int'l) 1981
- Lion Rock (Heartbeat) 1982 •
- Culture in Culture (Jam. Blue Track) 1986 (Heartbeat) 1991 •
- Culture at Work (Shanachie) 1986 •
- The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1987
- Nuff Crisis! (Jam. Blue Mountain) 1988 (Shanachie) 1989 •
- Good Things (RAS) 1989 •
- Too Long in Slavery (Front Line) 1989 ◊

Formed in Jamaica in 1976 and comprised of Joseph Hill, Kenneth Dayes and Albert Walker, Culture is one of reggae’s greatest roots harmony trios. Lead singer Hill invokes the passion of a Burning Spear, while the others are reminiscent of the earthen and soulful rootical wails of the Itals. Despite a string of fine albums, Culture is most closely identified with their debut LP, Two Sevens Clash, and its apocalyptic title track. And rightly so: the song, first released in 1977, is a reggae classic, a perfect marriage of Rasta ideology and musicianship that struck a chord in punk England and became an influential scene staple. The music on the LP is smoky and mysterious—the keyboards are mixed way up front—but also rhythmically dynamic, with drummer Sly Dunbar turning in some of his best work. But the center is Hill’s high, wavering voice. In song after song, he conveys his own distinctive blend of conviction and dread. Reissued a decade later, the album is every bit as consistent and compelling.

Besides his Rastafarian faith and African heritage, Hill’s lyrics typically address the oppressed and the suffering. “Crack In New York” (Nuff Crisis!) will make you want to dance because the music is so lively, but if you check the lyrics you really ought to cry. Similarly, the title track of Good Things is a warning to “make good use of good things” because the time will come when we or they won’t be around.

The beauty of Culture is the group’s ability to be contemporary and traditional at the same time. But while adhering to old-time standards and traditions, Culture is very much in the flow of things: Culture in Culture’s “Capture Rasta” acknowledges the popular “Sleng Teng” riddim of the mid-’80s.

Cumbolo is another Culture classic, loaded with the trio’s trademark social commentaries and prophetic, inspirational cantations. Among the highlights: “Natty Dread Naw Run,” a handsome adaption of the folk-music standard “This Train,” “Mind Who You Beg for Help” and the extraordinary title track.

The Peel BBC broadcast material dates from 1982 and includes “Two Sevens Clash” alongside three other tracks. Too Long in Slavery is a compilation of tracks from Harder Than the Rest, International Herb and Cumbolo. [bk/aw]

CULTURE CLUB

- Kissing to Be Clever (Virgin-Epic) 1982 (Virgin) 1990 •
- Colour by Numbers (Virgin-Epic) 1983 (Virgin) 1990 •
- Waking Up with the House on Fire (Virgin-Epic) 1984 (Virgin) 1990 •
- From Luxury to Heartache (Virgin-Epic) 1986 •
- This Time—The First Four Years (Virgin-Epic) 1987 •

For a time England’s biggest pop sensation, ludicrously heralded in America as leaders of a second British Invasion, Culture Club capitalized on Boy George’s outrageous nightlife cross-dressing and aimed-to-shock intelligence to slip their mushy mainstream soul-pop into respectable homes the world over. Phenomenology aside, the foursome never sounded anywhere near as bizarre as they originally appeared; regarding their albums in coldly critical terms reveals them to be nice but meaningless: sophisticated dance pop that is insidiously memorable but utterly disposable.

Kissing to Be Clever has such Club standards as “Do You Really Want to Hurt Me,” a warm reggae pulse supporting the catchy melody, and “I’ll Tumble 4 Ya,” a boppy, upbeat dance number. Spurred by the American success of the former as a single, the US label switched the LP’s track order to highlight it, and later reissued it with a subsequent 45, “Time (Clock of the Heart),” appended.

Dropping the silly “white boy” crypto-sociology that threads through the first album, Colour by Numbers gets right to the business at hand, which is the creation of irresistible pop hits in a variety of molds. And in that regard, the album is a real success, containing as it does the mildly folk-rock-psychedelicized “Karma Chameleon” and “Church of the Poison Mind,” as well as the more soul-oriented “Miss Me Blind” and “Black Money.” Easily the best of the four albums, Colour by Numbers prominently features singer Helen Terry, who provides a powerful foil to George’s smooth crooning.

Riding high on stardom, Culture Club blew their rock credibility and career momentum totally with the ultra-dull Waking Up with the House on Fire.

George's voice is fine and the band—drummer Jon Moss (ex-London), guitarist/keyboardist Roy Hay and bassist Mikey Craig—plays with maximum slickness and sophistication. But the songs are irredeemably awful. From the torpid velveeta of "Mistake No. 3" (apt title, that) to the juvenile stupidity of "The War Song" ("War is stupid . . .") and the inane stop-start mess of "Hello Goodbye," there's no material equal to the early singles. With misguided intentions of achieving political relevance and added MOR acceptance, the album is an unmitigated disaster.

At that point, it seemed likely that the Club was on the verge of splitting up, and the lengthy delay in producing a new album only fueled speculation about the group's future. Nevertheless, the quartet managed to deliver From Luxury to Heartache, which isn't awful at all. Culture Club's new problem is their irrelevance: lacking controversy, a style to call their own or truly catchy songs, the LP offers nothing to hold onto, just a bunch of well-produced (Arif Mardin and Lew Hahn) mild soul/funk disposables. Given that Culture Club had never really changed musically, From Luxury to Heartache underscores the inexplicability of their original reception: it was ever thus.

Billed as "Twelve Worldwide Hits," This Time—The First Four Years consolidates all the essential 45s, plus "Love Is Love" from the Electric Dreams soundtrack. Despite occasionally brittle sound and the obligatory inclusion of dimwitted later material, "Karma Chameleon," "I'll Tumble 4 Ya," "Church of the Poison Mind," "Do You Really Want to Hurt Me" and "Time (Clock of the Heart)" just about covers Culture Club's basics for all but the most devoted aficionados. (The CD adds two cuts.)

George went solo in the wake of the band's long-anticipated 1987 collapse. Jon Moss attempted to launch a new band, Heartbeat UK, and released a debut single called "Jump to It." [i]

See also Boy George.

CULTURE SHOCK

See Subhumans.

DAVID CUNNINGHAM

See Flying Lizards.

C•NTS

It Came from Out of the Garage (Disturbing) 1984

A Decade of Fun: 1978–1988 (Pravda) 1988

The Cunts (or C•nts) latched severely onto '60s punk long before (or after) it was fashionable, steadfastly refusing to budge any way but laterally ever since, even as nominally parallel bands nationwide (and wider) have "discovered" the '70s, glitter, funk, metal, you-name-it. It Came from Out of the Garage is awash in grungy guitars, pumping keys and sneering attitudes, but sorely lacks the spark of inspiration that distinguished the band's obvious antecedents, like the Standells, Count Five, ? and the Mysterians, etc.

A Decade of Fun, by dint of its scattered sources, paints a slightly more varied portrait of the Chicago quintet—quirkier and less tunnel-visioned, consequently higher in its peaks and more turgid in its depths.

At best, the early singles (some of which make up Side One), the band echoes the sort of jagged '60s revisionism that characterized Cleveland in the mid-to-late-'70s. The later (previously unreleased) tracks on Side Two subtract most of the edginess from the equation, adding a poppier slant in direct proportion to the year of recording. [ab]

CURE

Three Imaginary Boys (nr/Fiction) 1979 ●
Boys Don't Cry (Fiction-PVC) 1980 (Elektra) 1988 ●
Seventeen Seconds (nr/Fiction) 1980 (Elektra) 1988 ●
Faith (nr/Fiction) 1981 (Elektra) 1988 ●
Carnage Visors [tape] (nr/Fiction) 1981
... Happily Ever After (Fiction-A&M) 1981
Pornography (Fiction-A&M) 1982 (Elektra) 1988 ●
The Walk EP (Fiction-Sire) 1983
Japanese Whispers (Fiction-Sire) 1983 ●
The Top (Fiction-Sire) 1984 ●
Concert: The Cure Live (nr/Fiction) 1984
Concert and Curiosity (nr/Fiction) 1984 ♠
The Head on the Door (Elektra) 1985 ●
Quadpup EP (Elektra) 1986
Standing on a Beach: The Singles (Elektra) 1986
Staring at the Sea: The Singles [CD] (Elektra) 1986 ●
Kiss Me Kiss Me Kiss Me (Elektra) 1987 ●
The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1988 (Strange Fruit-Dutch East India) 1991 ●
Disintegration (Elektra) 1989 ●
Pictures of You EP [CD] (Elektra) 1990 ●
Integration [CD] (Elektra) 1990 ●
Mixed Up (Fiction-Elektra) 1990 ●
Entreat (nr/Fiction) 1991 ●

FOOLS DANCE

Fools Dance EP (nr/Lambs to the Slaughter) 1985

Though catapulted to some early success with the pop hit "Boys Don't Cry," the Cure—led by obsessive singer/guitarist Robert Smith, originally with Michael Dempsey on bass (replaced after one LP by Simon Gallup) and Laurence (Lol) Tolhurst on drums—originally specialized in the presentation of a gloomy, nihilistic world view.

Three Imaginary Boys (released in America—and later England—as Boys Don't Cry, with several LP tracks replaced by singles) shows the Cure to be masters of the three-minute form, and includes some amazingly terse and effective musical dissertations on loneliness ("10:15 Saturday Night"), war and hatred ("Killing an Arab," "Fire in Cairo"), the precariousness of urban life ("Subway Song") and trendiness ("Jumping Someone Else's Train"). An intelligent, unique halfway point between Gang of Four and the Jam.

Seventeen Seconds moved the Cure—temporarily a quartet with Matthieu Hartley on keyboards—further into terra incognita, away from the pop song and into the angst epic. Some songs ("Play for Today," "In Your House") still offer a fading element of hope, but the title track, "The Final Sound" and "A Forest" all take a turn towards disconsolateness.

Despair arrives in Faith as an element of style. Sacrificing any pretense of fun, the music is strengthened by an impassioned but sedated mood, its themes as powerful and defiant as any in recent music. (Carnage Visors, which appears only as a bonus on the UK cassette version of Faith, is the hastily assembled instrumental soundtrack of a short film made for use on tour by Simon Gallup's brother, and provides even stronger reasons for locking up the razorblades while listening.)

The sarcastically titled Happily Ever After combines Seventeen Seconds and Faith into a double album for American release.

Pornography seems to be the climax of Smith's obsessions, by now coalesced into resigned paranoia; the music firmly establishes the group as superior if idiosyncratic. As usual, the true star here is the phobic, morbid atmosphere. Recommended, but not for the suicide-prone.

With Smith temporarily splitting his time between Siouxsie and the Banshees and his own band (which by this point revolved entirely around him and Tolhurst), a far different Cure emerged. The playful "Let's Go to Bed" heralded a new era of stylistic innovation and sporadic whimsy, played out on a series of singles beginning in late 1982. The Walk EP—four songs of New Orderish synth-based music that's more solemn than miserable—was also issued in the US with the earlier "Let's Go to Bed" and its flipside added. Japanese Whispers, a compilation of recent 45s, then appeared in both countries, reprising the entire American EP plus a subsequent bit of jazzy froth, "The Lovecats," and its similar B-side, "Speak My Language."

Having almost fully exercised their dalliance with light relief, Smith and Tolhurst, joined by a drummer and sax player, recorded The Top, which basically returns them to more familiar corners of gloomy self-indulgence. Except for "The Caterpillar," which is upbeat and likable pop, the record is not among the Cure's best, and disjointed excursions into psychedelia, heavy rock and dance rhythms only punctuate its shortcomings.

Over the course of the following two years, the Cure issued a lot of music, although only one new studio album arrived in the onslaught. The UK-only live record—drawn from a week of shows in May 1984—contains some of the group's most significant tracks to that point but is most notable in its cassette and CD versions, which add a bonus album's worth of demos (including a positively winsome May '78 rendition of "Boys Don't Cry," a full year prior to the song's release), live audience tapes and other curios ("from Robert's cassette collection") entitled Cure Anomalies 1977–1984.

The fine career-long singles compilation, Standing on a Beach, is also worth finding in its non-vinyl format. The tape adds a dozen B-sides; the CD edition, falling in line with the video-clip compilation, is titled Staring at the Sea and adds four tracks. (In a bizarre development, the LP's inclusion of "Killing an Arab" created an enormous tumult when an American pro-Arab organization, ignoring that the song had been in circulation since 1979, took its title from a famous Albert Camus novel and in no way advocates violence to Arabs, launched a political campaign against the band.)

With "In Between Days," The Head on the Door opens sounding exactly like New Order. By the second song, of course, Smith's fickle idiom dabbling returns the band—here a revamped quintet, with Simon Gallup back in the fold—to an entirely different world, via the mildly oriental "Kyoto Song," and follows in flamenco style with "The Blood." Toeing a line between pop and sullenness keeps the Cure from achieving maximal creative impact, but it's an altogether listenable album that is sporadically ("Push" and "Close to Me," for example) as eclectically brilliant as can be. The Quadpus EP joins two B-sides—including the bizarre "A Man Inside My Mouth"—to "Close to Me" and "A Night Like This" from the album.

Doubtless encouraged by growing international stardom, the Cure released an ambitious and challenging double-album, Kiss Me Kiss Me Kiss Me. Sporting a dense and dynamic arena-scaled rock sound and adding such touches as wah-wah guitar, sitar, strings and horns, the organically coherent album surges with gloomy power but also percolates with occasional bits of charming low-key pop. Smith's resolutely miserable, ironic lyrical visions ("The Kiss," "Shiver and Shake," "How Beautiful You Are . . .") fill even some of the musically lighter songs, although a few (including "Catch," "The Perfect Girl," "Hey You!!!" and "Why Can't I Be You?") do offer giddy love sentiments.

The Cure repeats the expansive, gauzy sonic approach of Kiss Me on Disintegration, but slows down and stretches out the material even more, perhaps enjoying the lazy rhythms and rich textures a bit too much. Despite the enervatingly trancey ambience that suffuses the record, Smith does come through with a few great songs—"Pictures of You," "Lovesong," the driving "Fascination Street"—that still take forever to get where they're going. (The CD and cassette add "Home-sick" and "Last Dance.")

Remixing the seven-minutes-plus "Pictures of You" down to under five, the Cure attached four intricate, atmospheric live renditions (from a 1989 London show) of Disintegration songs and released it all as a CD EP. (In the UK, a collection of eight live Disintegration tracks from the same source were issued as Entreat, initially as a limited retail giveaway and later as a commercial item.)

Integration boxes up the four CD EPs (as originally issued) from Disintegration, throwing in a small group poster as an added incentive to indecisive consumers. Besides Pictures of You, there's Lullaby (adding a remix and two live tracks), Fascination Street (two remixes and a pair of non-LP studio creations) and Lovesong (also two mixes and two non-LP songs).

After years of keeping a very firm grip on the Cure's creative output, Robert Smith took the unprecedented step of inviting a variety of studio hounds to have a go at remixing the band's 12-inch catalogue and issuing an album of the ones that worked out to his satisfaction. The extremely uneven Mixed Up is a strange package, with one brand new song (the hard-rocking "Never Enough"), newly recorded and mixed re-creations of "The Walk" and "A Forest," a few previously issued versions of familiar singles and, most provocative, disfiguring reworkings of several Cure classics. "Close to Me" gets a shuffling house beat and horns; "Pictures of You" undergoes a complete dub/house remodeling; the dancefloor "Inbetween Days" is nearly unrecognizable. (In an amusing bit of format perversity, the bonus track of "Why Can't I Be You?" is only on vinyl.)

The Peel session from December 1978 records the original trio giving four early classics—including "Killing an Arab" and "Boys Don't Cry" (on which overdubbed guitars ruin the illusion of it being a completely live effort)—skeletal readings that lack the familiar studio renditions' urgent excitement.

Bassist Simon Gallup, who left the Cure in 1982 (between Pornography and The Walk), is the leader of Fools Dance, a quintet whose lamely selfconscious five-song 12-inch EP was released shortly after Gallup rejoined the Cure. [sg/i]

See also Glove, Siouxsie and the Banshees.

CURRENT 93

Lashtal (Bel. Laylah) 1983

Nature Unveiled (Bel. Laylah) 1984 •

Dog's Blood Rising (Bel. Laylah) 1984 •

In Menstrual Night (nr/United Dairies) 1986

Live at Bar Maldoror (nr/Mi-Mort Records) 1986 •

Dawn (nr/Maldoror) 1987 •

Imperium (nr/Maldoror) 1987

Swastikas for Noddy (Bel. Laylah) 1987 •

Earth Covers Earth (nr/United Dairies) 1988

Looney Runes (nr/Durtro) 1991

CURRENT 93/COIL

Nightmare Culture (Bel. Laylah) 1985

Named after some theory or other of English mage Aleister Crowley, Current 93's early work used Crowley and Lautréament's Maldoror as the starting points for an occult trip tinged with tragic grandeur. David Michael Bunting (aka David Tibet) is the group's core, with significant assistance from Steve Stapleton of Nurse with Wound. The motto on early albums is "How can there be pleasure, how can there be joy, when the whole world is burning?" On later albums, Tibet finds some joy, though the listener may not, as the music is far less compelling.

Lashtal, a three-track EP recorded with Fritz Haaman of 23 Skidoo and John Balance of Coil, is ritualistic music using Tibetan thighbone, slow, trance-like drumming, droning electronics and tapes of chanting (perhaps old recordings of Crowley). Nature Unveiled is more fully developed and points the way of the next several albums. Stapleton's production is evident on both side-long pieces, which use layers of Gregorian chants and modified requiems, menacing electronic drones and Tibet's own chantings and moanings, cut up and reassembled. The perfect soundtrack for a documentary (shot in murky black and white) about the inner lives of Notre Dame gargoyles.

Dog's Blood Rising takes the concept a stage further, with more sophisticated production and less reliance on the plundering of pre-existing music. At once angrier and more restrained, Dog's Blood is the best Current 93 album to date. "Jesus Wept" and "Falling Back in Fields of Rape" (each of which runs about fourteen minutes) rise with agonizing screams and fall back to near silence, intermingling the 12th century and science fiction to lament the cruelty and abnegation of responsibility in the contemporary world. "From Broken Cross Locusts" takes its form from Tibetan liturgical music, but uses electronically modified vocals and electronic drums. The album closes with a humorous but chilling a cappella medley of Simon & Garfunkel hits.

Current 93 shares Nightmare Culture with Coil, employing Eastern chanting, growing electronics and tapes to create a mood similar to Dog's Blood. Live at Bar Maldoror recycles many of the same tapes used on Nature Unveiled and Dog's Blood but plays them in a different order, often mixing tapes from both albums together, and layering new electronics over them. Not as essential as either of the albums from which it draws, but quite good and different enough. (The CD adds two excellent tracks from a compilation album.)

In Menstrual Night, originally a limited-edition picture disc but later reissued as a regular LP (Current 93 habitually puts out limited editions which are subsequently re-released), has a gentler sound, with a steady drumbeat all the way through one side and pleasant electronics and tape loops with religious themes. The other half consists of tape loops and processed old English folk melodies. This record, which sounds similar to later Nurse with Wound records, is on that band's label.

Compared to prior Current 93 releases, Imperium is almost a folk album, though a strange and decidedly moody one. Tibet pretentiously intones ecclesiastical lyrics over muted, faux-Elizabethan flute, electronic growling, lute plucking, a simple drumbeat (on one track) and some bass (on another), all cloaked in a fog of production. Not the band's best.

Dawn temporarily reversed the gentleness trend. The title track is an abrasive, highly structured tour de force, a recurring loop of a man saying "destruction destruction" followed by slabs of guitar feedback, then various electronics. The other side is a live version of "Maldoror is Dead," the best rendition yet of a song that can also be found on Nature Unveiled and an early cassette-only release.

With Swastikas for Noddy, Simon & Garfunkel get the last laugh. Tibet had written some folkish songs for Death in June, but always kept to a more occult mood for his Current 93 work. On Swastikas, he delivers traditional numbers like "Oh Coal Black Smith" and originals in the same vein. Most of the folk songs retain a melancholy feel, though strummed guitar replaces the Gregorian chants. While the electronics and eeriness remain on tracks like "Panzer Rune," the upbeat "Beausoleil" could be played by any but the most cowardly college radio station. (A couple of 12-inch singles released around the same time attempted to weld the new folk orientation with the older kind of lyrics and an almost danceable beat, yielding decidedly awkward results.)

For Earth Covers Earth, Tibet slipped further into the land of the Incredible String Band, going so far as to pay homage to that duo's 1968 LP, The Hangman's Beautiful Daughter, in the cover photo. Unfortunately, Tibet's talents don't nearly equal those of his icons. Nice but vacuous. [sl]

See also Nurse with Wound.

BILLY CURRIE

See Ultravox.

CURTISS A

Courtesy (Twin/Tone) 1980

Damage Is Done (Twin/Tone) 1984

A Scarlet Letter (Twin/Tone) 1988

SPOOKS

1980–1990 EP (Twin/Tone) 1978

Curt Almsted is a talented songwriter with a great sense of humor, an adequate if colorless voice and connections with every other local Minneapolis musician (except maybe Prince), many of whom played on his first album. The tracks are energetic rockers in a niche between Marshall Crenshaw, Bruce Springsteen and George Thorogood, but much rawer and less predictable.

Damage Is Done is a more mature record that draws further on sources like primal soul to stretch Almsted's expanding skills (most notably as a singer, now showing signs of Van Morrison and Willy DeVille as well) and to better display eleven well-drawn, heartfelt songs. The production is generally quite sympathetic, but the drums sound like distant cardboard boxes, and that significantly cuts down on the album's impact. There's still something missing—maybe a grander setting—that keeps Almsted a minor-leaguer, but he certainly has the wherewithal to move on up.

Almsted then went through a bad patch, losing longtime sideman Bob Dunlap to the Replacements, suffering a death in the family and ultimately winding up in jail on a battery charge involving an ex-girlfriend. Piling up years of bitterness over a number of women, Almsted spews out his pain on A Scarlet Letter, with NRBQ guitarist Al Anderson producing and heading up the backing band. Nakedly emotional missives like "I Wanna Make You Happy," "Starting to Cry," "I Can't Call Mary Anymore" and the brilliantly titled "(I Feel Just Like George Jones When He Was a) Heel to Tammy" get soulful treatment from Almsted's impassioned voice, which has really come to resemble DeVille's. Easily his best record, A Scarlet Letter—unironically dedicated to Ike Turner—avoids hysteria for deep feelings that translate into resonant roots rock.

Almsted's early band, Spooks, debuted in '78 with a 7-inch EP of weird, punkish rock'n'roll (including "Scum of the Earth," a tribute to Travis Bickle) that bears little (but not no) resemblance to his subsequent work. [i]

CHRIS CUTLER

See Henry Cow, Pere Ubu, David Thomas.

ANDRE CYMONE

Livin' in the New Wave (Columbia) 1982

Survivin' in the 80's (Columbia) 1983

AC (Columbia) 1985 •

An early member of Prince's touring ensemble, Cymone did his own "look ma, no band" musical crossover LP in 1982. Less horny and inspired than his former employer's contemporaneous approach, Cymone is nonetheless a strong contender in his own right and seems exhilarated (note the title of his first album) by the possibilities inherent in the same area of musical commingling.

Although Survivin' in the 80's still shows a lot of Prince's influence (especially imagewise—check the costumed male/female black/white band photo on the cover), Cymone is working more typical dancefloor terrain than the Purple One, with processed vocals and mild scratch production adjusting the slow funk grooves of numbers like "Make Me Wanna Dance" and "Body Thang." Slick and functional, but no creative landmark.

Back on his own in the studio, Cymone created AC with only skimpy outside assistance. Prince wrote and co-produced one easily recognizable track ("The Dance Electric") that also features backing vocals by Wendy and Lisa; Cymone allowed others to add a few jots of percussion and vocals as well. Otherwise, Cymone remains perfectly capable—like his ex-boss—of working easily and independently in a number of styles, from languid reflection ("Pretty Wild Girl") to pretty balladry ("Sweet Sensuality") to kinetic dance music ("Book of Love," "Satisfaction").

Although Cymone hasn't made a record under his own name in a while, his full-service production/writing work with Jody Watley and Adam Ant has kept him busy and successful through the late '80s. [jg/i]

See also Adam and the Ants, Prince.

CYNICS

Blue Train Station (Get Hip-Skyclad) 1986

Twelve Flights Up (Get Hip-Skyclad) 1988

Blue Train Sessions [CD] (Get Hip-Skyclad) 1989 •

Rock'n'Roll (Get Hip-Skyclad) 1989 •

Sixteen Flights Up [CD] (Get Hip-Skyclad) 1990 •

Neo-garage-psychedelia from a Pittsburgh quintet weaned on "the punk explosions of '66 and '77." Standouts in an overworked genre, the Cynics achieve a quintessential evocation of their ancestors' glorious sound on Blue Train Station and Twelve Flights Up. Gregg Kostelich's guitars buzz with primal distortion as Michael Kastelic blurts out the lyrics in a sneery whine from somewhere deep within the sonic blur. Grungier than a seedy bar and more energetic than a class of sugared-up toddlers, the Cynics pack both albums (an evenhanded mix of strong originals and vintage obscurities) with surefooted atmosphere and excitement.

Blue Train Sessions and Sixteen Flights Up are remixed, expanded CD versions of the Cynics' first two albums, with improved sound quality and added tracks. The latter disc also features some entertaining snatches of pissed-off studio chat.

Rock'n'Roll presents an altered band lineup (with a change in drummers and no replacement for departed organist Beki Smith), an increased emphasis on original material and a slightly updated recording approach. More than ever, the songs are catchy and to-the-point, and the band performs them with an intensity that renders questions of revivalism irrelevant. [i/hd]

HOLGER CZUKAY

See Can, David Sylvian, Jah Wobble.

DAG NASTY

Can I Say (Dischord) 1986
 Wig Out at Denkos (Dischord) 1987
 Field Day (Giant) 1988 •

JUNKYARD

Junkyard (Geffen) 1989 •
 Sixes, Sevens & Nines (Geffen) 1991 •

With Dave Smalley of Boston's DYS on vocals and Brian Baker (ex-Minor Threat/Meatmen) on guitar, this DC quartet began as something of a supergroup; with co-production by Ian MacKaye, the debut sounds a lot like Minor Threat. Hardcore pop with heart and harmonies, it's still much rougher than Smalley's next stop, All. Pithy and articulate, with a share of straight-edge sentiments, this is music for moshers and homebodies alike.

With a new singer and bassist, Wig Out at Denkos is a more streamlined affair that replaces most of the first LP's frantic tempos with rockier dynamics. Peter Cortner's vocals are much more musical than Smalley's, which only enhances the noticeably sharper material, especially the neat title track.

With another lineup change (this time it's the drummer), Field Day is an excellent punky pop record that is by turns soulful ("The Ambulance Song") and aggressive ("Dear Mrs. Touma"). The Ruts' influence on DC punk bands shows up in an exciting cover of "Staring at the Rude Boys" and Dag Nasty's own foray into dub lite, "Never Green Lane." A re-recorded "Under Your Influence" (from Can I Say) and (as one of the four CD bonus tracks) Wire's "12 XU," a staple from Baker's Minor Threat days, are well-integrated into this diverse and tunelessly accessible collection that has penetrating personal lyrics.

The following year, Baker resurfaced in LA metal-lurgists Junkyard, teamed with, of all people, former Big Boy Chris Gates. Despite the pedigree, the band's first LP is a horrible major-label bomb. [db]

See also All, DYS, Meatmen, Minor Threat.

JEFF DAHL GROUP

Vomit Wet Kiss (Sympathy for the Record Industry) 1987
 Scratch Up Some Action (Aus. Dog Meat) 1989
 (nr/Shakin' Street) 1990

JEFF DAHL

I Kill Me (Triple X) 1990 •
 Ultra Under (Triple X) 1991 •

VOX POP

The Band, the Myth, the Volume EP (Goldar) 1982

POWERTRIP

When We Cut We Bleed (Public) 1983 (PVC) 1987

JESTERS OF DESTINY

Fun at the Funeral (Dimension-Restless) 1986
 In a Nostalgic Mood EP (Dimension-Metal Blade-Restless) 1987 •

A decade after releasing an inept debut single on Washington DC's Doodley Squat label, guitarist/singer Dahl—by then a Los Angeles-based veteran of several local bands, including Vox Pop (with Paul B. Cutler), the Angry Samoans, the Mentors (briefly) and his own Powertrip (pioneering speedmetal)—made his first solo album, Vomit Wet Kiss. Fronting an adjustable lineup that, on some tracks, includes ex-Dead Boy guitarist Cheetah Chrome, Dahl revisits the Stooges in competent but undistinguished loud rock with metal/punk fringes. (Just skip the clenched-teeth version of "Paint It, Black" and the acoustic "Lustful Glances.")

Leading a quartet of Amy Wichmann (guitar), Bruce Duff (bass) and Del Hopkins (drums)—with assists from Cheetah and Rikk Agnew—Dahl returned with the better-produced, excellently played Scratch Up Some Action. This Raw Power-styled roar of razor-edge rock makes rocket fuel out of obvious covers ("White Light/White Heat," "1970," "Two-Headed Dog") but runs into trouble with some of Dahl's originals.

Named for a song on the second album, I Kill Me was actually recorded prior to the first and includes (on the LP, and as cassette/CD bonuses) some of the same tracks as Vomit Wet Kiss. Dahl airs his Iggy aspirations with obvious vocal inflections on "Goin' Underground" (a song he co-wrote with Chrome) and a spot-on cover of "Search and Destroy"; otherwise the potent but uneven album focuses on self-preservation, with songs like "This Stuff Is Killin' Me," "Haven't Had a Drink in a Long Time" and "The Boy Who Self-destroyed" (with most of the Angry Samoans guesting).

Bassist Duff, another longtime LA scene vet and rock critic, and guitarist Ray Violet led the Jesters of Destiny, unseriously metalesque cultural scavengers who, on Fun at the Funeral (a title which pretty well conveys the band's innocuous attitude), cleverly crib song plots from exploitation movies ("God Told Me To") and other horror stories ("Incubus"), with enough wit to quote "Eleanor Rigby" while they're at it.

In a Nostalgic Mood is a pointless all-covers EP: humorless hard-rock renditions of classics by Hendrix, Creedence, Sabbath and two others. [i]

See also Angry Samoans, Chemical People.

DALE

See Missing Persons.

DALIS CAR

See Peter Murphy.

ROLF DAMMERS

See Can.

DAMNED

- Damned Damned Damned (nr/Stiff) 1977 (nr/Demon) 1986 (Frontier) 1989 •
Music for Pleasure (nr/Stiff) 1977 (nr/Demon) 1986 •
Machine Gun Etiquette (nr/Chiswick) 1979 (nr/Big Beat) 1982 (Emergo) 1991 •
The Black Album (IRS) 1980 •
Friday the 13th EP (nr/NEMS) 1981
The Best of the Damned (nr/Big Beat) 1981 (Emergo) 1991 •
Strawberries (nr/Bronze) 1982 (nr/Dojo) 1986 •
Live at Shepperton 1980 (nr/Big Beat) 1982 •
Live in Newcastle (nr/Damned) 1983
Damned EP (nr/Stiff) 1985
Damned but Not Forgotten (nr/Dojo) 1985 •
Phantasmagoria (MCA) 1985 •
Is It a Dream? EP (nr/MCA) 1985
Damned Damned Damned/Music for Pleasure (nr/Stiff) 1986
The Captain's Birthday Party (nr/Stiff) 1986
The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1986 •
Not the Captains Birthday Party? (nr/Demon) 1986
Anything (MCA) 1986 •
The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1987 •
Mindless, Directionless, Energy. Live at the Lyceum 1981 (ID-Revolver) 1987 •
The Light at the End of the Tunnel (MCA) 1987 •
The Long Lost Weekend: Best of Volume 1 1/2 (nr/Big Beat) 1988
Final Damnation (Restless) 1989 •
The Peel Sessions Album (nr/Strange Fruit) 1990 (Strange Fruit-Dutch East India) 1991 •
EP (nr/Deltic) 1990

NAZ NOMAD & THE NIGHTMARES

- Give Daddy the Knife Cindy (nr/Big Beat) 1984 •

Noted for being the very first British punk band to issue an album (Stiff's first LP) as well as the first to tour America, the Damned hold a special position in history, if not always in music. Over an exceedingly checkered multi-label career—breakups, reformations, side projects, farewell gigs, a spell as the Doomed, vast popularity, near obscurity—the Damned have consistently managed to shatter expectations and defy the odds, wreaking havoc and nonchalantly tweaking convention. But getting a cogent critical perspective on their large recorded oeuvre is as elusive as attempting to read the label on a spinning 45.

Damned Damned Damned was a major ground-breaker, a stripped-down punk album of high-speed songs filled with raunchy guitar rock and equally aggressive sentiments. With Nick Lowe producing, the Damned trounced such then-hard-to-challenge traditional recording values as musical precision and studio-quality sound. Unfailingly energetic and vital, it's the only Damned studio album to feature the original lineup of Dave Vanian (vocals), Brian James (guitar), the exceptionally skillful Rat Scabies (drums) and Captain Sensible (bass). Just to heighten the bratty iconoclasm, early copies of the sleeve "goofed", the back cover pictured rivals Eddie and the Hot Rods in lieu of the Damned.

Surprisingly enough, the second Damned opus was produced by Nick Mason of Pink Floyd. With added guitarist Lu Edmonds and no stylistic plan, the attack sounds blunted, and there aren't as many great songs as on the first LP. Despite a great cover, Music for Pleasure doesn't live up to the title (Stiff reissued both LPs as a mail-order-only double in 1986.)

The Damned broke up and reformed several times before cutting Machine Gun Etiquette with a new lineup. Sensible had traded bass for guitar, Lu had departed (to join a number of bands, including Public Image) and ex-Saints bassist Algy Ward had joined. (Ward left after the one album, going on to form a grebo metal band, Tank, which has released at least five LPs.) Despite the tumult, the band is totally revitalized and on top of things—more mature, but no less crazy—tearing through great numbers like "Love Song," "I Just Can't Be Happy Today" (both UK hits), "Smash It Up" and the anthemic "Noise Noise Noise." A great record by a band many had already counted out. The 1991 CD/cassette reissue has a new cover, cool liner notes by Jack Rabid and bonus tracks: a six-minute edit of 1983's "White Rabbit" plus three erstwhile B-sides: "Ballroom Blitz," "Suicide" and "Rabid (Over You)."

With ex-Hot Rod bassist Paul Gray joining the lineup, the Black Album—a two-record set in the UK, one disc in America—takes off in a totally different direction, displaying unexpected character traits. The first two sides (the entire US release) are packed with melodic rock verging on power pop, using acoustic guitar, vocal harmonies, mellotron and synthesizers, as well as other seemingly inconceivable components. "Wait for the Blackout" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" indicate how far the debonair Damned had traveled; other tracks prove that they had not abandoned the roar'n'roll with which they began. But the last two sides are dead weird: one is a single composition, strung together by church organ, that doesn't work; the other a live best-of that's impressive but halfbaked. (Live at Shepperton 1980 comes from the same gig, but runs for two sides, not one, offering such additional tunes as "Neat Neat Neat" and "Help.")

Friday the 13th, a four-song 7-inch of new non-LP material released during the band's brief (and unproductive) liaison with the NEMS label, features "Disco Man," "Billy Bad Breaks" and a cover of the Stones' "Citadel." Meanwhile, the band's former label put together The Best of the Damned—not exactly that, but rather a reasonable collection of '76-'80 singles (A-sides and some B-sides) from "New Rose" to "Wait for the Blackout," including Sensible's worthless 1982 solo cover of Elton Motello's "Jet Boy, Jet Girl." (As Damned Damned Damned had finally been released in the States, the worthless '91 reissue of The Best of the Damned deletes "Neat Neat Neat," replacing it with the "White Rabbit" single, and swaps the classic "New Rose" for a live version.)

Mindless, Directionless, Energy was recorded live in London (1981) with the Scabies-Sensible-Vanian-Gray lineup and boasts crummy sound and an indifferent set of songs. "Smash It Up," "Love Song" and "I Feel Alright" are fair inclusions that receive exciting performances, but a terrible rendition of Sweet's "Ballroom Blitz" (dedicated to Lady Di and sung with a chorus of "great big tits") and other duff items make this dodgy record worth burying, not buying. (The CD adds a blistering "New Rose.") Yet another live album, Not the Captains Birthday Party? documents an earlier era, capturing the original band running through some of the first album onstage at London's Roundhouse in late 1977. A show from Newcastle was released as an authorized bootleg in '83.

The two EPs (later joined on a single disc and issued in the US) of live-in-the-studio material were recorded for John Peel's BBC radio show in November 1976 and May 1977 and provide solid evidence of the young band's playing abilities away from Nick Lowe's compressed/accelerated production. The earlier date (released second) offers punchy renditions of "Neat Neat Neat," "Stab Your Back," "New Rose" and two more. Besides shoddy performances and flat sound, the choice of material for the '77 session is weak, capped by "Fan Club" and "Sick of Being Sick."

Despite a humorous porcine cover shot, Strawberries is a gormless, old-sounding affair that drags itself along with neither bite nor character. Short of truly terrible, it's merely forgettable. (Outtakes from this album were later packaged as a 1990 EP on Sensible's Deltic label.)

Another compilation, Damned but Not Forgotten covers roughly '81 to '84, with tracks from assorted singles (including B-sides), Friday the 13th and elsewhere.

Phantasmagoria is mainly Vanian's show. His imposing singing on graveyard items like "Grimly Fiendish" and "Sanctum Sanctorum" provides the character the songs themselves lack. Jon Kelly's production (complete with horror-film effects and phantom-of-the-opera organ) is adequate, but the Damned no longer has a unique sound beyond Vanian, so it's fairly academic. (The LP was also issued in the UK with a bonus blue vinyl 12-inch of the subsequent "Eloise," a drippy Paul Ryan song which became a hit for them.) An EP of the album's "Is It a Dream" adds four live tracks.

Released pseudonymously by Naz Nomad & the Nightmares, Give Daddy the Knife Cindy is the Damned's imaginary '60s psychedelic film soundtrack, filled with covers of such classics as "I Had Too Much to Dream (Last Night)," "Kicks," "Nobody but Me," Kim Fowley's "The Trip," plus a pair of originals. The material is great, but the unembellished studio performances are merely functional. A nice thought anyway.

Stability—the Damned's lineup of Vanian, Rat, guitarist/keyboardist Roman Jugg (who joined in 1981) and bassist Bryn Merrick lasted from 1984 until 1987—evidently had a negative effect on the band's creativity. Anything boasts a neat version of Love's "Alone Again Or," but otherwise falls well short of achieving anything memorable. Despite the Damned's proven ability to alternately rock gothic and play nice, there's no audible point to the music; it's hard to imagine who would find this LP pleasurable.

The Light at the End of the Tunnel is a haphazardly sequenced two-record decade-spanning compilation with a dandy family tree by that British national treasure, Pete Frame. The unassailable 27-cut selection includes hits, album cuts, non-LP mixes, B-sides (like "Help" from '77) and other rarities, but what possible illogic guided the track order? ("New Rose," "Neat Neat Neat," "I Feel Alright" and "I Feel the Pain" are all on different sides!)

The Long Lost Weekend is a fairly useless compilation of odds and ends from '79-'84: singles, three tracks from Friday the 13th, four cuts from Strawberries, even a joint recording ("Over the Top") with Motorhead.

In the late '80s, with Sensible's solo career off the charts, the Damned—Vanian, Scabies, Sensible, James, Merrick and Jugg—began doing reunion shows, culminating in a triumphant ten-date US tour in 1989. The live Final Damnation, taped the previous year in London, has seventeen of the songs you want to hear performed at reasonable tempos in a powerful mix of musical skill and self-amused abandon. With nothing left to prove, the Damned merrily live the legend without making a fuss about it. Easily their best live record and the only one truly worth owning.

The album title was evidently serious. (No, really. We mean it this time . . .) The Damned have apparently called it quits, as latest reports have Vanian, Jugg and Merrick working together in a new band called the Phantom Chords. [i]

See also Captain Sensible, Lords of the New Church.

DANGTRIPPERS

Days Between Stations (Dog Gone) 1989 •

Byrdsy Midwest power-pop bands are a dime a dozen, but when the occasional one with that special something (could it be . . . talent?) comes along, it makes up for all the uninspired strivers. This unassuming rock-pop quartet from Iowa City, Iowa, doesn't do anything out of the ordinary on Days Between Stations, but the consistently fine songs and the able-bodied performances make it an eminent delight. Tunes? Strong and memorable. Harmonies? Alluring and modestly employed. Lyrics? Simple but not simpleminded. Playing? Guitars weave in and around each other over a sturdy rhythm section. (Kenn Goodman of the Service provides guest keyboards.) Just wonderful. [i]

DANNY & DUSTY

The Lost Weekend (A&M) 1985

This one-off studio bender assembles the cream of LA's cowpunk society for a batch of rowdy tunes about drinkin', lovin', gamblin' and losin'. The cast: Dan Stuart and Chris Cacavas of Green on Red, Steve Wynn and Dennis Duck of Dream Syndicate and most of the Long Ryders. Produced by Paul Cutler, The Lost Weekend offers a saucy good time, short on significance, but long on ambience and spirit. For reference, a version of Dylan's "Knockin' on Heaven's Door" typifies the tenor of Wynn/Stuart's collaborative songwriting. [i]

DANNY AND THE DOORKNOBS

See Trotsky Icepick.

DANSE SOCIETY

Seduction EP (nr/Society) 1982

Heaven Is Waiting (Arista) 1984

Looking Through (nr/Society) 1986

Selfconsciously arty and needlessly dramatic, this quintet from England's southwest occasionally mixes almost straightforward rock into its dense techno-dance rhythms, yielding a reasonably good song now and again. Seduction is a longwinded six-track 12-inch with busy Bauhaus-strength mud supporting sporadic vocals and gimmicky sound effects. Tuneless and tedious.

Danse Society reached America with the full-length Heaven Is Waiting; further plodding nonsense that can claim the abrasive but catchy dance-rock of the title track and a weirdly modernized reading of the Stones' already spacey "2000 Light Years from Home."

Billed as the band's final album (but claiming ominously that "the end is only the beginning"), Looking Through is more tedious and repetitive new wave disco for the doomy haircut-and-mascara brigade. Lacking any striking material, this is functional genre fare for yesterday's club kids. [i]

DANZIG

Danzig (Def American-Geffen) 1988 •

Danzig II—Lucifuge (Def American-Geffen) 1990 •

At the very crest of Misfits cult mania, producer Rick Rubin decided to help ex-Fits vocalist Glenn Danzig realize his dream of making his current group, Samhain, more professional and focused. As Danzig, the band has achieved significant commercial success while remaining true to fans' sanguinary tastes.

Cleaving Glenn's signature groaning and pagan-demono-sexuality lyrics to a more basic hard-rock foundation, Danzig ends up as a crunchy cross between the Doors, Misfits and Black Sabbath. With the benefit of a real band—tasteful, metallic guitarist John Christ, Samhain holdover Eerie Von (bass) and dexterous vet Chuck Biscuits (ex-D.O.A., Black Flag and Circle Jerks, perhaps the greatest punk rock drummer ever)—behind him, Danzig's amazing voice has never sounded as clear or as dominant. While roughly half of the album is ominous and mighty ("Twist of Cain," "She Rides," "Soul on Fire" and "Mother"), the rest proves shallow on repeated listenings, displaying the weak side of Rubin's thinly homogeneous production.

Lucifuge corrects the flaws: Rubin's production is far fleshier, the theatrically demonic muscle-stud angle is entertainingly exercised, the songs (especially the cool, dank beauty of "Her Black Wings," with its subtly menacing riff, and a '50s-style melodic tearjerker, "Blood and Tears") are consistently stronger, and a heavy dose of voodoo blues (check out the stripped-down "I'm the One") is wisely incorporated into the thematic and musical brew. [gef]

See also Misfits.

TERENCE TRENT D'ARBY

Introducing the Hardline According to Terence Trent D'Arby (Columbia) 1987 •

Terence Trent D'Arby's Neither Fish nor Flesh (Columbia) 1989 •

THE TOUCH WITH TERENCE

TRENT D'ARBY

Early Works (Ger. IMP-Polydor) 1989 •

Once he topped the US charts with "Wishing Well," the press was full of talk about hype but, hit or not, expatriate American Terence Trent D'Arby is an outstanding soul singer. Versatile, too, with the ability to produce a compelling gospel wail ("If You All Get to Heaven"), a funky shout ("Dance Little Sister") or a sultry romantic come-on ("Sign Your Name"). Confident down to his toenails, D'Arby inspires favorable comparisons to such luminaries as Al Green, Sam Cooke and Smokey Robinson, and he rocks out, to boot. (Fans of early-'70s British rock may recognize the Roger Chapman influence on "If You Let Me Stay.")

Of course, true artistes don't pander to the marketplace. With that in mind, TTD threw a major-league curve on his second LP, rejecting the commercial strengths of his debut for moody experiments. As he announces in the opening track, "I will not be defined." No kidding! Neither Fish nor Flesh (modestly subtitled A soundtrack of love, faith, hope & destruction) showcases creepy falsetto vocals and downbeat tunes à la later Marvin Gaye mixed with screwy, skeletal rockers, psychedelic funk and, to add a touch of normalcy, a few shots of (more or less) southern-fried soul. Individually, most of the tracks have virtues; collectively, they add up to the most unfocused record in the history of western civilization.

The Touch's album is routine pop-soul recorded in Germany in '83, when TTD was still developing his moves. Such are the skeletons that plague the famous. [iy]

DARK DAY

See DNA.

DARKSIDE

All That Noise (nr/Situation Two) 1990 (Beggars

Banquet-RCA) 1991 •

The ex-Spacemen 3 rhythm section of this Rugby, England, trio (which became a quartet after making All That Noise) has the Doors' old rainy-night bass/drums sound down cold; the remaining elements on this atmospheric but routine debut are lazy artless-pop vocals (by bassist Pete Bassman), bits of wheedly organ and guitar work that ranges from a translucent drizzle to a flood of distortion. This sort of bland and derivative mock-'60s tedium may go down like soda in the UK nowadays, but that doesn't make it right. [i]

DARLING BUDS

Pop Said... (Columbia) 1988 •

Tiny Machine EP (nr/Epic) 1990 •

Crawdaddy (Columbia) 1990 ♣

Erotica Plays EP [CD] (nr/Epic) 1991 •

This Welsh quartet emerged in the late '80s as part of Britain's resurgent girl-group update. Along with Voice of the Beehive, Transvision Vamp and the very similar Primitives, the Buds looked to the past (not that far: they settled on Blondie) and forged a derivative yet likable sound that, taken in small bites, should satisfy the cravings of any neo-bubblegum fan.

On the relentlessly chirpy debut produced by Pat Collier, singer/lyricist Andrea Lewis and guitarist/songwriter Harley Farr offer a dozen upbeat songs about love (of the puppy, crummy and lost varieties), all solidly played and well sung. The gorgeous "Let's Go Round There" and the Bo Diddley bop of "Things We Do for Love" (not the 10cc song) highlight an album full of highlights. But proceed cautiously, as repeated listenings may cause a sugar rush.

Opening with distorted-feedback reminiscent of the Jesus and Mary Chain, Crawdaddy reveals a more mature Buds, a group that has learned the value of a little variety. With longtime Smiths producer Stephen Street twiddling the knobs, there's a lushness on such tracks as "You Won't Make Me Die" and "So Close" that was absent from Pop Said. . . In addition, the band hops aboard the Madchester bandwagon, coming up with "Tiny Machine" and "Crystal Clear," the LP's most memorable tracks. Some now-tired Blondie-isms remain, but this fine sophomore effort is mostly a forward-looking, groove-heavy delight. (The subsequent EP features "It Makes No Difference" plus three self-produced non-LP tracks.) [db]

DOC CORBIN DART

See Crucifixes.

DAS DAMEN

Das Damen EP (Ecstatic Peace) 1986 (SST) 1986

Jupiter Eye (SST) 1987

Triskaidekaphobe (SST) 1988 •

Marshmellow Conspiracy EP (SST) 1988 + 1988 •

Mousetrap (Twin/Tone) 1989 •

Entertaining Friends (Ger. City Slang) 1990 •

Like many other young bands of the '80s, New York's Das Damen cavalierly crosses decades of musical influences to inbreed contemporary whateverism with '60s acid rock, '70s arena metal and '80s post-punk. The quartet relies on loud guitars, unrestrained energy and their college educations to produce music that has volume and intelligence, if not always impact.

The group's debut EP, originally released on a label run by Sonic Youth's Thurston Moore but quickly reissued by SST, offers six badly mixed long songs that are noisy but fun. Roaring guitar chords, above-average vocals, solid drumming and an invaluable sense of dynamics balance off the unfocused sonic wash and formless songwriting.

The dodgy sound quality on Jupiter Eye is similarly haphazard, but the album reveals enlarged stylistic ambition and sophistication. With the shambling electrified chaos of live improvisation, hard-driving instrumental sections are enthralling; the poorly recorded vocals are effective additions only some of the time. "Girl with the Hair" and "Name Your Poison" find a functional equilibrium; the mild-mannered "Do" offers a most appealing low-key antidote. Jupiter Eye contains all the ingredients for excellence, but Damen is still fitting the pieces together. (A good producer wouldn't hurt.)

The well-rehearsed organization and clear, balanced audio fidelity of Triskaidekaphobe removes some of the rampant wildness in favor of syncopated hard-rocking power and disarmingly melodic tunes. "Bug" and "Candy Korn" are pop songs with feedback; "Spider Birds" crosses Lynyrd Skynyrd with Cheap Trick; "Reverse into Tomorrow" updates sprightly power-pop with augmented chords and a knee-twisting time shift; "Pendant" takes a driving and textured Husker Dü approach and cuts it up with an unexpectedly delicate bridge. Though this impressive LP diverges out of focus, it seems likely that Damen's growing bag of tricks will eventually yield a completely satisfying record.

When certain parties and their legal representatives discovered that "Song for Michael Jackson to Sell"—one of the four tracks on the Marshmellow Conspiracy pink-vinyl 12-inch—was, in fact, "Magical Mystery Tour," the record was withdrawn from the market. Too bad. Although the song doesn't get much respect from the absurdly accented vocal performance, the elongated psychedelic finish is an amusing display of one generation's interpretation of another's trippy noise. (After the dust settled, SST reissued the three remaining songs—including two from the previous LP, one in a new version featuring ex-MC5 guitarist Wayne Kramer—as a 12-inch and a CD-3.)

Mousetrap puts Damen one step closer to demi-monde greatness. The songs (especially on the West Coast side) are by far their best ("Sad Mile" has a killer chorus; the Blue Cheerish "Demagnetized" and the gently tuneful "Hey, Angel!" are also highlights); the band's instrumental work and arrangements are both better developed and more varied than ever. A better Mousetrap to be sure, the album solidifies Damen's stylistic development, setting a terrific musical plateau from which the band can continue to progress.

Recorded live at CBGB in early 1990, Entertaining Friends has good sound and a fine retrospective selection of album tracks, but the warts'n'all performances are totally uneven, fluctuating between potent waves of confident wah-wah power to wobbly vocals and arrangements on the brink of collapse. Damen's live performances aren't exactly peanut butter consistent, and this live document is all too accurate. The CD adds a nifty cover of Television's "Friction." [i]

DASH RIP ROCK

Dash Rip Rock (688) 1986 (Mammoth) 1989 •

Ace of Clubs (Mammoth) 1989 •

Not of This World (Mammoth) 1990 •

Taking their name from a character on The Beverly Hillbillies (Elly May's movie-star paramour), this trio from Baton Rouge, Louisiana puts a bloodboiling flame under a peppery pot of rhythm & blues, old-time rock-'n'-roll and tradition-minded country. Given mighty support by bassist Ned "Hoaky" Hickel and drummer Fred LeBlanc, guitarist/singer Bill Davis is a talented and powerful frontman; all three write. Dash is the kind of rough-and-ready band you imagine tearing up a roadhouse somewhere in your romantic dreams of highway adventures; Dash Rip Rock has a few flaws but bears the unmistakable imprint of a significant find.

The white-hot center of Ace of Clubs—"Money Love Time," the vintage-sounding "Leave Me Alone (With My Bottle)" and "Johnny Ace" (great biographical lyrics set to sizzling high-speed guitar energy)—is surrounded by equally entertaining tracks in a variety of less incendiary styles: chunky power pop ("Go Home Little Girl"), acoustic country-folk ("Blue Moon at Midnight"), herky-jerky rock-pop ("Legacy," "Lisa"). The album would have benefited from a more clearly cut personality, but the well-written and sharply played songs make it a fine second showing.

With producer Jim Dickinson and a new drummer taking over from LeBlanc, Dash grew up and got loud (and a bit raunchy) on Not of This World, a smooth high-octane blend of the band's rootsy rock-R&B-country ingredients. Whether Davis is using guitar metaphors in a lusty love song ("Strang You Up"), issuing crude putdowns ("Rich Little Bitch," "Rattle Trap") or pledging to follow a woman to the ends of the earth (in a song delicately mistitled "Bum for Egypt"), the band—augmented on some songs by a guest keyboard player—plays hot enough to light a small studio conflagration. Get that fire extinguisher out before you drop the needle. [i]

DATE BAIT

See Slickee Boys.

DATURA SEEDS

See Zero Boys.

DAVID J

See Bauhaus, Love and Rockets.

DANIELLE DAX

Pop-Eyes (nr/Initial) 1983 (nr/Awesome) 1985

Jesus Egg That Wept (nr/Awesome) 1984 + 1985

Inky Bloaters (nr/Awesome) 1987 •

The Janice Long Session EP (nr/Nighttracks-Strange Fruit) 1988

Dark Adapted Eye (Sire) 1988 •

Blast the Human Flower (Sire) 1990 ◊

Emerging from the ashes of the Lemon Kittens (formed at Surrey University; 1979-'82), England's Danielle Dax, Our Lady of the Arabic dance slink, has a voice like vanilla yogurt: cool, high and honey-sweet with a tartly mysterious flavor that keeps her work from sounding the slightest bit mainstream. From the old Hebrew inscription of her Awesome Records logo (apparently gibberish) through the lyrics on Inky Bloaters (where "Big Hollow Man" reaps the wages of his materialistic hypocrisy), there's an underlying current of Biblical mysticism embedded in her work and an infectiously droney middle-Easternness to many of her melodies.

An eclectic collision between arty and rootsy, Dax's work ranges from the almost scientifically crisp and clinical ("... In Wooden Brackets," which she recorded while still a Lemon Kitten, introduces backward instrumental tracks to warbling pseudo-Chinese vocal chirps) to mutant blues/gospel. In "Evil-Honky Stomp," from Jesus Egg That Wept, a moaning, off-kilter saxophone evokes images of Mississippi riverboats as she sings of branding slaves with all the sweetness of a Scarlett O'Hara waving down a staircase.

The bright pop and twinkle of "Here Come the Harvest Buns" (included on both Jesus Egg and Pop-Eyes) bounces with perky electronic keyboard percussion, triangle and bottle plinks, disguising its dark message to cheating spouses: "Spin we go with a hi-de-ho, with a knee in the place where the hero roamed." The sweeter she sounds, the more sinister her ideas. (The reissued version of Jesus Egg contains an additional track.)

Dax has a million sounds and at least as many visions to cram onto vinyl. After the utterly unaccompanied Pop-Eyes (amazingly recorded, using more than a dozen different instruments, on a four-track tape machine!), her visions were explored with the help of collaborator Karl Blake, who shared vocals, writing, performing and production duties in the fecund Lemon Kittens. (He appears as a guest musician on Jesus Egg's "Ostrich"). Around 1984, she began to work with guitarist/keyboardist David Knight; he appears on some of Jesus Egg's tracks. Dax later added guitarist Ian Sturgess, who plays numerous other instruments, including jaw harp and harmonica, to her band.

The absolutely brilliant Inky Bloaters finds the Dax troika merrily plundering the sounds of the '60s (as well as ancient slinky Middle-Easternisms) with mock-sitars, giddy fuzz guitars and a by-the-numbers songbook that helps recall everyone from Mungo Jerry ("Inky Bloaters") to T. Rex ("Big Hollow Man") to the Jefferson Airplane ("Brimstone in a Barren Land"). "Flash-back" and "Sleep Has No Property" are among the enticing potions Dax delivers in this remarkably inventive stylistic encapsulation of the Woodstock generation.

The Janice Long Session, an impressive December 1985 radio showing by Dax plus four sidemen, features four selections from her extensive catalogue. Dax's wavery singing lacks some of its usual studio flair and polish, but the version of "Fizzing Human Bomb" (from Inky Bloaters) is quite extraordinary.

Dark Adapted Eye, Dax's excellent introduction to America, mixes more than half of Inky Bloaters (all the songs mentioned above except "Sleep") with five new tunes, most notably the T. Rexy drama of "Cat-House" and the droney percussive pop of "Whistling for His Love." Although the credits omit mention of Sturgess (seemingly a prominent figure on Inky Bloaters) in favor of newcomer Pete Farrugia, his contributions don't appear to have been wiped off the tracks.

After such a string of wonderful records, Dax took a dive. A deeply disappointing commercial sell-out, the dreadful Blast the Human Flower (produced by Stephen Street) foolishly suppresses Dax's eccentricity in anonymous modern guitar-rock performed by such trusted associates as Knight, Farrugia and Blake. Although relieved of its sinuous character, her voice is the album's only familiar element—the nearly witless lyrics, are no help. Having erased Dax's boundless pan-culturalism, a routine sitar-house cover of the Beatles' "Tomorrow Never Knows" lamely pays lip service to it. [e/i]

MORRIS DAY

Color of Success (Warner Bros.) 1985 •

Daydreaming (Warner Bros.) 1987 •

Longtime friend Prince raised Morris Day to stardom by helping his band, the Time, and later by casting

Morris in a starring role as his musical arch-enemy in Purple Rain. Soon after that, when the Time collapsed, Day went solo. Ironically, Color of Success has less of his personality than the group's last LP, and points him in a rather familiar pop-soul direction. Things turn ridiculous when Morris introduces a dance called "The Oak Tree" in a seemingly endless display of self-amusement; on stronger footing, he rocks steady with "Love Sign" and waxes smoothly romantic on "Don't Wait for Me."

Day got his ultra-successful ex-Timemates Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis to co-write and produce a pair of songs on Daydreaming, turning the tracks into a dry run for the Time reunion as Jerome Benton, drummer Jellybean Johnson and Jesse Johnson all put in guest appearances. Overall, the album's material is dire, a mix of dull ballads (including the macho bullshit of "A Man's Pride") and unexciting dance movers—even the Jam/Lewis efforts fail to connect. Despite an evident lack of conviction, Day's smooth singing is appealing; insubstantial material is Daydreaming's undoing. [i] See also Time.

DB'S

Stands for Decibels (nr/Albion) 1981 (IRS) 1989 •
Repercussion (nr/Albion) 1982 (IRS) 1989 •
Like This (Bearsville) 1984 (Rhino) 1988 •
Amplifier (nr/Dojo) 1986
The Sound of Music (IRS) 1987 •

WILL RIGBY

Sidekick Phenomenon (Egon) 1985

PETER HOLSAPPLE & CHRIS STAMEY

Mavericks (Rhino New Artists) 1991 ◊

It's difficult to understand why the dB's' first two albums—both well-conceived and entirely accessible—had such a hard time getting released in the band's own country. On the New York-based band's debut, the four North Carolina emigrants draw inspiration from '60s pop psychedelia (and '70s pop disciples like Big Star) and quote freely from such sources as the Beatles, Move, Nazz and even the Beau Brummels. However, Peter Holsapple and Chris Stamey, the group's two guitar-playing singer/songwriters, each have too individual a style to merely parrot, and nearly every song has some new twist, whether through production effects (few pop records are as consistently aurally interesting as this without resorting to gimmickry), or an unusual instrumental or lyrical approach. Produced in London by Scott Litt, Stands for Decibels is not a happy record—often as not the songs are about deteriorating relationships—but the playing is so exuberant that it's uplifting.

Repercussion adds a number of flourishes to the group's style. Litt achieves a fuller, more modern overall sound; instrumentation on many of the tracks is denser than anything on its predecessor. The Rumour Brass makes an appearance on "Living a Lie." In addition, drummer Will Rigby—one of a mere handful of current rock drummers with a sound of his own beyond mere beat-keeping—is brought more to the fore on numbers like "Ask for Jill" and "In Spain." Depending on one's preferences in production style, Repercussion can be seen either as a great advance over Decibels or as a glossing-up of the group's sound. (The poorly packaged, carelessly programmed Amplifier is a pointless fourteen-track regurgitation of the Albion era.)

Just as the dB's finally signed to an American label, Chris Stamey left for a solo career. With a little instrumental realignment, they recorded Like This as a trio, adding a new bassist afterwards. Although the reliance on Holsapple's songwriting cuts down on the band's eccentricities, unpretentious intelligence, wit and ineffable pop smarts make it a wonderful album with no weak spots or inadequate songs. Dropping much of the British influence in favor of an Americanized, country-fied air, tunes like "Love Is for Lovers," "Lonely Is (As Lonely Does)" and "White Train" carry the banner of romance disappointed into memorable settings. An instantly lovable gem.

Bearsville dissolved shortly after the release of Like This, leaving the group again label-less. (Like This was subsequently licensed by Rhino, gaining a CD release with two bonus tracks, including an extended remix of the excellent "A Spy in the House of Love.") By the time IRS finally signed the band, the lineup had returned to a quartet, with the addition of New Orleans bassist Jeff Bennato.

The Sound of Music finds the dB's continuing in the style of Like This, with similarly fine results. The previously introduced country elements appear on tracks like "Bonneville" (complete with fiddles and mandolins), "Never Before and Never Again" (a brilliant Holsapple duet with Syd Straw) and "Looked at the Sun Too Long," which could easily be mistaken for a Gram Parsons tune. There's still plenty of great pop, too, and the group gets heavy on "Any Old Thing." Guitarist Gene Holder left to join the Wygals shortly after The Sound of Music's release; following one tour without him, the dB's quietly split up. Holsapple subsequently performed and recorded with R.E.M. as auxiliary guitarist and keyboardist.

Following a long unscheduled delay while errant master tapes were being located, IRS reissued the band's first two albums in late 1989, finally making the entire catalogue available domestically. Consumers should note that the IRS CDs are far superior to the now-deleted import versions, with improved sound quality and non-LP bonus tracks ("Judy" on the first LP and "pH Factor" on the second).

Drummer Rigby's solo record is a loopy laugh, a ramshackle one-man-band collection of country covers and likewise originals on which his kit is often the most prominent item in the mix. The singing is informal but engaging (as are his skills on piano, guitar, harmonica and other instruments); Holsapple's occasional contributions don't interrupt the casualness of this delightfully unselfconscious romp.

After occasional gigs with Stamey, Holsapple helped out on a Peter Dinklage session that Stamey was producing, and the two old friends wound up collaborating on a new album. The acoustic-flavored Mavericks is a major career highlight for both, a heartfelt and deeply moving collection that neatly sums up everything they've done singly and together. The songs (especially "Angels," "I Want to Break Your Heart" and "She Was the One'') are no less than memorable; the masterful performances are loaded with handsome harmonies and painterly production touches. Magnificent.

[ds/i/hd]

See also Karina and the Waves, Sneakers, Chris Stamey, Wygals.

D.C.3

This Is the Dream (SST) 1985

The Good Hex (SST) 1986

You're Only as Blind as Your Mind Can Be (SST) 1986

Vida (SST) 1989 •

TWISTED ROOTS

Twisted Roots (CD Presents) 1987

PAUL ROESSLER

Abominable (SST) 1988

CRIMONY

The Crimony E.P. EP (New Alliance) 1988

Erstwhile Black Flag guitarist Dez Cadena's current band (a trio for one LP, a quartet still named D.C.3 ever since) makes albums, to quote him, "in the style of the records that used to excite us when we were young." Unfortunately, what he and his friends (including ex-45 Grave keyboardist Paul Roessler) remember fondly is Deep Purple and Humble Pie, and the first two releases resemble various '60s and '70s nightmares, from Blue Öyster Cult to Black Sabbath. There's actually some fine music and an amusing undercurrent to both, although the subtle satirical value may be missed by those too young (or too old).

With the dated influences toned down, leaving a state of pleasantly mild nostalgia, the third LP turns up the lyrical power. As Cadena's liner notes note, "I ended up hurting someone who is very close to me. This album is about life without that person." With single-minded dedication, selections like "Baby, You Know Where I Live," "Party for One," "I Ain't Got You," "Lost Someone" and "Talkin' to the Mirror" verbalize his anguished cry with an intensity the upbeat music lacks.

Compiling LA performances from '87 and '88, Vida mixes D.C.3 originals with covers of John Lee Hooker, Hawkwind and Black Flag for an electrifying slab of smart and gutsy guitar rock that owes no debt to any era but the present. While Cadena's vocals and playing hit just the right noisy mix of casual concentration, Roessler contributes to the din without making a fuss.

Roessler enlisted Cadena and Jeff Dahl's rhythm section to make the enjoyable Twisted Roots, a solo album in all but name. Playing and singing melodic originals (plus the Stones' "She's a Rainbow") with a slightly theatrical bent, Roessler keeps things upbeat and pleasant with chipper keyboards and enthusiastic vocals, even as Cadena sets to rocking out feverishly in the background. Is this man punk's answer to Elton John?

Recorded with a drummer and three people rotating on bass and guitar, Abominable is a jolly instrumental romp through somber film-less scores, skating rink music, phantom-of-the-punk-club eccentricities and pomp-less ELP-styled classics ("Prokofiev Boogie" takes Peter and the Wolf out of the woods), all solidly composed and proficiently played. I wouldn't want to hear too many more records like this, but Abominable is quite entertaining on its own terms.

Except for brother-in-law Mike Watt playing bass and co-producing the five simple tracks, The Crimony E.P. is more solo work from Roessler, who tickles the ivories and sings jaunty numbers like "Life Is Too Short" and "Vampire Party" and solemn ballads like "Prison Blues." There isn't much interaction between the two men, but the songs and performances are enjoyable enough. [i]

See also Black Flag, Jeff Dahl Group, 45 Grave.

DEAD BOYS

Young Loud and Snotty (Sire) 1977 •

We Have Come for Your Children (Sire) 1978

Night of the Living Dead Boys (Bompl) 1981 •

Younger, Louder and Snottier (nr/Necrophilia) 1989 •

Although originally from Cleveland, the Dead Boys earned their lasting international reputation in New York starting in early '77 by outpunching everyone else on the Bowery circuit. Having absorbed what had already happened in England (the Sex Pistols, Damned) and America (the Stooges), the Dead Boys took it a dozen steps further, uncovering new levels of violence, nihilism, masochism and vulgarity. Their two studio albums have aged well and have served as guideposts to an entire new generation of fans and bands.

Young Loud and Snotty, one of the earliest punk albums released on a US label, benefits from the production skill of Genya Ravan, who made it loud and raw—an onslaught of sizzling guitars and Stiv Bators' sneering whine. Classic tracks include tasteless originals like "Sonic Reducer," "All This and More" and "Caught with the Meat in Your Mouth," as well as a dynamic rendition of the Syndicate of Sound's archetypal "Hey Little Girl." (Twelve years after the fact, someone came across a cassette of rough mixes for the LP and, adding a live Stooges cover, issued it as the legally dubious Younger, Louder and Snottier.)

We Have Come for Your Children, produced by the late Felix Pappalardi, has inferior sound, but equally strong playing. The material suffers from second-LP drought and an onset of self-parodic punk typecasting, leading to such dumb tunes as "Flame Thrower Love," the topical "Son of Sam" and "(I Don't Wanna Be No) Catholic Boy." The record's best track is the reflective "Ain't It Fun," co-written by guitarist Cheetah Chrome and Cleveland legend Peter Laughner.

Night of the Living Dead Boys was recorded live at CBGB in New York in 1979, and captures the end-time band flailing through classic numbers in ragged-but-right fashion. Although the mix is trebly and muddled (a rare combination), this is still a punk documentary of some merit.

The Dead Boys—Bators, Chrome, Johnny Blitz and Jeff Magnum—reformed in 1987 and issued a single, "All the Way Down (Poison Lady)." Following his years in Lords of the New Church, Stiv recorded a 1988 single with the Lyres. The Dead Boys' saga came to an end in June 1990, when Stiv died of automobile injuries in Paris. [tr]

See also Stiv Bators, Peter Laughner, Lords of the New Church, Lyres, Wanderers.

DEAD CAN DANCE

Dead Can Dance (nr/4AD) 1984 •
Garden of the Arcane Delights EP (nr/4AD) 1984 •
Spleen and Ideal (nr/4AD) 1985 •
Within the Realm of a Dying Sun (nr/4AD) 1987 •
The Serpent's Egg (nr/4AD) 1988 •
Aion (nr/4AD) 1990 •

Mesmerizing (if a bit laborious), Dead Can Dance's eponymous debut finds the Australian-born/London-based quintet spinning slow webs of drum-driven but mostly shapeless guitar music with chanting, singing and howling by the two (male and female) singers; the LP is of possible interest only to indiscriminating fans of moody psychedelia and/or the Cocteau Twins. The more intriguing four-song Garden of the Arcane Delights EP (included on the Dead Can Dance CD) has crisper production than the album, although similar musical stylings.

By the time Spleen and Ideal was released, DCD were down to a duo of vocalists Brendan Perry and Lisa Gerrard. Some of the guitars have given way to ethereal keyboards, with tympani, cellos and trombones blended in; much of the LP sounds as though it belongs in a cathedral rather than a concert hall. The songs are more structured than before, but things do get a bit precious, and the three hymnlike cuts that open the album are pretty tough to sit through. The music gets meatier as it progresses, though, and the end result is a record of haunting and solemn beauty.

With song titles such as "Xavier" and "Dawn of the Iconoclast," and credits for such instruments as bass trombone, oboe and military snare, there's no way that Within the Realm of a Dying Sun (and how about that title?) could be quite as boring as its sounds. (Comes close at times, mind you.) Major mistake: segregating the Perry-sung material on one side of the LP and the (somewhat superior) songs Gerrard sings on the other forces the listener to compare the two quite different solo vocal styles, rather than uniting the often spectacular compositions into one overall mood.

Building on its predecessor's shift towards an awareness of ancient musics—European, Celtic and Middle Eastern predominate—The Serpent's Egg has some scintillating moments. Still, it's a lesser, transitional work, without much sense of flow, serving mainly to pave the way for the fully developed medievalisms of Aion. Minstrels Perry and Gerrard now bear scant resemblance to the more trad 4AD-style neo-goths of the first album. Jettisoning any ties to the present, this masterfully organized recording whirls headlong into the Renaissance, to a sonic realm where somber Gregorian chants (and there's a lot of them here) and jaunty maypole dances like "Saltarello" have never left the hit parade. Utilizing authentic folk instruments (hurdy gurdy, lutes, bagpipes, etc.) and letting Gerrard's lovely voice soar unimpeded, Dead Can Dance has finally found a distinct sound of its own. [dgs/gef]

See also This Mortal Coil.

DEAD KENNEDYS

Fresh Fruit for Rotting Vegetables (IRS) 1980 •
In God We Trust, Inc. (Alternative Tentacles-Faulty Products) 1981 •
Plastic Surgery Disasters (Alternative Tentacles) 1982 •

Frankenchrist (Alternative Tentacles) 1985 •
Bedtime for Democracy (Alternative Tentacles) 1986 •
Give Me Convenience or Give Me Death (Alternative Tentacles) 1987 •

WITCH TRIALS

The Witch Trials EP (Subterranean-Alternative Tentacles) 1981

KLAUS FLOURIDE

Cha Cha Cha with Mr. Flouride (Alternative Tentacles) 1985

Because I Say So (Alternative Tentacles) 1988 •
The Light Is Flickering (Alternative Tentacles) 1991

It took a while, but in the Dead Kennedys, America finally produced a powerful, self-righteously moral band to match the fury of the Sex Pistols. Led by audacious and inimitable singer Jello Biafra (who once ran—and received a substantial number of votes—for mayor of San Francisco, the band's base), the DKs combine blunt and sardonic discussions of touchy issues with crushing, high-speed guitar and drums. Generally acknowledged as prime pioneers of American hardcore, the Kennedys have been influential, not only by setting a style, sensibility and commendable standards, but with their productive Alternative Tentacles label and active support for grassroots rock activity. Biafra's legal confrontation over the poster included in Frankenchrist effectively ended the band, but left a powerful anti-censorship legacy for others to uphold.

Despite a few weak songs, Fresh Fruit is explosive and gripping (also controversial—a borrowed photo used on the back cover led to some funny but unpleasant legal trouble). Jello's political sarcasm erupts on "Kill the Poor" and "California über Alles," offering a funny but chilling condemnation of then-governor Jerry Brown and "zen fascists" in the latter. The bracing and tightly focused "Holiday in Cambodia" echoes the Pistols' "Holidays in the Sun" and became a DKs standard. In typically unsubtle broadside fashion, Jello nails another popular target with "Let's Lynch the Landlord."

In eight very brief songs, In God We Trust, Inc. offers additional valid statements about the religious right. But the music is stripped of dynamics and reduced to routine hyperactive punk; scrap the record and keep the lyric sheet.

Plastic Surgery Disasters, with a gruesome mock-E.T. cover, enlarges the musical blend to include more three-dimensionality while retaining the Kennedys' typical rock energy. Songs like "Terminal Preppie," "Winnebago Warrior," "Trust Your Mechanic" and "Well Paid Scientist" mix humor and activism for pointed and intelligent observations on social absurdity. (The CD also contains In God We Trust.)

The DKs stopped recording for several years while the members worked on outside projects. Bassist Klaus Flouride was the busiest boy, producing other bands for release on Alternative Tentacles and recording his own one-man seven-song mini-album, Cha Cha Cha with Mr. Flouride. Displaying not the slightest trace of political consciousness, Klaus lets down his hair on a straight rock'n'roll (with a guest drummer and pianist) love ode, "My Linda." Elsewhere, he laments a serious social problem, "Dead Prairie Dogs," and takes an amusing cowboy jaunt with "Ghost Riders." The simple music—mostly guitars and cheap-sounding electronics—is lighthearted and goofy, showing more spirit than originality, but cute nonetheless. And the cover is great.

In early 1985, the band hit the road again with Frankenchrist, which generally repeats the psycho-punk of Plastic Surgery Disasters. There are some bad tracks with forced, awkward lyrics, but the LP does contain two of the DKs' finest moments: "MTV Get off the Air" and "Stars and Stripes of Corruption," one of the most powerful political statements ever committed to vinyl. Instead of just bellyaching about problems (a common habit of politico-punks), Biafra offers possibilities for constructive change, demonstrating real American patriotism as opposed to jingoist commie-bashing.

Bedtime for Democracy—21 strong cuts and an eight-page clip-art newspaper—ended the Kennedys' recording career on a high note. A full-tilt platform of targets, including working poverty, Reagan, toxic waste, macho attitudes, conformity and more, are decimated with energetic, well-played music and Biafra's uniquely quivery voice. The Kennedys' knowing cover of "Take This Job and Shove It" is also good for a chuckle.

In mid-'86, Biafra and others were charged by California authorities with "distribution of harmful matter to minors"—i.e., a reproduction of H.R. Giger's Landscape #20, which was included in Frankenchrist. More than a year later, the case—which might have led to a jail term—ended in a mistrial. The charges were dismissed but the Dead Kennedys had had it.

The final chapter in the saga was Give Me Convenience or Give Me Death, a posthumous career recap, which contains fifteen examples of the DKs' best work (hits, live performances and obscurities), a two-song flexi-disc ("Buzzbomb from Pasadena" and "Night of the Living Rednecks"—both added to the cassette and CD editions) and a newsprint art/lyric book. Essential.

The bulk of Flouride's second album, Because I Say So, is devoted to atmospheric instrumental soundtrack music corrupted by assorted streams of noise that wander in and out of the mix. The diverse vocal songs are likewise a mixed blessing: while "Keep on Walking" is a politely Beatlesque piano ballad, Norman Greenbaum's "Charlies Friends" gets a twisted acoustic country interpretation and "Dominating Baby" copies (and acknowledges) Leon Redbone. "Bus Thru the Barrier," meanwhile, is a sloppy mash that repeats the same meaningless couplet ad nauseum, pausing only for two blitzed out fuzz guitar solos. (The CD adds three bonus tracks.)

The Witch Trials was an early Biafra studio one-off, recorded in England and shrouded in mystery. With DK guitarist East Bay Ray, Sound vocalist Adrian Borland and California's Christian Lunch providing the uncredited backing—an atmospheric drone on one side, jarring unpleasantness on the other—Biafra recites two dramatic tales of mayhem and chants two more pieces of madness that exhibit his characteristic venom and wit.

See also Jello Biafra, Lard. [jy/dgs/i]

DEADLY HUME

Basement Tapes EP (Aus. Bulb) 1985
Me, Grandma, Iliko and Hilarian (Aus. Phantom) 1987
Lonely Mr. Happy EP (Aus. Phantom) 1988

The Deadly Hume takes its name from the Hume Highway, a dangerous and desolate stretch of roadway between Melbourne and the band's hometown, Sydney. The band's sound derives from the clash and grind of urban Australia and the swampy darkness of American blues, although the records encompass everything from a cappella spiritual choruses to acoustic guitar. On tracks like "Fine Line" (from Me, Grandma, Iliko and Hilarian), the rhythm-sticks-from-hell percussion clatter and sawing bass lines could almost let the music pass for a lost outtake from Fireman's Curse-era Hunters and Collectors (Hume lead vocalist Greg Perano was in H&C at the time) while the swampy fuzz guitar and squealing chords of "My Head Feels Like It's Been Hit by a Train" drag the band through an intense and slithery Amer-Aussie version of '80s blues-rock.

The Nick Cave-esque "48 Coffees in 24 Hours" intersperses shouts of "I'm nervous nervous nervous" with brash striptease horns and mumbled stream-of-coffee vocals, capturing the wiped-out frazzle anyone who's overdosed on java will recognize. "The Trains Kept Shunting" (from Grandma) pounds with a soft, insistent drum pulse as what sounds like a box filled with sand shuffles and guitars peal out sheets of feedback and hard, clear chimes. Like impressionist painters working in sound instead of oils, the Deadly Hume have the marvelous ability to turn pop songs into art without leaving a stuffy aftertaste.

Besides a reprise of "48 Coffees," the six-song Lonely Mr. Happy 12-inch contains such equally colorful Hume-isms as "Miss Haversham," "Bed, Bread and Humour" and the absurdly political "The Queen and the President." [e]

DEAD MILKMEN

Big Lizard in My Back Yard (Fever-Enigma) 1985 ●
Eat Your Paisley! (Fever-Restless) 1986 ●
Bucky Fellini (Fever-Enigma) 1987 ●
Instant Club Hit (You'll Dance to Anything) EP (Fever-Enigma) 1987 ●
Beelzebubba (Fever-Enigma) 1988 ●
Metaphysical Graffiti (Enigma) 1990 †

Philadelphia has been the subject of many jokes, but the mildly punky Milkmen, a homegrown insult machine with a snotty attitude and a grasp of modern society's cultural monstrosities, bring their own whoopie cushion to the party. On a lightweight foundation of plain, unfancy rock music, the Milkmen don't focus on individual victims so much as unleash their bratty irreverence in scattershot volleys.

The reckless insults and putdowns on Big Lizard in My Back Yard connect most memorably on "Bitchin Camaro," a catchy cocktail-jazz/hardcore hybrid that tastelessly makes light of AIDS while satirizing teenagers, the Doors and sports car owners. Overall, the record's sense of humor is stupid and only spottily amusing.

Eat Your Paisley! makes no great effort to be funny or offensive, yet manages to convey a sense of satire by painting bizarre B-movie tales like "Moron," "Beach Party Vietnam" and "The Thing That Only Eats Hippies." The group's wacky observations of stereotypes and artifacts are vague but astute; the music is expendable but never less than presentable.

Bucky Fellini is a relatively expansive effort with guest musicians, improved songwriting and such dementedly parodic cultural concepts as "Nitro Burning Funny Cars," "Going to Graceland," "(Theme from) Blood Orgy of the Atomic Fern" and "Instant Club Hit (You'll Dance to Anything)." Rodney Anonymous is a self-assured if unmusical vocalist; Joe Jack Talcum leads the guitar-based band through the artless tunes with easygoing aplomb.

The Instant Club Hit EP offers three mixes of that vindictively funny number (including the all-percussion "Boner Beats"), plus the previously unreleased "Ask Me to Dance" and tracks that were CD bonuses on the first two albums.

The Milkmen's skimpy charms run very thin on Beelzebubba, an album with precisely three assets: a great title, amusing artwork and the catchy but stupid "Punk Rock Girl." (Who told these guys that the Beach Boys did "California Dreaming"?) Otherwise, the lyrics are totally unfunny, and the music is too dull to matter. Although Metaphysical Graffiti can likewise manage some clever song titles ("If You Love Somebody, Set Them on Fire," "In Praise of Sha Na Na," "I Tripped Over the Ottoman"—a song about Rob Petrie), the songs (some merely one-joke fragments) they refer to are disappointingly lame. Gibby Haynes makes a guest appearance on "Anderson, Walkman, Buttholes and How!" [i]

DEAD OR ALIVE

Dead or Alive EP (nr/Black Eyes-Rough Trade) 1982

Sophisticated Boom Boom (Epic) 1984 •

Youthquake (Epic) 1985 •

Mad, Bad, and Dangerous to Know (Epic) 1987 •

Rip It Up (Epic) 1988 •

Nude (Epic) 1989 •

Pete Burns, Dead or Alive's cross-dressing poseur/leader/singer, can claim historical credit in the second Liverpool explosion—he was in a brief but seminal band with Julian Cope and Pete (Wah!) Wylie before founding Nightmares in Wax, the developmental predecessor to Dead or Alive. The early EP finds him searching for meaning and truth while attempting to appropriate Jim Morrison's vocal style; it's murky, to say the least.

Sophisticated Boom Boom includes a totally horrible and gratuitous remake of KC and the Sunshine Band's "That's the Way (I Like It)"—and that's as good as the album gets. Burns sings as if his atavistic urges ("What I Want," "You Make Me Wanna," "I'd Do Anything") were the stuff of Shakespearean drama; the backing is slickly competent dance-rock bereft of personality. (Of possible interest to fact fans: Mission founder Wayne Hussey was a onetime Dead or Alive member and co-wrote much of the album's material.)

Burns' bunch subsequently issued a couple of better 45s, including "You Spin Me Round (Like a Record)," that cut a lot of the crap and substituted a kinetic, catchy pop sensibility. Produced by the frighteningly shallow but super-successful Stock, Aitken and Waterman team, Youthquake contains "You Spin Me Round," as well as the equally appealing "Lover Come Back to Me" and a few others that show how much fun Dead or Alive can be. On the other hand, the record has its bad patches, proving the impossibility of pinning Burns down to any steady style or quality level.

Mad, Bad, and Dangerous to Know employs the same hitmaking mechanics to conjure up a consistent—extremely consistent—synthesized pop-dance groove which is easy to grasp and hard to hold. That the pulsing sequencer patterns on the nine lengthy soundalikes vary little may be seen as either a functional advantage or a mark of limited creative effort. "Brand New Lover" is giddily hummable for the first three or four minutes but then gets dead boring; the rest of this shoddy effort isn't as catchy.

For Rip It Up, Dead or Alive selected eight songs (which means all of the good ones—and then some) from the two preceding albums and gave them a new coat of studio paint, adding and subtracting bits to make the originals more dancer-friendly. Leaving that apt monument to the S-A-W hit factory, Burns took control and produced Nude with drummer Steve Coy. In step with the disco times, the album's percolating hi-NRG songs acknowledge both house music and glib techno-soul, downplaying Burns' more melodic pop instincts for a peppy, unchallenging dance record. [jg/i]

See also Mission (UK), Sisters of Mercy.

DEAF SCHOOL

2nd Honeymoon (nr/Warner Bros.) 1976

Don't Stop the World (nr/Warner Bros.) 1977

2nd Honeymoon/Don't Stop the World (Warner Bros.) 1977

English Boys/Working Girls (Warner Bros.) 1978

2nd Coming: Liverpool '88 (nr/Demon) 1988

Liverpool's sprawling nine-strong (later eight) Deaf School seemed like an ideal candidate for success in the quiet pre-punk doldrums of 1976. Visually, the group had more than enough going for it to guarantee a high profile in the British press. The cast included pasty-faced guitarist Clive Langer, who sported wire-rims and wrote most of the melodies; the Rev. Max Ripple, a keyboardist done up like a parson; and no less than three lead vocalists: mustachioed Enrico Cadillac, a Bryan Ferry disciple; Bette Bright, who suggested a somewhat frumpy torch singer; and the suave, acid-voiced Eric Shark, who sang as Humphrey Bogart might have.

Despite its slick, full sound, 2nd Honeymoon has the clear markings of a first effort. The band cleverly mixes the melodrama of Roxy Music with the music hall vivacity of middle-period Kinks, but many of the songs are bloated and their intent unclear. As on later LPs, crooner Cadillac takes the lion's share of the vocals, making tales of modern desperation ("What a Way to End It All") and lost love ("Room Service") into intriguing, if incomplete, exercises in style.

Deaf School came into its own on Don't Stop the World, trimming the excesses of 2nd Honeymoon and adding impressive new elements. While Cadillac continues to warble romantically, Shark belts out a vicious rocker ("Capaldi's Cafe") and Bright shines in a rare solo spot, the after-hours ballad, "Operator." (The two LPs were issued in the US as a double-pack in 1977.)

Although English Boys/Working Girls offers more of the same, it's the product of a band running out of steam. In a return to the clutter of their debut, Deaf School favors theatrics over substance; accounts of modern violence like "Ronny Zamora (My Friend Ron)" and "English Boys (With Guns)" are more exploitation than insight.

The Deaf School alumni remained busy after the band folded, making it—in retrospect—a startling fount of promise. Enrico Cadillac formed the Original Mirrors under his civilian name, Steve Allen, and recorded two albums. Bassist Steve "Average" Lindsey founded the Planets and did the same. Bette Bright cut a delightful solo record, produced by Clive Langer who, with his partner Alan Winstanley, earned additional production credits (not to mention scads of money, no doubt) with Madness, Elvis Costello and Dexys Midnight Runners. Langer also formed a band and released records.

Most of the original cast—including Langer and all three singers—reunited for 2nd Coming, a surprisingly solid live set of the band's "hits" ("Taxi!", "What a Way to End It All," etc.), as well as a robust cover of the Flamin' Groovies' "Shake Some Action" and an elegantly comy "Blue Velvet." A great souvenir for fans who felt Deaf School never got enough attention in its prime, this might even gain 'em some new admirers, though probably not too many: the curious blend of Roxy Music-style drama and vaudeville hokum seems as reassuringly offbeat as ever. [jy]

See also Clive Langer and the Boxes, Original Mirrors.

DEATH COMET CREW

See Dominatrix.

DEATH CULT

See Cult.

DEATH FOLK

See Pat RuthenSmear.

DEATH OF SAMANTHA

Strungout on Jargon (Homestead) 1986

Laughing in the Face of a Dead Man EP (Homestead) 1986

Where the Women Wear the Glory and the Men Wear the Pants (Homestead) 1988 •

Come All Ye Faithless (Homestead) 1989 •

This Cleveland quartet won't get anywhere on its clothes sense. The goofy garb displayed on record covers (drummer Steve-O's wardrobe is particularly egregious) constantly undercuts the seriousness of purpose in their music, but maybe that's the idea. Regardless, they're one of the strongest rock bands around, with an ace double-guitar attack that can satisfy the most fundamental riff-lust but never descends to sodden cliché. Singer/guitarist John Petkovic has always been a sharp and acerbic songwriter, and lately his lyrics have taken on a literary cast that suits them very well.

After a couple of singles on the band's own label, Strungout on Jargon displays the pronounced influence of Cleveland gods Pere Ubu, particularly on "Coca Cola & Licorice," where Petkovic's clarinet squeals recall the soprano sax and recorder yelps on various Ubu LPs. Too much of the record falls into a generic alternative slot but, as debuts go, Strungout is definitely promising.

Although the group sounds as if it's in a holding pattern, Laughing in the Face of a Dead Man is quite an entertaining circle. The cover of "Werewolves of London" is hysterical in several senses of the word, and the tape-and-instrumental "American Horoscope and the Bad Prescription" shows more Dub Housing-era Ubu influence.

The group laid off for two years before recording Where the Women Wear the Glory and delivered a real stunner. Aside from Petkovic's choked-sounding-because-he-can't-do-it-any-other-way vocals (DOS's only potentially off-putting feature), the band divests itself of any outré tendencies and just rocks out with fire, anger and intelligence. The opening "Harlequin Tragedy" is Petkovic's best song, wrapping a perfect hook around a dour, on-target metaphor for modern life and summing it up with "We're living for nothing/and dying for less." Every cut is outstanding; in one last bow to tradition, the album includes a fairly lavish (strings and everything!) cover of Peter Laughner's "Sylvia Plath."

Come All Ye Faithless is considerably denser—even darker and more difficult than Women—but equally rewarding. Not as rollicking as the previous record, it presents a terrific set of songs with which to crawl into a dark corner. [gk]

DEEE-LITE

World Clique (Elektra) 1990 •

The celebute scene of New York nightlife—a narcissistic world of put-on glamour that elevates club-goers, record-spinners and obsessive poseurs of all outrageous stripes into creative entities whose only talent is for self-promotion—is bound to feed on itself from time to time. Jumping off the dancefloor to become momentary pop stars, this colorful trio—a female singer and two exotic male DJs—is really good at vogueing in ginchy psychedelic clothes and (with help from folks like Bootsy Collins and sax legend Maceo Parker) arranging for a solid, bass-driven technotronic club beat with various accents. But that's all there is to Deee-Lite, and World Clique, a smug and artless in-joke, boils down to "Groove Is in the Heart," an irritating tagline that managed to become a huge hit single. [i]

DEFENESTRATION

Defenestration EP (Slow Iguana) 1986

Dali Does Windows (Relativity) 1987

TODD WALKER

Thrown Away EP (Owl House) 1989

CHAINSAW KITTENS

Violent Religion (Mammoth) 1990 •

Born in Norman, Oklahoma, a college town whose other '80s musical export is the astoundingly strange Flaming Lips, Defenestration had an approach to complement their odd name (it means "the throwing out of a person or thing through a window"). Lead singer Tyson Meade was weaned on B-movies, Janis Joplin and the Birthday Party; the rest of the band combined influences from T. Rex and Cheap Trick to the Byrds. Recorded for almost no money and released on a loan from Meade's mom. Defenestration is quirky and brilliant, a result of being far more ambitious than its means. "Cut Your Soul in Half" has grand ideas and sprawling gothic piano; "Slaughterville" is a showcase for Meade's Joplinesque shriek; "Heartthrob" is a subtly written and beautifully melodic discourse on the politics of being an outcast.

Mismatched with heavy-metal producer Randy Burns, Defenestration sacrificed some of its originality on Dali Does Windows in favor of enjoyable but less imaginative rock-pop. Traces of the title's surrealist bent crop up in "Tripping Drag Queens" and "Cars in Trees"; "Bedlam Revisited" is as sad and truthful a love song as anyone could want. "D.Y. Wanna (Bubblegum)" is a friendly mutation of "Bang a Gong (Get It On)."

Guitarist Todd Walker split in 1987 and resurfaced two years later, trailing some other Defenestration defectors, with Thrown Away, a modest collection of country-rock numbers. Upon the original band's official demise, Meade formed a new quartet, the Chainsaw Kittens. The self-produced Violent Religion is a glam-rock sewer of cross-dressing, trash culture, Freudian psychology ("Mother (of the Ancient Birth)") and horror film scenarios. Although Meade remains an inventive songwriter, the most interesting thing about the Kittens is their lipstick and gimmicky hangups. [kss]

DEF JEF

Just a Poet with Soul (Delicious Vinyl) 1989 •

Articulate and clear-spoken, with varied, warm soul-funk tracks that layer percussion and samples over bouncing bass and drums, fast-talking California rapper Def Jef (Fortson) makes a fine first showing on the largely self-produced Just a Poet with Soul. But egotism is its own reward, and Jef's endless boasts about his rhyming skill make the first side and most of the flip a lyrical snore. Only the Afrocentric "Black to the Future" (biting the Steve Miller Band's "Fly Like an Eagle") and the urban tableau of "Downtown" break the mold, demonstrating the kind of material that should be the rule—not the exception—next time. [i]

CARMAIG DE FOREST

I Shall Be Released (Good Foot) 1987

CARMAIG DE FOREST + BAND

6 Live Cuts EP (Fr. New Rose) 1988

Undoubtedly the rockiest singer/songwriter ever to exercise his muse on ukulele, San Francisco (more recently Los Angeles) Carmaig de Forest emerges on his debut album (produced with creative electric ferocity by Alex Chilton) as a strong, independent voice with plenty on his mind. Following in the tradition of John Hiatt and Billy Bragg, de Forest is a brilliant folk-based tunesmith who synthesizes rock and other influences into a characteristically wry style that owes something to both Jonathan Richman and the Violent Femmes. (Not coincidentally, de Forest has toured with two of the three Femmes.) Chilton surrounds his (Lou) Reedy singing and polite ukework with a simple, effective band that deftly realizes such sharp-tongued originals as "Big Business," "Hey Judas" and "Crack's No Worse Than the Fascist Threat" at assorted energy levels. I Shall Be Released exudes confidence, righteous political anger and enormous originality.

The French live EP was recorded at a pair of October 1987 San Francisco gigs with a bassist, drummer and guitarist. The material includes two tracks from the album, a thrilling cover of "You Can't Always Get What You Want" and three previously unwaxed tunes, one of them quite good. [i]

DEFUNKT

Defunkt (Hannibal) 1980 •

Thermonuclear Sweat (Hannibal) 1982

In America (Antilles New Directions) 1988 •

Avoid the Funk... A Defunkt Anthology (Hannibal-Carthage) 1988 •

Led by singing trombonist Joe Bowie (younger brother of famed jazz trumpeter Lester Bowie), the seven-man Defunkt peddled black funk with dry bounce. Originally formed as James Chance's horn section, Defunkt also had ties with the world of avant-garde jazz, putting it in a unique and culturally resonant position. Defunkt isn't a revolutionary breakout, but does include the super-catchy (if obtusely titled) "Blues," a number which was extremely popular around New York at the time. Thermonuclear Sweat, named for a track from the first LP, is sweeter-sounding and jazzier, smoothed out by Joe Boyd's sage production.

Following a two-year stint spent living in the Caribbean, Bowie returned to New York and formed a new six-piece Defunkt, which debuted on vinyl in mid-'88. Except for a drum sound that suggests tin cans in a carpet showroom, In America is brilliant, a dynamic rock-funk-jazz concoction of popping bass, neck-melting guitar (by Bill Bickford, Ronnie Drayton and Tomas Doncker) and Bowie's inventive trombone figures and up-close-and-personable vocals. Stretching further afield, "In America" uses found-sound comments from Richard Nixon, John Kennedy and others to make its political point. While Defunkt has nothing at all to do with heavy metal, fans of Living Colour would do well to check out this alternate mixture of overlapping ingredients.

Avoid the Funk revisits Defunkt's early-'80s work with one track from Defunkt ("Make Them Dance"), three from Thermonuclear Sweat (including "Avoid the Funk" and a version of the O'Jays' "For the Love of Money," both of which feature Vernon Reid as one of two guitarists), a 1981 single ("The Razor's Edge"/"Strangling Me with Your Love (Revisited)") and smoking 1983 live performances of two songs from the first LP. [jw/i]

DEL AMITRI

Del Amitri (Chrysalis) 1985 •

Waking Hours (nr/A&M) 1989 (A&M) 1990 •

This Glasgow quartet fell victim to excessive hype before the release of its debut album. Many who went overboard praising the group on the strength of two singles and a few live performances unjustly criticized the LP—ten quirky, country-flavored tracks, drenched in crystalline Rickenbacker guitar and Hugh Jones' spare production—for being too traditionalist. Although admittedly a conventional construct, few play this style with as much heart as Del Amitri. These lads love what they do, and you can hear (and feel) it in such rollicking songs as "Crowns in the Wheatfield" and "Sticks and Stones Girl."

Apparently chastened by public indifference to the first album, Del Amitri returned with a more "adult" set of tight, commercial tunes the second time around. Waking Hours' clean vocal harmonies and smooth craftsmanship suggest careful attention to middlebrow faves like the Police and Dire Straits, though the LP is nowhere near as stuffy. The acoustic lament "This Side of the Morning" has the rough, heartrending beauty of early Rod Stewart and could provide somebody with a big mainstream hit. [ag/jy]

DE LA SOUL

3 Feet High and Rising (Tommy Boy) 1989 •
Me Myself and I EP (Tommy Boy) 1989 •
De La Soul Is Dead (Tommy Boy) 1991 •

If you could put a jigsaw puzzle together in such a way that a completely different picture appeared, you'd have an idea about De La Soul's originality, about how the trailblazing trio blends standard rap elements into something totally unique. Humorous without being too goofy, libidinous without being sexist and sociopolitically aware while steering clear of any doctrinaire posturing, these three young Long Islanders—Posdnous (Kelvyn Mercer), Trugoy the Dove (David Jolicoeur) and P.A. Pasemaster Mase (Vincent Mason) cross a number of musical boundaries on their debut album, ingeniously produced by the studio architect of the daisy age, Prince Paul of Stetsasonic. Laid-back tempos and dayglo graphics paint the group as hip-hop hippies. (But a borrowing from the Turtles' "You Showed Me" earned De La the legal ire of Flo and Eddie: ain't the '80s a bitch?)

Where other bands use samples as rhythmic backdrops or musical exclamation points, De La Soul employs what it can find on records by everyone from Steely Dan to Otis Redding to the Coasters to shape melodies: this is one rap album you can hum. With over twenty tracks, it's easy to find highlights on 3 Feet High and Rising. For giggles, try "Jenifa Taught Me" or "Do as De La Does"; the former takes the surprising position of a man being sexually victimized by a smarter, more experienced woman, while the latter lambastes everything about hip-hop's language and performance styles in just under two minutes. If you just want to dance to a soulful groove, check out "Tread Water," "Say No Go" or "Me Myself and I." More than anything, 3 Feet High and Rising—uncovering a previously unknown oasis between gang wars, party people and Saturday morning cartoons—is further proof of rap's diversity and creative vitality. A must.

The Me Myself and I 12-inch contains four versions of the title cut: two instrumentals, the original LP track and a drastically different beat-heavy mix with enough samples replaced to give it a completely new feel and melody. The three other tracks are all great, with messages dissing clichéd hip-hop lingo, violence, drugs and status symbols. [dgs]

DEL-BYZANTEENS

Del-Byzanteens EP (nr/Don't Fall off the Mountain) 1981
Lies to Live By (nr/Don't Fall off the Mountain) 1982

Up from the murky pit of New York's art-punk scene came the Del-Byzanteens, a quartet with stylistic threads running back through Television and the Velvet Underground and the ability to give their dark, urgent arrangements a cinematic pan. (Not a surprising attribute, considering the future career of keyboardist Jim Jarmusch.) An unsettling cover of the Supremes' "My World Is Empty" on the three-track EP is a slice of jungle paranoia with voodoo percussion, ominous group vocals that sound like a satanic mass and a guitar quotation from Perry Mason.

The group's inventive resources are spread a little thin, though, on Lies to Live By. The quirky B-52's guitarisms and hyper-disco thump of "Draft Riot" and dour facelessness (Joy Division variety) of the title track dull the impact of both "War," a clever union of funk-punk drive with protest lyrics from Caribbean calypso records, and the gray soul of the old Jaynettes' shuffle, "Sally Go Round the Roses." Both "Lies to Live By" and a new version of the EP's "Girl's Imagination" were used by Wim Wenders in his movie The State of Things. [df]

DEL FUEGOS

The Longest Day (Slash) 1984
Boston, Mass. (Slash-Warner Bros.) 1985 •
Stand Up (Slash-Warner Bros.) 1987 •
Smoking in the Fields (RCA) 1989 •

The Longest Day is a solid album bursting with high-energy beat'n'billy-inflected guitar rock. The songs are memorable without pandering; the playing is simple but never simplistic. From the quivering "Nervous and Shakey" (which opens the LP) to the ominous hipshake "Call My Name" (which ends it), this is a full, therapeutic dose of mature, unaffected rock'n'roll recalled from the '50s and '60s built strictly in and for the '80s.

Besides atrocious art direction, the Boston band's second LP is a hair more self-conscious than its first. In view of the momentary popularity of "working class" rock, Boston, Mass. sounds like it was designed to please a wide audience, although it actually recalls the old Animals more than anything else. On the other hand, the Del Fuegos can't be accused of making any radical readjustment.

The stupid fold-out back cover gimmick of Stand Up should serve as a warning: this messy indulgence (with guest appearances by Tom Petty, James Burton and others) hasn't got any worthwhile songs or intrinsic personality. Dan Zanes' voice is largely shot; the spunky band of music-crazy street kids has turned into a grizzled bunch of oldtimers who run through this tired assortment of horned-out grit-rockers like a rejected beer commercial. Following the album, drummer Woody Giessmann (ex-Embarrassment) became an ex-Del Fuego.

It isn't the illusion of reclaimed youth that makes Smoking in the Fields such a welcome improvement over Stand Up, it's the discovery that maturity isn't such a bad thing. Secret weapon harp demon Magic Dick (ex-J. Geils Band) sends out waves of soulful moaning on some of the songs as horns and tasteful strings gussy up others; the lively variety show of smoking R&B, Stonesy guitar rock, rugged pop and whiskey-scarred soul (shades of Mink DeVille) scores on all four fronts. The record gets on such a roll that even a tender love song Zanes croons (with guest harmony by Rick Danko) over acoustic guitar, cello and mandolin backup turns up in the middle of Side B without any loss in momentum. Producer Dave Thoerner deserves plenty of credit for fitting the Fuegos' music into appropriate arrangements (that couldn't simply be worked out on-stage) and still coming up with a full-bodied album that sounds completely natural. [i]

See also Embarrassment.

GABI DELGADO

See Deutsche Amerikanische Freundschaft.

DELINQUENTS

See Lester Bangs.

DEL-LORDS

Frontier Days (Enigma-EMI America) 1984

Johnny Comes Marching Home (Enigma-EMI America) 1986

Based on a True Story (Enigma) 1988 ●

Howlin' at the Halloween Moon (Restless) 1989 ♣

Lovers Who Wander (Enigma) 1990 ♣

ERIC AMBEL

Roscoe's Gang (Enigma) 1988 ●

Musical pioneers at the East Coast's westernmost boundaries, New York City's Del-Lords stand in the forefront of back-to-the-roots countrified urban rock-'n'-roll, skipping any particular stylistic imitation to enthusiastically bang out perceptive tunes of hard times and true love. With guitarist Scott Kempner (once Top Ten of the Dictators) penning the material but occasionally relinquishing lead vocals to guitarist Eric "Roscoe" Ambel, the Del-Lords embrace rock's basic components with such skill and verve that they outshine most everyone else on the scene. The best tracks on Frontier Days—"Burning in the Flame of Love," "Feel Like Going Home" and a cover of Alfred Reed's "How Can a Poor Man Stand Such Times and Live"—are true-blue and brilliant.

The songs on Johnny Comes Marching Home—produced with no ill effects by Pat Benatar's husband, Neil Geraldo—are better and the playing is even more confident and enthusiastic. Lyrical topics stretch from the sunny optimism of "Heaven" to the misery of "Love Lies Dying," with stops along the way for a kidnapped victim of terrorism ("Against My Will"), a love letter to a real-life '60s radio DJ ("Saint Jake") and a veteran's wistful view of militarism ("Soldier's Home"). The music runs from a greasy Link Wray instrumental to a wittily disguised rewrite of "If I Had a Hammer." Not trendy, twangy, corny or self-conscious, the Del-Lords simply play the old-fashioned way, with a sharp ear for melody and choruses that don't evaporate after a few listens. Considering that the quartet's roots are essentially a quarter-century old, they sure make it sound fresh and young.

Geraldo's commercially conscious production work loses sight of the Del-Lords' essence—making them sound in spots like a bland bar band straining to cop a chart hit—but Based on a True Story is generally another proud blast from the Bronx heartland. "We don't follow fashion," writes Kempner (in "The Cool and the Crazy"), "Who needs it when you got style?" Oddly, the band's intrinsic savoir faire is less apparent than ever before, perhaps a casualty of too many guest stars. Mojo Nixon's participation in "River of Justice" adds helpful absurdity to the proceedings, but when a multi-tracked Syd Straw and others sing the chorus, it's easy to forget exactly whose record this is. "Judas Kiss" (a Kempner composition sung by Ambel) is a tremendous song despite the wrongheaded treatment, and others—"Whole Lotta Nothin' Goin' On," "Cheyenne" and the twelve-bar "A Lover's Prayer"—find the Lords firmly in charge.

Despite a good head of electric steam, the seven live cuts captured on Howlin' at the Halloween Moon don't raise much dust. Somewhere between the weak choice of material (so-so originals like "I Play the Drums" and "The Cool and the Crazy," plus the Flamin' Groovies' "Jumpin' in the Night" and "Tallahassee Lassie") and the energetic but ineffectual performances, the record winds up flat and plain. Even the magnificent "Judas Kiss" comes off routine. And who stole the Del Lords' hyphen?

With Kempner delivering the most passionate and mature songs of his career, Lovers Who Wander, co-produced by Thom Panunzio and bassist Manny Caiati, eliminates the commercial anxiety to focus all of the band's strengths onto one great record. Besides the haunting "Learn to Let Go" (lyrics by David Roter), the melancholy "Wild Boys" and the sensuous, organ-cheesed "About You," the album features a remarkable choogling translation of the Dictators' classic "Stay with Me," slowing the song down to reveal new emotional depths that make it wholly appropriate to this resonant, downcast album.

Soon after the release of Lovers Who Wander, Ambel left the Del Lords to devote himself to a fulltime solo career. He had already tested the waters in 1988 with Roscoe's Gang, a casual good-time rock-'n'-roll session with the Skeletons, Peter Holsapple and like-minded friends. Co-produced by Ambel and Lou Whitney, cover versions of Swamp Dogg, Bob Dylan and Neil Young songs meld with Whitney, Kempner and Ambel originals in the joyful party atmosphere. [i]

See also Dictators, David Roter Method.

DELMONAS

Comin' Home Baby EP (nr/Big Beat) 1984

Hello, We Love You EP (nr/Big Beat) 1984

Dangerous Charms (nr/Big Beat) 1985

Delmonas 51 (nr/Empire) 1986 (nr/Hangman) 1988

The Delmonas (nr/Hangman) 1989

Do the Uncle Willy (Skyclad) 1989

Originally known as the Milkboilers, Sarah, Hilary and Louise first clustered around a microphone to sing girl-group backup on records by the Milkshakes, for whom they doubled as groupies and squeezes. After taking lead chores on "Boys," they cut their own two-volume set of four-song 7-inches "with musical accompaniment by Thee Milkshakes" for Big Beat (then the 'Shakes label), collecting these songs plus three outtakes and five new tracks cut for a radio program into a debut album, Dangerous Charms. The predominance of '60s classics only emphasizes their flat vocals, but on the Hampshire/Childish tunes, written with such limitations well in mind, they ignite, sparkle (and sputter) with undeniable enthusiasm and, well, charm.

Following a short period of inactivity resulting from a clash of headstrong personalities regarding leadership and direction, the band resurfaced as Delmonas 5!, now down to two members (renamed Miss Ida Red and Ludella Black) with the original Caesars lineup as backing. Recorded louder, harsher and with considerably more confidence, the mood on Delmonas 5! is darker, with a greatly bolstered Nancy Sinatra tuff-girl quotient.

The Delmonas has the same raw immediacy, perhaps even accentuating it, and includes the first album's lost title track plus a pair of songs redone with French lyrics, again relying two parts on real oldies and one part on new oldies from assorted Childish bands—the most darkly melodic tunes thereof. Do the Uncle Willy collects slightly less crisp sounding tracks from the two previous LPs plus a pair of alternate versions and a previously un-Monaed Billytune for their most "flattering" LP, a spirited soundtrack for dreary afternoons and bleary aftermidnights. [ab]

See also Pop Rivits, Thee Mighty Caesars.

VICTOR DE LORENZO

See Violent Femmes.

DEL RUBIO TRIPLETS

Three Gals, Three Guitars (Cabazon-Blue Yonder Sounds) 1988

Too talented and successful an act for Broadway Danny Rose (but almost as kitschily inspired as piano-pecking birds), these three middle-aged sisters create a delicious platter of unintended camp by blithely bringing their '40s vocal stylings to bear on a bizarre program of material. After covering easy-listening classics like "Hey Jude" and "Light My Fire" for starters, the guitar-strumming Del Rubios move right into sublime weirdness with selections from the Bangles ("Walk Like an Egyptian"), Pointer Sisters ("Neutron Dance") and Pet Shop Boys ("What Have I Done to Deserve This?"). [i]

DEPECHE MODE

Speak & Spell (Mute-Sire) 1981 •
A Broken Frame (Mute-Sire) 1982 •
Construction Time Again (Mute-Sire) 1983 •
People Are People (Mute-Sire) 1984 •
Some Great Reward (Mute-Sire) 1984 •
The Singles '81-'85 (nr/Mute) 1985 •
Catching Up with Depeche Mode (Mute-Sire) 1985 •
Black Celebration (Mute-Sire) 1986 •
Music for the Masses (Mute-Sire) 1987 •
101 (Mute-Sire) 1989 •
Violator (Mute-Sire-Reprise) 1990 •

MARTIN L. GORE

Counterfeit EP (Mute-Sire) 1989 •

RECOIL

Hydrology and 1 + 2 (Mute-Enigma) 1989 ◊

Born in England's new romantic movement, Basil-don's Depeche Mode (a French magazine translation of "fashion dispatch") immediately proved capable of making flawlessly captivating electro-pop tunes with simple formulae. What set them apart at the outset (how times change) was their complete reliance on synthesizers, offering post-modernistic gloss to comfortably familiar (but new) material. Over the years, the increasingly successful—and not deeply talented—group has grown pompous and gloomy, embracing heavier and denser sounds, but they've never abandoned the singles format or lost their appeal to teenage girls.

Not coincidentally, the best songs on Speak and Spell were the UK hits: "New Life," "Dreaming of Me" and the smash "Just Can't Get Enough." Oblivious to innovation or deep thinking, the album is simply a good, catchy collection of modern dance tunes.

Despite the dire predictions that followed songwriter Vince Clarke's departure to form Yazoo (and later Erasure), Depeche Mode pressed on, essentially unhampered, as a trio to make A Broken Frame, which has similar virtues, tempered with some deviation from course. David Gahan's vocals are stronger, and while funk forms the rhythmic base of "My Secret Garden," a Japanese tinge is given to "Monument" and "Satellite" centers around a ska beat. The rest of the album varies to a small degree from the dancemania of earlier work without abandoning it—a characteristic midpoint between experimentation and repetition.

Expanding back to a quartet, with Martin Gore continuing as the main songwriter, Construction Time Again exposes a mature outlook, dropping the simplistic pop tunes for a more intellectual, challenging approach. The transition is not altogether smooth. "Everything Counts" offers a bitter denunciation of the (presumably music) business world and "Shame" is a heartfelt confrontation with responsibility. Other tunes ("Pipeline," "More Than a Party") are less probing, although the former has interestingly industrialized music and chanted vocals. (The Construction Time Again CD adds a bonus cut.)

Although the reasons for its assembly are unclear, People Are People (not released in the UK) is a compilation of post-Clarke tunes, drawing five of its tracks from the two preceding LPs and the rest from singles. Not a cohesive album, it does contain prime material blending synth-rock with real-life and industrial noises to make truly modern pop music.

Some Great Reward is Depeche Mode's best record, containing everything from the bitter religious doubt of "Blasphemous Rumours" to the socio-sexual role playing of "Master and Servant" and the egalitarian "People Are People." Seamlessly blending unsettling concrete sounds—like synthesized factory din and clanking chains—into the music, the group achieves a masterful music/life mix few of the same mind have approached.

As Depeche Mode's international stature grew to awesome proportions, two compilation albums—The Singles and Catching Up—were released. The former, issued in the UK, is a fine collection of thirteen familiar items: the cassette and CD add two more. The American release has most of the same tracks (excluding those already compiled on People Are People), but includes "Fly on the Windscreen" (also on Black Celebration) and "Flexible." Complicated enough? (Actually, the quartet's discography is far more involved, thanks to numerous EPs. "Blasphemous Rumours," "Everything Counts," "Get the Balance Right," "Love, in Itself," "A Question of Time," "Never Let Me Down Again" and others have all been issued on 12-inch and CD with non-LP bonus tracks, many of them live.)

Depeche Mode has tackled many different lyrical concerns in the past, but never have they done such a consistently downcast record as Black Celebration. Except for intermittent bouts of romanticism and a bluntly political protest ("New Dress"), the songs are filled with doubt, disgust and depression, an attitude reinforced by their dirgelike, minor-chord constructions. Unfortunately, many of the tunes resemble each other; shards of the same melody turn up repeatedly. There's a certain grim power to this work, but it's not one of their more appealing or accomplished albums.

Music for the Masses is marginally brighter in temperament, but shows the band running low on creative juice. Unambitious, bland and forgettable, the album displays little beyond Gore's emotional anxieties and Gahan's vocal limitations. The tense "Behind the Wheel" and "Never Let Me Down Again" are the only powerful songs here, and both have dumb lyrics and skimpy, underdeveloped melodies. "Pimpf," a turgid piece of operatic nonsense, ends the album on a most unpromising note. The CD has four bonus tracks.

Given the band's underwhelming concert presence—a woeful mixture of pre-programmed synthesizers and Gahan's unsteady vocals—the advisability of a live album (and a theatrical documentary filmed by D.A. Pennebaker) can only be weighed against the potential for profit. Young Depechites undoubtedly could care less about the inadequacies of 101—four sides of hits, etc., recorded at a 1988 stadium show in Pasadena, California—but this is hardly a significant item in the canon. (The CD adds three.)

Possibly the result of extensive touring, the dismal Violator matches Music for the Masses for shallow blandness. Gore's obvious dearth of meaningful ideas dominates this handsomely performed, tuneless waste; the lack of external input locks the insular group in a closed creative circle that shows no signs of opening or expanding. Worse than routine music (the LP's best song, "Enjoy the Silence," is totally self-derivative; the idiotic "Clean" uses a monotonous sequencer line borrowed from Kraftwerk), the vague egocentric lyrics ("Blue Dress," "World in My Eyes," "Clean") no longer make any effort to be about anything. In the record's sole flash of wit, "Personal Jesus" (also released on a five-mix CD) uses a jaunty rock'n'roll swing, but "reach out and touch faith" isn't a very profound message.

Gore gave songwriting a rest for his solo EP, an insubstantial 12-inch of obscure cover versions. (The traditional "Motherless Child" and Sparks' "Never Turn Your Back on Mother Earth" are the most familiar songs in his repertoire; other selections come from Durutti Column and Tuxedomoon.) Skillful but occasionally running too contrary to the material. Counterfeit demonstrates two things: that Gore can carry a tune and that he has no artistic ambitions beyond Depeche Mode's usual style.

Alan Wilder debuted his solo project, Recoil, in 1986 with 1 + 2, a British 12-inch later expanded by further efforts and reissued on the longwinded Hydrology and 1 + 2. Accented with ephemeral electronic and vocal noises, Recoil's monotonous instrumentals drone aimlessly in several idioms: loud synthesizers, soft synthesizers, pinging synthesizers, chanted vocals and piano. The first track recalls Tubular Bells, and that's the most provocative feature of this hissy-sounding record. [sg/i]

See also Erasure, Yazoo.

DESCENDENTS

Fat EP (New Alliance) 1981 (SST) 1988 ●
 Milo Goes to College (New Alliance) 1982 (SST) 1988
 Bonus Fat (New Alliance) 1985 (SST) 1988
 I Don't Want to Grow Up (New Alliance) 1985 (SST) 1988 ●
 Enjoy! (New Alliance-Restless) 1986
 All (SST) 1987 ●
 Liveage! (SST) 1987 ●
 Two Things at Once (SST) 1988 ♀
 Hallraker (SST) 1989 ●

In search of the metaphysical All, LA's Descendents did their growing up in public. The group debuted as a young power-pop trio on a likable 1979 single ("Ride the Wild") but then didn't return to vinyl until 1981, when a four-piece lineup issued the smart, fast and punky 7-inch Fat EP: six fleeting (total time 5:52) Black Flag-like culture statements like "Wiener schnitzel," "I Like Food" and "My Dad Sucks." (Besides Fat's re-release on 12-inch, cassette and CD-3, the EP and preceding single were combined as Bonus Fat.)

When singer Milo Aukerman left the band to study biochemistry in San Diego, the Descendents pressed on and issued Milo Goes to College, a promising hardcore album with a few dumb bummers amidst the fun. Then drummer Bill Stevenson—the primary Descendent, as it were—went off to join Black Flag, and the group evaporated for a while.

When they reassembled in mid-1985, Milo, Stevenson, bassist Tony Lombardo and ex-SWA guitarist Ray Cooper (who had switched to vocals after Milo's departure) recorded I Don't Want to Grow Up. This excellent, surefooted punk album knowingly uses the hyperkinetic musical idiom as a disguise for intelligent, sarcastic songwriting. Melodies (a few border on power pop) and substantial lyrics drift around the edge of obnoxiousness without entirely giving in to it.

Enjoy! features a new bassist and proves that even talented bands with positive attitudes are not immune to gratuitous vulgarity and base stupidity. The title song is a childish paean to farting, complete with audio vérité effects; two others reveal a deeply juvenile attitude towards women. On the other hand, a peppy version of Brian Wilson's "Wendy" is spectacular; most of the originals—including the satirical "Hürtin' Crüe," the Anglo-popping "Get the Time" and the surly noise of the seven-minutes-plus "Days Are Blood"—are at least near-excellent, reflecting the band's loping musical strides. (Curious art note: the titles listed on the back cover have virtually nothing in common with the record's contents.)

The disappointing All starts with one of the shortest songs on record: the 1-second title track. Leading new bandmates, Milo and Stevenson take a raunchy guitar-rock excursion (excepting the almost acoustic "Impressions") that downplays the band's melodic side. "Clean Sheets" and "Pep Talk" have solid tunes and invigorating performances, but "Van," "Coolidge," "Ice-man," the high-concept "All-o-gistics" and lengthy "Schizophrenia" are basically loud and witless, substituting routine guitar work for character. (After the Descendents arrived on SST, the label reissued their prior work. Two Things at Once is a CD/cassette pairing of Milo Goes to College and Bonus Fat.)

Before vanishing into All (get the drift?), the Descendents released a live album, recorded in 1987 at First Avenue in Minneapolis. Liveage!'s eighteen rushed songs (more on the cassette and CD) review the band's entire repertoire in a noisy, frenzied attack that's both fun and exciting.

As Stevenson explains in the informative liner notes, Hallraker ("the other live Descendents LP") was released to redress fan complaints about material that wasn't on Liveage! Partially recorded at the same Minneapolis show (the remainder is from a California date a few months earlier), Hallraker serves up sixteen different songs with exactly the same sloppy punk panache.

See also All, Black Flag, Last. [i]

DESPERATE BICYCLES

New Cross New Cross EP (nr/Refill) 1978

Remorse Code (nr/Refill) 1979

Along with the far more heralded Soft Boys, this legendary post-punk Chocolate Watch band predated the neo-psychedelic movement by several years with a series of self-released singles and an LP of ten pop gems. The interplay of agile bass and near-perfect guitar on Remorse Code helps kick things along, and songs like "Sarcasm" and "It's Somebody's Birthday Today" are utter classics. Sly humor is exhibited with silly tape and sound effects, not to mention the guitarist's savvy pseudonym: Dan Electro. [dgs]

JIMMY DESTRI

See Blondie.

DESTROY ALL MONSTERS

See New Order.

DEUTSCHE AMERIKANISCHE FREUNDSCHAFT

Ein Produkt der D.A.F. (Ger. Warning-Atatak) 1979

Die Kleinen und die Bosen (nr/Mute) 1980

Alles Ist Gut (nr/Virgin) 1981 •

Gold und Liebe (nr/Virgin) 1981 •

Für Immer (nr/Virgin) 1982 •

Deutsche Amerikanische Freundschaft (nr/Virgin) 1988 •

GABI DELGADO

Mistress (nr/Virgin) 1983

ROBERT GÖRL

Night Full of Tension (Elektra) 1984

Originating as Düsseldorf art-punk cacophony cult-ists in the holdout hippie culture of late 1970's Germany, D.A.F.—originally a group, but generally known internationally as the duo of instrumentalist Robert Görl and singer Gabi Delgado-Lopez—broke away to find success in Europe as a synthesizer-and-dance band.

Ein Produkt der D.A.F. is an apocalyptic eruption of sound announcing the end of the German Republic, with shrieking, colliding overdubbed synths and guitars. The electro-metal is simultaneously repellent and compelling. Die Kleinen und die Bosen, D.A.F.'s first international release (following the group's relocation to London), modifies the electronic chaos with an eye towards the modern dance. Material is more polished, with anarchic synthesizer work slowly integrating a solid, defined beat.

Alles Ist Gut abandons the band's Faustian tendencies for cerebral dance music, polished to a metallic shine by producer Conny Plank. Typical funk rhythms are replaced by industrial pulses (trains, etc.); some vocal experimentation casts the band onto shrewd pop turf, despite decidedly libidinous lyrics. Gold und Liebe perfects the advances of Alles Ist Gut, emphasizing the punchy use of drum-box and de-emphasizing other instruments, creating a robot void that eerily strands the guttural vocals.

D.A.F.'s final album, Für Immer, breaks the pattern, with a variety of styles from funk to rock'n'roll to distorted metal drone before returning to a dance blow-out for the final track. While it's all interesting, none of these excursions are displayed long enough to be truly impressive. The inner spaces of earlier work are filled by a range of instruments, including very gentle bells. Like all of D.A.F.'s LPs, it is sung in German. The 1988 release is a fourteen-song compilation from the band's three Virgin albums; the CD adds two alternate versions as bonus tracks.

Delgado and Görl dissolved their partnership to pursue solo careers (reuniting temporarily in 1985). For his album, Gabi enlisted some top names in modern German music—Conny Plank and Can's Jaki Liebezeit among them—to make slick but expendable disco, topped off with obsequious lyrics, mostly about sex.

Görl's flat singing (mostly in English) on Night Full of Tension leaves a lot to be desired. The fact that he wrote all of D.A.F.'s music doesn't appreciably aid these dull lumps of spare, rhythmic, go-nowhere electronics. The LP's only notable success is "Darling Don't Leave Me," an angst-ridden duet with Annie Lennox (returning a favor—Görl was the drummer on one track of Eurhythmics' first LP) that bears an unpleasant air of sado-masochism. Lennox appears on several other songs as well. [sg/i]

DEVIANTS

See Mick Farren, Social Deviants.

WILLY DEVILLE

See Mink DeVille.

DEVINE & STATTON

The Prince of Wales (Bel. Crépuscule) 1989 (Rockville) 1990 •

Cardiffians (Bel. Crépuscule) 1990 •

This bewitching team-up of two soft-spoken conjurers—Ian Devine from the obscure-but-rated-by-Morrissey early-'80s Manchester group Ludus, and Allison Statton, the unforgettably nondescript voice of Wales' Young Marble Giants and Weekend—has produced the apotheosis of well-bred, thoughtful, slightly neurotic folk-pop. Devine writes sharply observed songs about his polite, slightly pampered, rather befuddled peers and the ordinary heartbreaks and tragedies that attend their daily lives. As voiced by Statton, the songs' ironies register tenderly, while her intelligence whisks away any wistful treacle a lesser interpreter might bring to them. The Prince of Wales has very spare, guitar-based arrangements which give the simple melodies a nice lilt; the duo manages to keep things sounding light but not wispy.

Cardiffians adds NYC downtowners Curtis Fowlkes, Roy Nathanson and Marc Ribot on, respectively, trombone, sax and guitar, and New Order's Peter Hook joins on bass (presumably he approved of the duo's much-softened cover of "Bizarre Love Triangle" on The Prince of Wales). Despite the expanded lineup, the sound is still remarkably spare, and all of the songs have a lingering quality that goes beyond the incisive lyrics and deceptively simple music. In light of Devine's first-rate material here, the cover of Crystal Gayle's "Don't It Make My Brown Eyes Blue" is cute but rather pointless, although it does allow the duo to demonstrate that sensitive, insightful treatment can't salvage a fundamentally bad song. That misstep aside, Cardiffians is wonderful. [gk]

See also Young Marble Giants.

DEVO

Q: Are We Not Men? A: We Are Devo (Warner Bros.) 1978 •

Be Stiff EP (nr/Stiff) 1978

Duty Now for the Future (Warner Bros.) 1979

Freedom of Choice (Warner Bros.) 1980 •

Dev-o Live EP (Warner Bros.) 1981

New Traditionalists (Warner Bros.) 1981

Oh, No! It's Devo (Warner Bros.) 1982

Shout (Warner Bros.) 1984

E-Z Listening Disc [CD] (Rykodisc) 1987 •

Total Devo (Enigma) 1988 •

Now It Can Be Told (Enigma) 1989 •

Smooth Noodle Maps (Enigma) 1990 (Dutch East Wax) 1991 •

Hardcore Vol. 1 74-77 (Rykodisc) 1990 •

Devo Greatest Hits (Warner Bros.) 1990 •

Devo Greatest Misses (Warner Bros.) 1990 •

MARK MOTHERSBAUGH

Muzik for Insomniacs Volume 1 (Enigma) 1988 •

Muzik for Insomniacs Volume 2 (Enigma) 1988 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

KROQ-FM Devotees Album (Rhino) 1979

When the new wave floodgates opened in the mid-'70s, all sorts of strange things flowed out. From Akron, Ohio, came five neurotic overachievers (the Mothersbaugh and Casale brothers on guitars and bass, plus a drummer) armed with an ambitious and effective robotic sound, and a carefully contrived (but intentionally inarticulate) theory about the de-evolutionary state of things to come. Beginning with a pair of groundbreaking 1977 singles on the group's own Booji Boy label, the efficiently organized quintet delivered itself encased in a self-willed pseudo-culture, with industrial uniforms, loopy graphics, promotional films, lingo, merchandise, etc. Whether sharp social commentators on the breakdown of modern life or just canny media marketers selling a total pop package (a distinction that was soon revealed to be essentially meaningless), the spudboys quickly won a revered place in rock's brave new world, serving as a major influence for many.

Produced with energetic precision by Brian Eno, Devo's first album is the most concentrated presentation of the band's nebulous theories. "Jocko Homo," "Mongoloid" and "Shrivel Up" employ a cold, assembly-line jerkiness to drive home their defeatist attitudes and post-modern morality. The same nervous energy fuels more emotional messages like "Uncontrollable Urge," "Gut Feeling," "Sloppy (I Saw My Baby Gettin')," the science-fiction paranoia of "Space Junk" and a hilariously high-strung (and de-sexed) version of the Rolling Stones' "Satisfaction," with a mechanical-sounding drum beat that would frizz Charlie Watts' hair.

Be Stiff collects Devo's two indie 45s—four tunes that had been re-recorded for Are We Not Men?—and the third single, done for Stiff.

The second full-length album, Duty Now for the Future (produced by Ken Scott), doesn't score as many bull's-eyes as the first, but includes two Devo anthems of malaise, "Blockhead" and "S.I.B. (Swelling Itching Brain)." Amid disturbing signs of portentousness, Devo turns their bemused eyes to the mating ritual on "Strange Pursuit," "Triumph of the Will" and "Pink Pussycat."

The self-produced Freedom of Choice is the band's most evocative pairing of words and music. Setting aside metaphysical foofaraw, the flowerpot-wearing fivesome contrast choppy keyboard licks ("Girl U Want," "It's Not Right," "Snowball") and ironic but unalienated perceptions ("Gates of Steel," "Planet Earth," "Freedom of Choice"). Their tolerance was rewarded with a subversive hit single from the LP, "Whip It."

Issued to milk the success of "Whip It," Dev-o Live is thoroughly redundant. Five of the six songs, including you-know-what and an instrumental version of "Freedom of Choice," are from the preceding LP; only "Be Stiff" is new to album buyers. Hardly a jamming band, Devo live sounds just like Devo in the studio, except maybe a bit sloppier.

Devo's been soft-pedaling their philosophy (on record, at least) since Freedom of Choice's breakthrough. Musically they're still held back by a stunted sense of melody, although the dance-rock movement created a favorable climate for a rhythmic orientation and probably led to Devo's increasing emphasis on a whopping beat. Unfortunately, the conducive atmosphere coincided with reduced artistic ambition; Devo has never made another album half as good as any of the first three.

New Traditionalists has a couple of attention-getting songs ("Love Without Anger," "Going Under," the extraordinarily attractive "Beautiful World") and, for early birds, a bonus 45 of Lee Dorsey's "Working in the Coal Mine." Most of it, though, is clinical-sounding laissez-faire techno-dance stuff, less-than-compelling lyrics set to a metronomic 4.4 beat.

After wobbling through that uneven effort, Devo went straight to the dogs. Oh, No! It's Devo, pointlessly produced by Roy Thomas Baker, failed to slow the creative slide; the mocking optimism of "That's Good" and the nonsense lyrics of "Peek-a-Boo!" are the sole songs worth recalling from it.

Shout's only memorable contribution is a version of the Jimi Hendrix oldie, "Are You Experienced?" Songwriters Mark Mothersbaugh (guitar/keyboards) and Gerald Casale (bass/keyboards) are evidently going through a dry spell of drought proportions, substituting clichés for the razor-sharp observations that used to keep Devo intriguing as well as danceable. Did Devo succumb to its own devolution?

Little was heard from the group proper for years after Shout, although Casale and the Mothersbaughs remained active, writing and performing music for films and television (including Pee-wee's Playhouse; in '90, Mark M. reached prime time with the theme to Davis Rules) and producing outside projects. Their Los Angeles (where the group relocated in the early '80s) recording studio has also been busy. Under the Devo banner, however, the only music to surface during this era was the woefully mistitled E-Z Listening Disc—an hour-plus CD containing the group's smugly straight-faced (and barely recognizable) schlocky instrumental remakes of nineteen Devo songs—originally available on the mail-order-only E-Z Listening cassettes.

Returning to active duty in the late '80s, the group made the self-produced Total Devo, the most notable aspect of which (besides the replacement of drummer Alan Myers by ex-Gleaming Spire/Spark David Kendrick) is its simultaneous four-format release: LP, cassette, CD and digital audio tape (DAT). Otherwise, it's little more than a timid and bland imitation of the countless bands Devo inspired. Lost and confused, Devo attempts to sound like Human League, sings of being a "Disco Dancer" with far too little irony and essays a witless cover of "Don't Be Cruel" that reveals a rather profound absence of humor. (The release of a "Disco Dancer" 12-inch with "3 Ivan Ivan remixes unavailable elsewhere" underscores just how far the once-visionary group has fallen.)

Dead in the water and sinking fast, Devo cast out Now It Can Be Told, a three-sided live album recorded in Los Angeles at the end of 1988. Lackluster, impotent performances turn what should have been a holding action into a total waste of time. Kendrick's unimaginative routine drumming derails "Gut Feeling" and "Satisfaction," while a drastically revised arrangement of "Jocko Homo" turns it into an annoyingly slow, acoustic sway.

The appearance of a song called "Devo Has Feelings Too" on Smooth Noodle Maps might have promised some sort of cathartic statement about the group's mental state, but the lyrics add nothing to the title. Still, the keyboard-heavy album gets back to muscular techno-dance music with less ambition and more success. Although the hi-NRG bounce of "When We Do It" is as numbingly bad as anything in Devo's past, Smooth Noodle Maps is not without its moments. Maybe it's the result of reduced expectations, but "Post Post-Modern Man" and "Spin the Wheel" have some of the melodic freshness and enthusiasm (if not the ironic intelligence) long absent from Devo's records. But why cover "Morning Dew" in sequencers and rhythm machines?

The home-brew 4-track recordings (many of songs that have never surfaced in any other authorized form) from the band's formative years that comprise Hardcore demonstrate how strong a stylistic foundation Devo had constructed before revealing itself to the world. Besides the Booji Boy versions of "Satisfaction," "Mongoloid," "Jocko Homo" and "Social Fools" and a few half-baked duds, this frequently fascinating document reveals such intriguing castoffs as the lyrically twisted "Uglatto" (Gene Vincent meets Marc Bolan in the next century), "Stop Look and Listen," the boogie-happy "I'm a Potato" and "Buttered Beauties."

Serving as both a reminder of Devo's past greatness and the evident futility of its continued existence, a matching pair of compilations was issued at the end of 1990. Rather than assemble one full-fledged retrospective, the band created two halves that don't add up to much, for real fans or casual spuds. Cherry-picking the early albums, finding the few good bits in the later ones and then adding on some token representatives of albums that contain nothing of merit, Greatest Hits (the titular reference obviously isn't strictly commercial) gathers up sixteen tunes, from "Jocko Homo" and "Satisfaction" through a remixed version of Shout's "Here to Go." Except for the overly generous inclusion of three tracks from Oh, No!, the selection isn't bad, but anyone owning the first four albums can skip this package without missing anything significant.

For slightly more serious Devophiles, Greatest Misses puts together early LP tracks (some of which—"Blockhead," "S.I.B.," "Devo Corporate Anthem"—could rationally have replaced later stinkers on the Hits volume), such artifacts as the Booji Boy singles of "Be Stiff" and "Mechanical Man" (a minute shorter than the version on Hardcore) and a rude 1979 UK B-side, "Penetration in the Centerfold." The standard stuff is nice but redundant, and most of the rarities aren't rare enough (a couple of them are on Hardcore) to make this record a necessity.

Far removed from his work in Devo, Mothersbaugh's two Muzik for Insomniaks releases consist of simple synthesizer instrumentals selected from what is evidently a massive cache of similar works. (One pre-uses the titles' sleeplessness refers more to the artist than the listener.) That many of these peppy exercises basically sound alike—some on Volume 1 pointedly suggest Asian musical styles and others take a jazzy turn, but none would sound awfully out of place accompanying the Pee-wee's Playhouse credits—isn't really a hindrance, although two volumes is really one too many. Most of Mothersbaugh's non-verbal haikus are pleasant and relaxing, with enough compositional backbone to warrant attention. Each volume ends with an audio index: a brief snippet of each track.

The Devotees Album is a compilation of goofball cover versions, parodies of and tributes to Devo submitted to an LA radio station by a motley assortment of local amateur musicmakers. [su]

HOWARD DEVOTO

Jerky Versions of the Dream (IRS) 1983

LUXURIA

Unanswerable Lust (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1988 •

Beast Box (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1990 •

Following influential and estimable careers with the Buzzcocks and Magazine, singer/writer Devoto continued his quest for independence as a solo artist. Using Dave Formula and Barry Adamson from Magazine, as well as other players, Devoto offers his idiosyncratic worldview and original musical outlook on ten tunes that range from funky ("Topless," "Way Out of Shape") to ethereal ("Rainy Season") to playful ("I Admire You") and beyond. Full appreciation of Jerky Versions of the Dream requires a bit of forbearance and effort, but few artists make music this careful and intelligent.

Five years on, Devoto's next project—Luxuria, a duo with a Liverpoolian musician known as Noko—leads him deep into the waters of overbearing pretension. On Unanswerable Lust, his lyrics quote Proust, spout français, mention Rimbaud and announce such silliness as "I am the street where you live." Even when the music—an unfocused mix of acoustic delicacy and walloping techno-dance crud—takes hold, it's swamped by Devoto's melodramatic quaver.

Beast Box has a higher proportion of quality tracks (credit better songwriting) but the music occasionally slips into a dull void, despite some excellent guitar work by Noko. Worse, Luxuria's dalliance with dance beats (as on "The Beast Box Is Dreaming" and the old "Jezebel") falls flat. But Devoto's specialty—sparse, turgid tundras—still pervades tracks like "Stupid Blood," "Ticket" and "We Keep on Getting There," and numerous quietly dramatic touches lurk in the album's shadows. [1/r]

See also Buzzcocks, Magazine.

DEXY'S MIDNIGHT RUNNERS

Searching for the Young Soul Rebels (EMI America)

1980 •

Don't Stand Me Down (Mercury) 1985 •

KEVIN ROWLAND AND DEXYS MIDNIGHT RUNNERS

Too-Rye-Ay (Mercury) 1982 •

Geno (nr/EMI) 1983 + 1986 •

KEVIN ROWLAND

The Wanderer (nr/Mercury) 1988 •

Young Man EP (nr/Mercury) 1988 •

BUREAU

The Bureau (Atlantic) 1981

Although changing Dexy's from a nouveau American-soul band to an ethnic Irish folk group may make singer/mastermind Kevin Rowland seem a tad fickle, his singleminded devotion to whatever direction he selects gives the Birmingham group's first two albums a powerful sense of care and dedication that many infinitely more consistent musicians never achieve

Searching for the Young Soul Rebels, recorded by the original eight-man lineup, boldly challenged the direction new wave had taken in 1979 and '80, long before soul music and horns became trendy. Taking inspiration from soul men like Sam & Dave and Geno Washington, onetime punk singer Rowland anted up a batch of emotionally powerful songs that work equally well as heartfelt tributes and modern creations. Despite the enormous amount of image-building that surrounded it, Searching is a fine, expressive album with no bad tracks.

Following a rancorous disagreement with Rowland, five bandmembers (including ex-Merton Parka keyboardist Mick Talbot) split with him at the end of 1980 and formed the Bureau, augmenting their instrumental resources with singer/songwriter Archie Brown, a guitarist and a trombone player. While Rowland began rebuilding Dexys, the Bureau cut an eponymous LP (produced by Pete Wingfield) that has some of the old band's signature horn sound and rhythmic punch but not much else of note.

Too-Rye-Ay, overalls and country instruments notwithstanding, is not as radically different at its core from Searching as it might first appear. Fronting a totally new band (including ex-Secret Affair drummer Seb Shelton) augmented with a two-piece fiddle section and a vocal trio, Rowland retains some of the earlier throaty horn work to make a few tracks (one a spot-on cover of Van Morrison's "Jackie Wilson Said") sound a lot like the first LP. Elsewhere, fiddles, banjos, accordion and tin whistle take over to make jolly, rollicking jug band fare—the enormous worldwide hit "Come on Eileen" and "The Celtic Soulbrothers," for instance. Other songs mix metaphors and become something more indescribable. Although a truly weird smorgasbord, the clever melodies and arrangements keep it consistently entertaining.

Dexys' only album release in either 1983 or 1984 was Geno, a worthwhile compilation of early singles (A- and B-sides) assembled by the band's former label.

To everyone's lasting discredit, the band didn't evaporate then and there: Don't Stand Me Down (forever to be recalled, if at all, as the "accountants" album due to yet another image change, this time into conservative pinstripes) is a torpid snore that denies entertainment on every level. With titles like "Knowledge of Beauty" and "Reminisce Part Two," the seven lengthy songs with absurd lyrics aim for a literate Van Morrison-like looseness, but end up just falling asleep or apart.

As if Don't Stand Me Down hadn't made the hairline between pop prodigy and pretentious twit abundantly clear, The Wanderer (credited to "Kevin Rowland of Dexys Midnight Runners," with a cover depicting the artist as a mustachioed dandy) treads that border as selfconsciously as ever. Recorded in New York with MOR fusion-jazz specialist Deodato producing, it's a fairly restrained collection of relatively unpretentious lounge-pop, a bit samey but not entirely without charm. Ironically, these songs cry out for the Big Pop treatment that Rowland might have felt more comfortable giving them prior to the critical debacle of Don't Stand Me Down. [1/hd]

DHARMA BUMS

Haywire (PopLlama Products) 1989 (PopLlama

Products-Frontier) 1989

Bliss (Frontier) 1990 •

Nothing fancy or stylish about this unassuming Portland, Oregon, quartet—just tight little melodic rock (plus country and punk) tunes played with youthful enthusiasm and sung with endearingly gangly harmonies. On the band's promising but not quite convincing debut, the mixture of Jeremy Wilson's mislocated drawl and guitarist Eric Lovre's kinetic inventiveness sets the Dharma Bums on a college-radio road between non-Byrdsy R.E.M. and a soft-center Replacements.

Bliss finds the band sporting a trebly guitar attack (with occasional feedback), erasing the first album's twinkier tendencies in an uncut aggressive rock attack. Several songs are tersely effective ("Pumpkinhead," "Far From Gone," "B-Sting," the countryfied "A Place to Be"), but too many others are tunelessly below the good-to-go level for this samey-sounding record to be anything like its title. [f]

DHARMA BUMS

Everything Is Always Alright (Telegraph Hill) 1987

This trio from the Boston area might have had the name first, but it's unlikely that their LP ever got distributed much beyond Rhode Island. Owing little to contemporary trends, Everything Is Always Alright is solid, post-pub folk-rock that would surely bring a smile to the lips of diehard Brinsley Schwarz fans. (All six of 'em.) [bc]

D.I.

Team Goon (Reject) 1981 (Triple X) 1986 •

Ancient Artifacts (Reject) 1984 (Triple X) 1986 •

Horse Bites Dog Cries (Reject) 1985 (Triple X) 1986 •

What Good Is Grief to a God (Triple X) 1988 •

Tragedy Again (Triple X) 1989 •

Like other bored suburban youths in Southern California, Orange County's D.I. voices disgust with a stagnant society through sarcastic humor, cynicism and punk's tension-relieving pace. Despite a revolving-door lineup that, for a time, featured Adolescents guitarist Rikk Agnew, D.I.'s general sound—propulsive melodies, careening guitars and snide upfront vocals by Casey Royer—has remained fairly constant.

Team Goon finds Royer, Agnew and future guitarist John Bosco (here on bass) delivering an open-palmed critique of the '80s degeneration. "Nuclear Funeral" inserts Biafran spoken satire, while "Venus De Milo" and the ironically understated "Richard Hung Himself" (a song D.I. contributed to Penelope Spheeris' wasted-youth movie, Suburbia, in 1984) both discuss suicide. The 1986 reissue adds three songs; the CD includes a rendition of Devo's "Uncontrollable Urge."

Ancient Artifacts has thin production and uneven material, but manages to come through powerfully in spots. While "(I Hate) Surfin' in H.B." is merely a teenage whine, "Spiritual Law" unplugs the TV generation's vacuous culture, and "Hang Ten in East Berlin" brings subtle harmonies into play. (The cassette and CD tack on a batch of live tracks, including a cover of the Adolescents' "Kids of the Black Hole.")

The much-improved Horse Bites Dog Cries (which includes remakes of "Hang Ten" and "Spiritual Law") best showcases D.I.'s gripping intensity. "Living in the U.S.A." jabs at the nation's bleakest qualities, while "Johnny's Got a Problem" portrays a troubled youth about to explode. The lightning tempo on "Youth in Asia" offsets the vocals' robotic repetition, a contrast to the sweeping "oh-oh" chorus in "Perverv Nurse." The CD and cassette add "Bedrock."

With Royer and guitarist Bosco as D.I.'s core, What Good Is Grief to a God intermittently maintains Horse's song quality but is elsewhere lackluster. "No Mistakes" shakes a clenched fist at the world; "Girl Scout Camp" again rings with Jello-like satire. Overall, it's a good record impaired by predictable songwriting and guitarist Mark Cerneka's unimaginative solos. The cassette and CD add "She's Obscene"; the CD also boasts a remake of "Johnny's Got a Problem."

If nothing else, Tragedy Again (which throws "On Our Way," an odd '60s hippie send-up, into the usual hydrospeed attack) vouches for the band's stamina. Bonus track: "Cocktail Flu." [mg]

DIAGRAM BROTHERS

Some Marvels of Modern Science (nr/New Hormones) 1981

Disordo 45 EP (nr/New Hormones) 1982

Something like XTC (but lacking their musical smarts or stellar wit), the Diagram Brothers—of the Manchester art-noise family encircling the Buzzcocks' New Hormones label—play dissonant weirdness with lyrics about current events. Song titles pretty much say it all: "Isn't It Interesting How Neutron Bombs Work," "I'm a Policeman," "I Didn't Get Where I Am Today by Being a Right Git." While the poorly produced music only hints at talent hidden behind the quartet's anti-music self-indulgence, it's actually the four-sheet insert, containing detailed fold-cut-paste directions for assembly into a portfolio about the record, that evinces real cleverness.

The 10-inch EP adds four more episodes of whimsical wordplay ("I would like to make/A special toast/To my new toaster") and more appealing instrumental oddity (do I hear a tuba?) to the Diagram Brothers' legend. [i]

DICKIES

The Incredible Shrinking Dickies (A&M) 1979 •

Dawn of the Dickies (A&M) 1979 •

Stukas Over Disneyland (PVC) 1983 (Resistless) 1988 •

We Aren't the World! [tape] (ROIR) 1986

[CD] (ROIR-Relativity) 1990 •

Killer Klowns EP (Enigma) 1988 •

Great Dictations (A&M) 1989 •

Second Coming (Enigma) 1989 •

For some reason, the lovable Dickies—a Mad magazine-flavored punk self-parody—never endeared themselves to as large an international cult as the Ramones have. Perhaps this mob of San Fernando Valley zanies has always been too unserious and knowing of their own idiocy, while their New York counterparts may well be playing it straight. (That's cooler, apparently.)

The Incredible Shrinking Dickies is a burst of late-'70s hyperactive California punk. But while most such bands display surly conviction, giddy good humor dominates here. Seven of the thirteen tracks clock in at under two minutes each, and everything sounds the same, from covers of "Eve of Destruction," the Monkees' "She" and Black Sabbath's "Paranoid" to originals like "Mental Ward" and "Rondo (The Midget's Revenge)."

On Dawn of the Dickies, the title of which, like that of its predecessor, alludes to a junk-movie classic, something wonderful happens: the Dickies get genuinely good. By slowing down the tempo a half step and coming up with strong melodies, guitarist Stan Lee and crew manage to reel off one maniacally catchy gem after another. The pop-culture slant is the same as before (check the delirious "Manny, Moe and Jack" and "Attack of the Mole Men"), and the mood is equally flippant, but this is a record with staying power.

After a prolonged absence, the boys next popped back into view with a frisky eight-song mini-album. Half of Stukas Over Disneyland dates from 1980, and includes a delightfully garbled version of Led Zeppelin's "Communication Breakdown." The high point of the remaining tracks (cut around 1983) is "Pretty Please Me," a power-pop pearl. Not a work of demented genius like Dawn, but damn good fun.

More oddities and endites can be found on We Aren't the World!, 21 doses of live Dickiedom recorded between 1978 and 1985, plus the raw four-song demo from '77 that, according to Lisa Fancher's belligerent liner notes, got them signed to A&M. Although the recording quality is as varied as the locales, this is a potent dose for fans of chaotic smartassitude.

In 1988, amid endless touring, an apparently recharged (and realigned) Dickies returned with a five-song EP built around the theme song for the cheesy sci-fi comedy Killer Klowns from Outer Space. Included on this fun (if less than inspired) release is a gimmicky remake of Jet Screamer's Jetsons rockabilly classic "Eep Opp Ork (Uh, Uh)," one more item in the Dickies' ever-expanding catalogue of daffy covers. That same year, Restless reissued Stukas with three additional songs, including the long-unavailable "Gigantor."

Concurrent with the release of the first new Dickies album in years, the group's old label unleashed Great Dictations, a haphazard collection of hard-to-find singles and tracks from the first two LPs.

Although hindered by overly fussy production and a worthless, atypically straight rendition of Gene Pitney's "Town Without Pity," Second Coming (only the band's third full-length studio effort in ten years) contains a solid dose of typical nuttiness. A shaggy cover of "Hair" opens the record on an up note which continues through such comic-pop gems as "Cross-Eyed Tammy" and "Dummy Up." Even "Goin' Homo," the normally lighthearted band's sole detour into wrongheaded crudity, is a lowbrow hoot. Oddly, the album repeats two Killer Klowns tracks (one improved by the addition of guest dialogue from singer Leonard Phillips' mom). While hardly the promised resurrection, Second Coming is still a perfectly (dis)respectable showing from one of our national treasures. [jy/i/db]

JAMES LUTHER DICKINSON

See Panther Burns.

DICKS/BIG BOYS

Recorded Live at Raul's Club (Rat Race) 1980

DICKS

Kill from the Heart (SST) 1983

These People (Alternative Tentacles) 1985

SISTER DOUBLE HAPPINESS

Sister Double Happiness (SST) 1988 •

Much of the Dicks' early output can most flatteringly be described as forgettable political punk, yet Gary Floyd's mongrel Texas blues howl and some genuinely hooky snippets certainly snag attention (see Live at Raul's "Hate Police," also recorded as the Dicks' first single and later covered by Mudhoney). These People—recorded following a lineup shift occasioned by the Austin band moving to San Francisco and then everyone but Floyd moving back—displays a massive power shift into amphetamine blues territory, still riddled with hardcore violence but also embracing mood, pacing and proficiency. Including a much-improved tune from the live album the quartet shared with the Big Boys, it qualifies in retrospect as one of the hinge pins in punk's metallic boomerang at the end of the '80s.

Changing name and personnel to further escape the limitations of their past, Sister Double Happiness elaborates on all of the band's previous trends, but bluesier, more melodic, more metallic and more enduring. Heavily steeped in booze and depression and including a serious and sensitive examination of AIDS and its distancing mystique, the debut was also a farewell, as the band broke up soon after; in spiritual disarray, Gary Floyd exited music altogether. After a successful reunion gig in 1990, however, the band (with yet another bassist) released a mediocre Sub Pop 45 pairing a non-descript hard rocker with a tastier, simplified bottleneck blues; an LP on SST was announced for the following year. [ab]

See also Frightwig.

DICTATORS

The Dictators Go Girl Crazy! (Epic) 1975 •

Manifest Destiny (Asylum) 1977

Bloodbrothers (Asylum) 1978

Fuck 'Em If They Can't Take a Joke [tape] (ROIR) 1981

(Fr. Danceteria) 1991 •

Considering that the first Dictators album came out in 1975, scads of credit is due these hearty pre-punk New Yorkers for blazing a trail, melding junk culture—wrestling, fast food, TV, beer, cars, scandal sheets—with loud/hard/fast rock'n'roll and thus creating an archetype that has been adopted and adapted by countless other bands. Although originally formed as a response to the MC5, Flamin' Groovies and the Stooges, the Dictators wound up playing a similarly crucial and inspirational role to the generations that followed them.

Although wavering wildly in terms of style and track-to-track consistency, all four of the band's albums (including the posthumous live tape) are great. As protégés of genius music journalist Richard Meltzer, the Dictators helped translate a lot of intellectual fandom's crazed hypothetical theorizing about rock'n'roll's possibilities into wretchedly wonderful reality.

The Dictators began as a quartet: Teenage Wasteland Gazette publisher Adny Shernoff (vocals/bass), monster guitarist Ross the Boss, Scott "Top Ten" Kempner (rhythm guitar) and Stu Boy King (drums). Crazy-roadie-turned-crazy-singer Handsome Dick Manitoba was photographed in wrestling regalia for the cover of their first LP, guested on some of the tracks and was listed in the credits as "secret weapon." Produced by the Sandy Pearlman/Murray Krugman team responsible for the Blue Öyster Cult, The Dictators Go Girl Crazy! is a wickedly funny, brilliantly played and hopelessly naive masterpiece of self-indulgent smartass rock'n'roll, proof that regular kids could make the major-label record (as if there were an alternative at the time) they always imagined. The album has covers ("I Got You Babe," "California Sun") that unravel history, Shernoff slices of "Teengenerate" life, the Manitoba signature song ("Two Tub Man") and even an original surf-rock gem, "(I Live for) Cars and Girls." An absolute classic doomed to utter commercial oblivion.

Immediately after the album's release, King took a hike and various troubles beset the band, resulting in a two-year delay before a follow-up was issued. By then, Manitoba had become the fulltime vocalist, drummer/singer Ritchie Teeter had come on board and bassist Mark "The Animal" Mendoza had joined, allowing Shernoff to switch from bass to keyboards. Although the sonic quality was mortally damaged in the original mastering (and a CD reissue has yet to appear), Manifest Destiny comes across with another helping of brilliant Shernoff songs like "Steppin' Out," "Science Gone Too Far!" and "Sleepin' with the TV On," plus a stunning rip through the Stooges' "Search and Destroy." The musical approach is less tongue-in-cheek and sounds nearly adult, but any band fronted by Manitoba could hardly fall prey to rock-star pretension.

Falling in with novelist Richard Price, the Dics made some concessions on Bloodbrothers in a last-ditch attempt to turn the band into a commercially viable proposition. Mendoza had already left for greener metal pastures (specifically Twisted Sister); the five-man lineup sent Shernoff back to bass. Despite the band's halfhearted attempt to sell out, the record has its share of great tracks—a heartfelt love song ("Stay with Me"), a tribute to Meltzer ("Borneo Jimmy"), a seamy tale of teenage prostitution ("Minnesota Strip") and an electric statement of purpose ("Faster and Louder," an expansion on the previous album's "Young, Fast, Scientific"). A blinding cover of the Flamin' Groovies' "Slow Death" closes the album, putting a lid on the Dictators studio days and, shortly thereafter, the band as well.

A few reunion gigs played around the New York area in late 1980 and early '81 resulted in the album-length live cassette, which finds the group in fine form, with Manitoba doing a riotous star turn as singer, ring-leader and MC. The Dictators played a tenth anniversary reunion concert in New York in January 1986 and another show the following year. By that point, Top Ten had formed the Del-Lords; Manitoba and Shernoff have continued working together in Manitoba's Wild Kingdom. [1]

See also Del-Lords, Manitoba's Wild Kingdom.

DIDJITS

Fizzjob (Bam Bam-Touch and Go) 1986
Hey Judester (Touch and Go) 1988 •
Hornet Piñata (Touch and Go) 1990 •
Full Nelson Reilly (Touch and Go) 1991 •

Give a sarcastic kid a guitar and a mic, and watch out. This Champaign, Illinois, trio blurts intelligent dumbness over thrashy midtempo rock with an above-average chordal backbone. Showing more enthusiasm than concern for musical precision, singer/guitarist Rick Sims praises "Wingtips" while poking fun at Jerry Lee Lewis and "California Surf Queen" on Fizzjob, co-produced by Iain Burgess. The album's one-take roughness suits the off-the-cuff lyrics; while Sims' rhythm guitar playing has room to develop, he does show plenty of hyperactive promise.

The Didjits ramped up the velocity, focus and ferocity for Hey Judester. Amid a sharply defined rock powerdrive (drummer/brother Brad Sims gets the most-improved star), Rick sings (the surly "Dad"), shouts ("Max Wedge") and shrieks (a frantic freakout cover of Little Richard's "Lucille," to which he adds key-busting piano) increasingly demento lyrics. A powerful dose of Midwest madness (the fishing songs are priceless) that packs a serious punch. The CD contains Fizzjob as a bonus.

Hornet Piñata is a slamming melody-rock LP that—except for the vocals—betrays the Didjits' jokey beginnings. Sims' decisive guitar work shoots spears with stunning velocity and intensity as the pounding rhythm section deftly keeps pace. While most of the blitzed-out songs concern automotive topics (from "Evel Kneivel" to "Gold Eldorado"), the 'Jits stop to cover the MC5 ("Call Me Animal") with considerable skill and Jimi Hendrix ("Foxy Lady") with, er, enthusiasm (and car sounds). [1]

DIED PRETTY

Died Pretty EP (nr/What Goes On) 1984
Next to Nothing EP (What Goes On) 1985
Free Dirt (What Goes On) 1986
Pre-Deity (Aus. Citadel) 1988
Lost (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1989 •
Every Brilliant Eye (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1990 •

There aren't many bands whose names convey their sound as accurately as Australia's Died Pretty. The coupling of dark and hard-hewn guitar chords with light and lilting jangles make the Sydney quintet's records both delicately pretty and devastatingly loud (not at the same time). That contrast and the interplay between scream and shiver is what gives Died Pretty its appeal. One moment Ronald S. Peno is screeching like he's tried on Robert Plant's too-tight pants, the next he's got the voice of Jim Morrison calling from the grave. The band likewise essays both the cat-mating squeals of post-Hendrix guitar with sinister horns and crashing cymbals and a delicate church organ picking out a melody as their voices meld into a vanilla smooth background chorus.

The Died Pretty 12-inch is a compilation of their first two 45s, "Out of the Unknown" and "Mirror Blues." The four-song Next to Nothing, Died Pretty's debut US release, does not contain the song of that name—it's on Free Dirt. The highly recommended album—which contains glimmers of the '60s, Dylan,

Gram Parsons, folk-rock and neo-psychedelic—uses guest contributions of mandolin, violin, pedal steel and sax to magnify the band's own essential variety

Lost opens with two glorious pop tunes that give way to the usual slate of heart-wrenching acoustic numbers ("As Must Have") and pummeling rockers ("Winterland," complete with introductory gob). Sparkling production by ex-Radio Birdman Rob Younger helps put across the alternately delicate and roaring songs. This is the work of a band that, in a perfect world, would rule the album-rock airwaves

Died Pretty went LA (sort of) on Every Brilliant Eye, replacing its longtime bassist and keyboardist and hooking up with producer Jeff Eyrich (Legal Weapon, Rank and File). But as the nine tracks attest, a change of scenery didn't dilute the band's power. In particular, "The Underbelly" (all sprawling six-plus minutes of it) seems a perfect summarization of this fine record's sound: imagine Ian Curtis fronting Crazy Horse. That the cuts on the two most recent albums are practically interchangeable is the mark of either an astonishingly consistent band or one caught in a creative rut. One would like to imagine the former. [e/db]

DIE HAUT

See (Die) Haut.

DIE KREUZEN

Cows and Beer EP (Version Sound) 1982

Die Kreuzen (Touch and Go) 1984 ●

October File (Touch and Go) 1986 ●

Century Days (Touch and Go) 1988 ●

Gone Away (Touch and Go) 1989

Milwaukee's Die Kreuzen is simultaneously one of the most thrilling and conservative exponents of American hardcore. While many quality thrash bands have escaped the genre's brutally circumscribed conventions by delving into metal, psychedelia, funk or bohemianism, this quartet plays punk strictly by the book. Cows and Beer, a six-song 7-inch debut (all of which is reprinted on Die Kreuzen), contains such numbers as "Hate Me," "Pain" and "In School." Although well-played, the music of these brief songs is as familiar as the titles.

On the first LP, armed with an antagonistic attitude and a predilection for velocity, the band burns through 21 explosive songs (riffs, really) that are interchangeable but not redundant. The primary ingredient, hyperkinetic energy, remains constant throughout Die Kreuzen, but the riffs are all different and uncommonly well-articulated. As loud and fast as these guys are, their playing remains crisp. (Dan Kubinski's vocals, however, are utterly unintelligible. What works for Couch Flambeau doesn't fit so well here.)

October File pushes the envelope a bit, diverting the thrash energy into slower, more conceptual outpourings. (It's still loud, raunchy rock, but few of the fourteen songs could be characterized as hardcore.) While Kubinski's impassioned shrieking binds the quartet to a limited realm, the other members—especially guitarist Brian Egeness and bassist Keith Brammer—seem to have other musical directions in mind. (Indeed, the latter joined the more intentionally abrasive Wreck in 1989.) October File and Die Kreuzen were released on a single CD.

With Kubinski's desperate off-key screech still a frequent hazard, Die Kreuzen takes several intriguing detours on Century Days, an album of impressive dynamic range and sonic control. As the band's playing has grown into an atmospheric and powerful noise, the ability to do other things—like drop back for the nearly acoustic plaint of "These Days" and the handsome pop textures of "Slow" (on which Kubinski's singing is perfectly fine), or deliver a serious melodic kick, as in "Elizabeth"—has emerged. Several tracks even part the curtain to reveal horns and piano.

The Gone Away 12-inch has two strong new songs (on a 45 rpm side) of measured rock and (on the 33 rpm reverse) five live'n'loud tracks—including three Century Days numbers—also recorded in January 1989.

See also Wreck.

[j/i]

DIE WARZAU

Disco Rigido (Fiction-PolyGram) 1989 ●

The Chicago duo of Van Christie and Jay Marcus possesses a wide range of stylistic interests (the former has a guitar-rock background; both have experience in house and techno music and a fondness for samples, industrial percussion and a pounding dance beat), all of which come together on the promising Disco Rigido. Though the opening song "Welcome to America" immediately announces "This is a racist nation," the group's political agenda never gets in the way of the fun. Melody is minimal; vocal tracks like "Jackhammer" and "Strike to the Body" tend to involve the shouted repetition of simple phrases (à la Nitzer Ebb). Die Warzau's forte is pure rhythm and samples, and the album offers up many inspired examples, including "Free Radio Africa" and "Y Tagata en Situ." (The CD and cassette contain six bonus tracks.) [tf]

DIFFORD & TILBROOK

See Squeeze.

DIF JUZ

Huremics EP (nr/4AD) 1981 ●

Vibrating Air EP (nr/4AD) 1981 ●

Who Says So EP (nr/Red Flame) 1983

Extractions (nr/4AD) 1985 ●

Out of the Trees (nr/4AD) 1986

The cover of Huremics offers no information whatsoever about this British quartet; the disc consists of four obliquely titled mood-setting improvisational guitar/drums/bass instrumentals. Vibrating Air continues the enigmatic graphic pose and style, featuring four new diminutive atmospheric. While not exactly captivating fare, these slight records are actually quite nice and seem custom-made for scratch mixes, or for use as backing tracks of unwritten songs. Who Says So contains a third quartet of pieces.

The Cocteau Twins help out on the full-length Extractions LP. Robin Guthrie produced, and Liz Fraser became the first vocalist on a Dif Juz record. With the addition of prominent keyboards and sax, it's not as ambient as prior work, shooting instead for a big, ech-oey sound, not unlike Simple Minds. As an instrumental band, Dif Juz must be vigilant not to fall into the nice-sound-few-ideas trap. They get by on Extractions, but just barely.

Out of the Trees combines Huremics in its original form with a partially re-recorded (and entirely remixed) version of Vibrating Air. [i/dgs]

DIGITAL SEX

Essence (Post-Ambient Motion) 1985

Essence & Charm [CD] (Fr. Sordide Sentimental) 1986 •

STEPHEN SHEEHAN

Eyes of the Wilderness (Fr. New Rose) 1990 (Emigre) 1990 •

Working at a safe distance from the music world's stylistic hotspots, this Omaha, Nebraska, trio recasts the delicate art-rock of recent English progressives (the Durutti Column and Eyeless in Gaza come to mind) and the gentler side of Ultravox-y techno-pop with unpretentious Midwest sincerity and small-scale forthrightness. Essence offers nine diverse songs tastefully crafted in shifting instrumental permutations of Dereck Higgins (bass, keyboards, drums, guitar), John Tingle (guitar) and Steve Sheehan (vocals, keyboards). Although colorless at times, the excellently played material is soothing and substantial, and occasionally quite pretty.

The nineteen-track Essence & Charm CD includes the LP, both sides of a mediocre 1983 single, one slightly Devoesque Sheehan solo effort and another album's worth of previously unreleased material that lacks the earlier work's appealing tastefulness. While some of the songs merely overheat the guitar-rock (drummer Kevin Kennedy is no smoothie), things really nosedive on the Cure-accented "Without Hesitation," which inexplicably contains the sound of someone belching. [i]

DIGITAL UNDERGROUND

Sex Packets (Tommy Boy) 1990 •

This Is an E.P. Release EP (Tommy Boy) 1990 •

While Digital Underground's debut album—much of it a sustained conceptual fantasy about safe sex-substitute drugs—isn't as consistently entertaining as the wonderful singles ("Doowutchyalike" and "The Humpty Dance") it contains, this lighthearted Bay Area crew led by the charismatic Shock-G does offer more brain-tickling wit than any other rap band around. Over insinuating party tracks assembled from melodic rock and soul samples (as well as original piano-borne music), the group creates its own land and lingo with true left-field originality. While the Underground has the ingenuity and charm to make even plain creations worth hearing, numbers that feature Shock-G's alter-ego Humpty Hump (a joke-voiced Groucho Marx-mask character with a winning line in self-promotion) delivering his grin-inducing stream of intricate wordplay are simply amazing.

This Is an E.P. Release remixes "The Way We Swing" and "Packet Man" from the LP, adding two excellent new tracks (the safe-sex/universal harmony "Same Song" and the fear-of-matrimony "Tie the Knot") from the soundtrack of Nothing but Trouble (the EP cites the disastrous 1991 film in which the Underground appears by its working title, Valkenvania), an amusing boast ("Nuttin' Nis Funky") and a silly historical debate between Shock-G and Humpty Hump entitled "Arguin' on the Funk." [1]

DILS

Live! (Iloki-Triple X) 1987

The Dils (Lost) 1990

That the Dils' first LP or EP (and first 12-inch) would come out seven years after the group called it quits should serve as a reminder how comparatively small and ineffectual the independent record scene was in the late '70s. Although the now-legendary Dils were one of the best and largest-drawing West Coast punk groups of the original '77-'80 punk explosion, they released only three 7-inch singles during four years of existence.

The trio played 90-second primal-scream maximum punk ditties with fiery politics (a real rarity in '77 Los Angeles); Army brat brothers Chip and Tony Kinman topped them off with Everlyesque harmonies. Culled from two cassette recordings, the sound on the posthumous Live! is hotter than most bootlegs, and the album offers a parade of neo-classics: "I Hate the Rich," "Class War" and an incredibly improved (slowed down) "You're Not Blank." (Fans will also recognize "The Sound of the Rain," a Dils single the Kinmans re-recorded for the second Rank and File LP.) As John Silvers, the longest-running of four drummers who served with the pair, makes his vinyl debut here, even the material that's familiar from the singles (about half) sounds tighter and more powerful. Rarely has a historical document seemed so timely or so current.

Side One of the second posthumous Dils LP compiles the seven tracks from the band's three original singles plus "Blow Up" (previously included on the first Rat Music for Rat People compilation). Where Live! unearthed seven never-before-heard songs, the live Side Two of The Dils adds an additional eight new numbers from a different show (again with Silvers). Although the sound quality isn't as good, the murk can't hide Chip Kinman's lashing guitar on the brutal "Citizen," or the overall vintage punk aggression on "National Guard" and the catchy "You Don't Matter Anymore." Long before Billy Bragg, the Dils mixed crackling socialist politics and personal lyrics, but it's the trio's tight fire that rides it home. The Dils is thus a more complete retrospective, encompassing primitive '77 slam-punk, the band's later, more accomplished attack and the final "Les Dils" single, a stylistic prelude to the Kinmans' subsequent bands, Rank and File and Blackbird. [jr]

See also Blackbird, Rank and File.

DIMENTIA 13

Dementia 13 (Midnight) 1985

Mirror Mind (Midnight) 1987

Disturb the Air (Midnight) 1989

T.V. Screen Head (Midnight) 1990

The Ohioan behind these simple demi-psychedelic garage romps is Bradley S. Warner, a resourceful Syd Barrett fan who frequently displays ingenuity yet never quite ascends to the magical heights (depths?) of retro-pop resonance. With minor assists from keyboardist singer/bassist Louanne Varholick (and, on the third LP, a drummer), the singer/guitarist indulges his nostalgic passions and intellectual interests on songs that have grown from obvious self-consciousness (e.g., "Can You Hear the Walls Melting?" and "Psychedelic Mushroom Cloud Explosion," both from the underwhelming Mirror Mind) to broader, more idiosyncratic concerns.

Produced by Glenn Rehse of Plasticland and featuring a guest appearance by John Fallon of the Steppes, Disturb the Air is Dementia's most impressive effort yet, a record that drops the derivative pretensions for what seems to be a heartfelt expression of Warner's sensitive personality and choppy guitar work.

Revealing an intriguing singer/songwriter side, T.V. Screen Head compiles a dozen previously unreleased four-track solo demos into something less like a Dementia 13 LP than a musical letter from a friend. Accompanying himself simply on acoustic and electric guitar and acoustic and electronic drums, Warner (whose annotation is crucial to enjoyment of the record) muses about old age ("Cannot Compare to This"), quotes at random from a zany magazine article ("The Little Things That Kill You"), takes inspiration from Karl Marx ("All That Is Solid Melts into Air") and makes an oblique art stab at hip-hop ("Ah! Lightning Bolt!").

[i]

DINOSAUR

Dinosaur (Homestead) 1985

DINOSAUR JR.

You're Living All Over Me (SST) 1987 •

Bug (SST) 1988 •

Just Like Heaven EP (SST) 1989 •

The Wagon EP (nr/Blanco y Negro) 1991 •

Green Mind (Blanco y Negro-Sire-Warner Bros.) 1991 •

Modern masters of high-decibel manipulation, this Amherst, Massachusetts, power trio once had difficulty playing more than a single gig in any one club because of their ear-damaging attack. Prior to forming Dinosaur, J Mascis and bassist Lou Barlow played together in Deep Wound (featured on the 1984 Conflict compilation Bands That Could Be God); Mascis switched from drums to guitar and recruited Murph, formerly of All White Jury.

Dinosaur finds the group sounding like ten different bands on as many songs. Mascis, also the primary singer and songwriter, employs an array of electronic devices to squeeze a myriad of variations from harmonic structures, utilizing a variety of tones from loud to louder to loudest. Meat Puppets, Neil Young and Sonic Youth comparisons are inevitable, but Dinosaur's raucous individuality is beyond dispute. After legal threats from the West Coast summer-of-love vets calling themselves the Dinosaurs, Dinosaur politely became Dinosaur Jr.

The band further reduced their already minimal pop factor on the deafening You're Living All Over Me, a brilliant, brutal hailstorm of hyper-distorted riffs and pulverizing basslines that is harder, louder and meaner than nine out of ten heavy metal albums. The multi-sectioned songs change direction so frequently that it's hard to tell them apart, as the power-trio assault is modulated by graceful, looming melodies that rise like mist out of the pedal-mess. The monolithic album is marred only by Barlow's self-indulgent "Poledo." (The CD tacks on the band's tongue-in-cheek B-side rendition of Peter Frampton's "Show Me the Way," a bizarre incongruity, to say the least.)

Bug was preceded by "Freak Scene," J's greatest pop song to date and one of the most enduring indie singles of the decade—the band's bruising delivery of such an accessible melody is half of its enormous appeal. Largely a continuation and expansion upon Living, Bug wanders into folkier pastures with the litigating "Pond Song" and experiments with primal scream on the electric axe-murder of "Don't," a lease-breaker if ever there was one. The album was followed by yet another ironic single, this time a cover of the Cure's "Just Like Heaven" (which fits Dinosaur's style perfectly) and two rough B-sides.

Barlow left to concentrate on his band Sebadoh, and Dinosaur increasingly became the J Mascis Experience. An attempt at an indie-rock supergroup pairing J and Murph with Don Fleming and Jay Spiegel fell apart almost as soon as it was announced (although the ex-B.A.L.L.istics did play on "The Wagon"), and Mascis distracted himself for months with the Velvet Monkeys and Gobblehoof (on whose debut EP he played drums). Emerging nearly three years after its predecessor, Green Mind resolves the personnel problems: Mascis did almost everything (including drums on all but three tracks) himself. The old snarl and brawn are there, but distilled from an older/wiser viewpoint. "The Wagon" is the excellent and inevitable follow-up to "Freak Scene," but the stirring "Thumb" parts previously uncharted waters in the realm of hypnoriff (live dates in early '91 deputised Screaming Trees bassist Van Conner to stunning effect), "Muck" is "our disco song" and "Flying Cloud" sounds like an outtake from Led Zepelin III. A mature effort from a rare talent who hasn't lost his primal urgency. [rg/ja]

See also Gobblehoof, Sonic Youth, Velvet Monkeys.

DIRTY ROSEANNE

See Sex Gang Children.

DISCO 2000

See Justified Ancients of Mu Mu.

DISTRACTIONS

You're Not Going Out Dressed Like That EP (nr/TJM) 1979

Nobody's Perfect (nr/Island) 1980

Decades from now, rock historians will scratch their heads in bewilderment that the Distractions' fine body of work didn't ensure the Manchester quintet a longer lifespan. The 1979 EP (which contains rougher versions of two songs that would later turn up on Nobody's Perfect, plus a live pair—"Too Young" and "Maybe It's Love"—unavailable elsewhere) hints that the group was working from an abnormally broad palette, a sense confirmed by its one fine album.

A lot of records belong to a specific time, but Nobody's Perfect continues to measure up as an ace slab of educated pop rock, right in tune with the ground rules laid down by Blondie, Squeeze and others of that ilk. Part of the problem may be that Nobody's Perfect is too weighty to be passed off as a simple diversion. The band's eclecticism draws on everything from Chuck Berry to Phil Spector to psychedelia—often within the same song—and the vocals tend to be more somber than carefree. "Boys Cry" comes on like a Ronettes tune but delivers none of the upbeat emotional release seasoned pop listeners are trained to expect. Regardless, Nobody's Perfect very nearly is. [ds/vjy]

DIVINE HORSEMEN

Time Stands Still (Enigma) 1984

Devil's River (SST) 1986

Middle of the Night (SST) 1986

Snake Handler (SST) 1987 •

Handful of Sand EP (SST) 1988

STONE BY STONE W/ CHRIS D

I Pass for Human (SST) 1989 •

Following his work with the Flesh Eaters, California's Chris D(esjardins) formed the Divine Horsemen, who debuted on the mostly acoustic Time Stands Still. Without an electric band churning away steadily behind him, he's more appallingly effective than ever. The attractive, understated music belies such sentiments as "Past All Dishonor" and "Hell's Belle"; the all-star supporting cast includes Blasters, Gun Clubbers, an X and Texcala Jones of the Horseheads.

A no-star electric lineup made the similarly low-key and driven Devil's River, a record which, like its predecessor, leaves the major responsibility for conveying fear and loathing to the lyrics, here geared to Western/cowboy topics. Chris shares the vocals with Julie C(hristensen), who adds an X-like harmony to the proceedings. A dusty road, but a fascinating one.

Predominately recorded in and around the same sessions as Devil's River, the oddly compiled and countryfied Middle of the Night features the same crew, with John Doe and D.J. Bonebrake of X guesting on two of the eight cuts. Chris and Julie perform most of the vocals as a relatively mellifluous duo, making this the Horsemen's most attractive album. The title tune is a sweet lullaby; there are also alternate recordings of two previously issued Chris D. efforts, an acoustic version of David Allen Coe's country classic "Field of Stone" and two other covers: a slow but accurate "Gimme Shelter" and the Cramps' "Voodoo Idol."

Guitarist Peter Andrus replaced two departing members on Snake Handler, bringing the Horsemen into the light with a trimmed-down, tightened-up rock sound. Comparisons to X at this point are more than fair, although these joint vocals are far more divine than that band's. The lyrics don't bear a lot of scrutiny—they may be poetic, but aren't about much of anything. (The harrowing escape-from-heroin saga, "Fire Kiss," is a significant exception.) Chris' grip on the gritty fear-film idiom is intact, but lines like "Fire is my home/and if you let me die alone/the fire will eat my bones" or "I been waiting for someone like you since I was just thirteen years old" don't pack any punch.

The Divine Horsemen and Chris D.'s longterm relationship with Christensen dissolved at about the same time, which (as borne out by I Pass for Human's more chilling moments) certainly gave the guy plenty to write about. Not surprisingly, there's little in the way of standard jilted-lover self-pity in Mr. D.'s psyche. Borrowing "Time Stands Still" from an earlier work, he effectively closes the book on that era by retooling it with bitter clinical precision. Indeed, the overall tone of the one-shot Stone by Stone is darn close to the violently lurching blood-Catholic beat-poetry of primo Flesh Eaters (especially the ghost-town atmosphere of the epic "Pale Fire"). No surprise then, that a resurrected version of that very combo came together months after this disc's release. [jy./dss]

See also Flesh Eaters.

DIVINE STYLER FEATURING THE SCHEME TEAM

Word Power (Rhyme Syndicate-Epic) 1989 •

Rapping like a hyped Islamic math teacher prone to free association, Divine Styler drops a brief lecture on the speed of light into "Koxistin U4ria" on his ambitious but dull debut, released via Ice-T's label. The verbose expositions on Afrocentricity, faith in Allah and racism (white and black) are loaded with intriguing, frequently obscure content, but Styler can't make them musical, and the sketchy tracks (co-produced by Bilal Bashir) don't help. [1]

DIVINYLS

Monkey Grip EP (Aus. WEA) 1982

Desperate (Chrysalis) 1983 •

What a Life! (Chrysalis) 1985 •

Temperamental (Chrysalis) 1988 •

Divinyls (Virgin) 1991 •

Sydney, Australia's Divinyls couple Christina Amphlett's unusual vocal mannerisms with the band's rowdy pop sound—kind of like AC/DC meets the Pretenders, with a soupçon of Lene Lovich and a few subtle, unexpected chord-progression shifts. The thick guitar and keyboard textures pack a marvelous rock-'n'-roll punch; the downside is the band's occasional flirtation with arena clichés.

Amphlett appeared in the movie Monkey Grip, for which the group recorded the six songs contained on the EP; some were redone for Desperate. The LP's standouts include "Only You" (all the above comparisons applicable in one song, and it works!) and the goofily lovable "Science Fiction." Even the weakest songs get by on sheer gusto. The Easybeats' "I'll Make You Happy" is given a hard-rock update, as Amphlett blithely assumes the song's assertive role which had, after all, been written for a man.

Intentionally or not, all three producers (Mark Opitz, Mike Chapman, Gary Langan) of What a Life! appear to have been determined to sell the group to US radio by polishing away their idiosyncrasies (dousing the spark in the songs too, if there was any). The result comes awfully close to Anybandism. The worst offender is "Pleasure & Pain," the only track produced and co-written by Mike Chapman, which veers towards the territory of his onetime charge, Pat Benatar.

That's why it's all the more surprising that Chapman not only produced Temperamental, he also allowed the quirky, rough-edged charm shown on Desperate to come through. There are some nifty little touches, like clever usage of backing choruses as aural coloring. Divinyls is now reduced to the songwriting team of Am-phlett and lead guitarist Mark McEntee, but the hired hands on bass and drums provide a superbly compatible loose-limbed wallop. The title track is the killer; the others are also generally strong right off the bat. The Syndicate of Sound's "Hey Little Girl" gets an impressive reading, the original is definitive, but Amphlett's rare ability to make the tune hers (as "Hey Little Boy") is an entertaining angle.

What a disappointment, then, that the duo's self-titled fourth LP falls so flat. The co-production by erstwhile Chapman protégé Dave Tickle (who also worked with Split Enz) is okay but, on the whole, the music is pedestrian and the performances lackluster. Even the vocals: you really have to pay attention to what Amphlett's singing to notice anything offbeat going on, e.g., the not-so-coy naughtiness of "I Touch Myself"—which was co-written by Hollywood hitmeisters Billy Steinberg and Tom Kelly ("Like a Virgin," etc.). The most interesting tracks are "If Love Was a Gun" and (coincidence?) "Bullet"—but they're just near misses. [jg]

DON DIXON

Most of the Girls Like to Dance but Only Some of the Boys Like To (Enigma) 1985 ●

Praying Mantis EP (nr/Demon) 1986

Romeo at Juilliard (Enigma) 1987 ●

Chi-Town Budget Show (Restless) 1989 ☐

EEE (Enigma) 1989 ☐

Before his name started showing up as a producer on albums by R.E.M., the Smithereens, Let's Active and many others, Don Dixon spent fourteen years as bassist/singer/songwriter in a hot North Carolina band called Arrogance. On the solo debut from this jack-of-all-musical-trades, Dixon offers an uneven but engaging five-year patchwork of singles and demos from his personal archives—some from the Arrogance days, others done at home on his 4-track and one recorded at Mitch's Drive-In Studio—that display his affection for '60s pop and R&B. Sometimes cynical, sometimes whimsical, his views of love and lust are delivered with a soulman's vocal passion. The wonderfully oddball images of kissing insects and claw action in "Praying Mantis" make it an instant gem; Mitch Easter contributes lead guitar to a cover of Nick Lowe's "Skin Deep." (The original British edition has a few different tracks, song annotation and alternate artwork than the subsequent American release.) The four-song EP packages the title song with another album track and two more from the Arrogance library, including a sweat-drenched live version of Percy Sledge's "When a Man Loves a Woman," which also appears on the US album.

The all-new Romeo at Juilliard fulfills the first album's promise in spades. Aided by a few guests (mainly drummers, but also Easter, Dixon's wife and frequent musical partner Marti Jones and Spongetones guitarist Jamie Hoover), Dixon rocks confidently in a country/pure pop/Atlantic soul/R&B style that equally suggests the gritty side of John Hiatt and the gloss of Nick Lowe. Expressing deep bitterness at a former loved one, his songs are well-written and brilliantly executed; each arrangement varies the approach without straying far from the LP's overall sound. Dixon's voice is wonderfully rich and emotional; that he's distinguished himself as a producer and not a singer-songwriter (yet) hardly seems believable from the evidence here. "Borrowed Time," "Your Sister Told Me" and "Swallowing Pride" are pained outpourings that channel the man's soul right through your speakers.

Chi-Town Budget Show is a fine, unadorned document of a March '88 live radio broadcast, with Dixon backed by Marti Jones and North Carolina's Woods. It's smart, ingratiating fun; the two Dixon-Jones acoustic tracks which open the disc provide a keepsake of the duo's endearing live presence.

EEE adds the Uptown Horns to the mix with predictably appealing results. Dixon's originals—"Oh Cheap Chatter," "Roots of Truth," "Silent Screen"—mine quirky rock-soul territory more persuasively than ever, and he also wraps his pipes around some well-chosen covers, including an adorable duet (with Jones) on Brenton Wood's 1967 hit, "Gimme Little Sign." There's even a bit of avant-garde audio collage ("EEE/T.O.T.T.V.") that actually works. [kh/vhd]

See also Marti Jones, Sneakers.

DMZ

DMZ EP (Bomp!) 1977

DMZ (Sire) 1978

Relics (Vox) 1981

DMZII Live at Barnobys!! 1978II (Crypt) 1986

Live! 1978I EP (Pryct) 1986

One of Boston's primary punk bands, DMZ was led by the maniacal Mono Mann (aka Jeff Conolly, later of the Lyres), an organist/singer whose '60s roots (garage punk and psychedelia) and Iggy Pop fixation formed the basis for the group's influential stylings. Their first album, produced by Flo and Eddie, has bad sound, sloppy playing and little character, despite the rave-up playing and general enthusiasm.

On the other hand, Relics—released four years after being recorded on a 4-track by Craig Leon—has the intensity and cutting sonic attack to effectively re-create the weird sounds of Mann's idols. Anyone that can do justice to a Roky Erickson number (as in the 13th Floor Elevators' "You're Gonna Miss Me") is alright by me. Four of Relics' cuts first appeared on the cool 1977 7-inch; the other five had not previously been released.

The two 1986 releases—recorded at a single June 1978 club date—document the DMZ concert experience. One is a full-length LP; the other is a supplementary (no overlap) four-track 7-inch that covers both the Chocolate Watch Band and the Beatles. [i]

See also Lyres, Barrence Whitfield and the Savages.

DNA

A Taste of DNA EP (American Clavé) 1981

VARIOUS ARTISTS

No New York (Anilles) 1978

The Fruit of the Original Sin (Bel. Crépuscule) 1981

DARK DAY

Exterminating Angel (Lust/Unlust) 1980

Dark Day EP (Lust/Unlust) 1981

Window (Plexus) 1983

Beyond the Pale [tape] (Nigh Eve) 1985

This controversial noise trio was a fixture on the New York scene for several years, initially tagged as part of the avant-garde no wave wing of the city's punk movement. Despite a minuscule recorded output, DNA was a major presence of startling originality.

DNA's genius and power were immediately evident when the group entered four cuts on the No New York compilation album. Arto Lindsay—once described as James Brown trapped in Don Knotts' body—pits scratch-slash-kill guitar against Robin Crutchfield's sinister Suicidal electric piano and contributes two vocals showing his unique (if unintelligible) singing style in embryonic form. On "Not Moving," Lindsay's playing approximates Syd Barrett with an amphetamine edge.

The band matured on A Taste of DNA. Six pithy, polished statements show Kabuki-painted drummer Ikue Mori coming into her own as a tight, tireless master of shifting asymmetrical rhythm; Lindsay draws, yells, yelps, gulps, burlles and gurgles his way to left-field legend. Replacing Crutchfield's monolithic riffing is the sensitive, painterly bass of Tim Wright. This is no formless anarchic blare—each piece is a painstakingly crafted kernel of ideas organized with fearless unorthodoxy.

The three live performances ("Taking Kid to School," "Cop Buys a Donut," "Delivering the Goods") on The Fruit of the Original Sin compilation are a poor epitaph. They suffer from crummy sound quality—one shifts from stereo to mono right in mid-song!—and bizarre editing, though Wright's bass solo on "Delivering the Goods" is typically exquisite.

For the last encore of its final performance, DNA did Led Zeppelin's "Whole Lotta Love," fittingly capping an iconoclastic career with the utterly unexpected.

Keyboardist Robin Crutchfield formed Dark Day as a trio after his departure from DNA; Exterminating Angel uses machine-like riffs as the foundation for moody, Teutonic music. By the release of Dark Day, he had jettisoned his backing band, shifting the music into the twilight of ambient Eno or Dome. Never a complete original, Crutchfield manages to get extra mileage out of the styles he borrows. [mf/mp]

See also Golden Palominos, Arto Lindsay/Ambitious Lovers, Lounge Lizards, UT.

D-NICE

See Boogie Down Productions.

D.O.A.

Triumph of the Ignoroids EP (Can. Friend's) 1979
Something Better Change (Can. Friend's) 1980
Hardcore 81 (Can. Friend's) 1981
War on 45 EP (Alternative Tentacles) 1982
Bloodied but Unbowed (CD Presents) 1984
Don't Turn Yer Back (on Desperate Times) EP (Alternative Tentacles) 1985
Let's Wreck the Party (Alternative Tentacles) 1985
True (North) Strong & Free (Rock Hotel-Profile) 1987 •
Murder. (Restless) 1990 •

RANDY RAMPAGE

Randy Rampage EP (Can. Friend's) 1982
Vancouver's premier punk outfit has never abandoned its righteous yet hedonistic spirit, as embodied by founding guitarist/vocalist/songwriter Joey Shithead (Keighley). (Indeed, D.O.A. is one of the few original punk bands that has never wandered off into metaldom.) After early personnel shifts, the lineup stabilized and the other members eventually began complementing Keighley's singing and songwriting with their own.

Triumph of the Ignoroids is raw and live, like stripped-down Dead Boys; Something Better Change is tighter, with more anthemic material fleshed out by two guitarists; Hardcore 81 is faster and looser.

War on 45 sounds like a keyboardless Stranglers and includes a humorous (and highly charged) reworking of Edwin Starr's "War" ("good god y'all!!!") that makes Springsteen's attempt sound pathetic. Although D.O.A. isn't above confusing vulgarity with rebellion (e.g., the "Let's Fuck" rewrite of Chris Montez's 1962 hit), this is mainly above-average punk. (The UK version of War on 45 substitutes two tracks from Something Better Change.)

Subtitled "The Damage to Date: 1978-1983," Bloodied but Unbowed is a nineteen-track career recap (remixed and remastered) which convincingly confirms D.O.A.'s hard-won status as Canada's top punks, a raging behemoth of tightly organized high-compression rock aggression. Incredible, intense and essential.

Don't Turn Yer Back is a ten-minute, four-song 12-inch cut in 1984 for a John Peel radio session but released by the band well before the launch of that series. Dedicated to striking miners, it's more angry and political than ever. Let's Wreck the Party includes two of those tracks, but is overall more lighthearted. The clear, professional sound and occasional slowed tempos may turn off hardcore fanatics, but it's a cutting and witty record nonetheless.

True (North) boasts similar sonic variations and maturity—these guys are almost growing up! Topics include Canada's inferiority complex ("51st State"), an equation of Rambo jingoism with nascent fascism ("Nazi Training Camp"), their gonzo work/play ethic (note the version of Bachman-Turner Overdrive's "Takin' Care of Business" with the lead riff played on guitar plus trumpet!) and a longstanding commitment to political activism and freedom. (The band's mechanical royalties from the song "Ready to Explode" go to South Africa's then-outlawed African National Congress.) Weird angle: "Bullet Catcher," the grim tale of a woman cop who died in a hail of bullets; D.O.A.'s song is critical but sympathetic.

The three biggest changes on Murder are a new (mis-?) spelling for Joe K.'s surname (Keithley), the arrival of new guitarist Chris Prohom in place of stalwart Dave Gregg and the acknowledgment of Nelson Mandela's release (in a sore-throat rewrite of "The Midnight Special"). Otherwise, the LP is strictly high-octane/mid-tempo business as usual, but without the fiery inspiration to make it sizzle. (The CD and cassette add one track.)

On his solo record, early D.O.A. bassist Randy Rampage—with assists from ex-D.O.A. drummer Chuck Biscuits and former members of California's Dils and Avengers—shows he can almost approximate solid, even (gasp) "musical" punk rock, if he'd just tighten up his wig (and get a producer). [jg/dgs/i]

See also Jello Biafra, Dead Kennedys.

D.O.C.

See N.W.A.

DOCTOR & THE MEDICS

Doctor & the Medics (nr/Illegal) 1985

Spirit in the Sky EP (nr/Illegal) 1985

Laughing at the Pieces (IRS) 1986 •

I Keep Thinking It's Tuesday (IRS) 1987 •

If you're going to be a one-joke band, you'd better pick a doozy. England's absurd glam-psychedelic Doctor & the Medics chose to record a carefully unreconstructed version of the greatest god-rock bubblegum hit of all time, Norman Greenbaum's "Spirit in the Sky," and let the wave of '60s nostalgia do the rest. Defying all logic, it proved to be a brilliant commercial gambit, catapulting this ridiculously dressed trifle of a band into the charts on two continents. The quintet's otherwise self-penned first album has little else to recommend it, although Craig Leon's production (XTC's Andy Partridge takes easily audible credit for one song) and attractively musical vocal interplay between the Doctor (Clive Jackson) and Medics Wendi and Colette keep it listenable.

The American edition of the second LP contains the group's spot-on re-creation of Abba's "Waterloo," with saxual contributions by living legend Roy Wood, as well as the Doc's awful gussied-up version of "Burning Love." Other than one William Orbit remix that employs soon-to-be-trendy acid house rhythms, I Keep Thinking It's Tuesday lacks any discernible personality or reason for existing. [i]

DR. FEELGOOD

Down by the Jetty (nr/UA) 1975 (nr/Fame) 1982
(nr/Edsel) 1984 •

Malpractice (Columbia) 1975 •

Stupidity (nr/UA) 1976 (nr/Liberty) 1985

Sneakin' Suspicion (Columbia) 1977 (nr/Fame) 1987

Be Seeing You (nr/UA) 1977 (nr/Edsel) 1987

Private Practice (nr/UA) 1978 •

As It Happens (nr/UA) 1979

Let It Roll (nr/UA) 1979

A Case of the Shakes (Stiff America) 1980 (nr/Edsel)
1986

On the Job (nr/Liberty) 1981

Casebook (nr/Liberty) 1981

Fast Women and Slow Horses (nr/Chiswick) 1982 •

Doctors Orders (nr/Demon) 1984 •

Mad Man Blues EP (nr/ID) 1985 •

Mad Man Blues (Can. Star) 1986

Brilleaux (nr/Grand) 1986 •

Case History—The Best of Dr. Feelgood (nr/EMI) 1987 •

Singles (The UA Years +) (nr/Liberty) 1989 •

Live in London (nr/Grand) 1990 •

To suggest that all of Dr. Feelgood's records sound alike would be less than generous; there are, however, groups that have explored varying modes of musical expression with greater diligence. The band has been utterly true to its original aims; few contemporary groups can challenge this veteran outfit when it comes to playing basic, energetic R&B. Over the course of fifteen years, through numerous studio LPs, live sets and com-pilations, the Feelgoods'—or, more precisely, singer/harmonicist Lee Brilleaux, for it is he who has kept the group going through various lineups—dedication to preserving the gritty spirit of groups like the early Rolling Stones has scarcely wavered.

Regardless of inventiveness (or lack thereof), Dr. Feelgood deserves a place of respect in modern music annals by being the commercially successful leader of English pub-rock at its zenith, drawing huge crowds into small clubs all over Europe in the mid-'70s. By playing grassroots music that pleased not only critics but fans in large numbers, the Canvey Island quartet helped set the stage for the transitional—younger, more rock-oriented—Eddie and the Hot Rods, as well as the more radical punk outburst that followed them. Without Dr. Feelgood, there would have been fewer venues for these populist groups to play, less likelihood of a successful indie label scene (Stiff's founding was financed, in part, by Brilleaux) and a much smaller audience receptive to groups without dry ice and laser beams.

The original Dr. Feelgood lineup—Brilleaux, singer and shock-guitarist extraordinaire Wilko Johnson (John Wilkinson), drummer "The Big Figure" and bassman John Sparks—made four albums together. Johnson left the band in 1977; Sparks and the Figure in 1982. Mixing Johnson's original tunes with a hefty selection of classics from the catalogues of Chuck Berry, Willie Dixon, Rufus Thomas, Leiber/Stoller, Sonny Boy Williamson and Muddy Waters, the first three studio records had the same R&B/primal rock/blues character as the original Stones. (The band's fanatic devotion to the past led them to mix the first album in mono!) While Down by the Jetty has a certain amateurish charm, Malpractice has a stronger, more confident sound, and includes better material, like "Back in the Night," "Riot in Cell Block #9" and "You Shouldn't Call the Doctor (If You Can't Pay the Bills)." Johnson's playing—a frantic, choppy, rhythm/lead style adapted from Mick Green and John Lee Hooker, mixed with a riveting spasmodic stage presence—and Brilleaux's hoarse singing may sound a bit out-of-date, but there's no mistaking the energy and honesty they brought to their work.

The live Stupidity, although an effective representation, suffers from its similarity to their studio efforts and lack of the exciting visual factor that made their early gigs so great.

Sneakin' Suspicion is the last LP to feature Johnson; although he appears on the whole thing, a disagreement over musical purity led to a split during the recording. (He formed the Solid Senders and then continued on as a solo artist.) In fact, it's equally good as Malpractice, with strong originals ("Walking on the Edge," in particular) and nifty covers ("Nothin' Shakin' (But the Leaves on the Trees)," "Lights Out"). The next Dr. Feelgood album, Be Seeing You (title and graphics borrowed from The Prisoner TV series), features new six-stringer John Mayo—a strong player with his own sound, but not an even swap for the inimitable Johnson—and Nick Lowe as producer. The change in guitarists is obvious; the band's overall style, however, survives nearly intact, and some of the tracks are good enough to carry the day.

Private Practice, a studio LP produced by Richard Gottehrer, has nothing on the ball, and is played too slow to avoid tedium. As It Happens, another live outing, is a real stiff, drawing its material almost totally from Private Practice and Be Seeing You. Completing this naff trilogy is Let It Roll, an inconsistent (not worthless) collection produced by blues veteran Mike Vernon.

Proving that they could still cut it, Dr. F. reunited with Lowe for A Case of the Shakes, a revitalized treat that brings the group up-to-date (relatively speaking) and in line with the likes of Rockpile, giving their traditionalist approach a more modern setting. Mayo's playing is great and the songs are surprisingly impressive and enjoyable.

On the Job is a needless concert rehash with all but one number drawn from the two preceding albums. Casebook is a compilation containing enough of the Feelgoods' best to make it worthwhile. Fast Women and Slow Horses, produced by Vic Maile, is the last LP to feature the original Figure/Sparks rhythm section. The follow-up, Doctors Orders, puts the Feelgoods—Brilleaux, guitarist Gordon Russell, bassist Phil Mitchell and drummer Kevin Morris—back in league with producer Mike Vernon for a program that includes Eddie Cochran's "My Way" and Muddy Waters' "I Can't Be Satisfied."

Sticking it out for another release, that lineup tears through six blues covers on the down-and-dirty Mad Man Blues. Brilleaux and the others sound just great, and the readings of Elmore James' "Dust My Broom," Willie Dixon's "My Babe" and John Lee Hooker's title growl are unfussy and packed with power. Not since the glory days of Canned Heat and Paul Butterfield has white blues sounded this wonderful and unselfconscious. (The Canadian reissue, with entirely different artwork, adds four previously non-LP tracks—including a new original, "I've Got News for You"—produced by Mike Vernon, probably at the '84 sessions for Doctors Orders.)

Case History and Singles (The UA Years +) are, respectively, single and double-album career compilations with a lot of overlap. The latter (which deducts a pair of tracks, including a 1989 remake of "Milk and Alcohol," from the CD version) has liner notes by Will Birch and is highly recommended as a concise summary of the band's best work. [i]

DOCTOR ICE

See UTFO.

DOCTORS CHILDREN

Rose Cottage EP (nr/Upright) 1986

King Buffalo EP (nr/Upright) 1987

Girl with Green Eyes EP (nr/Bufallo) 1987

King Buffalo (Down There-Restless) 1987 •

Combining two UK-only mini-albums—Rose Cottage and King Buffalo (Girl with Green Eyes is a song from the latter joined by an early demo and two radio session tracks)—into a full American longplayer, this British quartet shows off leader Paul Smith's clever songwriting and artless singing on King Buffalo, as John Leckie's production does justice (but little more) to arrangements which lean towards the hard-pop guitar sound of Robyn Hitchcock and the Egyptians. Matthew Woodman's Hammond organ adds the only notable sonic element to these competent but rarely ear-catching tracks. For what it's worth, the earlier, less-polished material from Rose Cottage has more bite and backbone in the playing, and leaves a stronger impression. [i]

DOCTORS' MOB

Headache Machine (Wrestler) 1985

Sophomore Slump (Relativity) 1987

Headache Machine, the debut album by this gutsy power pop quartet from Austin, Texas, shows abundant promise with melodies, roughly ringing guitars, electricity and a certain nascent stylistic flair. But Sophomore Slump, produced to order by Tommy Erdelyi, is definitely the record to get by these guys. Singer/guitarist Steve Collier's writing shows marked improvement; the band rushes at his songs with youthful eagerness and the self-confidence of seasoned roadhogs. Crossing an attractive Athens influence, a hint of folk and a dusty Southwestern truth those California cowboys would dearly love to borrow, Doctors' Mob get onto something good. [i]

DOCTORS OF MADNESS

Late Night Movies, All Night Brainstorms (UA) 1976

Figments of Emancipation (UA) 1976

Sons of Survival (nr/Polydor) 1978

Revisionism 1975–1978 (nr/Polydor) 1981

This odd excuse for a rock group was essentially the warped musical vision of Kid (Richard) Strange, as realized in posh, over-the-top pretentious style by a manager who spent scads of money in an unsuccessful attempt to make them the Next Big (Ultra-Outrageous) Thing. Although the blue hair, silly theatrical gear and transparent glam pose were awfully out-of-step with the younger and faster safety-pinned hordes who stole their thunder, the Doctors did possess a unique style, thanks in large part to Urban Blitz's (no kidding) eerie violin work, an unlikely instrument in a band hoping to be perceived as Bowie's post-Ziggy disciples.

Late Night Movies (released in the US only as a double-record set with Figments of Emancipation) is the wildest and freshest of the group's three albums, going all out to be—or at least seem—weird and exciting. It's hard to take seriously, but there is something worth hearing in terms of the creepy ambience, substantial songs and subtle musical shadings. Sons of Survival and Figments refine the approach but lack the gonzo originality of the first record. Revisionism is an adequate career summary.

After a stint that saw Dave Vanian (on furlough during one of the Damned's collapses) a member, public response—a mixture of apathy and ridicule—proved terminal, and Strange embarked on a solo career. Whatever the verdict on the Doctors of Madness while they were in business, the fact that the new romantics later shouldered the same foolish mantle of narcissism, ludicrous costumes and stage names—an aberration also adopted by American nouveau-glam-metal bands like Mötley Crüe—proves that this band was indeed ahead of its time. [i]

See also Richard Strange.

JOHN DOE

See X.

DOG BOWL

See King Missile (Dog Fly Religion).

THOMAS DOLBY

The Golden Age of Wireless (Capitol) 1982

(Capitol-Mobile Fidelity) •

Blinded by Science EP (Capitol) 1983

The Flat Earth (Capitol) 1984 •

Music from the Film Gothic (Virgin) 1987 •

THOMAS DOLBY AND THE LOST TOY PEOPLE

Aliens Ate My Buick (EMI Manhattan) 1988 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Howard the Duck (MCA) 1986

After years of session work and part-time employment with Lene Lovich, Bruce Woolley & the Camera Club, Thompson Twins, Foreigner and Joan Armatrading, Thomas Dolby helped revitalize a largely moribund and redundant synth-pop scene with his own recordings. The Golden Age of Wireless avoids the usual tactical error and gives the songs prominence over the instruments. Besides demonstrating an unflinching flair for sharp, snappy compositions, Dolby shows himself unusually capable of getting warm, touching feeling out of his synthesizers and his voice, creating an evocative sound that magnificently straddles nostalgia and futurism.

Although his first album contains some really lovely tunes (e.g., "Radio Silence," "Europa and the Pirate Twins"), Dolby followed it with an execrable moron-funk single, "She Blinded Me with Science" (evidently written about his archaeologist father), which became a Top 5 hit. After the album was reissued with that song added on, a five-cut mini-album appeared, combining it with three LP tracks and another lovely new song, "One of Our Submarines." That was subsequently appended to the album for its third American variation.

Dolby has never concentrated solely on his own recordings. After the debut's success, he worked on various projects, producing tracks for Whodini and others before getting around to making a new LP of his own. The Flat Earth contains nothing really memorable, but does feature nicely restrained pieces of inviting atmospheric charm (including "The Flat Earth" and "Screen Kiss"). Unfortunately, it also contains the strident "Hyperactive!"

Dolby then put his own pop career on hold. He did film soundtracks, collaborated with Ryuichi Sakamoto on an EP, played on Belinda Carlisle's Heaven on Earth and co-produced and played on albums by George Clinton (Some of My Best Jokes Are Friends), Joni Mitchell (Dog Eat Dog) and Prefab Sprout. In cinema land, Dolby wrote, performed and produced five unexceptional new rock songs for George Lucas' misbegotten mega-flop Howard the Duck, filling one side of the soundtrack album. (The rest is a John Barry score.) For Ken Russell's equally atrocious Gothic, Dolby composed and performed (on Fairlight) appropriately menacing and dramatic accompaniment, actually using a real orchestra on five of the brief selections.

Aliens Ate My Buick, the long-awaited follow-up to The Flat Earth, suggests that the now-LA-based musical artist (married to an American TV actress) may be a little out of touch with the real world. The obnoxiously overcrowded '40s swing of "The Key to Her Ferrari" is only the most obvious self-important gaffe here; other lengthy tracks like "Airhead" and "Hot Sauce" are production-driven dance-rock creations with smarmy lyrics. "My Brain Is Like a Sieve" touches on reggae to no avail; "The Ability to Swing" announces Dolby's shortcomings in the music noir area; "Budapest by Blimp" is every bit as annoying as the title would suggest. [sg/i]

See also Lene Lovich, Prefab Sprout, Ryuichi Sakamoto.

DOLL BY DOLL

Remember (nr/Automatic) 1979

Gypsy Blood (nr/Automatic) 1979

Doll by Doll (MCA) 1981

Grand Passion (nr/Magnet) 1982

CONCRETE BULLETPROOF INVISIBLE

Big Tears EP (Dimension-Restless) 1988

The only constant on Doll by Doll's four albums is singer/guitarist Jackie Leven, who began as the leader of a quartet and wound up its only member. On the first three LPs, his presence is so commanding—thanks to a deep, rich, expressive voice that leaps into falsetto or descends to an ominous whisper as the moment dictates—that everyone around him takes a back seat. An impressive but flawed debut, Remember needlessly limits Doll by Doll's obvious electric strength. Although some tracks rock out, the group's folk roots place song before the performance, occasionally blunting the excitement. A sophisticated work that serves mainly to introduce Leven's startling voice.

After some personnel changes, a reconstituted Doll by Doll made the fine Gypsy Blood. With all restraint lifted and the emotional intensity cranked up high, tunes like "The Human Face" and "Teenage Lightning" are simply magnificent—crystal clear, intricately arranged and full of rock fire. Leven's voice and poetic lyrics invest the record with dramatic grandeur. A bit overblown, but a real stunner.

Long delayed by contractual problems, Doll by Doll suffers from creeping relaxation. The flame burns less brightly; although songs are strong and affecting, the reach isn't as expansive, and the results not as attention-grabbing.

In partnership with vocalist Helen Turner, Leven made Grand Passion using studio sidemen, attempting something in a different vein. Unfortunately, the experiment—whatever it may have been—failed. Turner's singing is like bad Nico, and the songs are filled with pretentious and obnoxious lyrics. Musically adequate but totally unappealing. Doll by Doll played its last gig in late '84.

Years later, Leven rejoined former bandmates Jo Shaw (guitar, vocals) and Dave McIntosh (drums) in Concrete Bulletproof Invisible, a promising but short-lived rock quartet with ex-Pistol bassist Glen Matlock. The nifty title track of CBI's 12-inch Big Tears EP lifts the chorus from "White Light White Heat" but has its own ideas as well; the other tracks (two in the UK, three in the US) sound a bit forced and clunky. [1]

DOLPHIN BROTHERS

See Japan.

DOME

Dome (nr/Dome-Rough Trade) 1980

3R4 (nr/4AD) 1980

Dome 2 (nr/Dome-Rough Trade) 1981

Dome 3 (nr/Dome-Rough Trade) 1981

MZUI/Waterloo Gallery (nr/Cherry Red) 1982

Will You Speak This Word (Nor. Uniton) 1983

8 Time [CD] (nr/4AD) 1988 ●

DUET EMMO

Or So It Seems (nr/Mute) 1983

BRUCE GILBERT

This Way (nr/Mute) 1984

The Shivering Man (nr/Mute) 1986 ●

This Way to the Shivering Man (Mute-Restless) 1990 †

Insiding (Mute-Elektra) 1991 †

HE SAID

Hail (nr/Mute) 1985 (Mute-Restless) 1989 ●

Take Care (nr/Mute) 1988 (Mute-Enigma) 1989 ●

During Wire's lengthy hiatus (1980 to 1986), bassist Graham Lewis and guitarist B.C. (Bruce) Gilbert continued their partnership—often under the name Dome—to explore the outer reaches of studio technique and synthetic sound, sidestepping Wire's arcane hitmaking tendencies and Colin Newman's more classical aspirations.

Dome abandons conventional song form for a hodgepodge of treated instruments and voices, with lurching mechanical noises infrequently keeping a vague beat; melodies fragment under studio manipulation. Eerie. 3R4 moves into the ambient drone music pioneered by Brian Eno, and its four tracks achieve an almost symphonic effect. Dome 2 continues the ambient/minimalist experimentation of the first two albums, painting audio expressions of modern ennui, but Dome 3 breaks stride, lifting the beats of other cultures and mixing them with abstracted bits of psychedelia and disembodied noises. The 71-minute 8 Time CD combines the contents of 3R4 with two singles released around the time under the name Cupol.

MZUI/Waterloo Gallery, done in conjunction with Russell Mills, makes extensive use of found noises and self-made instruments. Microphones placed around a London art gallery collected intentional and unintentional sounds from inside and out. The arrhythmic result isn't music per se, but a curious examination of the relationship between environment and sound.

Will You Speak This Word combines some of Dome 3's ethnic borrowings with the repetitive minimalism of earlier works. The suite-like "To Speak" takes up all of one side; it begins with quasi-Arabic violin and random, atonal sax, moving into an acoustic guitar/sax/pseudo-African drum drone with slowly shifting textures before ending with extraterrestrial electronics. An interesting and well-composed piece. The other side's six tracks mix primal drum rhythms with light touches of art-noise generated on a variety of instruments, building intriguing trances. A progressive album in the truest sense of the term.

Duet Emmo was a one-off project by Gilbert, Lewis and Mute Records chief Daniel Miller (the name is an anagram of Dome and Mute). Or So It Seems fluctuates between atonal, electronic sound collages and stiff, monotonous synth-funk reminiscent of D.A.F., with no track ever getting off the ground. Fun studio noodling no doubt, but not of lasting import.

Gilbert's This Way features a three-part suite ("Do You Me? I Did") commissioned by Michael Clark, leader of England's hippest dance troupe (the company has worked with the Fall and performed in New Order's "True Faith" video). Part of the Clark's uniqueness lies in his selection of music: much of "Do You Me?" is about as arrhythmic as Music for Airports, but more dissonant. The remaining two tracks are mostly percolating electronics that move in and out of synch.

Much more in line with Dome's experimental approach, The Shivering Man is a meandering instrumental collection of spare sonic doodles. (Some of the tracks were commissioned by artist Angela Conway, a vocalist on He Said's Hail, and the Paris Opera Ballet.) Employing the kind of electronic production devices that often enliven adventurous modern music, the only component missing from The Shivering Man is the music itself. (This Way to the Shivering Man is a compilation containing about half the tracks from Gilbert's first two albums.) Insiding consists of two side-long pieces created for dance pieces by choreographer Ashley Page.

Released the same year as Wire's reformation, the first album by He Said, Lewis' flexible studio project, includes contributions by Gilbert, co-producer/programmer John Fryer, Eno and others. The well-organized music—essentially effects-laden electro-beats with ethereal vocals—never quite finds its stylistic voice, although individual passages are impressive.

The follow-up, Take Care, is basically another collaboration with Fryer (only two cuts feature anyone else). While the general approach is similar to the thinking person's atmospheric electro-pop (at times not unlike Wire) on Hail, the album contains a surprising detour into rap ("A.B.C. Dicks Love"); otherwise, the long (five or six minutes each) songs sound—or at least feel—kind of samey. The final two tracks were composed as music for an avant-garde ballet. [sg/dgs]

See also A.C. Marias, Wire.

DOMINATRIX

The Dominatrix Sleeps Tonight EP (UpRoar-Streetwise)

1984

DEATH COMET CREW

At the Marble Bar EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1984

DEATH COMET

"Mystic Eyes"/"Death Comet Drive" (J-Mark-Elektra) 1986

Charming and catchy, Dominatrix's one New York club hit consists of passionless dada femme recitation over light atmospheric music by Stuart Arbright (ex-Ike Yard) and Ken Lockie (ex-Cowboys International), with scratch mix effects by Ivan Ivan and Lockie. The 12-inch offers two full-scale versions plus two additional remixes ("Chants" and "Beat Me").

Collaborating again with Lockie as co-producer and joined by a few other musicians, Arbright became the Death Comet Crew for a 12-inch electro-funk exercise that's not as exceptional as Dominatrix, but still amusing and offbeat. "At the Marble Bar" offers a varied collection of percussion sounds; "Exterior St." has rap vocals by Rammellzee; "Funky Dream" is an amusingly reductionist cut-up edit of the word "funky."

Taking a rocking Billy Idolish approach without much dance-club potential, Arbright and the same crew from DCC—guitarist Michael Diekmann and bassist Shinichi Shimokawa—did a nice cover of Van Morrison's "Mystic Eyes" on the Death Comet 12-inch, sticking a similar-sounding but inferior original on the flip. [i]

ANNA DOMINO

East and West EP (Bel. Crépuscule) 1984

Anna Domino (Bel. Crépuscule) 1986

This Time (Bel. Crépuscule) 1987 (Giant) 1988 •

Colouring in the Edge and the Outline EP (Bel.

Crépuscule) 1988 (Giant) 1989 •

Mysteries of America (Bel. Crépuscule) 1990 •

Transcontinental chanteuse Domino was born in Tokyo, but lived in Italy and Canada before moving to New York, where she played in an early version of Polyrock. She later fell in with the Brussels art-quiet crowd and began a career writing and recording dignified pop songs. Following the East and West mini-LP, Domino made her full-length debut, produced half-and-half by Alan Rankine of the Associates and Marc Moulin of Telex.

The first Domino record to see American release, This Time, was co-written with Belgian multi-instrumentalist Michel Delory (her creative partner ever since) and produced by UK technologist Flood (Erasure, etc.). A weak collection of diversely dull music, nice but unambitious singing and sensitive lyrics that fall just short of imaginative, This Time is not that far from a synthesized Motels album.

Colouring in the Edge unearths a much more productive approach. Domino's vocals reach an understated eloquence (doubling herself on "Luck" adds to the handsome effect) over music that alternates light naturalism ("Clouds of Joy," "Perfect Day—No, He Says") and jittery but intimate sequencers ("88"). This time, Domino comes off like a suave Suzanne Vega minus the urban poetry. (On the 12-inch record's original Belgian release, all five songs are mastered on one side, leaving the other to an artistic engraving.)

For most of Mysteries of America, acoustic guitar, incidental string accents and the merest bits of percussion (bongos are the loudest rhythm element) set off Domino's wispiest singing and most involving lyrics. The continental folk of "Paris," the jazzy "Tamper with Time," the courtly lullaby "Dust" and "Isn't That So" (a Jesse Winchester cover) are all quite lovely, drawing the listener further into Domino's world. But she hasn't completely broken off her affair with synthesizers, and allows the mildly overactive chatter of several numbers ("Bonds of Love," for one) to interrupt the album's otherwise beguiling mood. [i]

DONNER PARTY

Donner Party (Cryptovision) 1987

Donner Party (Pitch-A-Tent-Rough Trade) 1988

This trio's amiable mix of trashily melodic folk-rock and loopy acoustic pop was not unlike that of another San Francisco group, the Cat Heads. (The two shared drummer singer Melanie Clarr.) What distinguishes Donner Party is the agreeably twisted sensibility of main writer/vocalist Samuel Coomes, whose absurdist meditations are endearing without being cloying.

Though both Donner Party albums are eponymously titled, they're distinctly different. The first (the one with the cartoon-montage cover art) is a rough gem, with scrappy rockers like "Oh Esmerelda" and "Godlike Porpoise Head of Blue-Eyed Mary" combining propulsive tunes with whimsical lyrics. The self-explanatory "When You Die Your Eyes Pop Out" reveals a bent for rustic fatalism.

The second release (with the 19th-century Edward Hicks cover painting) boasts better sound quality, more stylistic variety and shows the band moving comfortably from DIY inspiration to versatile craftsmanship with no loss of energy or personality. The songwriting is likewise more accomplished, alternating wonder ("Up & Down," "Try to Imagine a Terrible World") and dread ("Boxfull of Bones," "Sickness"), often finding a place where the two overlap. [hd]

See also Cat Heads, Harm Farm.

DOS

Dos (New Alliance) 1986

Numero Dos EP (New Alliance) 1989

Dos—meaning, of course, two—consists of husband-and-wife bassists Mike Watt (Minutemen, FIREHOSE) and Kira Roessler (ex-Black Flag). Since Kira has also composed for FIREHOSE, several of the short compositions comprising the pair's charming album hint at that fine trio's signature sound. A dose of Dos entails little more (and nothing less) than two basses sniffing around one another like curious animals, making it an atmospheric, playful, even loving pleasure to hear.

The two get groovier on their 1989 EP by covering Billie Holiday ("Don't Explain") and Sonic Youth ("Pacific Coast Highway"). But more singing apparently means less bassing: except for two awesomely intelligent instrumentals, the deep-down sound tends to get lost in breathy melancholy. [rg]

See also Black Flag, D.C.3, FIREHOSE, Minutemen.

DOTS

Return of the Dots ... (Ger. Rebel) 1985

I Can See You (Ger. Rebel) 1986

Live in West-Germany: 15 Songs, 15 Stories (Ger. Rebel) 1986

This longstanding on-off secret of the NYC scene has been able to pack clubs in certain Eastern US cities and in Germany (not to mention Holland and Yugoslavia), but can barely get a booking in their hometown. Such topsy-turvyness is part and parcel of Dotsongs, underlined by an unclassifiable grab-bag approach.

After a very brief stint in a precursor to the Ramones, guitarist and chief songwriter Rick Garcia founded the Dots in 1978 with singer Jimmi Quidd; early guitarists (Garcia began on bass) included the late Alison East, but the lineup finally jelled when Garcia became sole guitarist. Most of Return of the Dots had been cut as demos, more than six years before a German label put it out. This phase of the band was punk energy, a heavy dose of Anglo-pop (especially early Who and Move), The Honeymooners and Huckleberry Hound. The musical styles are sort of jumbled, as are song topics (intra-office romance, marrying a monkey, a "Legend" in his own mind, etc.), yet it all somehow hangs together, partly through Quidd's high, reedy vocals. Plain and simple, it's a lot of fun.

The early Dots' high-speed battiness helped inspire some fans at a Washington DC gig; next thing, Quidd found himself producing "Pay to Cum!," the Bad Brains' landmark debut. He also produced an EP for the Undead (led by an ex-Misfit). Then came Return, followed quickly by the other two LPs. Unfortunately, what makes the live album so fine is what makes the second studio LP unnecessary. The live LP has three fab reworkings (of the Beatles, the Count Five and Maxine Nightingale!), five new songs and seven numbers from previous Dots discs. Six of those are from I Can See You.

On the live LP, the nucleus of Quidd, Garcia and bassist Leigh Sioris was joined by Nat Seeley on drums (replacing Jeff Formosa, who was on I Can See You) and guitarist Al Maddy (ex-Nitecaps). The two guitars work together well, and the album's sound is full and punchy—in fact, better than the studio LP. Anyway, it's as much fun as Return; where else can you find out why some people go to hell ("Hard Times"), what to do with a drunken sailor ("I Won't Cry 'Cause You Want Me To") or where "exceptionality" went ("Crime of Passion"). Dottiness may be an acquired taste, but it's quite savory in its own odd way. Quidd died of an aneurysm in 1990. [tr]

DOW JONES & THE INDUSTRIALS

See Gizmos.

DOWNY MILDEW

Downy Mildew EP (Texas Hotel) 1986

Broomtree (Texas Hotel) 1987

Mincing Steps (Texas Hotel) 1988 •

Those who like R.E.M. and 10,000 Maniacs, and rush out to get everything new on 4AD will find the shimmering acoustic/electric guitars and gauzy ambience of Southern California's Downy Mildew as refreshing as a cool sprinkle on a hot summer night. The first EP contains four songs written by the quartet's two singing guitarists, Charlie Baldonado and Jenny Homer, and introduces the band's two early sides: peppy folk-pop (he) and moodier rock balladry (she).

Broomtree is more accomplished, adding keyboards, autoharp, violin and dissonantly bowed cello to the acoustic guitars and buffered drums. Unfortunately, the slower tempos and improved production reveal a faint resemblance to Dark Side of the Moon; a mild and dry jazzy side comes through as well. The alternation of lead vocals creates a certain tension, but the band's unassailable delicacy and taste provide enough stylistic unification to hold the album together.

Downy Mildew's increasingly refined escape from Planet Rock continues on Mincing Steps, a shimmering collection that reflects the group's transition into a distinguished chamber quartet. Touching on some of the ways '60s rock bands introduced baroque classical elements into their sound, Downy Mildew hit the right blend of energy and eclecticism about half the time. When it clicks, the record is a rare treat. [e/i]

DRAGONS

Parfums de la Révolution (Fr. Blitzkrieg) 1982

A piece of punk exotica: three underground musicians from mainland China recorded in secret by a visiting Frenchman. (Done, thankfully, before the brief 1985 tour there by Wham!) Using only vocals, electric guitar, rudimentary drums and Chinese violin, the trio attempts "Anarchy in the UK" and "Get off My Cloud" with truly bizarre results; the remaining seven tracks are originals in a more traditional Oriental vein. A fascinating transliteration of rock from a country not generally considered in terms of modern music. [i]

DRAGSTERS

See Ronald Koal and the Trillionaires.

DRAMATIS

See Gary Numan.

MIKEY DREAD

Dread at the Controls (nr/Trojan) 1979

African Anthem (Jam. Dread at the Controls) 1979 (RAS) 1989

World War III (Jam. Dread at the Controls) 1980 •

Beyond World War III (Heartbeat) 1981 •

S.W.A.L.K. (Heartbeat) 1982

Pave the Way (Heartbeat) 1983 •

Pave the Way (Parts 1 & 2) (nr/DEP Int'l) 1985

Happy Family (RAS) 1989 •

Evolutionary Rockers (Jam. Dread at the Controls) 1989

Best Sellers (Rykodisc) 1991 ◊

Jamaican disc jockey Michael Campbell changed his name, moved to England and made it as a recording artist. Dread at the Controls (the name of his radio show and, later, record label) is a modest debut, but World War III is an out-and-out sonic adventure. Mixed up (and down) by Scientist, the LP features Dread's dancehall-style toasting, beefed up with ultra-heavy production and sonic effects. The album tied into punk rockers' enthusiastic acceptance of both reggae's outlook and its techniques; Dread was thus considered a new wave reggae artist, a link he affirmed when he recorded (on Sandinista! and singles) and toured with the Clash. (Beyond World War III is a slightly revised American edition.)

Unfortunately, none of his later releases are as impressive as WWIII. S.W.A.L.K. is a halfhearted imitation filled with unconvincing lovers rock made worse by Dread's nasal singing. Pave the Way (Parts 1 & 2)

is just as inconsistent. Although it offers stylistic variety, Dread's capable production and Paul Simonon on background vocals, the LP's best tracks are chant-down cuts like "Roots and Culture," the theme of a UK children's show. The two-LP British version is impressive at least for its ambition; the prior American single record seems spare in comparison.

African Anthem is Mikey Dread at his best, tripping out with sound and dub, visiting hemispheres no one else has ever been. Digging into his library of tapes from his years as a JBC DJ, he includes his zany station IDs, drop-ins and samplings amid the already wild-style dubtronics. Evolutionary Rockers (a reissue of Dread's first LP) also features superstar remix engineers King Tubby and Prince Jammy; while it has a surreal feel, it isn't as dubby. More than anything else, these two albums define Dread at the Controls, an originator of sheer genius.

On the other hand, Happy Family suggests that his strength may lie behind the scenes, not behind the mic. While his message and lyrics are still strong, Dread's singing is oftentimes mediocre. [bk/aw]

DREAD ZEPPELIN

Un-led-Ed (IRS) 1990 ◊
5,000,000* (IRS) 1991 ◊

Proving that a joke doesn't have to be funny to be successful as long as it exploits popular prejudices, this California novelty act—which had previously self-released a cassette album—hit the charts by covering Led Zeppelin songs in an Elvis Presley impersonator voice over reggae rhythms with dub production accents. The sextet gets some smileage out of mixing icons (sticking "Heartbreaker" and "Heartbreak Hotel" together, and running "Black Dog" into "Hound Dog"), but the concept—an idea SCTV could have squeezed dry in a five-minute skit—is hardly adequate for an entire debut album, much less an ongoing career. [i]

DREAM ACADEMY

The Dream Academy (Warner Bros.) 1985 •
Remembrance Days (Reprise) 1987 •
A Different Kind of Weather (nr/Blanco y Negro) 1990
(Reprise) 1991 ◊

In a shocking success story, Dream Academy's easy listening, generally dull pop found its way to the top of America's record charts in 1985. "Life in a Northern Town," the atmospheric Association-like '60s novelty tune (acoustic guitars, chanted vocals, cellos, tympani), is pleasant, pretentious and shallow, but nothing else on the first LP comes close to being as catchy or characteristic. Nick Laird-Clowes (ex-Act) is at best a bland vocalist; his partners (Gilbert Gabriel, keyboards; Kate St. John, woodwinds, horns) are equally inadequate to his Thompson Twins fantasies. The LP employs many guest musicians; David Gilmour co-produced most of the tracks.

The riot of credits on Remembrance Days acknowledges production work by Hugh Padgham, Lindsey Buckingham and others. It's another airy record—stunningly clean, precise, sophisticated and of absolutely no significance. Dream Academy has thankfully abandoned the nostalgia gimmick, but Laird-Clowes' songs are still trifles, with clumsy lyrics that smack more of education than imagination. If Prefab Sprout didn't exist, Dream Academy would still be second-rate, an ornate frame for a missing picture.

Other than a disrespectful acid house rendition of John Lennon's "Love" (with guest chanting by Poly Styrene!) and the reasonably catchy "Mercy Killing," A Different Kind of Weather offers little vitality or stylistic variation on the trio's lush pop formulae. St. John's oboe and soprano sax is an effective antidote to blandness, but the languid material is almost characterless, relegating the album to handsomely accomplished ambience for the old at heart. [i]

See also Act.

DREAM COMMAND

See Comsat Angels.

DREAM 6

See Concrete Blonde.

DREAMS SO REAL

Father's House (Coyote) 1986
Rough Night in Jericho (Arista) 1988 •
Gloryline (Arista) 1990 •

This tuneful Athens threesome, produced on its first album by Peter Buck, uses a bit of piano and close vocal harmonies—the Kingston Trio and Buffalo Springfield come to mind—to differentiate itself from That Other Local Band. Although guitarist/singer Barry Marler does favor Buck, Dreams So Real's light, airy pop doesn't really reflect an R.E.M. influence at all. (Cover your ears when "Capitol Mall" comes on.) In any case, Father's House is too mild to truly matter: while the summery ambience is pleasant enough, the songs are insubstantial and many of the performances rush along in an overeager blur.

Moving to a major label, the trio toughened its sound and commercialized its approach for Rough Night in Jericho, putting stronger rhythms behind the ringing guitar strums and arena-ready drama into the vocals. The melodies are okay, but the dynamic delivery exaggerates the weakness in Marler's lyrics.

Gloryline wisely backtracks a little, simplifying the drums to a snappy backbeat and tempering the electric intensity with a folkier sensibility, acoustic guitar strums and more effective use of guest keyboards. Dreams So Real are still caught between two conflicting impulses—big-league rock power and carefully detailed grassroots richness—but this album puts them on the way to finding a singable solution. Cindy Wilson of the B-52's guests on one track. [i]

DREAM SYNDICATE

The Dream Syndicate EP (Down There) 1982 (Enigma)
1984
The Days of Wine and Roses (Ruby) 1982
Tell Me When It's Over EP (nr/Rough Trade) 1983
Medicine Show (A&M) 1984 •

This Is Not the New Dream Syndicate Album ... Live! EP (A&M) 1984 •
 Out of the Grey (Big Time) 1986 •
 50 in a 25 Zone EP (Big Time) 1987 •
 Ghost Stories (Enigma) 1988 ◊
 Live at Raji's (Restless) 1989 ◊

STEVE WYNN

Kerosene Man (Rhino) 1990 •
 Kerosene Man EP [CD] (RNA) 1991 •

Dream Syndicate was one of the first bands from the Los Angeles psychedelic revival (misleadingly dubbed the paisley underground) to reach a national audience. While many of the movement's bands plumbed the Byrds/Buffalo Springfield or Pink Floyd archives for inspiration, Dream Syndicate's weird, obsessive lyrics, relentless noise maelstroms—mixed with eerie/pretty otherworldly dirges and ballads—and singer Steve Wynn's nasal rasping and ranting recalled the Velvet Underground, though (of course) they steadfastly denied that to be their intent. Following the release of a four-song demo on Wynn's Down There label, the quartet made its proper debut on The Days of Wine and Roses, rawly produced by Chris D. (Flesh Eaters/Divine Horsemen). With driving, feedback-drenched guitars and stream-of-consciousness lyrical spume, the record appealed to sensitive English-major college radio programmers too young to shoot up to the Velvets the first time around. (The UK-only Tell Me When It's Over EP adds three live cuts to the title track, drawn from the album.)

Original bassist Kendra Smith left; the band signed to A&M and recorded a second album, produced by Sandy Pearlman. Wynn's songs remain driven and obsessive, but he seems more inclined to ape Mick Jagger than Lou Reed this time. Also, guitarist Karl Precoda cuts back on the feedback and the entire album has more of a traditional rock'n'roll feel. Early fans cried sell-out, but with eight-minute jam/raps like "John Coltrane Stereo Blues" included, that accusation doesn't hold much water.

Nine-and-a-half minutes of that song also appear on This Is Not the New Dream Syndicate Album ... Live!, a dismal document recorded live in Chicago during the 1984 tour that followed Medicine Show. (The two records were later paired on a domestic CD.)

After guitarist/producer Paul B. Cutler (ex-45 Grave) replaced Precoda, a revitalized Dream Syndicate released Out of the Grey, nine rugged rock-cowboy songs characterized by Wynn's worn but hopeful vocals and Cutler's obsessive distorto-guitar madness. Proceeding from Neil Young's Crazy Horse period, songs like "Forest for the Trees," "Now I Ride Alone," "Slide Away" and "50 in a 25 Zone" (also released on a 12-inch with a bare-bones remix and three added tracks, including a maudlin version of "The Lonely Bull") hum with enough coarse energy and stylistic insouciance to cover their compositional deficiencies. (The Out of the Grey CD contains the EP's extra tracks.)

For Ghost Stories, the band actually enlisted Neil Young's old producer (Elliot Mazer) and, whether through his guidance or their own maturity, transcended previous inconsistencies to make a great album. While still mainly offering the usual dirges and ballads (Blind Lemon Jefferson's "See that My Grave Is Kept Clean" is a perfectly apt cover), Wynn's songs here are lean and concise, his singing controlled and effective. The instrumental excesses have been stripped away, and solid music replaces noise excursions. If soul-in-torment songs and "traditional" rock song structures don't appeal to you, skip this. Otherwise, it's well worth checking out.

Unfortunately, after the Ghost Stories tour, the band itself checked out, leaving Live at Raji's, recorded in January '89 at the noted Hollywood nightspot, as a rough'n'ready document of this band in its best—and final—stage. (The group's fan club actually got in the last word, releasing a 1989 collection of outtakes and live tracks entitled It's Too Late to Stop Now.)

With a gang of session players and LA luminaries in tow, Wynn began work on Kerosene Man immediately after the split, but many of the songs seem to chronicle a breakup of a more personal nature. Covering a number of musical settings—ranging from Dylanesque folk-rock ("Tears Won't Help" and "Carolyn" are the best) to Transformer-era Lou Reed soundalikes (check out his phrasing on "The Blue Drifter" and "Conspiracy of the Heart") to more abrasive pieces reminiscent of early Dream Syndicate ("Younger" and "Anthem")—Kerosene Man showcases both the best and worst of what Wynn has to offer. The EP contains the album's title track and four items—including a version of Sonic Youth's "Kool Thing" recorded in Holland—from various 1990 radio broadcasts. [ep/lds]

See also Danny & Dusty, Human Hands, Opa!.

D.R.I.

Dirty Rotten LP (Rotten) 1984 •
 Dealing with It! (Death-Metal Blade-Enigma) 1985 •
 Crossover (Metal Blade-Enigma) 1987 •
 Four of a Kind (Metal Blade-Enigma) 1988 •
 Thrash Zone (Metal Blade-Enigma) 1989 •

Arguably the first punk-to-metal crossover band, D.R.I. was formed in Texas as Dirty Rotten Imbeciles, playing basic raw hardcore (as evidenced on the self-issued debut). Shortly after, the group relocated to the San Francisco area, and Dealing with It! blurs their sound into more of a speed metal category. By Crossover, a major blow to the few remaining boundaries between the by then very similar genres, D.R.I. had practically become a full-on heavy metal band. The next two albums expand on D.R.I.'s sound, bringing the group—which has undergone numerous personnel changes—into a genre otherwise populated by the likes of Suicidal Tendencies and Bad Brains. [ja]

DRIVIN' N' CRYIN'

Scarred but Smarter (688) 1986 (Island) 1988 •
 Whisper Tames the Lion (Island) 1987 •
 Mystery Road (Island) 1989 •

DRIVIN-N-CRYIN

Fly Me Courageous (Island) 1991 ◊

KEVN KINNEY

MacDougal Blues (Island) 1990 •

FRANK FRENCH AND KEVIN KINNEY

Everything Looks Better in the Dark (Twilight) 1987

Though often misidentified as part of the R.E.M.-led new-Southern-rock posse, Atlanta's drivin' n' cryin' actually embraces an eclectic mix of styles, from hard rock to bluegrass, with singer/guitarist Kevin Kinney's thoughtful (if occasionally melodramatic) lyrics contributing a romantic working-class Everyman sensibility that rarely seems forced.

Scarred but Smarter is a promising, if somewhat murky, debut whose principal charm lies in the way the trio mines contrasting genres as if they can't tell the difference. The enjoyably mixed bag features country-rockers ("Another Scarlet Butterfly"), pastoral ballads ("You Mean Everything"), anthemic blue-collar rock ("Stand Up and Fight for It") and Sabbath metal ("Saddle on the Side of the Road"), all united by Kinney's salt-of-the-earth lyrics.

Produced by Anton Fier (who also did most of the drumming), Whisper Tames the Lion focuses the trio's musical attack while maintaining the polystylistic approach. The resulting disc is surprisingly balanced and dynamic; highlights include the tense title track, the garagey "Powerhouse" and the delicately acoustic "On a Clear Daze."

Mystery Road shows the band (now a four-piece with the addition of former R.E.M. roadie Buren Fowler as second guitarist) growing more fluent in their varied idioms. Full-throttle fast n' loud tunes like "Toy Never Played With" and "You Don't Know Me" suggest that drivin' n' cryin' could probably make a nice living as a metal band if so inclined, but such folkier numbers as "Peacemaker" and "Straight to Hell" make you glad they're not.

Accompanied by a streamlined spelling of the band's handle, Fly Me Courageous (with hard-rock producer Geoff Workman behind the board) finally whips the band's divergent elements into a cohesive style. Kinney and Fowler emerge as a distinctive guitar team, lending riffy authority to such Kinney compositions as the title track, "Around the Block Again" and "Chain Reaction."

Kinney's solo MacDougal Blues actually features his entire band (as well as R.E.M.'s Peter Buck, who also produced) in supporting roles. Though the album has its moments, this attempt to recast Kinney as an acoustic New York folkie is misguided; he's a lot more convincing in the group context.

Everything Looks Better in the Dark is a collection of fifteen tracks recorded by Kinney (who wrote and sings all but one) and former partner Frank French between 1984 and 1986. The tunes sound like what they apparently were: a blueprint for drivin' n' cryin' (the album contains one song bearing the band's name, and another that was re-recorded for Whisper Tames the Lion). [hd]

DROOGS

Heads Examined EP (Plug-n-Socket) 1983

Stone Cold World (Plug-n-Socket) 1984 (PVC) 1987

Kingdom Day (PVC) 1987 •

Anthology (Ger. Music Maniac) 1987

Mad Dog Dreams (Ger. Music Maniac) 1989 •

Want Something (Skyclad) 1990 •

Live in Europe EP (Ger. Music Maniac) 1990

On their first EP, LA's Droogs—who started playing together as pre-teens in 1966 and began issuing singles in the mid-'70s—pound out bluesy garage rock which variously resembles the early Stones (thanks mostly to the harmonica wailing in "99 Steps"), the Yardbirds and the Seeds, a faithful cover of "Born to Be Wild" is both obligatory and superfluous. The first album, well-produced by Earle Mankey, sets a more ambitious course, relying on period-evocative psychedelic originals and mixing in different instrumental flavors and textures, while never straying far from recognizable clichés. The quartet deftly avoids genre slavishness but, a few notable exceptions (the solid title track, for instance) aside, still falls a bit short of being exciting on their own recorded merits.

With Mankey again manning the board, Kingdom Day drops the nostalgia shtick and mixes electric (kudos to Roger Clay) and acoustic guitars to good effect while keeping the focus on Ric Albin's growly vocals. Dynamic arrangements and enthusiastic, inspired playing make up for material that isn't all inherently memorable. The band's shorter songs work best, roughing up R&B and boogie stylings into modern rock, but the one non-original—"Call off Your Dogs," written by Jeffrey Lee Pierce and Peter Case—is the record's high point. This hot date proves the Droogs need no longer long to sound like anyone else.

The German Anthology is a well-annotated diary of the first decade in the history of America's first proto-punk combo: a full five years before such genre "forefathers" as the Chesterfield Kings and the Unclaimed, the Droogs were spreading the gospel according to Question Mark with a series of spottily distributed 7-inch manna wafers. All of that early issue appears here, for the most part in lo-fi that attests to the band's purity and poverty. Proof that a modern lifeline—however thin—has always been connected to the body of '60s raunch.

Initially set for release a couple of years earlier on the ill-fated PVC label, surfacing first in Europe as Mad Dog Dreams and then expanded by two tracks, Want Something essentially crystallizes what the Droogs have been moving towards for the past few years. The album layers sinewy, decidedly Western slabs of open-highway hard rock ("Long Dark Night," John Hiatt's "Zero House") with moodier, folk-tinged atmospherics ("Mad Dog Dreams" and "Devil Left to Pay," the latter written by LA rock scribe/rocker Robert Lloyd). That the multitude of guests—including ex-Code Blue honcho Dean Chamberlain, Dream Syndicators Steve Wynn (who sings lead on his own composition, "Maria"), guitarist Karl Precoda and Paul Cutler (who also produced the LP)—never obscures the Droogs' character is a tribute to the group's forceful personality. (The CD adds three.) [i/dss]

BILL DRUMMOND

See Big in Japan, Justified Ancients of Mu Mu.

DUB SYNDICATE

See New Age Steppers.

DUCK AND THE PONDS

See Alan Milman Sect.

DUCKS DELUXE

Ducks Deluxe (RCA) 1974

Taxi to the Terminal Zone (nr/RCA) 1975

Don't Mind Rockin' Tonite (RCA) 1978

Last Night of a Pub Rock Band (nr/Blue Moon) 1981

Heard in the cold light of the present, England's pub-rockin' Ducks Deluxe sound rather inconsequential (if amiable). Back in the dark ages of 1974, however, they were manna from heaven. Along with Brinsley Schwarz and Dr. Feelgood, the Ducks championed a much-needed return to basics by playing in traditional American styles diametrically opposed to the glitter and art trends then in vogue. And that paved the way for punk.

The Ducks' first (and best) LP captures the ultimate pub-rock band in all its glory—great for dancing and drinking, not critical analysis. Bursting with boisterous pride and spirit, the quartet careens through covers of songs by Eddie Cochran and the Stones, plus "originals" that borrow heavily from Chuck Berry, Lou Reed's "Sweet Jane," Otis Redding and so on. Three of the four sing: Nick Garvey is the rough-hewn romantic and Martin Belmont the awkward crooner, but it's Sean Tyla's growling boogie that sets the tempo.

Taking its title from a line in Chuck Berry's "Promised Land," Taxi to the Terminal Zone beats the sophomore jinx but also exposes the band's limitations. Many of the tracks are simply rewrites of songs from the first LP, which themselves were hardly groundbreakers. A cover of the Flamin' Groovies' "Teenage Head" is inspired, however. The album benefits from Dave Edmunds' production and the addition of keyboardist Andy McMaster(s), author of the surprisingly poppy "Love's Melody," a foretaste of the work he and Garvey would pursue in one of the Ducks' many outgrowths, the Motors.

In 1978, RCA sensed that the Ducks could be tied to the growth of new wave, and released Don't Mind Rockin' Tonite, a collection titled after one of the standout boogie tracks on the first album. A must for the band's fans, as it contains some previously non-LP B-sides; expendable for everyone else.

Last Night of a Pub Rock Band—that is, July 1, 1975—is so abysmally recorded that even aficionados should skip it. [jy]

See also Motors, Graham Parker, Rumour, Sean Tyla Gang.

DUET EMMO

See Dome.

STEPHEN "TIN TIN" DUFFY

The Ups and Downs (nr/10-Virgin) 1985 •

STEPHEN DUFFY

Because We Love You (nr/10-Virgin) 1986 •

If awards were handed out for foresight, Birmingham's Stephen Duffy would not likely be considered for one. At the turn of the decade, he parted company with a trendy young new romantic band, saying they were just too reliant on synthesizers for his taste. Never mind that his own subsequent work has included plenty of electronics; the band he left was Duran Duran.

It took a little while, but Duffy did eventually get his own career off the ground. Using the ludicrous nom de rock Tin Tin, he had big international dance hits with "Kiss Me" and "Hold Me," both annoying, stereotypical synth-pop ditties. The former was re-released several times and (two years later) included on The Ups and Downs, his long-delayed solo debut.

Because We Love You drops the Tin Tin tag and much of the electronic orchestration, replacing the latter with generic pop/rock/soul from the Wham!/Spandau school. With such ingenious titles as "I Love You," "Love Station" and "Unkiss That Kiss," almost every track is a predictable mélange of horns and standard bass/drums patterns, topped with Duffy's wimpy, emotionless voice. He can write good hooks, but neither of these albums offers anything you haven't already heard.

See also Lilac Time.

[dgs]

DUKES OF STRATOSPHEAR

See XTC.

DUMPTRUCK

D Is for Dumpruck (Incas) 1983 (Big Time) 1985

Positively Dumpruck (Big Time) 1986 •

For the Country (Big Time) 1987 •

An interesting partnership from Massachusetts: Kirk Swan and Seth Tiven each sing, write and play guitar and bass on D Is for Dumpruck, with only a drummer for company. The dozen songs fall somewhere between Joy Division and the dB's—too bleak and intense to be happily engaging, yet rooted in a jagged pop melodicism. Insecure, downcast lyrics support the pair's darker side; occasionally chipper guitar bits elevate the mood. Although some tracks are disorientingly dense and chilly, Dumpruck can be a most entertaining and stimulating proposition. (The reissue is identical save for the back cover.)

With a full two-man rhythm section and producer Don Dixon on keyboards, Dumpruck firmly pushed Positively towards the Chris Stamey facet of its personality, playing rugged guitar pop with the same intelligence but more melodicism. Although Swan and Tiven write separately, their musical styles meld together without seams. The strained, mildly anguished vocals definitely suggest the ex-dB, but the busy drumming, swirling guitars and raggedly Byrdsish harmonies give Dumpruck a sound of its own.

Swan is gone from the third album, replaced by another singing guitarist; the lineup sports a new bassist as well. In a vain bid for commercial acceptance (Big Time having pacted with RCA for distribution and marketing), For the Country was produced in Wales by Hugh Jones. Dumpruck sounds stronger than ever: Tiven, now the sole writer, sings his dejected lyrics with a surprisingly determined edge, as a wall of strummed guitars and a loudly echoing backbeat surge behind him. He's certainly not a happy fellow: the irony of "Carefree," disgust of "Friends," anxiety and resignation of the delicately haunting "Dead Weight" are merely the tip of his melancholy iceberg. Involving and unsettling. [1]

SLY DUNBAR

See Sly & Robbie.

DUNCAN DHU

Canciones (Sire) 1989 •

Autobiografía (Sire) 1990 •

Far from being the Basque revolutionaries of their press notices, this mild-mannered Spanish duo plays simple, hearty guitar pop (frequently with nothing more than a single acoustic) in a willy-nilly variety of idioms: bare-bones rockabilly, early Elvis Presley and the Everly Brothers, as well as more modern designs. (The only musical traditions that seem to have been overlooked are any that would reflect the group's national origin.) A compilation of the band's first three Spanish albums, Canciones wobbles all over the place with charming enthusiasm and great vocals, frequently suggesting a destylized translation of the Stray Cats or House of Freaks.

Under the tutelage of British producer Colin Fairley, Mikel Erentxun (guitar, vocals) and Diego Vasallo (vocals, bass) made Autobiografía with such sympathetic rockers as Nick Lowe, Brinsley Schwarz, Pete Thomas, Bruce Thomas and the Rumour Brass. Regardless of good crossover intentions, however, the tasteful assistance all but buries the band's personality, eliminating its eccentricities and erasing the look-ma-we-made-a-record! giddiness that surges through every groove of Canciones. As a further inducement to Anglo-American pop consumers, the LP includes a bonus EP (added to the CD and cassette as well) containing accented English renditions of three album tracks and one Canciones number. [1]

DURAN DURAN

Duran Duran (Harvest) 1981 (Capitol) 1983 •

Rio (Harvest) 1982 (Harvest-Mobile Fidelity) •

Carnival EP (Harvest) 1982 •

Seven and the Ragged Tiger (Capitol) 1983 •

Arena (Capitol) 1984 •

Natorious (Capitol) 1986 •

Big Thing (Capitol) 1988 •

Decade (Capitol) 1989 •

Liberty (Capitol) 1990 •

ARCADIA

So Red the Rose (Capitol) 1985 •

ANDY TAYLOR

Thunder (MCA) 1987 •

Dangerous (nr/A&M) 1990 •

Although conceived as a mix of the Sex Pistols and Chic, Birmingham's Duran Duran was in fact launched as another pretty-boy-new-romantic-haircut-clothes-synth-pop-dance ensemble and became an unimaginably popular teen sensation, drawing young fans into the world of techno-dance music. Taking cues (sound and image) from early Roxy Music and using simple electronics to flavor the lush but powerful rock sound, Duran Duran crossbred pop craft with a strong visual consciousness (using videos as a major strategic tool) to create records that are at once high-sheen disco and semi-inventive rock, even if that's not how the band and their followers view it.

Duran Duran introduced the dance attack in a remarkable sonic setting produced by Colin Thurston. Tracks like "Planet Earth," "Girls on Film" and "Is There Anyone Out There" meld the basic attributes of '70s disco—preeminent beat, repetition and studio gimmickry—to a variant on post-Ultravox rock to create something that was, at the time, fairly original. The elongated strains of synthesizer and syncopated tempos cover a multitude of creative shortcomings, but it's still an extraordinary album filled with now-classic songs.

Rio fulfills the band's potential, displaying stronger songwriting and far more intricate arrangements. The music's clearly danceable, but brilliantly listenable as well. Singer Simon Le Bon handles tantalizing melodies and obtuse lyrics with confidence (if not profound ability), while honestly proficient musicianship by the other four defines each song's character differently. There isn't anything less than good, and "Rio," "Last Chance on the Stairway" and "New Religion" are downright astonishing in their melodic excellence. Thanks to a remix that features prominent female moaning (and an exotic video), "Hungry Like the Wolf" caught American radio programmers' attention, and lofted the band high into the charts, where they long remained a well-appointed fixture.

Quick to recognize Duran's essential role as a dance band with rising commercial appeal, the group's US label released a package of four remixes ("Hungry Like the Wolf," "Girls on Film," "Hold Back the Rain" and "My Own Way") as Carnival.

Parting ways with Thurston, Duran attempted to expand their musical horizons beyond the lush ambience of Rio and developed a herky-jerky rhythmic style aimed at creating catchy singles in a variety of modes. Unfortunately, this led them to make the utterly detestable Seven and the Ragged Tiger, a sorry collection of half-baked melodies, meaningless lyrics (their earlier work, while not poetry, at least sounded clever) and over-active studio foolishness. Basically, the songs ain't no damn good. And even a passable item like "The Reflex" gets twisted with exaggerated, comical vocals; "Union of the Snake" sounds only half-written. The only truly noteworthy song, "New Moon on Monday," actually sounds like an outtake from Rio. Still, the album proved extremely successful among the audience who cheered the video monitors, not the band, during the tour that followed it.

Arena, the audio documentary of a mammoth coast-to-coast American trek, features surprisingly good playing (but extremely bad singing) on nine hits; additionally, the package (and I do mean package) includes a studio cut, "The Wild Boys," produced by Nile Rodgers, which resembles a possible theme song for Lord of the Flies. This album is irrelevant to anyone over the age of fifteen.

Duran Duran spent the next two years split into two camps. Taylor and Taylor (Andy and John) formed Power Station, while Simon, Nick and Roger stuck together, dubbing their sub-group Arcadia. Not surprisingly, with the artistic troublemakers out of the picture, Arcadia's So Red the Rose (produced by the late Alex Sadkin and featuring guest spots by Sting, Herbie Hancock, David Van Tieghem, David Gilmour, Andy Mackay and others) is virtually an old-fashioned Duran Duran album. Not an especially good one, mind you, but it does sound a lot more like Rio than Seven and the Ragged Tiger does.

Although they had a number one single in mid-'85 with the theme song for a James Bond film ("A View to a Kill"), the group was in a transitional state. Roger left in 1986; Andy stayed long enough to play on four tracks on the next album before splitting for a solo career. That left Simon, Nick and John Taylor to carry the tattered but marketable banner, supported on Notorious by producer/guitarist Nile Rodgers (talk about realizing career ambitions), Missing Person guitarist Warren Cuccurullo and session drummer Steve Ferrone. A lack of material, a surplus of horns and the overall sterile pop/funk precision leave Duran resembling a dull, toned-down Power Station with no songs. The title track isn't entirely horrible, but that's not much to hang an album on. (That same year, John Taylor wrote and recorded a big-selling solo single, "I Do What I Do," for the film 9 1/2 Weeks.)

Critics might have written the group off by that point, but somebody bought a million copies of Notorious, granting the group license to make the even worse Big Thing. Again towing Cuccurullo and Ferrone, the trio sleepwalks through an utterly unmemorable collection of rote retreads, complete with premature middle-age-crisis sexual stupidity (from the same school as the Who's similarly titled It's Hard) and brief instrumental interludes. A total waste of time.

The appearance of Decade, a selective but solid singles compilation with cover by fashion designer Stephen Sprouse, underscored the group's flagging creative momentum and raised the possibility that the not-so-wild boys might have called it quits.

No such luck. The best that can be said about Liberty (unveiling Cuccurullo and drummer Sterling Campbell as permanent members) is that it doesn't sound much like Notorious or Big Thing. Chris Kimsey's lively, down-to-business production avoids those albums' obvious sonic vapidness. A senseless collision of standard Duran/Power Station funk, tuneless guitar raunch (!), Motown-inflected soul pop ("Violence of Summer (Love's Taking Over)" sounds like the B-52's interpreting Joe Jackson), numbing dance grooves, Rio-style lushness and even (now here's a great idea) found-sound audio collage, Liberty is accessibly idiotic, with lyrics that set new standards for pretensions gone out of bounds. Typical of Le Bon's crimes against intelligence, taste and dignity: "Divine blasphemer tempting/holy beads of jism/w/ith the scarlet catechism . . ." Yeuch!

Andy Taylor's solo career got off to a quick and weird start in mid-'86 when he scored a minor hit single with "Take It Easy," a song for the American Anthem soundtrack. Unlike anything else in his past work, the song unnervingly resembles the Bellamy Brothers' 1976 easy-listening smash, "Let Your Love Flow."

Although Taylor's name alone graces the cover of Thunder, ex-Pistol Steve Jones co-wrote, co-produced and played half the guitar on it. Impressionable Durans must have plotted upon hearing their beloved fashion plate roaring through demi-metal rock songs. Pathetic stabs at incorporating echoes of Duran and Power Station aside, the pair's power chords (and even some of the solos) ring loud and true, giving the louder songs conviction, if not artistic merit. [1]

See also Power Station.

DURANGO 95

Lose Control (Can. Star) 1983
 Dreams and Trains EP (Stonegarden) 1986
 Mothers Day (Can. Star) 1990

PURPLE TOADS

Purple Toads (Can. Star) 1986
 Love Songs for the Hard of Hearing (Can. Star) 1988

These five garage-punk wisecracks from Oshawa, Ontario, must have been raised on a strict diet of the Shadows of Knight. Greg Weir has a semi-whiny teen voice that blends efficiently with the band's restrained roar on Lose Control. Not spectacular, but good fun.

Before splitting (the two guitarists and bassist went on to form the Purple Toads) in 1984, the Durangos cut a fun-filled second album that wasn't issued until six years later. Mothers Day pushes less-stylized/less-funny/more-confident/more-mature rock'n'roll (Weir's voice is a lot easier to take this time around) on such charging originals as "Cats Aren't Like People," "Hangin' from a Tree" and "Waking Up Stoned."

The Purple Toads play '60s punk classics ("You're Gonna Miss Me," "Sometimes Good Guys Don't Wear White," "Nobody but Me," etc.) and garage originals ("You Got Money") with unfettered enthusiasm and solid skill on the excellent Purple Toads; guitarists Paul MacNeil and Rob Sweeney can get a good Yardbirds-style R&B fire going. With the exception of "Tobacco Road" and three others, the raunchier-sounding Love Songs is entirely (and effectively) self-penned. [1]

DURUTTI COLUMN

The Return of the Durutti Column (nr/Factory) 1979 •
 LC (nr/Factory) 1981 •
 Another Setting (nr/Factory) 1982 •
 Live at the Venue, London (nr/VU) 1983
 Amigos in Portugal (Portuguese Factory Atlantica) 1984
 Without Mercy (nr/Factory) 1984 •
 Say What You Mean, Mean What You Say EP (nr/Factory) 1985 •
 Domo Arigato [CD] (nr/Factory) 1985 •
 Circuses and Bread (nr/Factory) 1985 •
 Valuable Passages (Factory-Relativity) 1986 •
 Live at the Bottom Line New York [tape] (ROIR) 1987
 The Guitar and Other Machines (Venture-Virgin) 1988 •
 The First Four Albums [CD] (nr/Factory) 1988 •
 Vini Reilly (nr/Factory) 1989 •
 Obey the Time (nr/Factory) 1990 •

VINI REILLY

The Sporadic Recordings [CD] (nr/Sporadic) 1989 •
 Durutti Column—the historical name comes from the Spanish Civil War—is essentially guitarist Manchester Vini Reilly (who began his career as a punk, in the late-'70s Ed Banger & the Nosebleeds), although he has used other musicians in the studio and tours with other players. In the late '80s, Reilly branched out, backing

Morrissey (another Nosebleeds alumnus, as it happens) on his first solo record and working on an assortment of projects.

Producer Martin Hannett deserves equal credit on The Return of the Durutti Column, a perversely titled debut of evocative guitar instrumentals, many multi-tracked and accented with environmental, synthetic and studio-created percussive effects. Occasionally reminiscent of Mike Oldfield's Tubular Bells and some of the Frippertronics recordings, Reilly pretty much creates his own style—a gentle, uncluttered amalgam of acoustic and electric guitar textures.

Hannett is absent from the self-produced LC. Bruce Mitchell plays drums in spots and Reilly, regrettably, "sings" on a couple of the tracks, all of which makes it the lesser of Reilly's first two works, although the instrumentals still provide pleasant listening.

Continuing to experiment with various approaches, Reilly incorporated a cor anglais (English horn) player on Another Setting. The first of the two side-long pieces that comprise Without Mercy is like modern chamber music, an ambitious and shifting mixture of piano, horns, strings and electronic percussion. The second, which favors guitar, employs an entire studio group, including Blaine Reininger of Tuxedomoon.

While hardly raucous, Reilly moved further away from his ambient roots on Say What You Mean: deep, heavy electronic (or treated) percussion is annoyingly high in the mix on most of the six tracks. The record's highlight, "Silence," starts out sparsely, with electronic piano and marimba, and builds nicely with the addition of drums, trumpet, slide guitar and Reilly's much-improved voice. Although his vinyl output is perhaps more prolific than his creativity, Reilly is capable of producing rewarding music.

The airy and alluring 70-minute-long Domo Arigato CD, recorded live at a 1985 Tokyo concert appearance by Reilly (singing and playing a bit of piano), drummer Mitchell (doubling on xylophone), John Metcalfe (viola) and Tim Kellest (trumpet), draws its material from all of DC's prior releases and has beautifully clear sound. Offering an equally comprehensive review of the studio albums, the smartly compiled Valuable Passages adds a previously unreleased item and assorted rarities (from singles, etc.), making it the perfect introduction to Reilly's soothing atmospherics. For the complete review of the Durutti Column's early work, The First Four Albums is a four-CD repackaging (in one jewelbox) of The Return, LC, Another Setting, Without Mercy and Say What You Mean.

Circuses and Bread finds Reilly again constructing layers of repetitive guitar figures with varying mixtures of other ingredients—drums, viola, piano, vocals, horns, sound effects—to help differentiate the tracks. In two groundbreaking tracks, "Hilary" is the loudest, most aggressive thing he has ever recorded, while "Royal Infirmary," a somber mood piece played on piano and punctuated by the sound of automatic rifle fire, has no guitar at all.

The live-in-New York cassette finds Reilly, backed by Mitchell and Metcalfe, playing piano and treated guitar on a career-spanning program (with little overlap of Domo Arigato's song selection) of tasteful instrumentals that suffers from an inordinate amount of tape hiss.

Some of the new material presented at that late-'86 show wound up being recorded for The Guitar and Other Machines, which also relies on Mitchell and Metcalfe (plus others to a lesser degree) for studio support. The eleven pieces (three with guest vocals) are as sonically adventurous as anything Reilly has ever attempted. While remaining inside the group's traditional parameters, this ambitious record increases his emotional reach.

Using three guest vocalists, Vini Reilly (also available on DAT) is Reilly's most accomplished effort yet, but it also reveals his creative dilemma (or options, depending on one's point of view). While the strong infrastructure of "Love No More" shows real compositional development, "Pol in G" is just another meandering doodle with no backbone. But then there's the suave theatricality of "Opera I," the bass-driven funk of "People's Pleasure Park" and the Stony chord work of "Red Square." Each approach (echoed on other tracks) is valid and intriguing in its way, but such haphazard variety leaves the album—and, by extension, the artist—without any clear direction or focus. [ds/dgs/i]

See also Morrissey.

IAN DURY

New Boots and Panties!! (Stiff) 1977 (nr/Demon) 1986 •
Lord Upminster (Polydor) 1981 (nr/Great Expectations) 1990 •

Apples (nr/WEA) 1989 •

IAN DURY & THE BLOCKHEADS

Do It Yourself (Stiff-Epic) 1979 (nr/Demon) 1990 •

Laughter (Stiff-Epic) 1980

Jukebox Dury (Stiff America) 1981

Greatest Hits (nr/Fame) 1982

Sex & Drugs & Rock & Roll (nr/Demon) 1986 •

Wark's n' Audience (nr/Demon) 1991 •

IAN DURY AND THE MUSIC STUDENTS

4000 Weeks' Holiday (nr/Polydor) 1984 (nr/Great Expectations) 1990 •

Stunted in growth, crippled by polio and unrepentantly Cockney, Ian Dury is one of rock's most memorable (and certainly lovable) figures. Hardly a newcomer in 1977—the 35-year old had already been around with Kilburn and the High Roads—Dury came into his own with New Boots and Panties!!, an album whose energy almost defies it to stay on the turntable. With the motley but talented Blockheads, Dury trounces merrily through outrageous odes like "Plaistow Patricia," "Billericay Dickie," "Blockheads" and the anthemic "Sex & Drugs & Rock & Roll" (not on the original UK LP, but added to the American edition and later to the British as well). A more sensitive side emerges lyrically on "Sweet Gene Vincent," "My Old Man" and "If I Was with a Woman" and musically on "Wake Up and Make Love with Me."

Dury and the Blockheads' disco leanings came to the fore on the dazzling Do It Yourself. The band's rich interweaving behind Dury's playfully obscure vocals may have meant sensory overload for some, and the more sophisticated music (compared to New Boots' often raucous blare) must have turned away the punk cadres. With hindsight, though, Do It Yourself can be heard as a trailblazing fusion of dance musics, in both upbeat ("Sink My Boats," "Dance of the Screemers") and relaxed ("Inbetweens," "Lullaby for Francies") modes.

Blockhead musical director Chaz Jankel left after Do It Yourself, but the band carried on with thinner textures and ex-Feelgood guitarist Wilko Johnson. (Jankel subsequently pursued a dull solo career as a pianist singer.) Laughter is an uneasy and uneven mix of whimsical concepts like "Yes & No (Paula)," "Dance of the Crackpots" and "Over the Points," as well as less-inspired funk-rock like "(Take Your Elbow Out of the Soup You're Sitting on the Chicken)" and "Sueperman's Big Sister."

Dury abandoned Stiff and scuttled the Blockheads, but reunited with Jankel for Lord Upminster, recorded in the Bahamas with reggae rhythm kingpins Robbie Shakespeare and Sly Dunbar. After the Blockheads' joyful noise, Lord Upminster's funk sounds ascetic. (Keyboard player Tyrone Downie is the only other musician.) Disappointingly, Dury scales down his writing for the occasion, approaching minimalist levels on "Wait (For Me)" and "Trust (Is a Must)." Aside from the exceedingly frank "Spasticus (Autisticus)," the record amounts to a creative holding pattern.

It took Dury three years to bang out another, this time with a mostly unfamiliar set of sidemen working under the ironic Music Students moniker. The homemade-look cover of 4000 Weeks' Holiday belies the slickly produced soul tracks inside; only Dury's homey speak-singing connects the songs to a non-mainstream aesthetic. Lyrically conservative as well, Dury waxes romantic ("You're My Inspiration"), treachery ("Friends"), political ("Ban the Bomb"), noirish ("The Man with No Face") and whimsical ("Take Me to the Cleaners").

Reuniting with Mickey Gallagher, Davey Payne and a host of other old mates (Steve Nieve and Wreckless Eric both guest), Dury broke a five-year recording silence with the charming and gentle Apples. While the lightly flavored arrangements leave the songs (mostly Dury/Gallagher compositions) on the pleasant side of mild, Dury's personable vocals provide all the character needed. (Frances Ruffelle duets on several tracks and sings one solo.) In any case, Dury's lyrics—with the exception of "Love Is All" ("My fevered brow is bursting till I choke"???)—are wonderful. Besides satiric slaps at tabloid reporters ("Byline Browne") and novice policemen ("Pc Honey"), he considers the labor problems faced by criminals ("The Right People"), offers a laundry list of British celebrities ("England's Glory") and rewrites the Lord's Prayer with homonymic place names ("Bus Driver's Prayer").

In his prime, Dury worked best outside the album format. "Hit Me with Your Rhythm Stick" was hastily added to Do It Yourself as a bonus 45; "Reasons to Be Cheerful (Part 3)" fell between Do It Yourself and Laughter. Although it could be ungenerously interpreted merely as Stiff's last chance to cash in, Jukebox Dury (reissued as Greatest Hits) is also the best and most consistent Dury LP. Besides the two hits just mentioned, it has other fine 45 sides ("What a Waste," "Razzle in My Pocket," "Common as Muck") and a few choice album cuts. Dury's humanism comes through loud and clear, and the record is programmed swell.

Created as a complement to New Boots and Panties!!, the Sex & Drugs compilation is almost identical to Jukebox Dury except that it omits "Sweet Gene Vincent" and "Wake Up and Make Love to Me" in favor of "Sueperman's Big Sister" and "You're More Than Fair." The CD has four bonus tracks. Warts'n' Audience is a live LP from December 1990. [st:1]

DWARVES

Horror Stories (Vox) 1986

Toolin' for a Warm Teabag (Nasty Gash) 1988

Astro Boy EP (Sub Pop) 1990

Blood Guts & Pussy (Sub Pop) 1990 •

Lucifer's Crank EP (No. 6) 1991

SUBURBAN NIGHTMARE

A Hard Day's Nightmare (Midnight) 1985

Proponents of an extremist wing of the less-is-more school of thought, the Dwarves have wreaked much underground havoc with highly confrontational (often blood-soaked) live sets that are over in ten minutes, and "longplayers" of acute political incorrectness which don't last even twice that. If there weren't so much action here—imagine watching The Evil Dead on fast-forward—these San Francisco-via-Chicago neo-punks might be just another bunch of exhibitionists.

The Dwarves downplay the existence of Horror Stories which, all things considered, is solid reasoning. Captured in transition from teen Zappaphiles to circus-freak speedballers, the quartet strains against the flower-power leash, but never manages to break free. What followed, however, is a metamorphosis as ungodly as any in the annals of rock'n'roll. Toolin' for a Warm Teabag lasts but nine minutes, but that's enough time for the Dwarves to slash through seven post-hardcore incantations ("Free Cocaine," "Let's Get Pregnant," etc.) that effectively exorcise any prior embarrassments.

You might think that Blood Guts & Pussy's title (along with the calculated offense of a cover that depicts two women and a real dwarf, all nude and drenched in type-O claret) tells you all you need to know about the disc. Think again. Unexpectedly tight and musicianly (especially guitarist He Who Cannot Be Named), the Dwarves reveal themselves as informed pop students. Pushed along by the yammering vocals of Blag Jesus (aka Julius Seizure), these eleven tracks (fifteen minutes this time) are constantly on the verge of falling apart. But somehow, that translates into immensely powerful forward propulsion. The CD includes two non-LP tracks from the 7-inch Astro Boy.

A Hard Day's Nightmare is the real wild card here. Recorded before the renamed band's move to California, it's more or less a drug-sodden update of Cruisin' with Ruben and the Jets, sound-collage splatter oozing between relatively straightforward bits of Farfisa-tinged psychobilly. The disc is more clever than outrageous; a song called "6" brags "I ain't gonna be no average dick." And while a cover of "Brand New Cadillac" may have appealed to revivalists, there's nothing old-fashioned about an album whose sides are titled "Sex" and "Sex & Drugs."

The Lucifer's Crank 7-inch compiles seven alternate takes of songs from the past three records, plus a devolved obliteration of Red Crayola's "Hurricane Fighter Plane." [dss]

DYS

Wolfpack (Taang!) 1983

DYS (Taang!) 1984

Although probably better known for his stints in Washington DC's Dag Nasty and California's All, Dave Smalley began his career in Boston, with a hardcore band ironically named for the city's Department of Youth Services. On Wolfpack, as DYS expounds the judgmentally self-righteous straight-edge ethos (i.e., no drugs, no drink) that became popular in both Boston and DC, Smalley comes off as an admirable idealist and a terrible singer. Though the debut could simply be tagged and shelved as a chunk of tolerable hardcore, it does contain some bright spots, most notably "Escape," a metalized dirge with heavily delayed vocals. The album also displays a sense of humor—not a common straight-edge commodity—in an ad-libbed cover of "Ironman" and a pair of parodies ("Dirty Dog" and "Rub a Dub").

Satire seemed to suit the band, and DYS is pure metal mockery. (Or is it?) Either a good joke badly executed or a bad idea through and through, the record has a real scary cover and appropriately styled vocals. Funny or not, it just isn't any good. [icm]

See also All, Dag Nasty.

E E E E E E E

EASTERHOUSE

In Our Own Hands EP (nr/London) 1985
Inspiration EP (nr/Rough Trade) 1986
Contenders (Rough Trade-Columbia) 1986 •
Waiting for the Redbird (Rough Trade-Columbia)
1989 •

Easterhouse's original incarnation—a Manchester quintet led by argumentative brothers Andy (vocals/lyrics) and Ivor (guitar) Perry—turned strident leftist rhetoric into bracing, cathartic music before predictably imploding over ideological conflicts. The band's demise was a shame, since Easterhouse seemed well on its way towards perfecting a brand of explicitly political rock that compromised neither music nor message.

The four-track In Our Own Hands is a commanding debut, bursting with musical energy and topical fervor. Inspiration examines the troubles in Northern Ireland with convincing passion, while giving Ivor a convincing framework for his spidery guitar lines. Two Inspiration numbers—the title song and “Nineteen Sixty Nine”—later showed up on Easterhouse's long-play debut.

Contenders, Easterhouse's abortive shot at US success, almost makes good on the band's lofty goals. Their lyrical concerns are compelling and clear without falling prey to sloganeering or anthem-mongering. The music is both melodic and muscular, lending authority to Andy's regret-tinged broadsides. Songs like “Out on Your Own,” “To Live Like This” and “Cargo of Souls” vilify various institutions (including England's Labour Party) without losing sight of the human cost of governmental oppression. (The English CD adds two songs not on the American LP or CD.)

Ruminations on the contradictions inherent in a revolutionary communist band's affiliation with a multinational entertainment megalith were put on hold when Easterhouse's initial lineup fell apart not long after Contender's US release. Ivor Perry and drummer Gary Rostock briefly (one single on UK Rough Trade) reemerged in a new band called the Cradle, with ex-Aztec Camera/Smiths guitarist Craig Gannon.

Andy Perry, meanwhile, held onto the Easterhouse name and released Waiting for the Redbird, a virtual solo album whose slick, processed studio sound couldn't be further from the five piece's bare-wires approach. Perry's lyrics remain singleminded and lucid enough for his extremism to be intermittently compelling. Ultimately, though, without a commanding musical identity to match his exhortations, the one-dimensional dogma rings hollow. Wicked Irony Department: Redbird's anthem “Come Out Fighting” was briefly adopted as an all-purpose go-for-it anthem by unsuspecting American TV sports programs. [hd]

EASTERN BLOC

Wall to Wall EP (Chetnick) 1986
Eastern Bloc (Paradox-Passport) 1987 •

These three New York scene veterans—bassist Ivan Kral, guitarist Mark Sidgwick and drummer Frankie LaRocka—have individually backed the likes of Patti Smith, Iggy Pop, David Johansen, Holly Vincent, Tim Scott and John Waite. Their own band's album, while not exactly a groundbreaker, is a thoroughly respectable melodic rock collection that reflects the years they've spent in the trenches. Sidgwick has a pleasant if limited voice and his guitar playing is both fiery and flexible; the rhythm section is dexterous and inventive. A Pink Floyd-speed version of Kral's estimable 1979 Smith collaboration, “Dancing Barefoot,” is odd enough to work; the Sidgwick/Kral originals could use smarter lyrics, but don't want for hooks or commercial craft. [i]

See also Holly and the Italians, David Johansen, Patti Smith.

EASTERN DARK

See Celibate Rifles.

EAST OF EDEN

East of Eden (Echo Chamber-Capitol) 1989 •

Slick and soul-free, this Boston quintet (with a recycled name: no relation to the '70s British rock-with-violin band) fronted by singer/songwriter Cinde Lager displays an efficiently modern keyboard/guitar sound—equally beholden (indirectly) to the Pretenders and Simple Minds—and weak material on its dull debut, produced by Roy Thomas Baker. [i]

ELLIOT EASTON

See Cars.

EAT

Sell Me a God (Fiction-PolyGram) 1989 •

Lauded in Britain but virtually unknown in the States, this Bath-born/London-formed quintet's first LP is one of the most impressive debuts of recent years. Merging elements from bands as diverse as the Doors, Gang of Four and Big Audio Dynamite, Eat created an instantly familiar record that ultimately sounds like no one else. From the spaghetti western blues crunch of “Tombstone” and “Walking Man” to the swampy rap of “Stories” and “Things I Need,” Eat marries hip-hop technology to an ersatz bayou-bred instinct. Lyrically, Sell Me a God conjures up seamy abstract imagery in the tradition of scuzz-poet Jim Morrison; what may read as pretentious drivel on paper sounds just right. (The CD adds two sweaty funk tracks and a strong, hard take on the Lovin' Spoonful's "Summer in the City")

Eat recorded a second album, but split up in November 1990, leaving its release in limbo. [db]

EATER

The Album (nr/The Label) 1977

Get Your Yo Yos Out EP (nr/The Label) 1978

The History of Eater Vol. 1 (nr/DeLorean) 1985

British punk became a true youth movement in 1976 upon the arrival of Eater, a London group with 13-year-old drummer Dee Generate. (The other members were 15 at the time.) Although not taken seriously at first, the unwitting stars of Don Letts' Punk Movie (responsible for the ridiculous pig-head scene) released two credible and likable 45s: "Outside View" (after which Generate was replaced by the more talented, and slightly older Phil Rowland, who joined Slaughter and the Dogs when Eater split in '78) and the punk classic "Thinking of the U.S.A."

The album that followed is uneven but spirited. "Lock It Up" (another choice 45), "Public Toys," "No More" and an improved version of "Outside View"'s B-side ("You") join hilariously trashy sped-up covers of the Velvet's "Waiting for the Man" and "Sweet Jane," Bowie's "Queen Bitch" and Alice Cooper's "18" rejuvenated as "15." Andy Blade's vocals are Lou Reed deadpan, Brian Chevette's guitar is raspy and simple, and Ian Woodcock's bass runs along with stunning velocity.

Get Your Yo Yos Out is an unremarkable four-song live outing, though it does contain two numbers never released in studio form. While The History of Eater is mostly a reprise of The Album with a few added 45 tracks, it includes a bonus 7-inch, credited to Eater, of a Blade solo single, recorded in the mid-'80s with ex-Damned guitarist Brian James. A second volume of rare and live Eater material was announced but never appeared. [jr]

EAZY-E

See N.W.A.

ECHO & THE BUNNYMEN

Crocodiles (Sire) 1980 •

Shine So Hard EP (nr/Korova) 1981

Heaven Up Here (Korova-Sire) 1981 •

Porcupine (Korova-Sire) 1983 •

Echo and the Bunnymen EP (Korova-Sire) 1983

The Cutter [tape] EP (nr/Korova) 1983

Seven Seas EP (nr/Korova) 1984

Ocean Rain (Korova-Sire) 1984 •

Songs to Learn & Sing (Korova-Sire) 1985 •

Echo & the Bunnymen (Sire) 1987 •

Bedbugs & Ballyhoo EP (Sire) 1988

The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1988 •

WILL SERGEANT

Themes for Grind (nr/92 Happy Customers) 1982

BALCONY DOGS

Trip (nr/Bloodline-Island) 1988 •

IAN MCCULLOCH

Candleland [Sire-Reprise] 1989 •

Faith & Healing [Remix] EP [nr/WEA] 1989 •

Candleland [The Second Coming] EP [nr/East West] 1990 •

This vanguard foursome—at its late-'78 start a trio plus Echo the drum machine—emerged from Liverpool's new wave renaissance with a debut album stunning in its starkness and power. Unlike also-rans with the same idea, Ian McCulloch's specter-of-Jim Morrison vocals are no mere pilferage: where Morrison would have ordered you on your knees, Mac does it himself, alternately writhing in resistance or slumped in resignation to the agonies of an entirely different decade. On Crocodiles, Will Sergeant's scratchy, yet ringing, guitar and Pete De Freitas' unhurriedly relentless pounding drums set the sonic scene for McCulloch's sometimes ambivalently delivered existential crises. (The US album adds "Do It Clean" and "Read It in Books," both originally UK B-sides.)

The four songs on Shine So Hard come from the soundtrack to a half-hour film of a specially staged concert (admittedly a logistic and musical disappointment), and mostly serves to preview the upcoming LP in lackluster fashion. But in its own right, the gloom engulfing Heaven Up Here seems to have smothered the band's cogency, with McCulloch less a fist-shaker than a whiner. The old potency is still audible at times (mainly on Side One) but, like McCulloch, the guitars sound fragile, even brittle: overall, it's a dreamy, depressed and depressing effort.

Echo's third LP is far more enthralling, an invigorating collection of bizarre, challenging songs given surprising but fitting color by the addition of violinist Shankar's offbeat wailings. Sweeping creations like "The Cutter" and "The Back of Love" are tremendously exciting; the rest of Porcupine, if not as consistently memorable, captures the band's unique essence with grace and style. New-found efficiency dispatches past self-indulgent inaccessibility.

The even-better Ocean Rain exchanges Shankar's unique contribution for more routine string accompaniment, but offers an amazing skein of great songwriting. "Silver," "Crystal Days," "Seven Seas" and "The Killing Moon" all achieve the ideal marriage of pop with drama, using McCulloch's strong vocal presence and Sergeant's varied and textural guitar work to imbue the songs with majesty and subtlety.

Concisely recapitulating the band's first five years, Songs to Learn & Sing is a welcome retrospective: nine essential items, a fine new tune ("Bring on the Dancing Horses") and "The Puppet," Echo's third single (from 1980), which had not been on any previous US release. The CD and cassette have four bonus tracks.

The all-great eponymous 1983 EP contains "The Cutter" and "Back of Love" (from Porcupine), "Rescue" (from Crocodiles), "Never Stop" (a 1983 single) plus a live version of "Do It Clean" from the Royal Albert Hall. The Cutter cassette, which contains the title tune plus four live Peel session tracks, was also packaged in with initial UK quantities of Porcupine. The Seven Seas EP is available as a five-song 12-inch (with LP tracks from Ocean Rain and Crocodiles) and as a seven-song doublepack 45. The Peel session EP predates the first LP, and contains live-in-the-studio renditions of "Read It in Books," "Villiers Terrace" and two other songs.

De Freitas briefly left Echo (ex-Haircut One Hundred drummer Blair Cunningham took his place) in 1986 but was back in the lineup in time for Echo & the Bunnymen, a solid and mature album which gains momentum as it plays. Produced by Laurie Latham, engaging, reflective songs—"Lips Like Sugar," "Lost and Found," "New Direction" and "All in Your Mind"—show the Bunnymen's ongoing refinement and consistent quality; the band acknowledges its debt to the Doors by prominently featuring Ray Manzarek, one of several guest keyboardists the record employs, on the distinctly reminiscent "Bedbugs and Ballyhoo." That track (in its LP version and an elongated remix) was subsequently issued as one side of an EP, the flipside of which offers three spiffy live covers: "Paint It Black," the Velvet Underground's "Run, Run, Run" and Television's "Friction." (In a similar vein, Echo contributed a version of the Doors' "People Are Strange" to The Lost Boys' soundtrack.)

In 1982, Sergeant self-released Themes for Grind, a noodly instrumental solo album originally created to accompany a film project that was never completed. In 1988, the Balcony Dogs (successor to the abortive Sex Gods, the band De Freitas formed with two members of the Bunnymen road crew during his sabbatical) released Trip, a surprisingly good record on which the drummer plays only a minor role. Putting an intermittent psychedelic '60s spin on casual guitar pop (with strong nods to Echo, the Doors and other relevant referents), the Balcony Dogs—with genealogical connections to many Liverpool luminaries—sound a bit like Bunnymen fans trying to impress themselves, but the playing and singing displays such ingenuous enthusiasm that the LP is hard to resist.

McCulloch quit in mid-'88, picked up a guitar and began writing songs for his first solo album. Released late the following year, The alluring Candleland, atmospherically produced by Ray Shulman, distills the dreamy rock sound of Echo & the Bunnymen while preserving the band's sweeping melodies and guitar hooks. His expressive vocals, surprisingly good guitar playing and resonantly emotional lyrics (the haunting "Start Again" bids farewell to his late father, De Freitas, who died in a 1989 accident, and another friend who passed away) make such excellent new songs as "Flickering Wall," "White Hotel" and "Proud to Fall" immediately familiar; varied arrangements turn others (like "Faith and Healing," "The Cape" and the waltz-time "I Know You Well") into everything from orchestrated balladry to New Orderized dance-pop. With only one serious flaw—the songs' elementary chord patterns—Candleland is a magnificent record.

Besides an incidental remix of the title song, the Faith & Healing EP offers a trio of non-LP tracks produced by McCulloch and performed with his hard-rocking touring band, the Prodigal Sons. Two of the tunes are lame, but "Rocket Ship" is brilliant. The Candleland EP contains a sturdier version of the album's evanescent title track (again featuring vocals by Cocteau Twin Elizabeth Fraser) as well as three fine new songs. [jg/]

ECHO & THE BUNNYMEN

Reverberation (Korova-Sire) 1990 •

ST. VITUS DANCE

Love Me Love My Dogma (nr/Probe Plus) 1987

When Ian McCulloch left Echo and the Bunnymen, he fully expected that the group's decade-long saga had ended and that his bandmates would go their separate ways. He was wrong: the other three opted to keep the name and get themselves a new vocalist. Although De Freitas was killed in a June 1989 motorcycle accident (on the way to a rehearsal), Sergeant and bassist Les Pattinson pressed on with Irish singer/lyricist Noel Burke, longtime Echo adjunct Jake Brockman on keyboards and drummer Damon Reece. Unveiled in late '90, the new-look/new-sound Echo and the Bunnymen—unable to preserve the past or create anything substantially original—weakly attempt to catch up with history on the Geoff Emerick-produced Reverberation. Suspended between the familiar and the unreachable, and seemingly motivated mostly by bitterness towards McCulloch, the album offers imaginative performances of dull melodies and obvious second-person lyrics, all sprinkled with familiar musical moves. (Burke comes closest to aping Mac on "Thick Skinned World.") The sparkling "Enlighten Me" effectively kicks Madchester acid pop further into folk flower-power (with tabla and sitar for authenticity!); the rest of Reverberation is, as its title suggests, merely the decaying echo of an original sound.

Burke's prior band, St. Vitus Dance (not to be confused with the similarly named American group), was a charming Belfast sextet with good, simple songs and an abundance of shaggy personality. Love Me Love My Dogma is no technical masterpiece, but the clever common-sense lyrics ("I was a stable boy who grew to be a most unstable man") about Irish life, the jolly rock (credit Haydn Boyle's colorful piano/organ playing) music and Burke's lively vocals make this nifty item well worth finding. [i]

EDDIE AND THE HOT RODS

Live at the Marquee EP (nr/Island) 1976

Teenage Depression (Island) 1976

Life on the Line (Island) 1977

Thriller (nr/Island) 1979

Fish'n'Chips (EMI America) 1980

One Story Town EP (nr/Waterfront) 1985

The Curse of the Hot Rods (nr/Hound Dog) 1990

It may be difficult to hear now, but London's Eddie and the Hot Rods played a crucial role in the birth of new wave. If the Rods hadn't been out there playing wild and fast rock'n'roll in the clubs at a time when superstar pomposity was the currency of pop music, bands like the Sex Pistols would never have had the opportunity to join, intensify and broaden that rebellious spirit into a national—and international—musical upheaval.

Today, Teenage Depression sounds like a fairly tame set of R&B-influenced rock tunes, like early Flamin Groovies or Dave Edmunds, but in 1976 it had a major impact on the British music scene. The title track (a hit single there) is the record's finest moment. (The American album replaced two soul covers with four tracks that had appeared on the prior live 7-inch.)

For Life on the Line, the Rods expanded to a five-piece with the addition of ex-Kursaal Flyer Graeme Douglas. It was a wise move, as Douglas gave the band a smart kick in the pop direction, best exemplified on the wonderful "Do Anything You Wanna Do," which he co-wrote. Overall, a strong album (thanks to good songs and enthusiastic playing) that stands up much better than its predecessor.

By the time of Thriller, the Hot Rods weren't much more than an artifact. Rendered redundant by the bands they had inspired, they hadn't been able to keep pace with the changes. The album reeks with bitterness; although competent, it has neither the freshness of Life on the Line nor anything substantial to replace it. As a sign of the band's "maturity," Linda McCartney sang some backup parts.

With Al Kooper producing, a revised quartet (without Douglas or bassist Paul Gray) turned out an unnecessary fourth album that is best forgotten. Five years later, following a stint in the Inmates, two original Hot Rods—singer Barrie Masters and drummer Steve Nicol—put a new band together long enough to perform such classics as "Teenage Depression," "Quit This Town" and "Do Anything You Wanna Do" on the surprisingly good six-song One Story Town, recorded live and peppy in France.

Rounding things off, The Curse of the Hot Rods is an entertaining (if not especially illuminating) collection of 1979 studio outtakes and demos: the original group's last productive breath. A version of the Small Faces' "I Got Mine" is neat, as are some of the originals, especially those penned by Douglas (pop) and Gray (rock'n'roll). [i]

See also Damned, Inmates.

EDGE

See Jane Aire and the Belvederes.

DAMON EDGE

See Chrome.

ED GEIN'S CAR

Making Dick Dance (Ed Gein's Car) 1985
You Light Up My Liver/Live at CBGB (CBGB-Celluloid) 1987

The lovable Ed Gein's Car epitomizes the spirit of New York punk. Not hardcore or speed-thrash, just good ol' greasy, gritty punk rock with a working class aesthetic. Despite a pronounced Misfits influence and the use of a gruesome serial killer's name, the band's lyrics shun the horror angle. Instead, the songs on Making Dick Dance focus on things like topical social problems ("Boo Fuckin' Hoo," about the Bernhard Goetz case), Ramonesian goofball humor (the nifty "Go Down on My Dog") and crude songs about women ("A Girl Just Like You"). Good Clash-like harmonies and Scott Weiss's rough, melodic lead vocals help put the tunes over.

Fittingly enough, the second album was recorded live at CBGB. While reprising most of Making Dick Dance, the program also includes a cool version of the Misfits' "Last Caress," two songs from the group's 1985 7-inch debut and a healthy batch of newies, led by the anti-Live Aid anthem "We're Not Your World." [gef]

ED HALL

Albert (Boner) 1988

Love Poke Here (Boner) 1990 •

More noisy bizzaros from Texas. On Albert, this obliquely named Austin trio—a tamer party-band alternative to the Butthole Surfers—throws out a good-naturedly disorganized roar: Gary Chester's riffy distorted-guitar collapsing over Larry Strub's wobbly bass and Kevin Whitley's semi-sturdy drumming. The humorous lyrics on such topics as literature and dates are a lot more intellectually diverting than the inflamed (but not explosive) music.

Love Poke Here (actually, the cover leaves the title wide open to interpretation) continues the band's giddy blare, with louder, more conscientious arrangements and equally mischievous songs—about rich people's houses, "Buddha" and "Hearty Tom Foolery." [pn]

DAVE EDMUNDS

Rockpile (MAM) 1972

Subtle as a Flying Mallet (RCA) 1975

Dave Edmunds, Rocker: Early Works 1968/1972 (Fr.

Parlophone-EMI) 1977

Get It (Swan Song) 1977 •

Tracks on Wax 4 (Swan Song) 1978 •

Repeat When Necessary (Swan Song) 1979 •

Twangin' ... (Swan Song) 1981 •

The Best of Dave Edmunds (Swan Song) 1981 •

D.E. 7th (Columbia) 1982 •

Information (Columbia) 1983

Riff Raff (Columbia) 1984

The Dave Edmunds Band Live: I Hear You Rockin' (Columbia) 1987 •

Closer to the Flame (Capitol) 1990 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Stardust (Arista) 1974

Porky's Revenge (Columbia) 1985 •

Can traditional rock'n'roll survive in the modern world? As long as Dave Edmunds is around, the answer will be yes. A rousing singer, superlative guitarist and wizard producer, the Welsh native has preserved the simplicity and directness of '50s rock without ever sounding like a slavish revivalist. Along the way, he's also performed tricks with country music and even Phil Spector's elaborate constructions. Edmunds has had his ups and downs on record, but the one thing he's never been is pretentious.

Dave prefaced his solo career with two LPs as the leader of manic blues-psychedelic trio Love Sculpture. Those days are well documented on numerous compilations, the best being a two-disc French set, Dave Edmunds, Rocker.

Rockpile was recorded because Edmunds needed to make an LP to capitalize on his worldwide smash single, a one-man remake of "I Hear You Knockin'," a Dave Bartholomew number from the mid-'50s. This LP established the boundaries of the first phase of his solo career: a Chuck Berry tune, a Willie Dixon blues, a country stomp (by Neil Young, no less) and so on. Rockpile is a mishmash in terms of recording dates—one track was cut in 1966—and creation, with Edmunds playing almost all the instruments himself. No matter—it rocks like crazy.

Of the 40 cuts on the two-LP soundtrack/compilation for the David Essex film Stardust, seven are fine covers of oldies by Edmunds. A point to note here: six of those tracks are credited to the Stray Cats—years in advance of Brian Setzer's group.

By 1975, the unprolific Edmunds had a few more UK hits and enough other odds and ends to assemble another LP; unfortunately Subtle as a Flying Mallet doesn't hold together. The Everly Brothers' "Leave My Woman Alone" and a few other individual tracks work, but this is otherwise a largely lifeless record. The intricate one-man Spector homages ("Maybe," "Baby I Love You," etc.) are pretty but strained. Two tracks recorded live with Brinsley Schwarz point to the end of Edmunds' hibernation in the studio.

Get It lets air into the musty, old room of Edmunds' musical mind. Dave still laid down a lot of the tracks unaided, but also utilized the services of members of the Rumour and the now-defunct Brinsleys, forming a significant partnership with the latter's Nick Lowe. Highlights of this bright-sounding LP include Lowe's Chuck Berry rewrite, "I Knew the Bride," and the Lowe/Edmunds sprightly salute to the Everly Brothers, "Here Comes the Weekend."

Tracks on Wax 4 hardens and intensifies the attack, fully freeing Edmunds from the negative aspects of his nostalgic leanings. Give credit for that to the formation of Rockpile, a hard-working band composed of Edmunds, Lowe on bass, guitarist Billy Bremner and drummer Terry Williams; over the following few years, Rockpile recorded both Lowe and Edmunds solo albums, then cut one under the group name before splintering. On Tracks on Wax 4, they drive Dave to new heights of rock'n'roll glory.

Perhaps his best effort, Repeat When Necessary follows the course set by Tracks on Wax, with a bit of country sweetening. Standouts: Elvis Costello's "Girls Talk," "Queen of Hearts" (later a hit for Juice Newton) and the sultry "Black Lagoon."

Following the acrimonious breakup of Rockpile, Edmunds rushed out Twangin' . . ., a resounding disappointment. Despite the presence of a few pearls, this is clearly an inferior patchwork. Outtakes deserve to remain outtakes. The return to the claustrophobic one-man-band sound of his early days is particularly disheartening.

The Best of Dave Edmunds, thirteen tracks from the four Swan Song LPs, makes no chronological sense, but offers an impressive musical overview.

D.E. 7th marks a return to form. With a hot new supporting cast, Edmunds boogies like a happy man again. Springsteen's "From Small Things (Big Things One Day Come)" and a rip-roaring version of NRBQ's "Me and the Boys" lead the parade.

Information and Riff Raff comprise Edmunds' Jeff Lynne period: a horrendously ill-advised attempt to concoct slick, saleable "contemporary" product, with ELO leader Lynne acting as unlikely production/songwriting svengali. Though both albums have some good moments (the undeniably catchy "Slippin' Away" and another fine NRBQ cover on the former; good Paul Brady and Four Tops tunes, plus the demented roller-rink extravaganza "Rules of the Game" on the latter), they're largely characterized by a glib, crass sensibility that's fundamentally at odds with the unselfconscious enthusiasm that's always driven Edmunds' best work.

In contrast to those discs, the Porky's Revenge soundtrack is—believe it or not—a fine collection of rootsy, unpretentious rock'n'roll. In addition to some sharp cuts of his own, Edmunds produced worthy tracks for Jeff Beck, George Harrison (a new Dylan tune), Clarence Clemons and a studio supergroup featuring Edmunds' former Swan Song mentor, Robert Plant.

Edmunds' artistic productivity may have dipped in the mid-'80s, but his career as a producer stayed hot all decade. He guided the latter-day Stray Cats to the top of the charts and fulfilled a longstanding ambition of working with the Everly Brothers by producing their 1984 comeback album. He produced k.d. lang's debut and a new Dion album, and even reunited with old cohort Nick Lowe to produce Basher's Party of One.

The unprepossessing but delectable I Hear You Rockin' was recorded live in London, New York and New Jersey with Edmunds' post-Rockpile band: veteran pub-rock pianist Geraint Watkins, guitarist Mickey Gee, bassist John David and drummer/engineer Dave Charles. Edmunds touches all the obvious bases with little fanfare (save some intrusive synthesizer), reprising the better half of his Swan Song compilation while adding "I Hear You Knocking," "Information," "Paralyzed," "Slipping Away" and a fine reading of Dion's "The Wanderer."

Closer to the Flame, Edmunds' first solo studio effort in six years, isn't quite the resounding comeback that one would hope for, but it's a big improvement over the Lynne-influenced discs, with convincing stops at rockabilly ("King of Love," "Sincerely") and R&B (the title song, "Test of Love"), plus a pair of songs each by pub-rock legend Micky Jupp and NRBQ's Al Anderson. [jy/i/hd]

See also Rockpile.

EEK-A-MOUSE

- Wa-Do-Dem (Greensleeves) 1982 ●
- Skidipl (Greensleeves) 1982 ●
- The Mouse and the Man (Greensleeves) 1983
- Mouseketeer (Greensleeves) 1984
- Assasinator (RAS) 1984 ●
- The King and I (RAS) 1985 ●
- The Very Best of Eek-A-Mouse (nr/Greensleeves) 1987 ●
- Mouse-a-Mania (CD) (RAS) 1988 ●
- Eek-a-Nomics (RAS) 1988 ●

One of the biggest new solo reggae stars in the '80s, Eek-a-Mouse (Ripton Joseph Hylton) has no trouble maintaining a high profile. Not only is he six-foot-six, his distinctive voice is hard to miss: he sings with a nasal twang (like a higher-pitched version of Michael Rose), but punctuates his vocals with all sorts of syllabic thrusts, like reggae's answer to scat. The effect is both melodic and percussive—it keeps the groove moving forward. Eek's success is also attributable to the high quality of his records. He works primarily with Roots Radics, a popular Jamaican session band that's played behind Gregory Isaacs and countless others.

With Eek, however, the chemistry is unique—they seem to play better with him—and the power of their collaboration helps keep his albums consistent and special.

Above all, Eek is funny, a comic as well as social critic. Wa-Do-Dem, a smart debut, features the hit single of the same name. ("Wa do dem stare? Because she's too short and he's too tall.") Skidip! also has its share of hits ("Modelling Queen" and "You Na Love Reggae Music"), though the second side is a little thin. Assassinator is steady and strong, but boasts no outstanding tracks.

The Mouse and the Man and Mouseketeer are his best albums—assured and versatile. The first includes the epic tale of Eek's meeting with Mickey Mouse, "Modelling King" (a follow-up to his earlier hit) and a curious ditty called "Hitler." Mouseketeer features the journalistic "Star, Daily News or Gleaner," a song about anorexia and, for all who wondered, "How I Got Me Name." Not to be missed.

Eek's reign continues on The King and I, but he's stretching out a bit. Working with a number of musicians besides Roots Radics, the instrumentation is fuller (and includes some synthesizer), but hardly a drastic departure from his successful formula. Mouse-a-Mania is a CD-only compilation of tracks from The King and I and Assassinator.

The front cover of Eek-a-Nomics shows Mouse decked out in a tux, top hat and champagne; the back finds him on the skids, with ripped hand-me-down clothes. Besides the "The Freak," a hilarious, out-there dance single with Addams Family overtones, the album contains more of Eek-a-Mouse's usual stories and ravings. [bk/aw]

EFFIGIES

Haunted Town EP (Autumn) 1981
We're Da Machine EP (Ruthless-Enigma) 1983
The Effigies EP (Ruthless-Enigma) 1984
For Ever Grounded (Ruthless-Enigma) 1984
Fly on a Wire (Fever-Enigma) 1985
Ink (Fever-Restless) 1986
Remains Nonviewable (Roadkill) 1989

The Effigies were the first band from Chicago's bald-'n'-booted brigade to gain any out-of-town recognition, and rightfully so. The quartet's five-song debut EP (later reissued with an extra track as The Effigies EP) showcased their bold, taut, spare punk attack on real songs about adult concerns, with prophetic (for punk) metal guitar lacing through their best material, including the anthemic "Mob Clash."

Although flat production obscured the disc's strong points, the Effigies fuzzed up the guitar (simultaneously experimenting with acoustic) and moved it to the fore on We're Da Machine. The best songs on For Ever Grounded—a lyrically and rhythmically more diverse LP that even adds dance beats—wait with the urgency of a siren at night. Earl Letiecq's guitar screeches like whitewalls on sodden pavement—the raw nerve that keeps the Effigies' sound permanently on edge. Though sometimes seen as humorless and uncharismatic, the Effigies are solid and reliable.

Robert O'Connor stepped in to replace Letiecq, and the Effigies made a satisfying second album. One misguided disco-y track and a couple of wanky guitar solos aside, Fly on a Wire (which includes a cover of Joy Division's "No Love Lost") is an arresting LP, characterized by singer John Kezdy's venomous delivery and the band's purky melodicism on such tracks as "Forever, I Know" and "The Eights."

More than any of the previous outings, Ink spotlights the Effigies' canny command of tuneful (if not exactly hooky) postpunk songwriting. "The Sound That Moves" and "Yes!" rock like nobody's business, and O'Connor's edgy playing and Kezdy's nervy shout keep everything just this side of speaker-shredding. The Effigies' most assured and accessible work, Ink cements the group's rep as one of Chi-town's finest.

Remains Nonviewable, which compiles the 1981 "Body Bag" single and selected cuts from the early records, is a must for folks unable to score those rarities. Haunted Town's "Below the Drop," heard in this historical context, seems as potent a punk epiphany as has emerged from the movement.

Letiecq eventually rejoined the band, but 1990 saw Kezdy (whose law-school sabbatical led to the Effigies' low profile in the late '80s) joined in the Effigies by all three members of Bloodsport. [ep/db]

See also Bloodsport.

EGGPLANT

Monkeybars (Dr. Dream) 1989 •
Sad Astrology (Dr. Dream) 1990 •

In an eternal quest for true human tenderness in song, this unassuming Southern California quartet explores avenues paved by Jonathan Richman and Daniel Johnston. Guitarists Jon Melkerson and Jeff Beals have the uncanny ability to spin tales of cheerful wistfulness.

On Monkeybars, Eggplant proves the Richman axiom that excessive volume and force are not required for soul-stirring rock'n'roll; an almost celebratory cover of Lou Reed's "Vicious" grooves comfortably nearby the not-too-vicious slugging of "Rolling Stones" and the mundane fantasy travelogue of "Goin to Maine." Sad Astrology sports bigger-budget, brighter production (by Russ Tolman) and more happy/sad beauties like "Unexpected" and "If You See the Real World Coming." The title cut deserves an award for Best Apocalyptic Love Song of 1990. [sm]

MAX EIDER

See Jazz Butcher.

E*I*E*I*O

Land of Opportunity (Frontier) 1986
That Love Thing (Frontier) 1988 •

Wisconsin's E*I*E*I*O is an "American Music" band in the tradition of Creedence Clearwater Revival and the Blasters. Like those two bands, their sound is an amalgam of rock'n'roll, rockabilly, country, blues and folk. They've also got a strong singer with an unmistakably individual voice in Steve Summers, two good songwriters (Summers and bassist Richard Szeluga) and a pair of shit-hot guitarists (one of whom had been in Off Broadway) and harmony vocalists who can sing like Byrds.

The uniformly excellent material on Land of Opportunity (co-produced by Steve Berlin) ranges from flat-out ravers ("Tear It Down," "Go West Young Man," "The Middle of November") to songs about the ups and downs of the road ("Me and Jesus Christ," "White Lines, Blue Skies, Black Top"), country life ("Blue Mountaintop") and, of course, love ("This Time," "Hello Heartache," "Get Back to Arkansas," "Every Word True"). The music's emotional intensity and physical excitement make this an essential record. (The cassette adds "Stars Are Out and the Moon Is High" and "No Father in the Family.")

With guitarist Mike Hoffman gone off to form Semi-Twang, the group uses That Love Thing to expand its sound further, adding a propulsive R&B-type horn section (on the wonderful "Hey, Cecelie" and the title track) and strings (for the LP's ambitious closer "Brother Michael"). While some of the songs here are a bit less involving than on Land of Opportunity, this is another fine record. (The cassette and CD append "You Can't Stay Here.") [ds]

8 EYED SPY

Live [tape] (ROIR) 1981

8 Eyed Spy (nr/Fetish) 1981

LYDIA LUNCH

Hysterie (nr/Widowspeak) 1986 (CD Presents) 1986

Perhaps the acme of New York no wave groups, 8 Eyed Spy briefly collected the talents of Lydia Lunch, bassist-turned-drummer Jim Scavunos, ace bassist George Scott, sax and guitar player Pat Irwin and guitarist Michael Paumgarden. Considerably less shrill than other similarly conceived groups, 8 Eyed Spy was nonetheless dominated by Lunch's confrontational vocals and lyrics and Irwin's insistent quasi-jazz sax. On Live, it becomes apparent that Lunch's style is mutilated blues (especially on the Beefheart-inspired opener, "Diddy Wah Diddy") and that Scavunos and Scott's flawless collaboration is the band's axis. The blend of influences (jazz/blues/rock) creates exciting music that is beyond description.

8 Eyed Spy contains much of the same material as the cassette and is split into a live side and a studio side. While the former (which includes a hilarious version of "White Rabbit") shows the same gifted chaos apparent on Live, the latter proves 8 Eyed Spy capable of considerable restraint and polish. While the tone of the studio work implies an increasing reliance on jazz, the drumming rivets it to danceable rock. There is the hint of an impending breakthrough in these recordings, but the band dissolved in the wake of George Scott's 1980 death.

Lydia's Hysterie compilation contains an entire side of previously released 8 Eyed Spy, including live and studio tracks, all from 1980. [sg]

See also Lydia Lunch, Raybeats.

808 STATE

Newbuild EP (nr/Creed) 1988

Quadrastate EP (nr/Creed) 1989

808:90 (nr/ZTT) 1989 •

The EP of Dance EP (nr/ZTT) 1989 •

Utd. State 90 (ZTT-Tommy Boy) 1990 •

ex:el (ZTT-Tommy Boy) 1991 •

MC TUNES

The North at Its Heights (nr/ZTT) 1990 •

This four-man troupe of Manchester synthesists and sampler wizzes (who take their name from the Roland drum machine that can be heard in countless contemporary records) made its rep with "Pacific," a soprano-sax-led instrumental dance groove that led to an unfortunate coinage, new age house. The mixture of Enoesque ambience and a solid beat proved to be a significant development in the progress of British dance music, but there's a lot more to 808 State conceptually than one groundbreaking sound.

While the Newbuild EP (featuring acid house's own future Rick Wakeman, A Guy Called Gerald) heralded nothing more impressive than an imaginative New Order/Kraftwerk synthesis, the release of "Pacific" (contained on the Quadrastate EP) promised much more, and the album 808:90 delivered. Expanded substantially for its American release (as Utd. State 90) by Tommy Boy, this is a brilliantly kaleidoscopic dance record that recycles a couple of basic melodic themes into trancelike variations, spicing them up with peculiar noises while maintaining a steady beat. The combination of musical minimalism with sonic maximalism is heady and witty, constantly exhilarating and fresh.

In 1990, the band produced and wrote the music for The North at Its Heights, an album by Manchester rapper MC Tunes. While most of the numbers display 808's characteristic drollery, many of Tunes' raps are serious indeed, depicting Mancunian street violence, junkiedom and other social ills with surprising conviction and credibility. The contrast yields a provocative sense of alienation; on lighter numbers like "Tunes Splits the Atom," the effect is more familiarly amusing.

Genealogical footnote: Graham Massey of 808 State was the guitarist in Biting Tongues, an early-'80s Joy Division wannabe. [gk]

801

See Phil Manzanera.

EINSTÜRZENDE NEUBAUTEN

Schwarz EP (Ger. Zick Zack) 1981

Kollaps (Ger. Zick Zack) 1981 •

Drawings of Patient O.T. (nr/Some Bizzare) 1983

(ZE-PVC) 1985 •

80-83 Strategies Against Architecture (nr/Mute) 1984

(Homestead) 1986 •

2 X 4 [tape] (ROIR) 1984

1/2 Mensch (Some Bizarre-Rough Trade) 1985 •

Fuenf auf der Nach Oben Offenen Richterskala (Some Bizzare-Relativity) 1987 •

Haus der Luege (Some Bizarre-Rough Trade) 1989 •

Strategies Against Architecture II [CD] (Mute) 1991 •

EINSTÜRZENDE NEUBAUTEN/

LYDIA LUNCH/

ROWLAND S. HOWARD

Thirsty Animal EP (Ger. GEMA) 1982

Words such as "noisy," "raw," "primitive" and "radical" have been used to describe many a band, but few have earned these labels more than Berlin conceptual anti-artists Einstürzende Neubauten (Collapsing

New Buildings). Their instrumentation includes power tools and large metal objects beaten with hammers, pipes, wrenches and axes. What traditional musical implements they use receive similar treatment. Blixa Bargeld's pained vocals and guitar are often blurred to the point of white noise. Their live shows are even more daring, and many a club owner has stopped performances and/or barred them from returning after watching a stage practically demolished under the band's creative supervision.

While Einstürzende Neubauten built a reputation in the German avant-garde underground via the 1980 "Fuer den Untergang" single and Schwarz (the following year's double-pack 7-inch), these records are products of the group's creative infancy. Thus, several of the EP's five tracks have a haphazard, aimless quality far removed from the exquisitely controlled noise that was to follow. The precocious "Kalte Sterne," however, is a wholly realized song (comparable to the Gang of Four's "Anthrax"), one of the best they've ever recorded.

Kollaps combines guitar and bass drones with a barrage of metallic pounding, both rhythmic and random. Topped off with tortured howls (and titles like "Hear with Pain"), it is one of the most shocking visions ever committed to vinyl. Not recommended for dancing or romantic interludes.

Neubauten soon became the darlings of the UK press. In 1983, they signed to Some Bizzare and released Drawings of Patient O.T. While no more melodic than Kollaps, the production is less primeval and the band shows a wider degree of textural variety. At times the sound is rather stripped down, and a few of the cuts are actually songs. (The title track even has a chord progression!) Two years later, the record was released in the US, adding four non-LP items on a bonus EP.

Strategies Against Architecture is a compilation of five tracks from Kollaps, two from Schwarz, the B-side of "Fuer den Untergang" and some brilliant previously unreleased works, three of them live. The itemization of instrumentation is amusing, including as it does an air conditioning duct, smashing glass, an amplified spring and a bridge. For more live material, the cassette-only 2 X 4 is an admirable attempt to capture the mood of Neubauten on stage, recorded throughout Europe between 1980 and 1983. Like Drawings, it leaves more space in the sound, which makes the shock effects that much more shocking. "Armenisch Bitter" is, by their standards, a ballad, with plaintive sax warbling along with Bargeld's voice in a quasi-Middle Eastern style.

1/2 Mensch (aka Halber Mensch and Half Man) is the band's strongest record yet, displaying a wide range of creative compositional technique. Putting some of the junkyard orchestration aside, the title track is a cappella, sounding like some avant-garde opera; "Letztes Biest (am Himmel)" uses quiet bass harmonics as its only pitched instrument. Add such things as grand piano, inside-out dance beats and Neubauten's characteristic thunder, and Halber Mensch is truly remarkable.

The band temporarily broke up in 1986, then reformed to record Fuenf auf der Nach Oben Offenen Richterskala (Five on the Open-Ended Richter Scale), the most low-key LP they've ever done. Vocals, often almost at a whisper, frequently predominate. A whole plethora of instruments (or whatever) are plunked, strummed and smashed way down in the mix, almost as though Neubauten was trying not to wake up the old lady next door. Quite a contrast to much of their previous work, Fuenf's quiet intensity leaves one waiting for noise which never comes.

After another lengthy sabbatical during which Bargeld concentrated on his work with Nick Cave & the Bad Seeds (while other members played in Crime and the City Solution and Sprung aus den Wolken), Neubauten re-emerged with Haus der Luege (House of Lies), a much stronger album than Fuenf. Though the volume is still restrained, the higher intensity level makes all the difference, the semi-ballad "Der Kuss" is quietly explosive, while the opening "Prolog" demands an acceptance of the band's sometimes schizophrenic approach (it's hard to avoid jumping out of your skin whenever the naked recitative is punctuated by colossal bursts of crashing noise). Their experimentation with heartbeat dance pulses continues to good effect on "Feurio!" [dgs gef]

See also Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds, Crime and the City Solution.

ELECTRIC BLUE PEGGY SUE AND THE REVOLUTIONIONS FROM MARS

You Say You Want a Revolutionion (Fin. Gaga Goodies) 1987

You Tell Me That It's Evolutionion (Fin. Gaga Goodies) 1987

But When You Talk About Destruction (Fin. Gaga Goodies) 1988

All Family (Fin. Gaga Goodies) 1989

Music for McDonalds (Fin. Sonet) 1990

Finland's Electric Blue Peggy Sue and the Revolutionions from Mars may not be big on evolution(ion) but, if you got it, why change it? What Peggy Sue's got is a big, hard, all-dark-meat sound with lots of grit and grimy gristle. Lead vocalist Ray Katz has a voice that sounds like he drinks Drano for breakfast and washes it down with lighter fluid, tossing in the lighter for good measure. His voice grumbles and growls out the band's English-language lyrics with cackled and shrieked high-pitched edges. (Chris D of the Flesh Eaters is a fair comparison, but so is the Wicked Witch of the West.)

The 10-inch Revolutionion (named for the Beatles song, but that's the extent of that band's role here) contains short, hard tracks of post-Stoogescore (plus a similarly treated cover of Alan Vega's "Speedway") delivered grunge first, with Farfisa and a Seedy '60s sensibility filtered through '70s punk experience.

The band's formula (as well as the specific source of its LP titles) remains the same through Evolutionion and Destruction, both of which rock as hard as a cement wall.

By Music for McDonald's though, change is afoot. Adding horns and other new instruments to the previous sonic package, the album has a Fast Side which preserves the group's old perspective and a Food Side, where anything goes. "The Amazing Chronicle of Josef's Family" slinks cat-like at its opening, tough and measured, with tantalizingly tangoesque hesitation. It whispers and pauses and hides, then reveals a swelling, almost traditional pop song in its midst, only to degenerate in a glorious sea of barking half-speed vocals, backward trackings and studio babble before the hard, smooth nugget of the song makes its return. Having stopped referencing the Beatles in titles, Electric Blue Peggy Sue has begun to reflect their influence in the grooves. [e]

ELECTRIC EELS

Having a Philosophical Investigation with the Electric Eels (Tinnitus) 1989 •

Recorded in 1975, this is one lost recording by a legendary band that actually lives up to its hype. Cleveland's Electric Eels bridge the gap between Trout Mask Replica-era Beefheart/Love It to Death-era Alice Cooper and punk rock proper. It would certainly be safe to say that there would be no Pere Ubu without this band which, at various points (none chronicled on this record), contained future Ubu members; the album does, however, have future Cramp Nick Knox as its drummer. But that's not even the half of it. Having a Philosophical Investigation is a wonderful, careening and genuinely surreal record, a terrific example of just how far a band can go with lots of squealy amplification and a rotten attitude. Once heard, tunes like "Cyclotron," "Agitated" and "Refrigerator" will not easily go away. And that's still not the half of it. In his liner notes, psychotronic chronicler (and one-time Eels' crony) Michael Weldon half-facetiously ranks the Eels' music with that of other local legends, citing LaWanda Page, Jim Backus and Albert Ayler. Play this LP back to back with an Ayler platter and see how apt the juxtaposition is—it's that good. [gk]

ELECTRIC LOVE MUFFIN

Playdoh Meathook (Buy Our) 1987

Rassafranna (Fever-Restless) 1989 •

Second Third Time Around (Buy Our) 1990

Given the name and jokey trappings, it's no small surprise that this Philadelphia quartet can really play. If the songs on Playdoh Meathook—a clear self-produced rip of punk-pop guitars, strong melodies and easily understood vocals—were a couple of notches cleverer, this would be an impressive debut. (A goofy version of "Norwegian Wood" also falls just short.)

Produced with Joe "The Butcher" Nicolo (known for his work with Schoolly-D), Rassafranna all but eliminates ELM's punk element in favor of a loud, tight rock sound that meanders between the Replacements and charged jangle-pop, with excursions into not-exactly-soul, loopy cow-punk and Meat Puppets territory, instrumentally ("Club Car") and songwise ("Down Easy"). Overall, the material is strong: "Diamonds & Glass" is the kind of song that would sound great on acoustic guitar, while "Drunk & Horny" is funny for all the right reasons.

Rejoining its original label, the Muffin (again with Nicolo) made Second Third Time Around, a fine, if slightly dispirited, seven-song return visit to the Midwest, Southwest and Motown styles explored on Rassafranna. In what is becoming the band's formula, the record includes singer/guitarist Rich Kaufmann originals, an instrumental ("Mr. Softy's Wild Ride") and a cover (the Temptations' "Get Ready"). [i]

ELECTRONIC

See New Order.

ELEVENTH DREAM DAY

Eleventh Dream Day EP (Amoeba) 1987 •

Prairie School Freakout (Amoeba) 1988 •

Beet (Atlantic) 1989 •

Lived to Tell (Atlantic) 1991 ◊

FREAKWATER

Freakwater (Amoeba) 1989 •

Dancing Underwater (Amoeba) 1991 •

With their jagged guitars, unruly playing, rough-hewn songs and Rick Rizzo's tense, terse vocals, Chicago's Eleventh Dream Day make art in the raw. The band is about anti-craft—the idea that four people bashing away in a garage (or a barn, or a field) can pull some essential beauty out of the unbridled heat of the moment. At their best, EDD capture a glorious immediacy, a feeling of movement, the rush of watching something unexpected unfold.

"Walking Through the Barrel of a Gun," the first track on the debut EP (which is, surprisingly, the quartet's most temperate effort) defines the Dream Day style. Mixing trashy '60s psychedelia with a drop of country-western blood, the song places an anonymous character into a surreal crisis; imagine a Jim Thompson novel sung by Gene Pitney with Neil Young on guitar.

Prairie School Freakout puts the band's rock'n'roll primitivist thesis into execution. The entire album was recorded in six hours one night, "half of the time spent trying to fix the wild buzz coming out of Rick's amp," according to the liner notes. "We finally gave up and decided to make amp buzz the theme of the record." The album is slightly more elegant than roadkill. Guitarists Rizzo and Baird Figi trade leads that could saw down a petrified forest; the lyrics, when decipherable through Rizzo's strangulations, depict lonesome roads, empty rooms and horror-film traumas filled with the same eerie dread as the original Texas Chainsaw Massacre.

Beet is less extreme, though still vital; producer Gary Waleik (Big Dipper) coaxes the songs out of hiding without losing the intrinsic noisiness of the Eleventh Dream Day experience. Both Rizzo and his wife, drummer/singer Janet Beveridge Bean, are splendid lyricists, writing cagey little narratives that trace characters through the gloomy and mysterious recesses of their own minds and the weird America around them. Bean's "Bagdad's Last Ride" follows a lonelyheart named Hank from the bus to the racetrack, where he risks it all; Rizzo's "Love to Hate to Love" takes a two-second moment when a girl curses at her boyfriend and dissects the layers of thought and emotion. As with Prairie School Freakout, the lack of textural variation becomes a bit daunting after a while; listen to these albums while driving, and let the clogged, chaotic sounds fly loose through an open window. (The CD adds Figi's "Seiche" as a bonus.)

Lived to Tell offers more good stuff to wallow in, but a bit less to grab onto. The violently echoing slide guitar in "Dream of a Sleeping Sheep" is as sick and mean as anything on Prairie School Freakout, and the power-rocking "Rose of Jericho" builds to its moment of release with scientific precision. But other songs waver instead of stampede; for the first time, the band seems to know where they're going, and that takes some joy out of the ride.

Freakwater, a rootsy side project by the Kentucky-born Bean and another bluegrass state homegirl, guitarist (and Dream Day cover artist) Catherine Ann Irwin, is EDD's rural folkie flipside. With the spare accompaniment of upright bass, violin, cello, dobro and minimal percussion, the pair twang and warble through six originals plus a few covers (like the Louvin Brothers' "Childish Love") on Freakwater. The rich spontaneity and crumminess of the recording define the spirit of uncontrived good fun. Bean and Irwin are welcome around my campfire any day. [kss]

DANNY ELFMAN

See Oingo Boingo.

ELLEN JAMES SOCIETY

Reluctantly We (Daemon) 1990

It should be a safe assumption that a band named for The World According to Garp's imaginary organization of self-mutilated mutes would be all-instrumental, but that's not the case with this Atlanta quartet. (At least not by the point of this debut album.) For better or worse, guitarists Chris McGuire and Cooper Seay dramatically sing their grim romantic lyrics in, respectively, harsh and amelodic voices on Reluctantly We, co-produced by Indigo Girl Amy Ray and released by her indie label. (Both Indigo Girls make guest appearances here.) The EJ Society's tasteful folk-rock playing isn't bad at all, but the two frontwomen have all the grating habits of Ray's band (self-consciously hypersensitive romantic lyrics, occasionally unpleasant singing) and none of its finer vocal qualities. [i]

ELVIS BROTHERS

Movin' Up (Portrait) 1983

Adventure Time (Portrait) 1985

This trio from Champaign, Illinois, has roots in many local bands of that area (some credible, others cringeable); together, they play a marvelous (and deceptively simple) concoction of slicked-up rockabilly, stripped-down Cheap Trick-tinged melodic rock'n'roll and pristine pure pop that boasts superbly articulated energy, occasionally goofy lyrics and enough hooks to catch a school of minnows. Movin' Up traverses a panoply of mildly bent styles, from mock-Stray Cats ("Fire in the City") to Dave Edmunds-ish rock'n'roll ("Hey Tina") to Anglo-pop ("Hidden in a Heartbeat") to countrified rock ("Santa Fe") and much more. Sure they futz around a lot (especially onstage), but their silliness never interferes with the serious task—playing catchy pop with maximum gusto. It may not mean a lot, but the album is truly mega-fun.

Adrian Belew produced Adventure Time, but didn't do too much damage to the E-Bros.' essentially lighthearted spirit. There are a couple of socially responsible messages about gun control and insanity in the modern world but, by and large, the Elvises go about their business with typical happy-go-lucky aplomb. From the high-powered rock of "Burnin' Desire" and "Somebody Call the Police" to the beauty of "Crosswinds" and "Akiko Shimoda," they effortlessly toss off tune after tune of infectious should-be-hits. [i]

See also Darren Robbins.

EMBARRASSMENT

The Embarrassment EP (Cynky!) 1981

Death Travels West (Fresh Sounds) 1983

Retrospective [tape] (Fresh Sounds) 1984

The Embarrassment LP (Time to Develop) 1987

God Help Us (Bar/None) 1990 •

Before they broke up in 1983, this quartet from Wichita, Kansas, could rock furiously, with less brittle, more melodious guitar than the Scottish nouveau pop bands (like Orange Juice and Josef K) to whom the Embos were sometimes compared. While John Nichols' vocals weren't incredible (Bill Goffrier's guitar work nearly was), the Embarrassment did convey a promising array of nuances—from wistfulness to sarcasm—and an inquisitive, adventurous way with arrangements. The lyrics vary in quality, but "Don't Choose the Wrong Song" and "Elizabeth Montgomery's Face" show budding verbal pithiness, "Wellsville" a laconic melodic strength. Best of all, most of the debut EP's five songs grow on you with each listen.

The ambitious Death Travels West is essentially a historical concept album—on several levels—about a voyage. The melodic songs benefit from hot performances; while getting the thematic point requires some effort and attention, the charged, raw-edged pop is immediately likable, showing the Embarrassment's facility for creating memorable tunes.

The posthumous Retrospective tape is even more impressive, a collection of otherwise unissued studio recordings from 1979 to 1983, plus a side of live '82-'83 performances. It's a treasure trove that shows the Embarrassment in command of a wide stylistic range—from catchy pop to gutsy punk—and in possession of broad-based songwriting talent. The best of many fine songs is "Woods of Love," a mesmerizing slice of anti-imperialism played with Feeliesque folksy pop-psychedelia, recorded onstage.

One side of The Embarrassment LP reissues the debut EP; the other, salvaged from a 1983 live-in-the-studio session, consists of previously unreleased recordings, except for the insidious version of "Age of Five" that was included on Retrospective. Full-bodied, confident one-take performances of "Woods of Love," "Picture Women" and the pulsing "Rhythm Line" make the Embos' demise all the more regrettable. After the split, drummer Brent Giessmann joined the Del Fuegos; Goffrier formed Big Dipper.

In late '88, Goffrier began splitting his time between Big Dipper and the reactivated Embarrassment, who recorded a brilliant album and toured the following year. With great new material and wonderful edgy-pop performances, God Help Us effortlessly picks up where the quartet left off: older, wiser, but even better than before. Shuffling and sorting out the '80s (there are flashes of the Suburbs, Devo, Talking Heads, R.E.M. and others), the group arrives at a stylistic focus that puts starch into the sensitively muscular tunes. While Nichols' voice exhibits new-found confidence and control, he still possesses a boyish zeal that makes the witty songs even more dynamic. [jg/i]

See also Big Dipper, Del Fuegos.

EMBRACE

See Minor Threat.

JACK ENDINO

See Skin Yard.

ENGLAND'S GLORY

See Only Ones.

ENGLISH BEAT

See (English) Beat.

BRIAN ENO

Here Come the Warm Jets (Island) 1973 (EG) 1982 •
Taking Tiger Mountain (By Strategy) (Island) 1974 (EG) 1982 •

Another Green World (Island) 1975 (EG) 1982 •
Discreet Music (Antilles) 1975 (EG) 1982 •
Before and After Science (Island) 1977 (EG) 1982 •
Music for Films (Antilles) 1978 (EG) 1982 •
Music for Airports (Ambient) 1979 (EG) 1982 •
On Land (EG) 1982 •
Music for Films Volume 2 (EG) 1983
Working Backwards 1983–1973 (EG) 1984
Thursday Afternoon [CD] (EG) 1985 •
More Blank Than Frank (EG) 1986
Desert Island Selection [CD] (EG) 1989 •
Boxed Set (nr/EG) 1989 ◊

KEVIN AYERS—JOHN CALE—ENO—NICO

June 1, 1974 (Island) 1974 •

CLUSTER & BRIAN ENO

Cluster and Eno (Ger. Sky) 1977
Old Land (Relativity) 1985 •

ENO WITH MOEBIUS AND ROEDELIOUS

After the Heat (Ger. Sky) 1978

JON HASSELL/BRIAN ENO

Fourth World Vol. 1: Possible Musics (Editions EG) 1980 •
Power Spot (Ger. ECM) 1986 •

HAROLD BUDD/BRIAN ENO

The Plateaux of Mirror (EG) 1980 •
The Pearl (EG) 1984 •

BRIAN ENO WITH DANIEL LANOIS & ROGER ENO

Apollo Atmospheres & Soundtracks (EG) 1983 •
ROGER ENO & BRIAN ENO
Voices (EG) 1985 •

ROGER ENO

Between Tides (Opal) 1988 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Music for Films III (Opal) 1988 •

ENO/CALE

Wrong Way Up (Opal-Warner Bros.) 1990 •

From his original role as electronics dabbler and art-rock with Roxy Music in the early 1970s, Brian Eno has become the epitome of the independent artist—articulate, intelligent, serious and intent on following his own impulses. He has progressed from a tight, wry pop music into more difficult forms, incorporating aspects of many different disciplines. As well as a solo artist, Eno has collaborated with many people; he became a major force in the emerging music of the '80s as producer of such adventurers as Ultravox, Talking Heads, New York no-wave bands, Devo, U2 and others.

Here Come the Warm Jets, Eno's first foray as a solo artist, features sharply crafted, cerebral pop songs that put equal emphasis on quirky music and chatty, surrealistic lyrics—an endearing novelty record with bizarre but affecting songs that no one else could have made.

Taking Tiger Mountain (By Strategy) finds Eno flirting with Chinese communism and dream psychology as grist for his lyric mill. The tone of the music is darker overall than on the first album; though Eno was already beginning to show a mistrust of pop forms, the songs here are filled with humor and joy and his continuing taste for experimentation.

By Another Green World, Eno was enhancing his work with crystal-clear production. Much of the album features beautiful, fragile instrumentals, leaving the manic rock tone of the first two albums behind. Electronics play a greater role, and Eno all but abandons standard pop forms for a less-formulaic sound that presages his future ambient work.

Discreet Music (as well as his two collaborations with Robert Fripp) was first devised while Eno was recovering from an auto accident, and it marks his experimental break from pop forms, using classical structures as the basis for tape loops and manipulations. The result is striking and haunting, filled with beauty and apprehension, paralleling the minimalist music being made by Steve Reich and Philip Glass.

Before and After Science was the apex of Eno's pop work, a collection of ten lyrical songs—ranging from bouncy, eccentric pop ("King's Lead Hat") to wistfully pastoral songs ("Spider and I," "Through Hollow Lands")—that smack of vast distances. The pivotal work of Eno's career, it sees him spanning whole musical worlds, but from this point on, his involvement with pop music was, for a long time, relegated to production work.

Music for Films, which introduced Eno's subsequent focus, consists of fragments done over the years as possible soundtracks for imaginary movies. (Eno's work has since appeared on several actual soundtracks.) Totally instrumental, the album features a return, with greater sophistication, to the work of Discreet Music—a conscious attempt to imply subtle moods and settings through electronically manipulated sound.

Ambient music, which goes directly against Western tradition by not demanding explicit attention from the listener, was introduced on Music for Airports, a stark but hypnotic collection of sounds especially composed for airport sound systems to inure passengers to flying and death. Whether successful (or even ever used) in that setting or not, the album's spare and delicate sounds open up the meditative possibilities of music.

Beginning in the mid-'70s, Eno began forging numerous collaborations (with 801, Ayers-Cale-Nico, Bowie, Cluster, Jon Hassell, Talking Heads, etc.) that allow him to dabble in (as well as influence) various strains of popular music, from fusion rock to electro-pop. In 1977, he teamed up with the atmospheric German duo Cluster (aka Moebius and Roedelius)—who first joined him on a modest track on Before and After Science—on an eponymous LP which made tentative steps in the direction of mood-evoking electronics. More successful is the 1978 collaboration, After the Heat, an alluring—occasionally compelling—collection of instrumentals that deftly avoid the pitfalls of ambient music, plus three tracks with vocals of varying value (one declaimed, one sung, a third sung but played backwards). (Old Land is a selection of tracks from both LPs.)

The Plateaux of Mirror, with Harold Budd, finds Eno expanding his ambient work to multi-dimensional proportions, while My Life in the Bush of Ghosts, with David Byrne, allows him to indulge his fascination with African and other Third World rhythms, with the latter made more intriguing through the mixture of these rhythms and found speech and music tapes. Possible Musics is an exploration of different areas of ethnomusicology with experimental Canadian trumpeter Jon Hassell.

By On Land, Eno had polished his ambient music into a dense, evocative representation of terra incognita. Though sometimes obscure and always devoid of lyrics, the work shows Eno at his most expressive, with sound paintings that exist somewhere between ancient mantra and avant-garde.

Invited to do the music for a film about the Apollo space missions, Eno used all of his inspiration about the grandeur and mystery of man's walking on the moon to create Apollo Atmospheres & Soundtracks, recorded in conjunction with his brother Roger and longtime collaborator, Daniel Lanois (also known for his solo production work with Martha and the Muffins and others; he issued a solo album in the late '80s). Avoiding any sensationalistic (or even typical space/rocketry) sounds, it's another hauntingly poetic collection of ambient pieces, written and played variously by all three musicians.

Thursday Afternoon is a 61-minute instrumental piece (logically enough issued only on CD) created to accompany a VHS cassette of "video paintings" by Christine Alicino. The soothing spaciousness of the soundtrack ambience belies its compositional sophistication, as explained in the liner notes.

Roger Eno's Between Tides sounds even more like movie soundtrack music than much of the Music for Films LPs—if you play it at 45 rpm. The undynamic arrangements of the soft sounds of a clarinet, a string quartet and a dash of flute frame piano melodies that capture a plaintive, oddly American feel (at least some of that intentional). Roger chipped in on the Music for Films III LP, the first of that series featuring some tracks not primarily by Brian. Standout cuts are those by Harold Budd, John Paul Jones and Brian himself (though not the ones teaming him with his U2 co-producer Daniel Lanois). Also of note is the track licensed from Soviet artistes Misha Mahlin and Lydia Theremin

Working Backwards 1983-1973 is the ultimate Eno collection—an eleven-disc boxed set containing all of his solo albums through Music for Films Volume 2, plus an otherwise unavailable LP of Rarities, featuring such items as "Seven Deadly Finns" and "The Lion Sleeps Tonight." Issued to coincide with the publication of the More Dark Than Shark book, the one-LP More Blank Than Frank is a modest and idiosyncratic compilation—ten of the artist's own faves from his first four solo records (excluding Discreet Music) with careful annotation. (The cassette adds two tracks.) Desert Island Selection is the CD issue of More Blank Than Frank. The pointless Boxed Set contains Another Green World, Before and After Science and Apollo.

Working together for the first time in years, Eno produced John Cale's Words for the Dying in 1989; the following year, Eno found himself unexpectedly inclined to resume singing, and the two collaborated on an album. For all the things a joint effort by the two could have been, it's a small miracle that Wrong Way Up turned out to be an absolutely wonderful pop record, a subversion of Top 40 formulae to the pair's own idiosyncratic (but utterly accessible) ends. Blending Eno's ambience and Cale's classical lyricism, as well as the pair's contrasting voices (and capturing the whole thing in a masterfully subtle studio effort), Wrong Way Up is a marvel, a tuneful and catchy collection whose instant likability belies its highbrow origins (not to mention the partners' reported disharmony, reflected in the cover art's dagger graphics). It's hard to remember when either Cale or Eno has sounded happier or warmer, and their co-writing has an easy, relaxed feel. With the American Southwest surfacing as a repeated theme in such songs as the rollicking "Crime in the Desert" and "The River," variations in the partnership's balance keep the album in constant stylistic motion. "In the Backroom," the irresistible "Been There, Done That" and "Spinning Away" take their cues from three different decades of R&B, while "Lay My Love" and "One Word" follow that same dance-pop arc into the technologized present. Magic. [sg/i/jg]

See also David Bowie, David Byrne, Fripp & Eno, Phil Manzanera, Talking Heads.

EPMD

Strictly Business (Fresh) 1988 •
Unfinished Business (Fresh) 1989 •
Business as Usual (Def Jam-Columbia) 1991 •

K-SOLO

Tell the World My Name (Atlantic) 1990 •

While Long Island rappers Erick Sermon and Parrish Smith—aka EPMD—have modestly adequate writing/production skills, a generally positive outlook and realistic values, a bad habit of repeating themselves and Sermon's cotton-mouthed delivery are significant impediments to enjoying their records. Why they've been so successful is something of a mystery.

Strictly Business uses routine samples (Steve Miller, Bob Marley, etc.) without much imagination; except for the title track's anti-drug message and the idea of a dance called "The Steve Martin," this unambitious debut is no thing.

The casually amateurish self-production of Unfinished Business is its most engaging asset: Sermon and Smith sound like a couple of kids fooling around in their basement, rapping about nothing in particular, attempting to sing a line or two, using some favorite records for cut-in jokes and generally amusing themselves while the tape deck runs. But other than a jokey and commendable condemnation of drunk driving ("You Had Too Much to Drink"), the winsomely autobiographical "Please Listen to My Demo" and a second installment of the first LP's "Jane" sex saga, Unfinished Business is pretty lame.

Despite the title, Business as Usual is anything but: EPMD turns up the heat with a newly aggressive stance and smoothly charged-up backing tracks. While Sermon's rapping has improved a bit, he's no match for his partner, who comes on like an angry linebacker in rugged no-slang-barred cuts like "I'm Mad," "Hardcore" and "Brothers on My Jock." The pair seems a little unsteady with their new power, however: a cautionary track about sexually transmitted disease is mostly an excuse for a dumb-ass bragging session between a man and his bozack (penis).

K-Solo (Kevin Madison), another Long Island native, had been in a pre-EPMD group with Smith, who arranged for him to appear on Unfinished Business ("Knick Knack Patty Wack") and produced and played keyboards on Tell the World My Name. The rough-edged rapper's a-n-n-o-y-i-n-g gimmick of spelling rhymes on "Spellbound" is a terrible opener, and "The Messenger" praises (and includes a speech by) Minister Farrakhan, but the stark strength of the autobiographical "Fugitive" and the anti-drug "Tales from the Crack Side" are memorably effective, and "Your Mom's in My Business" offers a witty perspective on parental meddling. [i]

ERASURE

- Wonderland* (Mute-Sire) 1986 •
- It Doesn't Have to Be* EP (nr/Mute) 1987 •
- The Circus* (Mute-Sire) 1987 •
- The Two Ring Circus* (Mute-Sire) 1987 •
- The Innocents* (Mute-Sire-Reprise) 1988 •
- Crackers International* EP (Mute-Sire-Reprise) 1988 •
- Wild!* (Mute-Sire-Reprise) 1989 •

Vince Clarke's post-Yazoo band is a duo with Andy Bell, a tremulously melodramatic singer who initially bore a creepy vocal resemblance to Clarke's former partner, Alison Moyet. The music on Wonderland likewise sounds like Yazoo (bizarre, considering that Bell co-wrote most of them). On one hand, it's disconcerting; on the other, Yazoo was a fine band, and Clarke's more than welcome to keep up the good work, regardless of who with. The best tracks ("Heavenly Action" and "Oh l'Amour") are memorable pop confections. (The CD adds two tracks.)

Erasure's second album was released twice: the one-disc The Circus and, later, as a double 12-inch set of remixes and re-recordings. (The second version's CD has seven extra tracks.) Although the original LP's material is mostly cut from the same synth-dance cloth as the first record, the arrangements here are richer, more intricate and inventive. Unfortunately, Bell's flat delivery of the pessimistic and strife-ridden romance lyrics leaves them unaffecting and whiny; he even renders the plainly lascivious "Sexuality" and "Sometimes" with a sickening lack of enthusiasm. This is the sort of misery that deserves to be left alone. ("It Doesn't Have to Be," which leads off the album, was first released on a pre-LP 12-inch.)

The Two Ring Circus—an abridged set of songs with a revamped running order and a side of orchestral versions—is a significantly better record, as the elongated remixes open up the instrumentation while downplaying the vocals. The powerful "Hideaway," a sweepingly melodic number about a young person coming out of the closet, gets the most-improved award. Three songs (one reprised from Erasure's first LP) that eschew synthesizers for strings, pianos, horns and timpani not only indicate healthy stylistic catholicism, they coax Bell into far more emotive performances.

Stephen Hague produced The Innocents, an OMD-like textured dance-pop collection that hasn't got many good songs beyond "A Little Respect" and "Heart of Stone." But clever arrangements that don't all sound exactly the same render the nebulous romantic lyrics superfluous; toning down Bell's maddening delivery helps immeasurably. (The CD adds "When I Needed You" and the probably inevitable "River Deep, Mountain High.")

The self-produced Crackers International mini-album contains four new (and otherwise non-LP) songs, highlighting Bell's flamboyant vocals on the hi-NRG "Stop!" and "Knocking on Your Door" (presented in two mixes each).

Emboldened by global stardom, Erasure stretched themselves a bit in the vastly superior Wild!, which adds a welcome dynamic assortment of styles to the duo's usual disco chugalug. Revealing new-found restraint, variety and artistry, Wild! has delicate ballads, a piano instrumental and gentle techno-pop to recommend it. Standouts: the giddy "Star" and the Latinesque "La Gloria." [i]

See also Depeche Mode, Yazoo.

ERIC B. & RAKIM

- Paid in Full* (4th & B'way) 1987 •
- Follow the Leader* (Uni) 1988 •
- Let the Rhythm Hit 'Em* (MCA) 1990 •

Queens homeslice Eric B. (Barrier) is the DJ and Strong (Long) Islander Rakim (William Griffin) is the rapper; as the latter sings in "I Ain't No Joke," "I hold the microphone like a grudge/Eric B. hold the record so the needle don't budge." Beginning with a brilliant summer of '86 single, "Eric B. Is President," on an obscure Harlem label, Eric B. and Rakim proved themselves if not the hardest, certainly the most technically intricate—both musically and lyrically—rap duo around. Their follow-up, "Paid in Full," inspired more than 30 (!) different mixes; the standout was Coldcut's "Seven Minutes of Madness," which introduced Yeminite singer Ofra Haza to the international pop audience through the miracle of sampling. (Eric B. and Rakim themselves pioneered the musical appropriation of James Brown in their mixes, initiating hip-hop's almost obligatory homage to the Godfather of Soul.)

Paid in Full is a spectacular debut LP that includes new mixes of "Eric B. Is President" and its flipside,

"My Melody." Rakim's lyrics focus on the duo's prodigious talents and celebrate the joy of money, with the accumulation of wealth's material accoutrements seemingly serving as an artistic end in itself.

While Rakim can't seem to move off the subject of his own unbelievable deftness, the gold-rope duo gets across on Follow the Leader on the strength of his dynamic delivery and some of the most original backing tracks around (credit Stevie Blass Griffin). Defying convention, the mix doesn't so much shape the sound around the beat as sink natural-sounding drums into a sonic mid-point, allowing vocals, bass and a variety of other instruments and samples to even things out.

Loaded with Rakim's quiet power, the amazing Let the Rhythm Hit 'Em expands and refines the team's style, laying thickly textured tracks—a unique balance of sturdy beats and woozy late-night atmosphere—under increasingly sophisticated raps. The understatement of "In the Ghetto" (not the Elvis song) and "Step Back" make them exceptionally effective; tracks like "Untouchables" and "Run for Cover" raise the energy back up with the duo's usual musical invention. The CD adds the title track's 12-inch remix as a bonus. [rg/1]

ROKY ERICKSON AND THE ALIENS

Roky Erickson and the Aliens (nr/CBS) 1980
The Evil One (415) 1981 [CD] (Pink Dust) 1987 •
I Think of Demons (nr/Edsel) 1987

ROKY ERICKSON

Roky Erickson EP (Fr. Sponge) 1977
Clear Night for Love EP (Fr. New Rose) 1985
(nr/Fundamental Music) 1988
Don't Slander Me (Pink Dust) 1986 •
Gremlins Have Pictures (Pink Dust) 1986 (nr/Demon)
1990 •

The Holiday Inn Tapes (Fr. Fan Club) 1987
Live at the Ritz 1987 (Fr. Fan Club) 1988
Reverend of Karmic Youth (Skyclad) 1990 •

ROKY ERICKSON AND THE EXPLOSIVES

Casting the Runes (nr/Five Hours Back) 1987

ROKY ERICKSON BAND

Two Headed Dog EP (Fr. Fan Club) 1988

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Where the Pyramid Meets the Eye: A Tribute to Roky Erickson (Sire) 1990 ♠

Roky Erickson established his reputation as a raving looney way back in the '60s as lead singer of Texas' infamous 13th Floor Elevators, whose acid-driven garage mysticism made the group one of the psychedelic era's greatest. Since then, Erickson's sporadic musical career has yielded a slew of often-amazing records that have established the perpetually troubled artist (whose problems with drugs and mental illness have attained near-legendary status) as a formidable cult figure. And while he's regarded by many as a mere curio/novelty, Erickson is in fact a quirky, original talent whose genius lies in an uncanny ability to turn his psychic struggles into compelling music that, at its best, is both profoundly unsettling and strangely accessible.

The Elevators fell apart in the late '60s, when Erickson began a three-year stretch in a state mental institution to avoid criminal prosecution on a drug charge. He didn't return to recording until the second half of the '70s, with a string of one-off singles and the four-song Sponge EP (reissued in 1988 as Two Headed Dog). Three of the EP's numbers were re-recorded for the 1980 CBS UK LP (the title of which is actually five unpronounceable ideograms). The album is an excellent manifestation of Erickson's post-Elevators persona, expressing his dark dilemmas through creepy horror-movie imagery. Roky sings such offbeat gems as "I Walked with a Zombie" and "Creature with the Atom Brain" in a tremulous voice that insists he's telling the truth—or at least believes he is. Former Creedence Clearwater bassist Stu Cook turned in an excellent production job, bringing the hard electric guitars (and Bill Miller's electric autoharp) into a sharp focus that underscores Roky's excitable state. Erickson and band seem less unstable than the drug-crazed Elevators (best remembered for "You're Gonna Miss Me"), but just barely.

Ditto for The Evil One, which takes five tracks from the UK release (overlooking the awesome "Two-Headed Dog") and adds five more, including the ghastly (that's good) "Bloody Hammer." Which LP is better? They're both wonderfully ominous and frightening—splatter-film soundtracks done with real rock'n'roll conviction. The best bet, however, is the Pink Dust CD, which collects the contents of both albums. I Think of Demons, created as an expanded reissue of the first LP, is another fine choice, as it contains a dozen of the CD's fifteen songs.

The five songs on Clear Night, recorded in Texas with a rudimentary quartet, begin on a note of relative restraint. "You Don't Love Me Yet" is acoustic folk; the title track recalls Creedence's rag-tag balladry. Side Two is a bit wilder, culminating in "Don't Slander Me," an angrily defensive accusatory diatribe. The EP does, however, contain "Starry Eyes," which can only be described as Roky's Buddy Holly tribute.

Don't Slander Me—cut with a quintet that includes assorted ex-Aliens (electric autoharpist Miller among them) and ex-Jefferson Airplane/Hot Tuna bassist Jack Casady—was recorded for (but rejected by) British CBS in the early '80s, but not released until 1986. Although half of the songs appear in different versions on earlier releases (including three on Clear Night), it's typically gripping. The inclusion of two Holly-inspired pop tunes makes for a bizarre contrast to "Burn the Flames," a number originally done for the Return of the Living Dead soundtrack.

Erickson quit recording again in the mid-'80s, but a steady stream of releases—of varying levels of quality—has persisted. Gremlins Have Pictures is an interesting if erratic hodgepodge of tracks ranging from 1975 to 1982, solo and with three different groups (the Explosives, the Aliens and Blieb Alien): some thrilling, some shoddy, all loony. (The CD adds previously released 1980-vintage bonus tracks.)

The Holiday Inn Tapes is simply an atrocity, a pathetic guy in a hotel room fooling around on an acoustic guitar. Even fans shouldn't bother. On the other hand, despite the appalling boot-quality sound of Live at the Ritz, this document of an Austin show (February 1987) which begins with "You're Gonna Miss Me" and runs through "Bloody Hammer" with bracing guitar work by Will Sexton is worth hearing, especially for the incidental stage remarks.

Casting the Runes mates Roky's twisted worldview with a hard, crunching band. Recorded on various Texas stages circa '79, it unleashes menacing renditions of such grisly Erickson classics as "Don't Shake Me Lucifer" and "Bloody Hammer," plus a weird version of the mush-pop oldie "I Love How You Love Me." Highly recommended, especially to fans of The Evil One. Reverend of Karmic Youth is an interesting artifact: six acoustic solo tunes from 1985, plus six live band tracks from Casting the Runes.

In 1990, Erickson was arrested in a bizarre mail-fraud mix-up and institutionalized once again. Through the efforts of a longtime fan at the label, this latest round of tribulations inspired the assembly of Where the Pyramid Meets the Eye, a benefit disc featuring nineteen covers (22 on the cassette) of assorted Roky compositions, by artists as diverse as ZZ Top, R.E.M., Doug Sahm, Bongwater, Julian Cope, T-Bone Burnett and the Jesus & Mary Chain. It's a mixed bag but, overall, Pyramid is remarkably effective. The fact that such intensely personal material can stand up to such a wide variety of interpretations makes it clear that, whatever his personal problems, Erickson is an uncommonly gifted songwriter whose work deserves—but is not likely to find—a wider audience. [jy/1/hd]

ESG

ESG EP (99) 1981

ESG Says Dance to the Beat of Moody EP (99) 1982

Come Away with ESG (99) 1983

ESG (Pow Wow) 1991

Who would have imagined that four sisters and a pal from the South Bronx would emerge as one of the most dynamic bands that New York could offer at the top of the '80s? (Or that they would pop up again in 1987 . . .) Mixing a solid combination of dub, chant and beat, ESG—simply drums, bass and vocals—virtually stole the cosmic show with their first release, a six-song EP with a live side and a phenomenal studio side recorded under the hand of British producer Martin Hannett.

Their second EP, produced by 99 Records head Ed Bahlman, is not quite as crisp as the debut, but no less enjoyable, a brilliant synthesis of rhythm and restraint. To say the following album stayed in a similar vein and improved little over live shows of the same material would be to damn a fine record with faint praise. ESG offers bouncy funk instead of funk pretensions and elegant simplicity in place of mere primitivism. [jw/mf]

ESSENTIAL LOGIC

Essential Logic EP (nr/Virgin) 1979

Beat Rhythm News (nr/Rough Trade) 1979

LORA LOGIC

Pedigree Charm (nr/Rough Trade) 1982

Essential Logic quickly outlived its usefulness as a vehicle for Lora Logic, once a member of X-Ray Spex, and a most distinctive talent. The original lineup—featured on the band's eponymous four-song debut—includes two guitars, two saxes (including Logic herself) and a clunky rhythm section; a loose but comfortable ensemble. Logic's songwriting had yet to bloom, though her vocal style was already developing.

She was still loopy but lovable on Beat Rhythm News, but her singing had become highly stylized with a distinct edge. A tighter rhythm guitarist replaced the uninspired duo of the EP, and Essential Logic soared. The music's vivacity is occasionally undercut by tinny production and a tendency to ramble, and Lora's growth as a writer and performer warranted more versatile backing. The next Logical step: a solo career.

Logic continued to evolve on her first solo outing. Her voice—much better produced—has a slightly softer, jazzy inflection, and her eclectic writing assumes a poppy sheen. Even hitherto impenetrable lyrics reveal a translucent clarity in spots. Businesslike dance rhythms and fewer straying sax excursions take additional steps towards accessibility. Pedigree Charm is a delight.

Abandoning rock'n'roll, Logic—along with former bandmate Poly Styrene—wound up becoming a Hare Krishna devotee and playing in a (religious) cult band. [mf]

EURYTHMICS

In the Garden (nr/RCA) 1981 ●

Sweet Dreams (Are Made of This) (RCA) 1983 ●

Touch (RCA) 1983 ●

Touch Dance (RCA) 1984 ●

1984 (For the Love of Big Brother) (RCA) 1984 ●

Be Yourself Tonight (RCA) 1985 ●

Revenge (RCA) 1986 ●

Savage (RCA) 1987 ●

We Too Are One (Arista) 1989 ●

Greatest Hits (Arista) 1991 ♠

DAVE STEWART

Lily Was Here (nr/Anxious) 1990 ●

DAVE STEWART AND THE SPIRITUAL COWBOYS

Dave Stewart and the Spiritual Cowboys (Arista) 1990 ●

Fresh from the unlamented ruins of the Tourists, Annie Lennox and Dave Stewart formed Eurythmics, at first to pursue their love affair with Germanic experimental/electronic music and attempt a translation of it into a peculiarly British form. Co-produced by Conny Plank and featuring an intriguing assortment of musicians—Blondie drummer Clem Burke, members of Can and D.A.F., composer Karlheinz Stockhausen's son Marcus—the alluring debut album (still unreleased in the US a decade later) is filled with lyrical love songs and gently strident social anthems, like "All the Young (People of Today)" and "Your Time Will Come." Empowering it all are Lennox's captivating, flexible but strong vocals and a commitment and humor that turn potentially pretentious material into unaffected, poetic work.

From such humble, non-mainstream beginnings was a new chart-topping, trendsetting group created. Sweet Dreams (Are Made of This)—thanks mostly to the monotonic dirge of the same name—took off and lofted the pair into world prominence, a success they maintained on Touch by proving themselves capable of enormous stylistic and instrumental variety, as well as exceptional songwriting. From lovely ("Here Comes the Rain Again") to jaunty ("Right by Your Side") to dramatic ("Who's That Girl?") and driving ("The First Cut"). Touch is an excellent record filled with invention and chicly styled nouveau pop. To take advantage of sudden global stardom, an album of remixes (four songs with vocals, three of them also presented as instrumentals) by Jellybean Benitez and Francois Kevorkian was issued as Touch Dance.

The 1984 album—as the result of a contretemps with the film's director, not exactly the soundtrack but "music derived from Eurythmics' original score"—finds the pair moving further into rhythmic experimentation, as on the crazed cut-up stylings of "Sexcrime" and "Doubleplusgood." A strange but affecting record, although clearly not one intended to be taken as a normal chapter in the group's development.

The hard-edged, relatively low-tech Be Yourself Tonight marks a real change in the duo's thinking. Exciting, catchy soul-rock ("Would I Lie to You?"), in-spid, aggravating soul-rock ("I Love You Like a Ball and Chain"), two swell duets ("Adrian," with Elvis Costello; "Sisters Are Doin' It for Themselves," with Aretha Franklin), plus five more tracks all have an underlying stylistic consistency. That's a new twist for Eurythmics, but one they seem capable of handling. Retooling into an '80s Motown factory might seem a little selfconscious, but they carry it off with aplomb and even a bit of heart.

Taking an unexpected but worthwhile hell-hath-nofury detour, the breakup of Lennox's marriage yielded the vituperative lyrics of the blunt and aptly titled Revenge. "To run away from you was all that I could do," from "Thorn in My Side," is only the tip of the impassioned album's iceberg; other songs ("A Little of You," "The Last Time," "Missionary Man") turn a scornful postmortem into deeply felt cries that reverberate in Lennox's remarkable vocal cords. There are draggy spots that overdo the musical sentiment but, by and large, this is one of the pair's best records.

No such luck on the following year's Savage, a shoddy mess of scant merit. Where Revenge made fine use of a small, crack collection of studio hands to flesh out the material in a variety of luxurious idioms, Savage relies on a bed of chilly soundalike computer programs and multi-tracked vocal gimmicks. (Discounting Stewart's guitar work and the all-acoustic "I Need You," only "Wide Eyed Girl" sounds as if human beings played on it. Both add crowd noises, perhaps to underscore the point.) The wooden material has static rhythms, a shortage of melodies and entirely too few hooks; the mostly miserable lyrics suggest continental sophistication and thoughtful emotional reflection but fizzle in a hurried blur of triviality, obscurity and seeming creative apathy.

We Too Are One isn't nearly as bad—electric guitars and a bit of soul (backing vocals are by Charlie Wilson of the Gap Band) provide the humanity missing from Savage—but such improvements can't overcome the duo's songwriting fatigue. Bland arrangements of dashed-off melodies and lyrics that are among Eurythmics' worst make this a barely adequate effort. "Don't Ask Me Why" (a return, along with the blunt "You Hurt Me (And I Hate You)," to the subject of post-romance recriminations) is solidly catchy, as is the stomping title track, which goes on too long. But when a usually articulate and intelligent band settles for such simpleminded drivel as "My My Baby's Gonna Cry," it's obvious things aren't quite right.

Maybe the problem lies in Stewart's overstuffed calendar. As a songwriter and studio hound, he's undertaken many extracurricular endeavors of late, producing Russian rocker Boris Grebenshikov's awful Anglo-American debut and working on tracks for Brian Setzer, Malcolm McLaren and others. (His mid-'80s production résumé includes Daryl Hall, Tom Petty, Mick Jagger and Bob Dylan.) In 1990, Stewart recorded Lily Was Here, a soundtrack album released through his own Anxious label. He also unveiled a cloaked-in-pseudonyms side band. On Dave Stewart and the Spiritual Cowboys, an ordinary-sounding guitar-rock LP, he steps into the vocal spotlight with a lot more passion than finesse. As unobtrusive and artless a singer as he is a lyricist, Stewart takes embarrassing potshots at assorted targets with all the poetic sophistication of a schoolboy, offering up such idiocy as "King of the Hypocrites" and "Fashion Bomb" ("She's radio active you can see it in her eyes/Radioactive from her hips to her thighs").

[sg/i]

See also Deutsche Amerikanische Freundschaft, Ramones, Feargal Sharkey, Tourists.

EVERLAST

Forever Everlasting (Warner Bros.) 1990 •

A punky white rapper from Ice-T's Rhyme Syndicate, Southern California's Everlast (whose debut preceded Vanilla Ice's by several months) deserves an A for effort, though his skills don't quite match his high spirits. The dude's got the sneer down pat and chatters impressively in doubletime ("Syndicate Soldier")—what he needs now are topics that transcend the usual self-hype. Despite the narrow focus, a couple of killer tracks mark Everlast as a comer: "Fuck Everyone," which carries good-natured belligerence to new artistic heights, and the inspired "I Got the Knack," a rip-roaring gem that samples "My Sharona." [jy]

EVERYTHING BUT THE GIRL

Eden (nr/Blanco y Negro) 1984 •

Everything but the Girl (Blanco y Negro-Sire) 1984

Love Not Money (Blanco y Negro-Sire) 1985 •

Angel EP (nr/Blanco y Negro) 1985

Baby, the Stars Shine Bright (Blanco y Negro-Sire) 1986 •

Come on Home EP (nr/Blanco y Negro) 1986

Don't Leave Me Behind EP (nr/Blanco y Negro) 1986

Idlewild (Blanco y Negro-Sire) 1988 •

These Early Days EP (nr/Blanco y Negro) 1988 •

Driving EP [CD] (nr/Blanco y Negro) 1990 •

The Language of Life (Atlantic) 1990 •

TRACEY THORN

A Distant Shore (nr/Cherry Red) 1982 + 1985 •

BEN WATT AND ROBERT WYATT

Summer into Winter EP (nr/Cherry Red) 1982 •

BEN WATT

North Marine Drive (nr/Cherry Red) 1983 •

Individually and as Everything but the Girl, Ben Watt (guitar, keyboards, vocals, songs) and Tracey Thorn (vocals, guitar, songs) have been prominent innovators in England's back-to-jazz neo-pop movement. The popularity of artists like Sade, Swing Out Sister and the Style Council (whose first album featured Thorn and Watt on one song) is due in no small part to the pair's counter-current efforts, helping to lay the critical groundwork for acceptance of this lovely but thoroughly un-rock style.

While also a member of the Marine Girls, Thorn cut A Distant Shore, a brief album of nostalgic singer/songwriter modernism with little more than an acoustic guitar for accompaniment. Her somewhat monotonous delivery hampers the effort, but a version of the Velvet Underground's stylistically apropos "Femme Fatale" helps considerably.

Prior to EBTG, Watt had recorded on his own as well as in conjunction with Robert Wyatt. The five-song Summer into Winter is a disappointing collaboration; the quietly colorful minimal arrangements of guitar (Watt) and piano (Wyatt) are undercut by Watt's moany lead vocals. It's too bad: Wyatt's voice is much more enjoyable, and might have made something of these vague, atmospheric songs had he done more of the singing. On North Marine Drive, a wisp of airy melodicism with only a guest saxophonist joining Watt, the percussionless tracks still manage nicely syncopated, quasi-Latin rhythms; Watt's fine guitar playing and sincerely artless singing make it a quiet pleasure. (One CD contains both records.)

Named after a shop in Hull, Everything but the Girl debuted in January 1982 with a three-song British single that included Cole Porter's "Night and Day." The duo's first album, Eden, is a charming, fragile record delicately filled with winsome songs that drift in and out of neo-jazz-pop stylings but are never less than appealing and attractive. Showing enormous growth as a vocalist, Thorn makes the songs memorable even when the music is too low-key to stand out on its own. With harmonies that recall such wonders of the '60s as the Association, understated pop creations prove Everything but the Girl to be an exceptional, unconventional band.

Everything but the Girl, the American version of Eden, is a drastically different record, with six substitutions. (The entire second side of the US release is new.) The overall feel of the two albums is similar, but fans should seek out both versions, as there's hardly a dud among the eighteen selections. (The US album isn't on CD, and the British CD offers no extra tracks.)

Love Not Money carries the pair away from jazz and into a pure pop approach that is more accessible and immediately appealing. The album leads off with the alluring "When All's Well" and continues with further literate considerations of growing up and getting along, including "Ugly Little Dreams," which is dedicated to actress Frances Farmer. The US edition adds "Heaven Help Me" and a version of Chrissie Hynde's "Kid."

The Angel EP features one affecting song from Love Not Money, a version of "Easy as Sin" sung by Watt (instead of Thorn, as it appears on the first US LP), plus two non-album tracks that rank among the duo's finest. "Pigeons in the Attic Room" and "Charmless Callous Ways" sound like demos, Thorn alone with guitar and piano respectively, singing at her most emotionally direct.

The cover of Baby, the Stars Shine Bright notes that it was "arranged for orchestra by Ben Watt." Indeed, other than his guitar playing, a prominent rhythm section and a pianist/organist, the musical backing consists of strings, horns and a choir. Fortunately, Thorn's rich voice and the pair's soaringly melodic songs carry it off without losing momentum. The music is neither sappy nor dull; the orchestra's role is supportive without shirking center stage. Like classic Dionne Warwick sides, rock'n'roll energy and excitement is channeled into subtle sophistication that brings the music to life in vivid colors. Pointedly topical lyrics on "Sugar Finney" (for Marilyn Monroe) and "Little Hitler" don't undercut the songs' delicate beauty; other standouts are "Don't Leave Me Behind," "Fighting Talk" and "Cross My Heart."

The Come on Home EP features two versions of a sweeping ballad from Baby, the Stars, the Stars, a classic C&W weeper by Thorn called "Draining the Bar" and an ill-advised stab at "I Fall to Pieces." Don't Leave Me Behind is another song from the same LP, with B-side covers of Jimmy Webb's "Where's the Playground, Susie" sung by Watt and Bacharach's "Alfie" sung by Thorn.

Taking a turn towards self-contained simplicity, Watt and Thorn recorded Idlewild with only a small set of sidemen adding keyboards, bass and horns. Thorn's lyrics have never been this introspective or revealing; the plainly articulated longings and autobiographical expositions resonate through "Oxford Street," "Blue Moon Rose," "Apron Strings" and "Shadow on a Harvest Moon" like a rainy day. With understated, superficially mild-on-arrival music, this is an achingly sad record, filled with quiet grief and deep disappointments. (The British version includes a cover of Danny Whitten's "I Don't Want to Talk About It," which became the duo's biggest UK hit to date—but was left off the US release.)

These Early Days includes a remix of one bitter-sweet song from Idlewild and adds Watt's "Dyed in the Grain," Thorn's "Another Day, Another Dollar" and country star Paul Overstreet's "No Place Like Home."

Thorn and Watt recorded The Language of Life in Los Angeles with Tommy LiPuma, known for his slick productions of Miles Davis and George Benson. The sound is a natural evolution of the duo's prior moves towards a classic (i.e., pre-rock) pop presentation. By rejecting it out of hand as a bid for commercial acceptance (which it partly was), lots of people missed the album's strengths, especially the improvement in both partners' voices and songwriting. Granted, some of the songs would have sounded more sincere without the studio glitz and passionless contempo-jazz session players, but Thorn's "Meet Me in the Morning" and Watt's "The Road" (featuring saxman Stan Getz, whose bossa nova work was an early influence on the duo) are keepers that stand up with the pair's best. And the cover of Womack and Womack's "Take Me" hints at what they're aiming for: sophisticated, romantic adult pop.

The Driving EP features a "radio edit" of the album's overproduced single plus the umpteenth cover of Tom Waits' "Downtown Train," with Watt handling the lead vocals. [i/ws]

See also Grab Grab the Haddock, Marine Girls, Style Council.

EX

Disturbing Domestic Peace (Hol. Verrecords) 1980
History Is What's Happening (Hol. More DPM) 1982
Dignity of Labour (Hol. VGZ) 1983
Tumult (Hol. FAI) 1983
Gonna Rob the Sperm Bank EP (Hol. Sneeeleer) 1983
Blueprints for a Blackout (Hol. Pig Brother Productions) 1983
Pokkeherrie (Hol. Pockabilly) 1985
1936 (The Spanish Revolution) EP (Hol. Ron Johnson) 1986
Too Many Cowboys (Mordam) 1987
Live in Wrocław [tape] (Hol. Red) 1987
Hands Up! You're Free (Hol. Ex) 1988
Aural Guerrilla (Hol. Ex) 1988 (Homestead) 1989
Joggers and Smoggers (Hol. Ex) 1989 •
Dead Fish EP (Hol. Ex) 1990 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Support the Miners' Strike (Hol. Records Against Thaatchism) 1985

This hard-edged Dutch anarcho-punk collective adheres to only the purest ideals in rock music. Since 1980, the Ex has uncorked an endless stream of do-it-themselves vinyl and tapes on a variety of label names (finally settling on Ex Records in '88). Following Crass' example (if not quite that group's sound; the Ex has a cutting Gang of Four rhythmic edge and something of a Fall-like declamatory style), the Ex use their work as a sonic and graphic vehicle to promote a wide range of left-wing socio-political causes. Along with the piercing and articulate punk rock, most of the Ex's albums contain vast amounts of printed material.

Disturbing Domestic Peace includes a bonus live single and an illustrated lyrics booklet. History Is What's Happening is a studio rendition of the band's 1981 live set. Dignity of Labour is a four-single box that focuses on the decline of a paper mill factory near where some of the Ex were squatting. An illustrated book explaining the issue keeps the songs' political content from being overlooked; instrumentation includes saxophone and marimba.

Jon Langford (Mekons/Three Johns), an occasional figure in the world of Ex, entered the picture as the producer of Tumult; he also plays drums on the four-song Rob the Sperm Bank 12-inch. The record's poster announces "hometaping is killing record companies . . . and it's about time."

The Ex employs such musical implements as organ, beer crates and oil barrels on the double Blueprints for a Blackout album, further expanding its sonic palette with guest musicians. A poster and info packet about the eviction of a massive Amsterdam squat accompany the LP.

The Ex moved to support striking British coal miners in 1984, organizing a benefit/agit-prop tour and releasing a joint live album with several likeminded bands. Pokkeherrie is a collection of new songs the group had performed on an anti-military tour. The double 7-inch of songs from and concerning the Spanish Revolution came with (or vice versa) a 140-page book about that chapter of 1930s anti-fascist history.

The double-LP Too Many Cowboys—which was released in the US, complete with a 24-page newspaper—combines live and studio recordings of such no-nonsense songs as "Butter or Bombs," "Olympigs," "Vivisection" and "How Can One Sell the Air." Following a live cassette recorded in Poland, the Ex compiled an album (Hands Up! You're Free) of its three John Peel sessions ('83, '85 and '86).

Langford produced Aural Guerrilla, an evocative and tightly crimped knot that covers a variety of righteous causes. A bracing blast of barbed wire guitar delivered at reasonable speed with clear (but passionate) vocals, Aural Guerrilla is one of the Ex's best; potent highlights include the pro-animal ecology of "Evolution (?)," the anti-rock-star venom of "Meanwhile at McDonna's" and "Welcome to the Asylum," an attack on Holland's shoddy treatment of refugees.

Joggers & Smoggers (the Ex's third double album) reroutes the music from its usual head-on collision and spotlights a few guests, including Sonic Youth guitarists Lee Ranaldo and Thurston Moore, as well as jazz hornmen and a bagpiper. While tracks like "Shopping Street" are brash cacophony, others are far more restrained.

With Langford again co-producing, Dead Fish (a 10-inch record plus a 3-inch CD) is one of the Ex's most stirring releases yet, as the group sneers at how the record business has belittled music's significance.

[mg]

(EX)CAT HEADS

See Cat Heads.

EXECUTIVE SLACKS

Executive Slacks EP (Red) 1983
You Can't Hum When You're Dead (Fundamental) 1984
Nausea (Fundamental) 1985
Fire and Ice (Fundamental) 1986

FAHRENHEIT 451

House of Morals EP (Active) 1986

Philadelphia's Executive Slacks started out playing a searing combination of electronics, guitar/vocals and percussion. On the trio's first EP, Matt Marelo sings with hysterical urgency and unnerving calm while spewing white-hot guitar noise out over steady, pulsing Residents-like backing complete with found tape noises. The impact is gratingly industrial but also emotional—it isn't the sheer assault that makes you uneasy, it's the whole demented concoction.

You Can't Hum When You're Dead combines all four tracks from Executive Slacks with a subsequent three-song EP. The latter material, produced by ex-Killing Joke bassist Youth (an obvious influence), is more ominously bass-heavy and less scathing—though equally powerful, thanks to screamed vocals and disturbing effects.

Nausea continues in a similar style without any letup. The band and Youth refuse to temper their taste for unsettling din, and "In and Out" ranks with anything by Killing Joke or Chrome for sheer intensity. Elsewhere, Executive Slacks diversifies into other styles and moods, including electronics expert John Young's deft use of hip-hop/dance rhythms, an acoustic guitar tapestry, pulsing metallic percolations and several terrific instrumentals.

The self-produced Fire and Ice is the band's most accessible record, dominated by a crucial arrival: percussionist Bobbie Rae. His propulsive style adds a livelier, more human feel to the group's cold, technological framework. While a version of Gary Glitter's "Rock & Roll" is entertaining (if predictable), the more original "Wide Fields" is built around the hook from the Spencer Davis Group's "I'm a Man."

Soon afterward, Marelo retired to pursue his art career. Meanwhile, in New Jersey, a band called Fahrenheit 451 were establishing themselves with a somewhat similar, if smoother sound. Their sole release, a four-song EP, melds art-rock guitar, funky bass, Stranglers-like keyboard swells and dominant neo-Latin percussion; Athan Maroulis' charismatic vocals (very Doors/Bauhaus-inspired) top off an interesting record. When Fahrenheit 451 crumbled in '87, Maroulis joined up with Rae and Young, added a guitarist and proceeded as Executive Slacks, evolving into a strangely compelling merger of hard rock and techno-wave, with Maroulis' melodramatics in pleasant contrast to the synthetic drum/keyboard textures, loud heavy metal guitar and Rae's rhythmic pyrotechnics. [i/gef]

EXPLODING WHITE MICE

In a Nest of Vipers EP (Greasy Pop-Big Time) 1985

Brute Force and Ignorance (Aus. Festival) 1988

Exploding White Mice (Ger. Normal) 1990 •

Taking their name from Rock 'n' Roll High School and most of their sound from Rocket to Russia, this Adelaide quintet has done its damndest to be Australia's own Ramones. But while the familiar song skeletons and Paul Gilchrist's Joey-esque delivery are in clear debt to the brudders, the Mice add a distinct garage element (credit Radio Birdman), especially on the early recordings.

The six-song In a Nest of Vipers swells with raucous bareback guitar energy and catchy pop-rock tunes. Covering "Pipeline" provides some contrast to the Ramonesy "Burning Red" and a hard-rocking rundown of Bo Diddley's "Let the Kids Dance." While the other originals are fun but forgettable, "Dangerous" caps the EP off with a varied scramble of raunchy guitars.

Brute Force and Ignorance evolves that hit-and-run freestyle spirit into more of a late-'70s pop-punk sound, replicating the Ramones' light touch with clinging choruses and obvious progressions (as on "Worry About Nothing" and "Bury Me"). Faster cuts ("Uninvited") really spotlight the Mice's adrenaline-soaked sizzle.

The studio side of Exploding White Mice contains such memorable tunes as the pogo-speed "Intuition" and the aptly titled "Do the Crunch"; the live side displays more of the Mice's raw power than any of the group's studio work. [mg]

EXPLOITED

Punks Not Dead (nr/Exploited-Secret) 1981 (nr/Link) 1989 •

On Stage (nr/Exploited) 1981

Troops of Tomorrow (nr/Secret) 1982 (nr/Link) 1989 •

Let's Start a War ... Said Maggie One Day (Combat) 1983 •

Horror Epics (Combat) 1985 •

Live at the White House (Combat Core) 1985

Totally Exploited (nr/Blashadabee-Dojo) 1986 •

Jesus Is Dead EP (Combat Core) 1986

Live and Loud!! (nr/Link) 1987

Death Before Dishonour (Rough Justice-Combat) 1987 •

Punk's Alive (nr/Skunx) 1988

Live Lewd Lust (nr/Grand Slam) 1989 •

Led by outspoken spike-haired shouter Wattie Buchan, Edinburgh's Exploited are one of the UK's most successful and enduring political thrash bands. Musically harsher, darker and cruder than their '77 forefathers, these gruff yobbos vent unrestrained and bottomless anger against their enemies—the army, warmongers, Margaret Thatcher (pictured on one album cover, cited in the title of another and the subject of assorted songs) and other symbols of government authority. As mainstream-uncommercial as the Exploited are, a huge hardcore audience—in the UK and increasingly in the US—have made Wattie and an ever-shifting set of accomplices highly regarded genre stars.

Although hampered by muffled sound, Punks Not Dead is full of angry, gritty anthems of pain and frustration, including "I Believe in Anarchy," "Blown to Bits" and "Royalty." On Stage repeats much of the same material but has bootleg-level audio quality, worsened by the clear-vinyl pressing.

Troops of Tomorrow has a crisp, clean guitar sound, and the lyrics are a bit easier to understand, but the improved production doesn't mean the Exploited has gotten slick—the rough and tumble assault is still wild-eyed and unstoppable. The title song was written by the Vibrators; "Sid Vicious Was Innocent" is one of the record's more interesting arguments.

An entirely new lineup—Karl, Wully and Billy—joins Wattie for Let's Start a War. The production backslides into the murk a bit, but the band's fervor pushes forward and Wattie's singing is, if such a thing is possible, rawer and less melodic. A variety of tempos offers hope for a brighter future, but there's really nothing new going on here.

The Dracula cover and title of Horror Epics suggests a flirtation with the Damned's old horror turf, but the title track veers more towards Black Sabbath, with the rhythm guitars displaced by Willie's thundering drum attack and moaning lead guitar figures; echo on the vocals furthers the comparison to mid-'70s metal. Several other songs are variants on that style; the whole outing benefits from Wattie's growing production prowess. The lengthy numbers are standard Exploited issue, but a tiny hint of experimentalism is creeping in amid the stylistic complacency. The best tune—and certainly one of the band's catchiest ever—is "Maggie," which repeatedly calls the Prime Minister a bad name.

Live at the White House was recorded in Washington, DC, in April 1985 and features a selection of the Exploited's most popular tunes. The four-song Jesus Is Dead 12-inch captures yet another lineup with clarity and venom. (Willie's drumming is again a highlight; Nig's spectacular guitar playing is a welcome addition.) For the first time, the Exploited's instruments are clearly articulated and separated in the mix; what a difference real dynamics and seemingly well-rehearsed arrangements make. A solid, fiery punk record with powerful lyrics about a drug bust, televangelism and "Politicians."

Willie and Nig also dominate the fuzzier-sounding Death Before Dishonour, in which a slashing metal edge shows the Exploited waffling between forms. Although the music is essentially indistinguishable from any in the band's past, little bits of unexpected business (a fake Reagan speech on "Power Struggle," a brief drum solo on "Police Informer," the female chorus on "Sexual Favours") break up the monotony from time to time. [cpl 1]

EXPLORERS

The Explorers (nr/Virgin) 1985 •

MANZANERA & MACKAY

Crack the Whip (Relativity) 1988 •

Up in Smoke (Relativity) 1989 •

PLAYERS

Christmas (Rykodisc) 1989 •

On their own as the Explorers, post-Roxy Musicians Phil Manzanera and Andy Mackay—joined by singer James Wraith and a collection of familiar session cohorts—make polite, sophisticated pop/dance music with no edge. Although superficially not that different from the music Roxy was making towards the end, The Explorers is undistinguished, lacking memorable songs and Ferry's unique touch. (Wraith's obvious attempt at imitation on "Venus De Milo" isn't exactly flattery.) Not bad, just not what you'd hope for from artists of this caliber.

Dispensing with the group name, the American Crack the Whip retrieves three cuts from The Explorers, adding five leftovers from the same '84 sessions and another five dance-conscious tracks of more recent vintage. Manzanera and Mackay do nice work on the mediocre material, but the dominant character here is Wraith. Where he was mildly annoying on the first album, his mannered singing has turned obnoxious—a pompously melodramatic mixture of vocal styles borrowed from Ferry, Erasme and Spandau Ballet.

The following year, the remaining six songs from The Explorers were coupled with the same number of new recordings and issued as Up in Smoke. With Wraith again being a pompous nuisance. Manzanera and Mackay occasionally chip in with nifty instrumental bits, but the songs and production are so lacking in personality that it's hardly worth the wait.

The Players are a no-tech instrumental band led by Andy Mackay; Christmas (executive-produced and "co-presented" by Manzanera, who doesn't play on it) is a delightful folksy collection of 33 old-fashioned traditional songs of the season, played with mucho gentle gusto on banjo, fiddle, oboe, clarinet, accordion and acoustic guitar. [i]

See also Phil Manzanera, Roxy Music,

EXTRABALLE

Extraballe EP (Fr. Carrere) 1979

Sales Romances (Fr. CBS) 1980

Extraballe (Fr. CBS) 1981

On their self-titled EP, Extraballe—whose drummer at the time was Michel Peyronel, brother of Heavy Metal Kids/UFO keyboardist Danny—offered high-speed re-fried punk-a-boogie with hot axework and little else. Thereafter, the band became nothing more than a name owned by vocalist John Ickx, who wrote the songs. Just about on key, Ickx's French speak-singing covers most typical punk subjects (sex, violence, power, movies) plus a couple of less-likely topics for a young Frenchman. There's potent high-energy accompaniment with lots of organ and guitar vying for domination of the serviceable tunes. (The temporary band for Sales Romances included one-time Be-Bop Deluxe batteur Simon Fox; Blockhead Davey Payne blew some sax.) Ickx formed a different band for the Extraballe album; a pity he couldn't update the sound more. [jg]

See also A Split-Second

EYELESS IN GAZA

Photographs as Memories (nr/Cherry Red) 1981

Caught in Flux (nr/Cherry Red) 1981

Pale Hands I Loved So Well (Nor. Uniton) 1982

Drumming the Beating Heart (nr/Cherry Red) 1982

Rust Red September (nr/Cherry Red) 1983

Back from the Rains (nr/Cherry Red) 1986 •

Kodak Ghosts Run Amok (nr/Cherry Red) 1987

Transience Blues (nr/Integrity-Antler) 1989 •

MARTYN BATES

Letters Written (nr/Cherry Red) 1982

The Return of the Quiet (nr/Cherry Red) 1987 •

Love Smashed on a Rock (nr/Integrity-Antler) 1988

Letters to a Scattered Family (nr/Integrity-Antler) 1990 •

Named for Aldous Huxley's ode to pacifist integrity, Eyeless in Gaza consisted of guitarist Martyn Bates and bassist/keyboardist Peter Becker, both credited with voice and instrumentation on the first album, a better-than-decent stab at hook-filled sparseness. The tasteful music is marred only occasionally by overly anguished vocals. Caught in Flux has a more delicate flavor at first, then rapidly devolves into humpbacked squalor. This one-and-a-half-disc (LP/EP) set shows a hint of progress, with the vocals held in tighter rein. Caught in flux, indeed.

Pale Hands, released only in Norway, is fairly dissolute—a meandering, largely improvisational attempt to make music out of aimless doodles. Drumming the Beating Heart (also included in its entirety on the cassette of Back from the Rains) finds the duo streamlining their sound to good effect, relying on church organ leads and spontaneous rhythm approaches. If the vocals could be relieved of their melodrama, these fellows might have something here.

Back from the Rains has a charming, Aztec Camera-like beat-pop sound; Bates' vocals aren't quite up to it, but the duo (aided by a drummer and a female backing singer) shows a real facility for shimmering studio arrangements. Just shy of being commercial, this is nonetheless a delight.

After that record, Becker left the group and Bates began a solo career, an idea he had first tested with a pre-Gaza cassette and 1982's 10-inch Letters Written. Using strings and a rhythm section on The Return of the Quiet, Bates pushes crudely towards airy soul and catchy techno-bop, but the arrangements have an unfinished quality and his subtle singing rarely gets in emotional synch with the material. And while the cover of Bacharach/David's "Look of Love" is a nice idea, his execution is agonizing.

Bates' latest effort, handsomely produced by Paul

Sampson (who is best known for his work in and with the Primitives but was actually once Bates' bandmate in the Reluctant Stereotypes), manages to make his voice—showing better control than in the past—more palatable than ever before. With the star handling guitar, harmonica and banjo, a skilled trio (bass, drums, clarinet) helps him realize the songs on the utterly presentable Letters to a Scattered Family as textured, shimmering pop and rock full of nuance and character. (The CD adds the entire contents of The Return of the Quiet.)

Kodak Ghosts Run Amok, a 1980-'86 singles (and more) compilation, chronicles Eyeless in Gaza's development from idiosyncratic home-brew experimentation through ragged melodicism to full-blown pop. This is really for fans; newcomers are instead recommended to the later, easier-to-like albums. (The double-play cassette appends Caught in Flux.) Transience Blues is a collection of Eyeless rarities. [jw/i]

F F F F F F F F

FACE TO FACE

Face to Face (Epic) 1984
 Confrontation (Epic) 1985
 One Big Day (Mercury) 1988 •

Depending on where your needle drops on Face to Face's first record, the Boston quintet is either a fascinating blend of hip-hop and rock'n'roll or a noxious pre-fab MTV creation. Four producers worked on the album, yielding both the annoying hit single "10-9-8" and a gripping piece of political consciousness, "Under the Gun," on which Arthur Baker (who produced both tracks) drum-programs and scratch-mixes the band into an exciting new realm. (A subsequent 12-inch further elaborates on "Under the Gun"—fifteen minutes' worth—with two remixes.)

Confrontation was mostly co-produced by Baker and Ed Stasium. Except for the increasing number of ballads, the band rocks enthusiastically, leaning into the rhythmic material. Singer Laurie Sargent remains a strong presence, but the routine presentation and sound make this Confrontation too radio-ready to be interesting.

Why Anton Fier would be needed to produce an album that sounds like a tasteful countryfied cross between Scandal and the Motels is a mystery, but that's the story on One Big Day. In a further misuse of talent, Syd Straw and Bernie Worrell contribute to the tunelessly bland proceedings. [i]

FAD GADGET

See Frank Tovey.

FAHRENHEIT 451

See Executive Slacks.

JAD FAIR

See Half Japanese.

FAIRGROUND ATTRACTION

Perfect EP (nr/RCA) 1988 •
 The First of a Million Kisses (RCA) 1988 •
 Find My Love EP (nr/RCA) 1988 •
 A Smile in a Whisper EP (nr/RCA) 1988 •
 Ay Fond Kiss (nr/RCA) 1990 •

Scottish vocalist Eddi Reader had sung behind the Gang of Four, Alison Moyet and Eurythmics; joined by guitarist/songwriter Mark Nevin (a onetime sideman of Jane Aire's) and a lightweight rhythm section (Simon Edwards plays an acoustic guitarron in lieu of bass) she led the short-lived Fairground Attraction, a folksy star in the UK jazz-pop heavens. The First of a Million Kisses is the quartet's only full album, a wonderful, bewitching romance of airy music and Reader's strong, supple voice. From svelte Everything but the Girl-styled elegance ("A Smile in a Whisper") to fuller-figured pop ("Perfect") to Costelloesque folk ("Moon on the Rain") to minimalist Latin-inflected R&B ("Find My Love") to shuffling Dixieland ("Clare"), the catchy songs and intimate performances never fail to charm. (The CD adds two Nevin-penned non-LP songs from the Perfect EP, which also boasts an a cappella rendition of "Mystery Train.")

The album was followed by a pair of additional EPs drawn from it; each contains (in some configurations) three non-LP sides. (A Smile in a Whisper has the inevitable reading of Patsy Cline's "Walking After Midnight.") After Fairground Attraction broke up in the summer of '89, the group's label assembled Ay Fond Kiss, a compilation of B-sides and leftovers titled for a song on the Find My Love EP. [i]

See also Morrissey.

MARIANNE FAITHFULL

Broken English (Island) 1979 •
 Dangerous Acquaintances (Island) 1981
 A Childs Adventure (Island) 1983 •
 Strange Weather (Island) 1987 •
 Blazing Away (Island) 1990 •

MARK ISHAM/MARIANNE FAITHFULL

Trouble in Mind (Island Visual Arts) 1986

Resuming her recording career after a gap of several years, erstwhile '60s pop singer Marianne Faithfull presents a whole new persona on these intensely individual and powerful albums. Armed with a life-roughened voice filled with suffering and rage, and backed by brilliantly original electro-rock, she grapples with mostly political subjects on Broken English and even includes a fascinating interpretation of John Lennon's "Working Class Hero." For Dangerous Acquaintances, Faithfull takes a more resigned outlook, and sings of relationships and the passage of time with strength and depth.

Although the music on it is less exemplary, A Childs Adventure continues her harrowing voyage. Other than the political commentary of "Ireland," the songs concentrate on personal struggles, with only a glimmer of hope ("Ashes in My Hand") emerging from the otherwise bleak appraisal.

Despite co-billing with composer/horn player Mark Isham, Faithfull merely sings two songs on the Trouble in Mind soundtrack album. The cool jazz of the title track for Alan Rudolph's 1986 film offers a foretaste of the direction she took on her next record, Strange Weather. Cast as a sophisticated chanteuse (the echoes of Dietrich and Lotte Lenya are duly noted in Terry Southern's liner notes), Faithfull confronts a far-ranging program (blues, swing, folk, Tin Pan Alley) with delicate accompaniment by Lou Reed's sidemen (Fernando Saunders, Robert Quine and J.T. Lewis) as well as Mac Rebennack, strings and a horn section. An old spiritual ("Sign of Judgment") connects beautifully with Faithfull's emotional conviction; two tunes from the early '30s—"Boulevard of Broken Dreams" and the schmoozy "Penthouse Serenade"—are also rich and wonderful. On the downside, a new version of "As Tears Go By" is mainly academic and her reading of Dylan's "I'll Keep It with Mine" is simply horrible.

Blazing Away is a career retrospective recorded live at St. Anne's Cathedral in Brooklyn. Producer Hal Willner assembled a dream band anchored by longtime Faithfull collaborator Barry Reynolds on guitar; former Lounge Lizards Dougie Bowne (drums) and Marc Ribot (guitar) mesh powerfully with keyboards played by Garth Hudson and Dr. John. Faithfull's vocal interpretations have never been so intelligent or convincing, and she unveils definitive versions of "Working Class Hero," "Strange Weather" and "Sister Morphine" (and another unnecessary recording of "As Tears Go By"). The set includes five songs from Broken English and only one mediocre new original, a studio rendition of the country-flavored title track. But on searing new versions of "Ballad of Lucy Jordan" and "Why'd Ya Do It?," Faithfull proves she's a singer for the ages, a Billie Holiday figure for a generation too confused for the blues. [i/ws]

FAITH NO MORE

We Care a Lot (Mordam) 1985 + 1987

Introduce Yourself (Slash) 1987 •

The Real Thing (Slash-Reprise) 1989 •

San Francisco's Faith No More began on the indie scene's Marshall plan, playing a muscular mongrel rock mix containing funk, metal, hip-hop, hardcore and keyboards that punks could easily appreciate. Leading off with the dynamic and inspirational chant/roar of "We Care a Lot," the first album (a Matt Wallace production that was remastered and reissued after the band's second LP) attempts too many things (none, except perhaps "Greed," as memorable as the title track) and lacks the songwriting tools to be really effective, but it does offer a solid dose of street-level guitar power to those revolted by arena bands.

Apparently unconcerned by the danger of seeming like a one-song band, the quintet redid "We Care a Lot" with new topical lyrics for Introduce Yourself, a blistering, conceptually refined album built around Jim Martin's well-integrated metal guitar, Mike Bordin's superb drumming and Chuck Mosley's coarse vocals and real-life lyrics. Having located a solid stylistic core, Faith No More's careful digressions into rhapsic rhythm riot (and other areas) became part of a clear-cut sound, supported by much improved songwriting (like "Introduce Yourself," which namechecks a good chunk of the record industry, and "R'n'R," which is blurted in a hard-rock analogue to Grandmaster Flash's "The Message").

Mosley was sacked in 1988 and replaced by Mike Patton, a quivery young vocalist who'd obviously seen Anthony Kiedis front the Red Hot Chili Peppers more than once. Dispensing with any remaining eccentricities, Faith No More rolled all of its assets (giving new prominence to Roddy Bottum's keyboards) into a tight commercial ball on The Real Thing, thereby joining Living Colour as one of the very few electrifying hard-rock bands to remain clearly outside both the metal and pop spheres. Despite Patton's tiresome vocals and the repetitive songs, the record's syncopated street-level power (and the catchy "Epic") hit a nerve, and Faith No More became one of 1990's few credible success stories. [i]

FALCO

Einzelhaft (A&M) 1982

Junge Roemer (A&M) 1984 •

3 (A&M) 1986 •

Emotional (Sire) 1986 •

Wiener Blut (Sire) 1988 •

Falco (Johann Hoelcel) is something of a hero in his native Austria; although he sings (in a random pastiche of accented English and German) like an arch, continental smoothie, his shtick is slick, thematically simpleminded chart fare, syncopated and fashionably automated (lots of synth, computerized drums with rototom and cymbal overdubs). The best parts of Einzelhaft (co-produced with his songwriting partner, keyboardist Robert Ponger) are tedious rock; the tracks that have earned him international visibility ("Der Kommissar," a US hit when badly covered in English by After the Fire; "Maschine Brennt") are repulsive pseudo-funk with obnoxiously patronizing attempts at African-American lingo, accents and music, sung in a constipated gurgle as appealing as hearing someone vomit outside your window.

On Junge Roemer, Ponger's generally lighter touch—leaning towards Philly soul in tone if not content—cuts a lot of the crap to expose a boring collection of tepidly delivered songs. On the other hand, Falco's third LP is a grotesque monstrosity. With two new collaborators replacing Ponger, Falco essays a cultural outreach program with such garishly overproduced, overlong thumpers as "Vienna Calling" (7:40) and "Rock Me Amadeus" (8:20). Each repeats a cloying riff or chorus endlessly while all manner of gimmicky mix tricks (spoken word, scratching, dub echo, sound effects, etc.) attempt to obscure Falco's regurgio blather. Think of an endless loop of Queen's "We Will Rock You" with less melody and you'll get an idea of what a nightmare this is. To cap things off in maximally tasteless fashion, he debases Dylan's "It's All Over Now, Baby Blue" as a sneery lounge singer, complete with spoken asides. What a jerk! (For masochists, 3—brilliantly mastered, incidentally—runs over 50 minutes, even on vinyl.)

Falco seems a bit of a manipulated wimp on Emotional, a record to which he contributed some of the lyrics and none of the music. Producers Rob and Ferdi Bolland are in complete control, writing and playing almost everything except guitars and sax. The (mis-)concept album ranges from ABC-like slick soul to psychopathic shrieking; Falco is as awful as ever, babbling the verbose bilingual lyrics with auto-pilot enthusiasm and the assistance of mega-tracked female backing vocals. The wildly bombastic production and pervasive low-brow mentality here cries out for Jim Steinman to produce Falco's next record.

Thankfully, that didn't come to pass on Wiener Blut. The relatively restrained side written and produced by the Boillands dispenses with the kitchen sink, leaving Falco to carry on gurgling over chattering dance tracks that more or less mind their manners. Of course, the material is utterly inane, hitting such lows as "Rides Again" (which begs the how-can-we-miss-you-if-you-won't-go-away? question) and "Garbo" ("a mélange of Aphrodite and Venus"). Falco actually attempts to sing on the album's second side, which takes clumsy aim at soul, power balladry and other uncharacteristic styles, ending with a bizarre sequencer-and-sitar-flavored rendition of Steely Dan's "Do It Again." [jg:i]

TAV FALCO'S PANTHER BURNS

See Panther Burns.

FALL

Live at the Witch Trials (Step Forward-IRS) 1979 •
 Dragnet (nr/Step Forward) 1979 •
 Totale's Turns (It's Now or Never) (nr/Rough Trade) 1980
 Grotesque (After the Gramme) (Rough Trade) 1980
 Early Years 77-79 (Faulty Products) 1981
 Slates EP (Rough Trade) 1981
 Live in London, 1980 [tape] (nr/Chaos) 1982
 Hex Enduction Hour (nr/Kamera) 1982 •
 Room to Live (nr/Kamera) 1982
 A Part of America Therein, 1981 (Cottage) 1982
 Perverted by Language (nr/Rough Trade) 1983 •
 Kicker Conspiracy EP (nr/Rough Trade) 1983
 Fall in a Hole (NZ Flying Nun) 1983
 The Wonderful and Frightening World of the Fall
 (Beggars Banquet-PVC) 1984 •
 Call for Escape Route EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1984
 Hip Priest and Kamerads (nr/Situation 2) 1985 •
 This Nation's Saving Grace (Beggars Banquet-PVC)
 1985 •
 The Fall EP (PVC) 1986
 Bend Sinister (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1986 •
 Domesday Pay-Off (Big Time) 1987
 There's a Ghost in My House EP (nr/Beggars Banquet)
 1987
 The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1987
 The Fall In: Palace of Swords Reversed (Cog Sinister-Rough Trade) 1987 •
 The Frenz Experiment (Big Time) 1988 •
 Victoria EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1988
 I Am Kurious Oranj (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1988 •
 Jerusalem EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1988 •
 Cab It Up/Dead Beat Descendant EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1989
 Seminal Live (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1989 •
 Extricate (Cog Sinister-Fontana) 1990 •
 Dredger EP (nr/Cog Sinister-Phonogram) 1990
 458489 A Sides (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1990 •
 458489 B Sides (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1990 •
 Shiftwork (nr/Fontana) 1991 •

Formed in Manchester in 1977, the Fall has attracted a cult following in numerous corners of the globe, but has managed to bend commercial necessities to its own needs and carve no small chart success in the UK. Fall fans are rabid, and the group's influence on likeminded conceptual noisemakers—in England, the US, Iceland, New Zealand and elsewhere—can't be overstated. Led by acid-tongued poet Mark E. Smith, whose caustic lyrics and amelodic vocals provide the Fall's primary features, the band has created a huge body of unique, adventurous and challenging (less so in recent years) rock. From humble experimental beginnings, the Fall has continued to explore and grow stronger over the course of nearly fifteen prolific years, earning a place of real respect in left-of-center musical circles. Whether you enjoy the sounds or not, the Fall has made a crucial difference in modern music, and that counts.

After releasing some singles and contributing two tracks to the watershed Short Circuit Live at the Electric Circus Manchester compilation, the Fall recorded and mixed their debut LP, Live at the Witch Trials, in an economical two-day studio session with producer Bob Sargeant, who did nothing (audible) to soften their well-organized dissonance. At once leaning towards punk's directness and charging headlong into poetic pretension, Smith and company (bass, drums, electric piano, guitar) drip sincerity on tracks like "Rebellious Jukebox" and "Crap Rap 2/Like to Blow," occasionally sounding relatively normal amidst the tempest. Dragnet followed with a rougher-edged sound, as well as a new lineup. The first album to feature Craig Scanlon's trademark scratchy, dissonant guitar (which has played a major role in the band ever since), Dragnet is not one of the Fall's best efforts, but contains at least two classic numbers, "Spectre vs. Rector" and "A Figure Walks."

By the time of their first live album, Totale's Turns—recorded in late '79 and early '80—the Fall had consolidated a more commanding style, although it's no easier on the aural. Jagged, largely recitative and nearly oblivious to musical convention, Smith's witty repartee carries the show as the band lurches and grunts along noisily. Not for neophytes.

Grotesque removes the Fall even further from the world of easy listening. The songs are mostly one-or-two-chord jams played too slowly to be hardcore, but structured similarly. Smith grafts on socio-political lyrics that would be more interesting on paper than accompanied by this one-take-live-in-the-studio atonality.

All of the Fall's pre-LP singles (by a lineup with keyboardist Una Baines and guitarist Martin Bramah, who went off together to form the Blue Orchids) are on one side of Early Years; the other collects later 7-inch efforts. One imagines that Public Image listened to the '77 vintage "Repetition" a couple of times before mapping out their first LP.

The 10-inch Slates has six tracks with substantially better production than the Fall's preceding ventures; evidence of much greater studio effort abounds. While still not quite Abba-smooth, several numbers, especially "Fit and Working Again" and "Leave the Capitol," are as close to enjoyable, routine (ahem) rock as the Fall had ever come. A solid record of greater potential appeal than just to cultists.

Part of Hex Enduction Hour was recorded in Iceland, a nation where the Fall's music had a major cultural impact. An expanded lineup with two drummers turns the sound large and rhythm-conscious; despite a resulting tendency to lumber along at a slow, methodical pace, some of the tracks are intriguingly off the common Fall path. (The German CD edition on the Line label includes some early singles as bonus cuts.)

Room to Live features a sparser, less rhythmic sound than Hex Induction Hour, occasionally returning to Grotesque's flirtation with raw rockability. Smith is in top lyrical form, with pungent, satirical views of British life: "Marquis Cha Cha" offers biting commentary on the Falklands War.

Three live Fall albums emerged around this time. A Part of America Therein was taped at five gigs on a US tour. The sound quality varies considerably from track to track, but the performances are uniformly strong, particularly the epic "N.W.R.A." Even better, though, is Fall in a Hole, a two-disc authorized bootleg released only in New Zealand. Recording quality, execution and song selection (mostly from Hex and Room to Live) are superb. The Live in London, 1980 cassette was recorded in front of a none-too-enthusiastic audience at Acklam Hall; it's of dubious legal origin, listing neither songwriting nor publishing credits. Drawing mostly from Grotesque and Slates, it warrants mention due to sharp performances (except for "Prole Art Threat," which falls apart) and very good sound quality.

The Fall's next studio LP, Perverted by Language, marked a brief return to Rough Trade. On the first record with Smith's new American wife Brix as co-guitarist, they chug away with more conviction than ever, particularly on the relentless "Smile" and "Eat Y'self Fitter." Hindsight now shows it to be priming the audience for what was to follow: the John Leckie-produced Wonderful and Frightening World of the Fall, easily one of the band's best records. Strengthened by Brix's songwriting and gutsy guitar, the Fall are able to beckon a variety of styles with panache. All nine tracks (eleven on the American release, which adds "C.R.E.E.P." and "No Bulbs," the latter from the subsequent Call for Escape Route EP) jump out, highlighted by the fierce "Lay of the Land," "Elves" and the almost Syd Barrett-like "Disney's Dream Debased."

Hip Priest and Kamerads is a compilation of the band's releases on the Kamera label. Except for a live version of "Mere Pseud Mag Ed.," there's nothing otherwise unavailable, but it does offer a good introduction for the uninitiated. The tape and CD have extra tracks.

With what at this point seems like an embarrassment of riches, the Fall unleashed This Nation's Saving Grace. Tracks like the (gasp!) synthesized and danceable "L.A." and the contemporaneous 45, "Cruisers Creek," reveal that the Fall is no longer averse to commercial potential, but it's really just a new type of ammo added to the arsenal. "Bombast" builds a guitar din that would make Sonic Youth jealous, while "Paintwork" and "I Am Damo Suzuki" (a song about Can's onetime lead singer) are two of the strangest things they've ever done. The US release substitutes "Cruisers Creek" for "Barmy," which subsequently turned up on the eponymous American EP, alongside four other 45 cuts, like an unlikely cover of Gene Vincent's "Rollin' Dany." (To confuse matters further, Beggars Banquet issued three of the five songs on a 1985 US 12-inch.)

Named for a novel by Vladimir Nabokov, Bend Sinister is a rather gloomy, dark sounding record; minor keys and Joy Division-like guitar riffing dominate tracks like "US 80's-90's" and "Gross Chapel—

British Grenadiers." But then in the middle of all that is "Shoulder Pads," one of the poppiest, most upbeat songs they've ever done. Multi-instrumentalist Simon Rogers has become the Fall's chief sound-shaper, providing all kinds of odd synths and guitar fills and embellishments. Domesday Pay-Off, the equivalent US release to Bend Sinister, switches song order a bit and substitutes singles from the same approximate period, such as "Hey! Luciani" and a cover of R. Dean Taylor's "There's a Ghost in My House." The four-song Peel Sessions disc (from November 1978) predates the Fall's debut album; two of the numbers are on that LP, the other two are otherwise unreleased. A must for fans.

The Fall In: Palace of Swords Reversed is a compilation of Rough Trade singles, flip-sides and LP tracks from 1980 to 1983, released on Smith's own label. The Frenz Experiment is an unusual LP—almost a Smith solo—with lower-key backing than usual, and more willfully obscure lyrics than ever, particularly on "Athlete Cured" and the very odd "Oswald Defence Lawyer." Rogers, no longer a fulltime band member, produced and gave it the most detailed sound of any Fall record. Adding to their growing reputation as an able and imaginative cover band, Frenz includes a totally delightful version of the Kinks' "Victoria." (The original UK LP includes a bonus single of "Mark'll Sink Us"/"Bremen Nacht Run.")

Recent Fall side projects have established the group in other fields. Smith expanded the idea from the "Hey! Luciani" 45 into a play which ran in London. The Fall wrote the adequate but uneventful vocal music (which the group performed as live accompaniment in Amsterdam, Edinburgh and England, then committed to vinyl as the I Am Kurious Oranj album) for I Am Curious Orange, a ballet by Michael Clark's experimental dance company. A pair of EPs were drawn from the album: Jerusalem (the William Blake song) was released as a boxed pair of 7-inch singles (with a postcard) and as a 3-inch CD, with three more LP tracks, one of them in a drastically altered version. Cab It Up (the Mark E. Smith song) comes on a 12-inch with live renditions of "Kurious Oranj" and "Hit the North" and a new song ("Dead Beat Descendant") from the then-imminent Seminal Live.

Despite its title, the Fall's 1989 album mixes a side of new material (casual and largely self-indulgent studio efforts) with a dynamic and cavalier side of live oldies, such as "Cruisers Creek," "L.A.," "Pay Your Rates," "2 by 4" and "Victoria." Although hardly an ideal artistic coda, that record proved to be Brix's farewell, thereby ending an extremely productive Fall era. In mid-'89, her marriage to Mark collapsed and she left the group, turning the Adult Net, her side project, into a fulltime endeavor.

The Fall's recovery from their loss was surprisingly quick and complete: by the following year's remarkable Extricate (which features Martin Bramah's short return to the fold; he and keyboardist Marcia Schofield left in mid-'90), the only remaining evidence of Brix's existence is in Smith's transparently vindictive lyrics. Production by Smith, Craig Leon, Adrian Sherwood and Coldcut effectively picks up the thread of the Fall's progress with little incident, allowing Smith to unburden himself in extraordinarily fine musical settings. With nothing in common except for the articulate poetic passion, the first four songs—"Sing! Happy," "I'm Frank," "Bill Is Dead" and the devastating "Black Month Theme Part One"—are among the Fall's best-ever creations. While the rest of Extricate (excepting the cool single "Telephone Thing," a Colcut cover) isn't as potent, the album offers reassuring proof of the Fall's durability and resourcefulness. (The Dredger 12-inch contains four post-Extricate tracks, none of them entitled "Dredger," and a limited-edition poster.)

Chronicling the Brix years (and serving as something of an extension to Palace of Swords Reversed), 458489 A Sides is, as billed, a compilation of the Fall's singles released between '84 and '89. The seventeen tracks—including such essential items as "Rollin' Dany," "L.A.," "Hey! Luciani," "There's a Ghost in My House" and "Victoria"—follow the band through its pop orientation and subsequent stylistic redeployments. Completing the job, the double-album 458489 B Sides collects all of the remaining tracks from the same era's singles, including remixes: 31 in all. A major boon to fans who've been stymied by the band's intricate discography.

Fall CDs usually add a few concurrent singles and B-sides; their US LPs usually add the A-side of a single not on the British LP. For instance, 1987's "Hit the North" shows up on the CD of Frenz (in the UK, along with four other bonus cuts). Bend Sinister adds "Living Too Late" and "Auto-Tech Pilot" on the CD; both of those, plus "Town and Country Hobgoblins," are on the UK cassette. [i/dgs]

See also Adult Net, Blue Orchids, Marc Riley with the Creepers.

FALLING JOYS

Omega EP (Aus. Volition) 1989

Wish List (Volition-Netzwerk-IRS) 1990 •

Clear-voiced singer/songwriter Suzie Higgle gets rich, electric rock backing from her bandmates on Wish List, the Sydney quartet's first longplayer. Although Higgle's refined delivery suggests a West Coast Debbie Harry, guitarist Stuart Robertson sounds like a reformed metalhead, cranking up the contrast in a tastefully loud surge. If the band flirts shamelessly with mainstream radio, the album has an undercurrent of recklessness and individuality that shores it up on songs like the barely contained "Shot in Europe," the industrialized "Puppy Drink" and the ominous "Tunnel Vision." The CD adds a bonus track, "Shelter." [i]

FALSE PROPHETS

False Prophets (Alternative Tentacles) 1986

Impllosion (Alternative Tentacles) 1987

Don't be thrown by the irreverent religious imagery on False Prophets: after they get through "Invokation" and "Seven Deadly Sins," this punk-rocking New York five-piece trains its obviously educated intelligence on more traditional hardcore themes like war, authority, violence and rebellion. The Prophets mediate the punk onslaught with dynamics and tempos that don't all run on overdrive, but there's nothing remarkable about their debut.

Impllosion, produced by living legend Giorgio Gomelsky, is light years better, breaking uncharted ground on three selections with the fourth-dimensional addition of a horn section led by James White. What a concept! Speedcore takes a back seat as False Prophets reveal their expansive and temperate rock imagination, testing varied rough waters with conviction and wild-eyed enthusiasm. Not great, but getting there [i]

FAMILY CAT

Tell 'Em We're Surfin' (nr/Bad Girl) 1989

Place with a Name EP (nr/Bad Girl) 1990 •

Following a 1989 debut single entitled "Tom Verlaine," this likably scruffy Cornwall-to-London quintet plays unfussy, mildly psychedelic garage pop with off-kilter lyrics on the catchy and cool eight-song Tell 'Em We're Surfin' mini-album. Despite the intimidating threat of a three-man guitar army, the Family Cat is strictly small-scale: while there's a bite to the droney textures, other bands get far more density and aggression from a single strummer.

The subsequent EP smoothes and tightens the Family Cat with four new tunes, including "Place with a Name," a delectable ultra-pop tune with rich harmonies and a scathing noise-guitar solo, and the gently twisted "Theme from 'The Family Cat'." [i]

FAMILY FUN

See Space Negros.

MICK FARREN

(Mona) The Carnivorous Circus (nr/Transatlantic) 1970

(nr/Psycho) 1984 •

Vampires Stole My Lunch Money (nr/Logo) 1978 •

MICK FARREN & THE DEVIANTS

Screwed Up EP (nr/Stiff) 1977

DEVIANTS

Human Garbage (nr/Psycho) 1984

MICK FARREN & WAYNE KRAMER

Who Shot You Dutch? EP (Spectre) 1987

Mick Farren—music journalist, novelist, vocalist, founding member of the (Social) Deviants and Pink Fairies, Motörhead songwriter, etc.—cut his first solo album with a nascent version of the Fairies immediately upon leaving the Deviants in 1969. He left the spotlight for awhile, but returned in '77 with a four-song 7-inch on Stiff that has its moments but is hardly a milestone.

Released at the height of the punk wave but springing from a much deeper creative well, Vampires Stole My Lunch Money is Farren's solo masterwork. With musical assistance from Wilko Johnson, Chrissie Hynde and others, he dishes out a harrowingly honest collection of songs about drinking, dissolution, depression, self-destruction and desperation. About as powerful as rock gets, this nakedly painful LP is most definitely not recommended to sissies, born-again Christians or prohibitionists.

Relocating to New York several years later, Farren pursued a number of musical endeavors with ex-MC5 guitarist Wayne Kramer. In February 1984, joined by ex-Fairies Larry Wallis and Duncan Sanderson and a drummer, the pair did a loose-limbed London gig (billed as the Deviants) at Dingwalls, recorded and released as Human Garbage. The material mixes selections from Vampires ("I Want a Drnk" and Frank Zappa's "Trouble Coming Every Day"), Kramer's solo work ("Ramblin' Rose"), Wallis ("Police Car") and similarly casual items like "Screwed Up," "Takin' L.S.D." and "Outrageous Contagious." No points for tightness or tuning, but a neat artifact nonetheless.

Three songs from The Last Words of Dutch Schultz, an "R&B musical"—based on death-bed ramblings by the prohibition-era gangster—written and performed by Farren and Kramer, comprise the 1987 12-inch. The powerful title track (sung by Kramer and produced by Don Was) is clever funk-rock rendered giggly by a disco chorus repeating the phrase throughout the number; the others are more theatrical and modestly appealing. [i]

See also Hawkwind, Motörhead, Social Deviants.

FAST

For Sale (Recca) 1980

Leather Boys from the Asphalt Jungle (Recca) 1981

Before he moved into oversexed Eurodisco, the late guitarist/songwriter Miki Zone spent a decade, beginning in the early '70s, leading various versions of Brooklyn's own Anglo-pop Fast. A pioneering and exciting force on the Dolls-era club scene and a great example of bootstrapping, the Fast—which included vocalist Paul Zone and, for some years, a third Zone brother—made a handful of ingeniously derivative singles (updating '60s pop-art rock and '70s glam) and self-released an album in 1980. Pulling together tracks from various sessions produced by Ric Ocasek, Richard Gottehrer, Bobby Orlando, Ian North and Zone himself, For Sale (the cover a loving parody of The Who Sell Out) is a patchy collection of inconsistent sounds and styles, and less than representative of the group's repertoire. It does, however, contain some wonderful tunes, including "Kids Just Wanna Dance," "Boys Will Be Boys" and the winsome "It's Like Love," as well as the quartet's punky interpretation of "These Boots Are Made for Walkin'."

Recorded in one studio effort as a duo of Paul and Miki, Leather Boys also fails to convey much of what made the Fast so much fun, but a few good songs (notably "Skinny Kids & Bigger Bullies" and Ian North's "Girls in Gangs") make it a heartwarming souvenir for fans. (Two who remember are Chris Stein and Debbie Harry, who covered Miki's "Comic Books" as a bonus track on Def Dumb & Blonde.)

By 1982, the Fast was well past kitschy power pop, and dabbling in dance music with a single containing a simple electro-dance version of the Supremes' "Love Is Like an Itching in My Heart." Subsequently shifting their base of operations abroad, the brothers—playing disco under the name Man to Man—hit the UK charts in late 1986, a victory cut short by Miki's fatal illness a year later. [i]

FASTBACKS

Fastbacks Play Five of Their Favorites EP (No Threes) 1982

Every Day is Saturday EP (No Threes) 1984

... and His Orchestra (PopLlama Products) 1987

Bike-Toy-Clock-Gift [tape] (Bus Stop) 1988

Very, Very Powerful Motor (PopLlama Products) 1990

With future Young Fresh Fellow Kurt Bloch providing the kicky songs and formidable rock'n'roll guitar power, Seattle's Fastbacks made irregular contributions to the world of recorded music throughout the '80s, turning up on numerous compilations and occasionally issuing records of their own. Guitarist Lulu Gargiulo and bassist Kim Warnick play hit-and-miss with the melodies on the casually unpretentious . . . and His Orchestra, but everyone winds up sharing a good time anyway. Besides Bloch's charming pop-rock ditties, drummer Richard Stuverud chips in with one number, and the group does an impressive (if incongruous) loud, hard cover of Sweet's "Set Me Free."

Bike-Toy-Clock-Gift is a live album—sixteen tracks from mid-'88—issued only on cassette. Recorded as a trio of Bloch (by then a moonlighting Fellow), Warnick and a different drummer (although Gargiulo puts in several vocal appearances), Very, Very Powerful Motor gives Bloch's pop-rooted songs powerhouse rock arrangements that overwhelm some of them; in her rougher vocal moments, Warnick sounds like a more melodically astute Joan Jett. Cool cover: "Apologies" by the Pointed Sticks. [i]

See also Young Fresh Fellows.

FAST FLOYD AND THE FAMOUS FIREBIRDS

Devil's Daughter (Kingpin) 1983

Early Mink DeVille sideman Fast Floyd (vocals/guitar) fronts this red-hot San Francisco R&B quintet, breathlessly belting out sizzling numbers (most of them covers) like "You Talk Too Much," "Wish You Would" and "Got the Water Boiling." Floyd's punkabilly whoop—like Tav Falco on steroids or Lux Interior minus the punk kitsch—adds gusto to the frenzied atmosphere; Franco St. Andrew blows a horny enough tenor sax to steam up some windows of his own. Capping off this dynamite blast of retro-styled party rock, the nudie cover shot of '50s sex queen Candy Barr nuzzling up to a phonograph perfectly captures the album's goodnatured sleaze. [i]

FATAL FLOWERS

Fatal Flowers (nr/WEA) 1985

Younger Days (Atlantic) 1986

Johnny D. Is Back! An Album by the Fatal Flowers (Atlantic) 1989 •

Pleasure Ground (nr/Mercury) 1990 •

Growing up in Holland must be a strange experience for kids with rock'n'roll dreams. This Amsterdam quartet began blandly enough, playing inoffensive characterless rock on its first two albums, the second of which offers the first glimmer of the group's truly weird (or truly stupid) approach: a punky rendition of "Gimme Some Truth," recorded nearly a decade after Generation X's definitive cover of the John Lennon song.

Produced in Woodstock by Mick Ronson, Johnny D. delves deeply into evidently unintended nostalgia: these guys don't seem to realize how dated they sound. (I mean, really, how long has it been since anyone wrote an unironic song entitled "Rock and Roll Star") Digging into vintage American rock 'n' roll with unself-conscious aplomb, the group relives the fabulous '70s as if "Radar Love" were still in the charts. Perhaps in tribute to the days of stoned-out inanity, the lyrics are utterly ridiculous: "Here's another hippy in smoking. Thanking all his pimps and more. How he wished he was only joking. But he knows he's just another whore."

Sounding like castaways scavenging through an unearthed archaeological jukebox and marveling at their ear-opening discoveries, the Fatal Flowers go totally over the top on Pleasure Ground, also produced by Ronson. Stumbling across evidence of African-Americans, they go wild covering Arthur Conley's 1968 vintage "Funky Street," complete with wah-wah pedal and dated clichés ("We're grooving in the city/We've got to get down with it"). Elsewhere, the oblivious timewarpers reproduce Kiss-like metal riffs, imitate the J. Geils Band, Bad Company, the Rolling Stones and '70s Pink Floyd, adopt an Arlo Guthrie voice (for "Rage Out") and close the LP with a Bowie-styled cover of Roxy Music's "Both Ends Burning." Amazing. (Memo to the band's lawyer: it's considered poor form to claim writing credit for world-famous songs.)

[i]

FAT BOYS

Fat Boys (Sutra) 1984

The Fat Boys Are Back! (Sutra) 1985

Big & Beautiful (Sutra) 1986

The Best Part of the Fat Boys (Sutra) 1987 •

Crushin' (Tin Pan Apple-Polydor) 1987 •

Coming Back Hard Again (Tin Pan Apple-Polydor) 1988 •

Krush on You (nr/Blatant) 1988 •

On and On (Tin Pan Apple-Mercury) 1989 •

In a medium like rap, it helps to have a gimmick, and this Brooklyn trio—originally known as the Disco 3—had several. While most rappers brag about what great lovers they are, Prince Markie Dee (Mark Morales), Buff Love (Darren Robinson) and Kool Rock-ski (Damon Wimbley) brag about what great eaters they are. In this, their claim to originality is undisputed. Gimmick number two is Buff the Human Beat Box (not to be confused with Doug E. Fresh, the self-proclaimed Original Human Beat Box), who uses lips, cheeks and tongue to create a surprisingly varied array of rhythmic noises. The group's raps are also gimmicky, while the well-produced (on the early records, by Kurtis Blow) backing tracks employ full-scale instrumentation and were quick to cross rap with reggae and rock. If the Fat Boys weren't the most talented crew in the business, they were at least consistently good fun.

The Best Part of the Fat Boys is indeed that, as it compiles ten tracks from the first three albums and has everything you'd ever need to hear by them: "Fat Boys," "The Fat Boys Are Back," "All You Can Eat," "Hard Core Reggae," "Sex Machine," etc. The more extensive Krush on You repeats seven from The Best Part and adds seven more of the same vintage.

Crushin', a mild but winning party collection of mainstream cuts with boundless entertainment spirit and unflinching good humor, has the trio's collaboration with the Beach Boys ("Wipeout") but few other equally memorable tracks. Coming Back Hard Again starts with a rap adaptation of "The Twist" sung by Chubby Checker and includes a funny version of "Louie, Louie" (in which the rappers discuss the song's controversial lyrics) as well as "Are You Ready for Freddy," the theme song for a Nightmare on Elm Street film.

Although On and On has a few enjoyable numbers (the singsong "If It Ain't One Thing It's Annuddah," for instance), this "rappera"—as horrible as the concept sounds, the out-of-gas trio actually does very little with it—is a boring display of tired clichés and uninspired performances, with none of the cartoony crew's old panache. A futile stab at street credibility, this sorry LP only makes the fading Fat Boys seem hopelessly out of touch.

[j/l]

FATIMA MANSIONS

See Microdisney.

SHANE FAUBERT

See Cheepskates.

FAUST

Faust (nr/Polydor) 1971 (nr/Recommended) 1979

Faust So Far (nr/Polydor) 1972 (nr/Recommended) 1979

The Faust Tapes (nr/Virgin) 1973 (nr/Recommended) 1979 (Cuneiform) 1990 •

Faust IV (nr/Virgin) 1973

Munic and Elsewhere (nr/Recommended) 1986

The Last LP (nr/Recommended) 1988

Although Faust was one of the most internationally influential (especially on the noise and industrial generation, starting with Cabaret Voltaire) of the early-'70s German progressive-rock experimenters, the group's work has never been widely known outside of narrow confines. Faust's first album appeared the same year as Kraftwerk's, but the group disbanded two years later without ever enjoying much commercial success (or even international exposure) and has thus become fairly obscure, although its work has been kept in print via reissues.

Released as a dramatic picture disc—an X-ray of a hand embedded in clear vinyl and packaged in a transparent sleeve—Faust consists of three long, post-psychedelic jams, each composed of a couple of ideas loosely strung together. The group uses droning fuzz guitar, primitive electronics, silences, piano tinklings, warbled vocals, cabaret accents, tape manipulation and probably at least one kitchen sink. The way Faust throws these elements together suggests dada music for the electronic age.

Faust So Far, the group's best all-around album, is far more tightly structured, boasting actual songs like "It's a Rainy Day, Sunshine Girl" and "Mamie Is Blue," which makes something out of abrasive electronic bursts, wah-wah guitar and minimal vocals. As the album was recorded in 1972, some tracks include twangy distorted guitar/plucky bass jams. Bizarre little experiments pop up between songs: overlays of effects-treated guitars and the like, sort of a German analogue to the Mothers' early sound adventures.

Although it's just a collection of various experiments organized semi-coherently, The Faust Tapes is most impressive in terms of sheer sonic invention. You never know what's coming next: an electronic mantra with chanting in a made-up language is followed by a tape collage of radio, kitchen sounds and someone climbing stairs. A moment later, almost-industrial electronics play over a funky rock beat.

Faust IV isn't as consistently innovative as the band's earlier albums, though it still arrived five years ahead of its time. "Krautrock," a parody of longwinded German bands of the era that were heavy on atmosphere and light on content, goes on so long that it winds up indistinguishable from its target.

The two posthumous albums contain odds and ends of notable interest to serious Faust-ians, but novice listeners would be better off sticking with the first four.

[sl]

FEAR

The Record (Slash) 1982

More Beer (Restless) 1985 •

Fear was an early standout on the Los Angeles hardcore scene but quickly grew beyond its boundaries. Skilled, varied, instrumentally confident and inventive, Fear invests The Record with searing rock'n'roll and a wild-eyed sense of humor that seems somehow wholesomely good-natured. Lee Ving (who has also pursued a busy and successful acting career) sings like a drunk baseball fan bellowing in the bleachers, roaring like a lout, but completely intelligible, which allows funny—if disturbingly nasty with regard to women and homosexuals—lyrics to rise above the well-ordered din. Guitarist Philo Cramer tosses instrumental cleverness into the material, making Fear something of a cross between the Dictators and Dickies.

Although artistically redundant, More Beer is as loud, fast and viciously sarcastic as ever. The sporadic inter-song patter is more amusing than the actual tunes themselves (which are in fact pretty stupid), but there's something pathetically wonderful about Fear, like a dog that you don't really like but keep around anyway because he's so faithful and predictable. (The best Fear on record remains The Decline of Western Civilization soundtrack LP, where Ving raises audience baiting to a sidesplitting art and a bandmate coins a new usage for a traditional colloquialism.)

[i]

FEARLESS IRANIANS FROM HELL

Fearless Iranians from Hell EP (Boner) 1986

Die for Allah (Boner) 1987

Holy War (Boner) 1988

Foolish Americans (Boner) 1990 •

While some punk bands cover current world affairs—like, say, Iran's Moslem fanaticism—in their topical onslaught, only this powerful San Antonio hardcore outfit can lay claim to an actual Iranian (along with two former Butthole Surfers) in its lineup. The 7-inch EP offers such topical tone poems as "Blow Up the Embassy"; Die for Allah (the cover of which represents Ayatollah Khomeini) boasts such blistering speed tunes as "Life Inside Iran," "Iranians on Bikes," "Die for Allah" and "Chant," which is recited in Farsi.

In danger of running their joke into the desert sand, the Fearless ones broaden their horizons a little on Holy War. So while "Faction," the anti-Iraqi "All in a Day's Work," "Kneel to No One" and the title track continue the frenzy of fanatical nationalism (just how serious are these guys?), other songs ("Burn the Books," "Dogsporn") hie to more familiar hardcore concerns. In any case, the noisy playing is first-rate punk.

Relegating the late Iranian leader to a dignified back cover portrait but dedicating the album to him, FIFH sharpens their political focus on the metal-gearred Foolish Americans, attacking Salman Rushdie, George Bush and Americans (for looking down at Iran). [i]

FEAR OF STRANGERS

Fear of Strangers (Faulty Products) 1982

LONESOME VAL

Lonesome Val (Bar/None-Restless) 1990 •

This Albany, New York, quartet was known as the Units until a dispute with the San Francisco band of the same name led to a new handle. Fear of Strangers mixes simple, melodic rock with clever topical lyrics (making the group an early entrant in the neo-protest revival), drawing strength from the presence of three songwriters. The music is fresh and catchy if a bit naïve; Val Haynes, a strong, clear-toned vocalist showing traces of Joan Baez amid the rock stylings, provides most of the band's (and album's) character.

Going solo with a mild country twang, Haynes (and Fear of Strangers bassist Steve Cohen) relocated to New York City, where years spent working local clubs brought widespread critical acclaim and, finally, a recording contract. Lonesome Val begins with an uplifting, infectious charmer ("To Be Young") and continues with a defiant rocker ("You Won't Say You Love Me"), but the remainder of Haynes' songs plod along slowly and cautiously, lacking the exuberance that would have given them real life.

[i]

FEEDTIME

Feedtime (Aus. Aberrant) 1985

Shovel (Aberrant-Rough Trade) 1988

Cooper-S (Aberrant-Rough Trade) 1988 •

Suction (Aberrant-Rough Trade) 1989 •

Descended from pre-hardcore punk and electric blues, this Australian trio offers a fast and loud journey down Tylenol territory, playing it dark, dank, dense and devastatingly simple. "Ha Ha," the first track on Feedtime, pulses with deepness, guitar sawing in repetitive circles like the mating call of a didgeridoo, with vocals that are pure low-frequency growl. The grumbled "I've got a Pontiac/gasoline/Pontiac/gasoline" of "Fastbuck" evokes images of Big Black's "Kerosene" with high-intensity drumming and hard, repeating chords. (The guitarist often plays with a bottleneck, which sounds pretty amazing when cranked up to eleven.) An urge to experiment and fuse mismatched genres with each other leads to a stylistic square dance, as blues pairs off with punk and metal meets mantra. Everything is shaken down until it pounds. Even an air of shimmery progressive folk crops up in the vocals of "All Down." Listening to Feedtime is like sandblasting your ear canals, but it's worth the agony.

If your tweeters blew out last week, no problem. You won't miss them at all until you get to Shovel, where the same pounding sense of repetition slams guitar chords at your face but adds a touch of country warp and twang on the title cut and a crisp upfront drumbeat to the band's repertoire. Like Pere Ubu or Suicide or any number of bands that people didn't know how to appreciate in their time, Feedtime are original, making music that is totally compiled from familiar bits but given enough of a twist to make it the band's own.

Cooper-S applies Feedtime's noisy shredder to cover versions, blessing the Rolling Stones ("Street Fighting Man," "Play with Fire" and two more), Animals ("We've Gotta Get Out of This Place"), Beach Boys ("Fun Fun Fun"), Ramones ("Loudmouth"), Slade ("Hear Me Calling") and others with its tuneless spirited roar, feedback slide experiments and an occasionally untuned bass. Without casting aspersions on Feedtime, it's safe to assume that none of the songs' authors would be able to recognize their handiwork in these rumbling renditions.

Feedtime bid farewell to the world with Suction, an all-original swansong that (for more than half the record) runs tidy, occasionally tuneful songs through the usual floor-scraping guitar noise, adding such previously tested accents as horns, harmonica, acoustic guitar and femme vox. (The barking canines on "Drag Your Dog," however, are new.) While the merits of balancing oppression and allure depends on your perspective towards ear abuse, there's no questioning Feedtime's purposeful expression. [e/i]

FEELIES

Crazy Rhythms (Stiff) 1980 (Ger. Line) 1986 (A&M) 1990 •

The Good Earth (Coyote-Twin/Tone) 1986 •

No One Knows EP (Coyote-Twin/Tone) 1986

Only Life (Coyote-A&M) 1988 •

Time for a Witness (Coyote-A&M) 1991 •

TRYPES

The Explorers Hold EP (Coyote) 1984

YUNG WU

Shore Leave (Coyote-Twin/Tone) 1987

SPEED THE PLOUGH

Speed the Plough (Coyote-Twin/Tone) 1989

Wonder Wheel [CD] (East Side Digital) 1991 •

These New Jerseyites are the stuff of legend and cults. Led by guitarists Glenn Mercer and Bill Million (originally featuring future avant-star drummer Andy Fisher, aka Anton Fier), the Feelies dressed like nerdy preppies and paid only passing attention to the conventional demands of rock'n'roll. Even during the original band's period of highest visibility, for example, live dates in New York tended to be infrequent and often fell on holidays.

Crazy Rhythms is far more unequivocal than the group's performances. Mercer and Million draw inspiration from the Byrds, Television and the Velvet Underground, emphasizing the interplay of their electric guitars above all else. The rigid vocals and lyrics take a back seat to the pure textures of the driving rockers and more avant-garde drones. Despite its distinct bloodlessness, Crazy Rhythms evades a principled charm. (A decade later, the album was reissued on CD and cassette, with a newly recorded version of "Paint It, Black" added as an quizzical bonus.)

In the years that followed, the Feelies laid low, but never disbanded, recording and performing around the New York-New Jersey area in various guises and permutations: the Trypes, Willies and Yung Wu. The three hands sound different, although they all play some Feelies songs and share a fascination with layered guitars, drones and the music of Brian Eno and the Velvet Underground.

The seven-person Trypes are the quietest, most introspective of the bunch, and The Explorers Hold is a placid, constantly shifting landscape of sounds. The four songs emphasize coloration not beat, yet, for all its subdued calm, there's an explosive tension bubbling underneath the music. The muted guitars threaten—but never give way to—riotous mayhem. Only on the cover of George Harrison's "Love You To" do drummer Stan Demeski's hyperkinetic tom-tom patterns come to the fore, making the Trypes a loud psychedelic folk band. The quieter songs, complete with woodwinds and keyboards, are hauntingly beautiful.

In the mid-'80s, Million and Mercer reactivated the Feelies as a fulltime band with Demeski, bassist Brenda Sauter (also from the Trypes) and percussionist Dave Weckerman. The Feelies finally released their second album, co-produced by Pete Buck, in 1986. The Good Earth approaches folk music with its light, airy feel and acoustic guitars, but intensity and obsession lurk near the intricately woven surfaces; slashing leads occasionally pierce the atmospheric tapestry. Million and Mercer display their taut control even as they're strumming away madly in rapturous acceleration; the quiet sections are extraordinarily beautiful. When their voices join for spirited harmonies, you know it was worth the wait. The four-song No One Knows is a neat 12-inch sampler joining "The High Road" and "Slipping (Into Something)" from the LP with wonderful covers of the Beatles' "She Said, She Said" and Neil Young's "Sedan Delivery."

Dave Weckerman is the enthusiastically informal lead vocalist and songwriter in Yung Wu—the Feelies augmented by Trypes keyboard player John Baumgartner. Shore Leave leans towards acoustic guitars and simplified drumming for a rustic sound that exchanges the Feelies' neurotic suburban intensity for a country-fied gentleness. Influence-revealing covers of Phil Manzanera/Brian Eno ("Big Day"), the Stones ("Child of the Moon") and Neil Young ("Powderfinger") are intriguing but a bit on the plain side.

While preserving the laconic electro-folk drone of The Good Earth on Only Life, an album of amazingly exacting sound and performances, the Feelies join it with riveting songs of breathless electricity. The first side takes things as they come, gently laying out catchy songs like "Too Much," "Higher Ground" and "The Undertow" to warm the mood with stately-drifting-towards-dull restraint, like an invocation to autumn. But the pace quickens on the second half, as the obsessively brisk "Too Far Gone" and the breakneck "Away"—strong songs given exhilarating performances, and a clear tie to the Feelies' past—lead up to the album's closer, a boiling cover of Lou Reed's "What Goes On" (don't miss Mercer's amazing solo) that overtly renews the band's Velvet Underground links.

Speed the Plough is John Baumgartner's band; Bill Million co-produced Speed the Plough and guests on one track. Although STP's hypnotically simple songs strongly resemble the Feelies' work, the six-person lineup (including one other Trype alumnus) plays them on a variety of instruments, subtly supplementing guitar, bass and drums with keyboards, reeds, woodwinds, horns, accordion and more.

Like an uptight square the morning after a drunken orgy, Time for a Witness finds the Feelies in a new frame of mind, downplaying crystalline precision and emotional intensity for a fleshed-out sonic reinvention that embraces old Bob Dylan songwriting structures and a trancey Haight-Ashbury acid-rock feeling with free-wheeling enthusiasm rather than anxious determination. Not to overstate it: a casual listener may not notice any drastic change between the albums, but there's definitely a newly relaxed sensibility at work here. Rather than tone things down, the Feelies spread them out, and if the album lacks ferocious intensity or wistful beauty, this resonant and brilliant record is their most richly textured and engrossing work yet.

Turning to another media, the high school reunion scenes in Jonathan Demme's Something Wild show the Feelies (credited as the Willies) performing shards of five songs, including "I'm a Believer," "Crazy Rhythms" and "Fame," with tentative Bowiesque lead vocals by Weckerman. [jy/jl/i]

JOHN FELICE & THE LOWDOWNS

See Real Kids.

FELT

Crumbling the Antiseptic Beauty EP (nr/Cherry Red) 1981 ●

The Splendour of Fear EP (nr/Cherry Red) 1984 ●

The Strange Idols Pattern and Other Short Stories (nr/Cherry Red) 1984

Ignite the Seven Cannons (nr/Cherry Red) 1985 ●

Ballad of the Band EP (nr/Creation) 1986

Let the Snakes Crinkle Their Heads to Death (nr/Creation) 1986 ●

Rain of Crystal Spires EP (nr/Creation) 1986

Forever Breathes the Lonely Word (nr/Creation) 1986 ●

Poem of the River EP (Creation-Relativity) 1987 ●

The Final Resting of the Ark EP (nr/Creation) 1987

Gold Mine Trash (PVC) 1987 ●

The Pictorial Jackson Review (Creation-Relativity) 1988 ●

Train Above the City (nr/Creation) 1988 ●

Me and a Monkey on the Moon (nr/él-Cherry Red) 1989 ●

Bubblegum Perfume (nr/Creation) 1990 ●

Aided at the outset by a second guitarist, a rhythm section and little more, Birmingham singer/songwriter Lawrence Hayward fashioned a career in homage to Tom Verlaine without once attempting to play his music. On Crumbling the Antiseptic Beauty, Felt patterns itself after Television's guitar interplay, with occasional understated vocals that cross Verlaine and Lou Reed. The instrumental passages are the true high points here, as the guitarists are both melodic and sympathetic to each other. Odd, derivative but exciting and evidently ambitious.

Felt settled down and in on the better-produced Splendour of Fear (like the debut, a six-song 12-inch), unwinding the guitars into a gentle mantra-like caress with no sharp corners. Sparingly matched with quiet vocals, the hypnotic melodic drone can sound almost new agey, but the quartet's music is intended to engage, not to lull.

With The Strange Idols Pattern (produced by John Leckie), Lawrence and his trio refined Felt into a strikingly attractive sound: clear guitar notes sparkle from every direction in a jewel-like blend that recalls Television without quite imitating it. A nylon-string flamenco piece ("Crucifix Heaven") demonstrates diverse stylistic faculties; the virtuosity of lead guitarist Maurice Deebank—listen to his solo on "Whirlpool Vision of Shame"—is also quite impressive.

Gold Mine Trash is a fascinating developmental chronicle of Felt's Cherry Red years: singles, album tracks and a fine pair of 1984 demos. The LP ends on a pivotal note: "Primitive Painters," an obsessive 1985 British indie-chart hit (with guest vocals by Cocteau Twin Liz Fraser) which incorporates swirling organ for an entirely new effect.

Moving to the Creation label, Felt—by this time a stable quartet including keyboardist Martin Duffy and stalwart drummer Gary Ainge—was enormously productive in 1986, beginning with Ballad of the Band. The nearly unlabeled 12-inch—two light-sounding Dylanish songs and two piano pieces—was produced by another Cocteau Twin, Robin Guthrie, and contains the instrumental "Ferdinand Magellan," Lawrence's second tribute to great explorers. ("Vasco de Gama" was on Strange Idols Pattern.) The next release, Let the Snakes Crinkle Their Heads to Death, is a brief instrumental album that notably lacks a second guitarist. The pleasant but trivial collection consists of ten perky cuts ("Lawrence's songs coloured in by Martin") that rush by in less than nineteen minutes. Although one or two of the simple pieces hold to the group's prior sound, most don't; organ takes a prominent role and there's little of the familiar instrumental blend.

Vocals and another guitarist make a welcome return on Forever Breathes the Lonely Word, a finely wrought album with Dylanesque characteristics on which Lawrence sings exactly like Verlaine, adding a nifty Lou Reed imitation on "September Lady" and "Grey Streets." Lyrically, he's in top form, expressing religious doubt in "All the People I Like Are Those That Are Dead" and questioning a lover's fidelity in "Gather Up Your Wings and Fly." Duffy's percolating Hammond organ (no clichéd sounds of the '60s) adds a wonderful component to these songs, especially "Down but Not Yet Out," giving them all new-found energy and texture. Easily Felt's best record to that point, Forever Breathes the Lonely Word is unlike anything else in the group's catalogue. The worthy Rain of Crystal Spires 12-inch matches a pair of LP tracks with two quick B-sides.

After that, Felt produced a couple of radically different EPs. The six-song Poem of the River, produced in the main by Mayo Thompson, makes good use of both organ and piano, turning down the shimmering guitars for a rich instrumental blend that suggests both the Smiths and Aztec Camera. The Final Resting of the Ark, produced by Guthrie, is spare and largely acoustic, a forgettably minor outing that has two simple songs with vocals, an unaccompanied Duffy piano piece and two other instrumentals.

With Thomas moving over to lead guitar and a new bassist in the fold, Felt recorded the schizophrenic Pictorial Jackson Review "quickly on eight-track." Two of Duffy's jazzy instrumental contemplations (introduced on the preceding EP) fill one side, leaving eight concise Lawrence songs to huddle together on the reverse. Resembling a stripped-down version of Forever Breathes, those numbers make Lawrence's Lou Reed fixation abundantly evident: most (not counting the precisely Dylanesque "How Spook Got Her Man" and "Don't Die on My Doorstep," which splices Bob and Lou together) suggest the early Velvet Underground's lighter, melodic side.

Gary Ainge (vibes, drums) and Martin Duffy (piano) are the only Feltists credited on Train Above the City, although Lawrence accepts responsibility for titling seven of their eight jazz instrumentals that comprise the record. Sort of a follow-up to Let the Snakes Crinkle Their Heads to Death, this is a perfectly fine cocktail-hour detour but, given Lawrence's non-participation, hardly an essential purchase.

Beautifully produced by Adrian Borland, Me and a Monkey on the Moon is a full-fledged album of sprightly, unstylized pop songs handsomely performed by Duffy (mostly playing electronic keyboards), Ainge, a bassist and two new guitarists (one of whom adds a neat country steel accent to several cuts). Lawrence's songs are exceptional, revealing autobiographical notes and sensitive contemplations of personal issues. Beyond the album's tender love songs, "Down an August Path" considers mortality and faith; "Budgie Jacket" recalls an episode of child molestation ("He thought that I was a little girl/Because I looked so pretty"), while "Mobile Shack" acknowledges the inspirational power of Television. As it proved to be the band's swansong, Me and a Monkey on the Moon ends Felt on a superb high note.

Format complications: a 1988 Creation CD unites Poem of the River and Forever Breathes the Lonely Word, a 1986 UK Cherry Red CD and cassette joins Crumbling the Antiseptic Beauty and The Splendour of Fear, the Strange Idols Pattern cassette and CD also include Ignite the Seven Cannons. The Pictorial Jackson Review is likewise joined with Train Above the City. The 20-track Bubblegum Perfume is a post-humous compilation. [cpl/i]

BRYAN FERRY

These Foolish Things (Atlantic) 1973 •
Another Time, Another Place (Atlantic) 1974 •
Let's Stick Together (Atlantic) 1976 •
Extended Play EP (nr/Island) 1976
In Your Mind (Atlantic) 1977 •
The Bride Stripped Bare (Atlantic) 1978 •
Boys and Girls (Warner Bros.) 1985 •
Windswept EP (nr/EG-Polydor) 1985

Bête Noire (EG-Reprise) 1987 •
Let's Stick Together EP (nr/EG-Virgin) 1988 •
The Price of Love EP (nr/EG-Virgin) 1989 •
He'll Have to Go EP (nr/EG-Virgin) 1989 •
Bryan Ferry (nr/EG) 1989 ▶

BRYAN FERRY/ROXY MUSIC

Street Life: 20 Greatest Hits (nr/EG) 1986 (EG-Reprise) 1989 •

The Ultimate Collection (nr/EG-Virgin) 1988 •

Initially braving waves of contemptuous reviews, the voice of Roxy Music began his solo career as an irregular aside, allowing it to become his primary work as Roxy Music faded out of existence in the early '80s. Although hardly the groundbreaking titan he once was, Ferry has had far-reaching stylistic influence; disingenuous claims of total self-invention to the contrary, many nouveau poseurs have let Ferry point the way for them to "be themselves."

A shocking break from Roxy Music's hip glam-rock (with the accent on rock), These Foolish Things quickly established the difference between the group's utter originality and Ferry's suavely adult solo interpretations. (For a number of obvious reasons this gap closed over the years to the point of near indistinguishability.) With a backing group that included then-Roxy drummer Paul Thompson as well as future Roxyite Eddie Jobson, Ferry croons his way through such surprising '60s selections as Bob Dylan's "A Hard Rain's A-Gonna Fall," the Beatles' "You Won't See Me" and the Stones' "Sympathy for the Devil." Even years later, this warped '70s jukebox sounds weird but wonderful. Another Time, Another Place reprised the exercise, drawing on various epochs for material like "The 'In' Crowd," "You Are My Sunshine," "It Ain't Me Babe" and "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes." Only the title song is an original.

For Let's Stick Together, Ferry reached into the vaults and selected five Roxy Music songs (four from the band's first LP) and did something with them: recut the vocals, presented alternate versions or simply re-edited/remixed the tracks. Some of these sound fine, but a funky-up "Re-Make/Re-Model" is too revisionist for words. The record is fleshed out with a brace of neat new covers, including the wonderful title track, "Shame Shame Shame" and the Everly Brothers' "Price of Love." A strange assemblage with some jarring contrasts; still, Let's Stick Together has more great tracks than any of Ferry's other solo records. (The CD-3 EP that followed contains four album cuts, including "The Price of Love" and "Shame Shame Shame"; the subsequent 12-inch has two substitutions.)

In Your Mind, produced during a period of Roxy inactivity, is Ferry's first "normal" solo album—all of the material is new and original—but, bereft of a gimmick and lacking the involvement of his usual collaborators, falls short of Ferry's best work. Despite a few good tunes ("This Is Tomorrow," "Tokyo Joe"), the bland sound allows little of Ferry's brilliance to shine through, and the writing is not up to snuff.

Inspired by his broken romance with onetime Roxy LP cover model Jerry Hall, The Bride Stripped Bare is Ferry at his most emotionally translucent. The hybrid approach—half new originals, half appropriate revivals—and backing by a new coterie of unstylish session pros (including Waddy Wachtel, Neil Hubbard and Alan Spenner) make it radically different in both construction and sound. Some of the tracks are intensely gripping ("Sign of the Times," Lou Reed's "What Goes On"); others are subtler and less rewarding. A mixed success.

When Roxy Music finally ceased to exist, Ferry's solo career took on new significance. Unfortunately, his own music is not that different from end-time Roxy Music: perfectionist studio technique and seamless production of songs that are at best bland and frequently lifeless. Despite its extraordinarily sleek veneer, Boys and Girls (dedicated to Ferry's late father) is so short on tunes that several of the numbers rely on fatiguing one-note vamps to carry them along. Exceptional lyrics might allow one to overlook such inadequacy, but there's nothing much happening on that front, either. It's impossible to dislike the album with any enthusiasm—considerable care, thought and effort obviously went into its creation—still, the lack of even a trace of extremism or subversiveness is unforgivable.

The similarly restrained Bête Noire confirms that palatable adult music is Ferry's future. That wonderful voice has become the only important ingredient; what he's singing doesn't seem so important anymore. But this record's better melodic development and a wider variety of danceable tempos than on Boys and Girls are palpable signs of life; the involvement of ex-Smiths guitarist Johnny Marr as a player and the co-writer of one near-exciting song ("The Right Stuff") is another positive touch. All things considered, "Limbo," "Kiss and Tell" and "Day for Night" are coolly inviting and likable enough, given the diminished expectations one now brings to Bryan Ferry albums.

With no new music forthcoming, Ferry's British label began issuing old/retrospective items. The Let's Stick Together EP is available as a remix on CD-3 and CD-5 (with totally different accompanying tracks) as well as 12-inch vinyl (also different); the Price of Love, another remix, comes on CD-3 and 12-inch, both with alternate mixes of "Don't Stop the Dance" and two additional items.

Street Life is a poorly annotated two-record career retrospective: twenty songs drawn from Roxy Music as well as solo releases, stretching from "Virginia Plain" to Boys and Girls' "Slave to Love." Also combining Roxy and pre-Bête Noire Ferry tracks, Ultimate Collection adds a new mix of "Let's Stick Together" to a skimpiest overlapping selection. The 1989 release entitled Bryan Ferry is a boxed set of These Foolish Things, Let's Stick Together and Boys and Girls.

See also Roxy Music. [i]

FETCHIN BONES

Cabin Flounder (DB) 1985 •
Bad Pumpkin (DB-Capitol) 1986
Galaxy 500 (Capitol) 1987 •
Monster (Capitol) 1989 •

SKEETERS

Wine, Women and Walleye (DB) 1988 •

Like the sublimely seedy roadside joints of America's rural South—where you can shoot pool, buy fishing worms and have your lawnmower repaired all in the same room—Fetchin Bones are dedicated to the sort of unexpected variety that somehow seems to work. On their debut album, the North Carolina quintet peddles an exciting mix of revved-up rock, country twang, folk, blues and swing, driving it all home with unrestrained energy and unpolished charm. The crazed quaver in singer Hope Nicholls' voice provides the heart of the Bones' sound; three songs without her lead vocals are the album's weakest cuts. Producer Don Dixon admirably translates the group's wild-eyed persona to vinyl, but this is a band that must be seen live for a full grasp of their eclectic frenzy. Delightfully different graduates of the R.E.M.-inspired school of Southern pop. (The CD and cassette add three tracks.)

Although docked a few fun points for a lack of focus, Bad Pumpkin basically stays the course, with equally direct Dixon production, rough-hewn playing, strong original songs and more inspired Nicholls warbling. Gary White's spicy guitar work and bassist Danna Pentes' violin contributions provide a lot of the instrumental flavor; Marc Mueller keeps things moving along at a brisk pace with lickety-split country drumming.

The self-assured spunk of Galaxy 500 is immediately evident; a lineup shift (Mueller and White are gone, replaced by Clay Richardson and Errol Stewart) also contributes to the clear and feverish dynamo. The Bones' control is clearly demonstrated by the juxtaposition of the wild'n'funky "Sammy" with the sweeping prettiness of "Steamwhistle." Alternating between a guttural growl, a delicate folk sensibility and a half-dozen other voices, Nicholls is a commanding vocalist; the songs rise and fall strictly on her sing-so. (The CD adds six tracks.)

Monster proved to be Fetchin Bones' last hurrah, and it's a bang-up finale. With Ed Stasium's powerful but disciplined production lending new focus to the band's brashly metallic lurch, Monster is simultaneously the Bones' most commercial album and their best. Nicholls has never sounded more inspired or possessed, frantically spitting out the likes of "Love Crushin'," "Bonework" and "Say the Word" with a renewed sense of purpose. Indeed, Monster's best moments suggest that, if they'd been inclined to stick around, Fetchin Bones might have carved themselves a niche playing heavy metal for people with a sense of humor. (Following the split, several ex-Bones reorganized as Second Skin.)

On their own, Mueller and White formed the Skeeters with bassist Marco Heeter and issued Wine, Women and Walleye, a charmingly ragged rock/pop/folk-rock record produced by Tim Lee. White's Neil Young-ish guitar solos spiff up intriguing material with a smartass streak that surfaces in tunes like "Slummin'" and "Center of the Western Hemisphere." There's even a raving surf-twang instrumental number called "Porno Rock." Neat. [kh/i/hd]

FIELDS OF THE NEPHILIM

Burning the Fields EP (nr/Tower) 1985 (nr/Situation Two) 1987

Returning to Gehenna EP (nr/Jungle) 1986
Dawnrazor (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1987 •
The Nephilim (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1988 •
Elizium (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1990 •
Earth Inferno (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1991 •

Although they hail from Stevenage (a town 30 miles north of London), to judge by their appearance and music, these moody post-goths could have stepped right out of a Sergio Leone spaghetti western, dust flying and spurs clacking. The band's sound is equal parts Sisters of Mercy and Ennio Morricone: dark, deep, smoky vocals coiled around a layered rush of swirling, twanging guitars.

Burning the Fields is a four-track EP; Returning to Gehenna mixes then-current singles and B-sides, most of them later appended to the UK CD of the quintet's first full-length album. Dawnrazor is an enjoyable creation, with some great songs ("Slowkill," the title track), but the Sisters' influence is so strong that it tends to overshadow the Nephs' unique qualities. (The US version of the LP excises "Reanimator," adding some non-LP British singles, including "Blue Water.")

The Nephilim is a magnum lunge forward to a less derivative, more atmospheric sound. Reminiscent in spots of early Pink Floyd and Joy Division, the harsher-voiced songs are much longer and imbued with a cinematic, soundtrack-like feel, hitting full stride on the solemn epic "Last Exit for the Lost" and the blasting "Chord of Souls."

A 12-inch harbinger of the next album (the CD of which contains it), 1989's ambitious "Psychonaut" is a nine-minute psychedelic wash of icy organ and pulsing beats. Smoother than The Nephilim, with no traces of the early western flavor, Elizium tantalizes the senses with a headful of dreamlike sounds, coming to a peak in "Wail of Sumer," the best song they've recorded to date. Carl McCoy's singing has mellowed—he sounds like a burnt, brooding Jim Kerr—and the choirlike effects instill a sense of palpable awe. [gef]

FIELD TRIP

Beautiful (Ruby) 1989

Headgear (Slash) 1990 ●

It must be tough growing up post-modern in a place called Pleasanton, but these four young Northern Californians don't seem to have been ruined by the experience. On Beautiful, singing rites-of-passage originals like "Coming of Age," "No Friends" and "Where Did I Go Wrong?" in a character-filled voice, guitarist/songwriter Jim Galbraith orients the rocking pop band towards Minneapolis, although his mandolin playing and a guest harmonica spot make it clear that Field Trip is headed somewhere else. The record is a bit wet behind the ears, but full of scruffy promise.

Despite the orthodox cover, Headgear is a grown-up album with better material, adult concerns, confident melodic power and a clarified set of influences. Some songs set a course towards the Meat Puppets; elsewhere, the group deftly incorporates country accents with brisk enthusiasm and nifty three-part harmony. With fine playing and tunes that make fast friends on one spin, Headgear is a delight. [i]

FIGURES ON A BEACH

Swimming EP (Metro-America) 1983

Standing on Ceremony (I Square-Sire) 1987

Figures on a Beach (I Square-Sire) 1989 ●

From the astonishing Rene Magritte-tribute cover photograph to the sparkling music and sound on Swimming's four long songs, this Michigan quartet doesn't skimp or compromise in any regard. Figures on a Beach play complex, serious (but not dour) poetic compositions with intricate instrumental and vocal arrangements that rely mainly on guitars, drums and keyboards. Anthony Kaczynski has a strong, capable voice just on the edge of melodrama, multi-tracking gives him startling creative range. Hard to classify, you might think of this remarkable, unpredictable band as an American (not Americanized) Simple Minds. Don Was produced the Figures' 1984 dance single, "Breathless."

Standing on Ceremony finds the group, expanded to five and relocated to Boston, discouragingly stuck in an art-dance rock ditch. Confident flashes of Simple Minds, Duran Duran, Depeche Mode, Ultravox and their offspring may have been novel and intriguing on a 1983 American indie record, but those same stylistic attributes sound a bit quaint four years later. These guys are obviously skilled and facile, but the boat had already sailed on this record.

While the quintet's stylistic referents are still fairly obvious on Figures on a Beach, the confident assertion of the group's flip personality helps set them in a more original context. Rather than rely on swanky execution, some of the hooky songs are angularly offbeat and substantial; Kaczynski's colorful delivery makes good use of the ironically serious lyrics. The only serious drag here is a pounding modern disco version of Bachman-Turner Overdrive's "You Ain't Seen Nothing Yet" that seems tacked on as a commercial afterthought. [i]

FINE YOUNG CANNIBALS

Fine Young Cannibals (IRS) 1985 ●

The Raw & the Cooked (IRS) 1989 ●

The Raw & the Remix (IRS-MCA) 1990 †

Factionalism led to the disbandment of the Beat; when the two mainmen became General Public, the others looked set to fade from sight. But the group formed by guitarist Andy Cox and bassist David Steele, joined by fine young vocalist Roland Gift, has proven a commercially propitious venture. Fine Young Cannibals approaches modern R&B and soul from a number of fresh rock perspectives, but it's really Gift's Motown-ish, richly emotional vocals that ignite originals like "Johnny Come Home" and "Don't Ask Me to Choose," as well as a rousing cover of Elvis Presley's "Suspicious Minds."

Following that first album, the band turned to film projects. Gift played prominent dramatic roles in 1987's Sammy and Rosie Get Laid and 1989's Scandal; the entire band contributed an annoying misinterpretation of the Buzzcocks' "Ever Fallen in Love" (later recycled for the band's second album) to Something Wild. Meanwhile, as Gift was off making like a movie star, Steele and Cox whipped up a high-tech danceable side project called 2 Men a Drum Machine & a Trumpet, releasing a 1988 IRS 12-inch, "Tired of Getting Pushed Around."

Opening with the distinctive drum/guitar intro of "She Drives Me Crazy," The Raw & the Cooked plucked FYC out of the alternative trenches and sent the trio spiralling up the charts. Another crafty salad of pseudo-Motown soul and contemporary dance rock, the album topped the charts, sold more than three million copies and bagged a Grammy nomination. Although the songs are structurally solid and melodically appealing, the arrangements are diabolical, favoring monotonous grooves, with a relentless synthesized drum thwack and robotic guitar scrubbing. Add in the fatigue factor of Gift's mannered Prince-ly falsetto, and The Raw & the Cooked starts to grate well before the second song starts. The delightful '60s jump of "Good Thing" and the swoony '50s swing of "Tell Me What" provide respite from the album's tick-tock tempos, but "Ever Fallen in Love" ends it in on a headache high.

No doubt moved by FYC's success as well as the trio's sluggardly production pace, the record company assembled a remix album that offers two versions each of "She Drives Me Crazy," "I'm Not the Man I Used to Be" and "I'm Not Satisfied," as well as solitary danceable overhauls of "Good Thing," "Johnny Come Home" and others. Unlike many such cash-ins, The Raw & the Remix offers significant variations on the original tracks, with added raps (by Monie Love on "She Drives Me Crazy") and major stylistic adjustments (Nellee Hooper and Jazzie B put the Soul II Soul stamp on one, "I'm Not the Man I Used to Be," while Smith & Mighty do a dub dissection on another). The CD and cassette add two more, including a "Mayhem Rhythm Remix" of 2 Men's "Tired of Getting Pushed Around." [i]

See also (English) Beat.

FINGERPRINTZ

The Very Dab (Virgin Int'l) 1979

Distinguishing Marks (Virgin) 1980

Beat Noir (Stiff) 1981

JACQUI BROOKES

Sob Stories (MCA) 1984

It's difficult to categorize Fingerprintz, which may explain why the group never garnered a large following. The primitively recorded first album occupies a dark, throbbing zone of bobbing pop and wry-to-bizarre lyrics ("Punchy Judy," "Beam Me Up Scotty"). Leader/guitarist Jimmie O'Neill's Scottish accent and offbeat songwriting combine to chilling effect on the crime-obsessed narratives "Fingerprince" and "Wet Job"; the former's music also suggests a valid response to reggae/dub influence.

The considerably slicker Distinguishing Marks, in contrast, is pure pop in extremis—musically, anyway. The songs hum like a finely tuned motor, with producer Nick Garvey removing any rough sonic edges. Only the relentlessly perverse lyrics betray a refusal to play by the book; O'Neill's disjointed visions are inspired by pulp fiction, police blotters and hospital charts. A catchy collection that all sounds like hit single material.

Beat Noir took yet another 180-degree turn, away from pop and towards a rock/funk fusion. Finally in synch with the times, Fingerprintz delivered a stunning, idiosyncratic package of heavy bass lines, winsome melodies and O'Neill's thematic fetishes (paranoia, frustration). The album was kinky enough to catch on in rock clubs, but too peculiar to reach a broader audience. (The US version deletes two songs.) Drenched in atmosphere, it remains a compelling work.

O'Neill subsequently co-wrote, co-produced and played on an excellent album by singer Jacqui Brookes before launching his new group, the Silencers. Drummer Bogdan Wiczling (no longer dubbed Bob Shilling, as on The Very Dab) worked on that record as well, and later toured and recorded with Adam Ant. [sj]

See also Silencers.

KAREN FINLEY

The Truth Is Hard to Swallow (Pow Wow) 1988

Controversial New York performance artist Finley comes on like a nutty pornographic Mark E. Smith on one side of her album, which puts music of widely varying sorts (raga-rock, semi-industrial funk, hip-hop, African chorale, etc.) under her obsessive sexual rants. ("The Constant State of Desire," a live 1987 recording—before a mildly appreciative audience—of a solo piece, completes the album.) Finley's work is strong stuff of arguable artistic merit, but she's not that far removed from other modern verbal extremists, and there's nothing wrong with her backing tracks. [i]

TIM FINN

Escapade (Oz-A&M) 1983

Big Canoe (nr/Virgin) 1986 (Virgin) 1988 •

Tim Finn (Capitol) 1989 •

Singer Tim Finn successfully carved out an identity distinct from his band, Split Enz, with his first solo album, Escapade. On his own, he's milder, sweeter and more conventional (though still worth the time). The precedent for Escapade can be found in the romantic grandeur of Split Enz's True Colours "I Hope I Never." One track here, the moving "Not for Nothing," is a bona fide lump-in-the-throat masterpiece.

Apparently, the meager sales of Escapade were a major setback to Finn's solo career. Released in Europe in '86, Big Canoe only came out domestically after brother Neil went big-time with Crowded House—and then as a budget LP. Anyway, it's a middling effort, with overproduction and mega-arrangements (a classic Split Enz weakness) dulling the emotional edge of Finn's bittersweet crooning. He's still boss on "Don't Bury My Heart," a haunting ballad, and the lightheaded rocker "Water into Wine."

No doubt eager to emulate brother Neil's success with Crowded House, Tim next teamed up with the same label and producer (Mitchell Froom). Despite the overly slick presentation, Tim Finn sometimes hits the mark, especially on the rowdy "Birds Swim Fish Fly" and "Not Even Close," which turns self-pity into affecting melodrama. What Finn really needs here, though, is an editor/producer willing to pare these smart songs down to essentials, not one who will continue to encourage his weakness for excessive ornamentation.

In late '90, Finn took the plunge and joined Crowded House in time to take an active role in the group's third album. [jy]

See also Crowded House, Split Enz.

FIRE ENGINES

Lubricate Your Living Room (nr/Pop: Aural) 1980

Aufgeladen und Bereit für Action und Spass (Fast America) 1981

WIN

Uhh! Tears Baby (A Trash Icon) (nr/London) 1987

Freaky Trigger (nr/Virgin) 1988 •

Fire Engines were the most manic of the new Scottish pop crop that surfaced around 1979: primal rock-'n-roll drawing more on raw passion (via guitar din and repetitive noise) than melody or captivating structures. The quartet offered no traditional hooks, just six-string fire and aggressively unpleasant vocals.

The group's two enigmatic albums have a lot of overlap: the American release with the German title adds two of the band's catchier numbers: the punk-country-flavored "Candyskin" (with ridiculously incongruous strings) and "Everything's Roses." It also replaces the tedious "Lubricate Your Living Room Pt. 2" with the more exciting "Meat Whiplash." Using electric guitars without regard to typical pop traditions, the abrasive but ruggedly handsome Fire Engines—a Scottish blend of the Contortions and early Television—will poke and scratch their way into your heart if you let them.

Fire Engines guitarist David Henderson and keyboardist Russell Burn went on to form Win, a subversive sextet that brings an equally iconoclastic set of wonderful ideas to bear on soul-dance-jazz-pop. (Imagine a collaboration between Marc Bolan and Prince for a hint of the possibilities.) Despite a superficially slick and accessible exterior—complete with synthesizers, female backup singers and samples—Win's records are as idiosyncratic and delightfully unsettling in their own way as the old group. [gf/i]

FIREHOSE

Ragin', Full-On (SST) 1986 •

if'n (SST) 1987 •

Sometimes EP (SST) 1988 •

FROMOHIO (SST) 1989 •

Flyin' the Flannel (Columbia) 1991 •

BOOTSTRAPPERS

Bootstrappers (New Alliance) 1989 •

Born out of tragedy, FIREHOSE began after the 1985 death of Minutemen guitarist D. Boon in a car crash. Knowing there was no way to recapture Boon's burly bluster, bassist Mike Watt and drummer George Hurley didn't try to find someone to fill those iconoclastic shoes. Instead, they recruited another kind of dude entirely in the person of ed FROMOHIO (aka Ed Crawford). A more restrained presence than the raucous Boon, not to mention a prettier singer, Ed settled right into the driver's seat on Ragin', Full-On. This bracing LP jumps all over the map, from edgy rockers ("Choose Any Memory") to absorbing mood pieces ("The Candle and the Flame") to acoustic reveries ("This . . ."). First note to last, there's a prickly, intangible integrity to the band that the restless Boon would have admired.

On if'n, the Hosers are more self-assured, more articulate and just as freewheeling. Ed really steps out on the propulsive "Anger," an unnerving portrayal of rage, and "For the Singer of REM," a devastating parody of that band. Watt gets his turn at the mic, too, delivering an amusingly disjointed rap (following Minutemen tradition, he calls it a spiel) on "Me & You, Remembering." Unpredictable and unpretentious, FIREHOSE has the exciting aura of a group in constant evolution, willing to follow the muse in any direction whatsoever. First class. The three-track Sometimes features two songs recorded for, but not used on, if'n.

"I'm reaching out/Hear me spiel and shout," sings Crawford at the start of FROMOHIO. FIREHOSE's best, most accessible work yet. There's acoustic folk instrumentals ("Vastopol"), wry Watt spiels ("What Gets Heard"), jittery rockers ("Whisperin' While Hollerin'"), pretty rockers ("Understanding"), jolly sing-alongs ("Liberty for Our Friend"), even a drum solo ("Let the Drummer Have Some"). As usual, listening to FIREHOSE is like hanging out with your best friends, shootin' the breeze and feelin' pretty good.

Watt and Hurley teamed up with avant-garde fave Elliott Sharp for the one-off Bootstrappers. While the rhythm dudes pound away with their usual muscular zest, Sharp tears Hendrix-y (and stranger) noises from the guitar (and bass clarinet). No real songs, just lots of jarring sonics. [jy]

See also Dos, Minutemen, Elliott Sharp, Sonic Youth.

FISCHER-Z

Word Salad (UA) 1979 •

Going Deaf for a Living (UA) 1980 •

Red Skies Over Paradise (nr/Liberty) 1981 •

Reveal (nr/Arista) 1988 •

Fish's Head (nr/Arista) 1989 •

Going Red for a Salad (The UA Years) (nr/EMI) 1990 •

JOHN WATTS

One More Twist (nr/EMI) 1982

The Iceberg Model (nr/EMI) 1983

A frequently excellent but widely ignored outfit, Fischer-Z was primarily a vehicle for John Watts, a singer/guitarist/songwriter whose intense vocals and semi-neurotic outlook provided its character. A flair for intricate but accessible arrangements and novel subject matter made Fischer-Z both easy to like and hard to dismiss.

Word Salad, produced by Mike Howlett and recorded as a quartet, displays Watts in the process of searching out an ego, still sharing songwriting credits and vocal chores with the others. It's an impressive debut album, full of great songs, fine musicianship and stylistic variety, all colored by Watts' reedy voice.

With the same personnel and producer, Going Deaf for a Living uses a sparer sound, downplaying the keyboards in favor of Cars-like simplicity, best exemplified on "So Long." An odd direction for a second record, but the band's attributes remained unchanged, and it's as good as the first.

Red Skies Over Paradise is a solo album waiting for someone to inform the other members of the group. Watts co-produced, played the keyboards and allowed his songwriting to become entirely self-indulgent. With a serious baritone replacing the plaintive tenor (it's always a bad sign when singers change their voices) and no-nonsense message lyrics, there's a lot wrong with this disappointing album, despite four or five good numbers.

Not surprisingly, Watts then went solo. The material on One More Twist is a bit forced and clearly less interesting than his earlier writing, with only a Tom Robinson-sounding single, "One Voice," showing any real signs of life.

After The Iceberg Model also failed to ignite his solo career, Watts reassumed the Fischer-Z moniker—without bothering to reform the original band—for Reveal and Fish's Head. Though these discs hardly amount to a stunning comeback, each contains enough bright moments to suggest that Watts shouldn't be counted out just yet. The cleverly titled Going Red for a Salad is an ample condensation of the original band's first three albums, containing about half of each.

[i/hd]

FISH & ROSES

Fish & Roses (Lost-Twin/Tone) 1987

We Are Happy to Serve You (Homestead) 1989

LES BATTERIES

Noisy Champs (Fr. AYAA) 1987

Fish & Roses just may be the friendliest-sounding band that can trace its roots back to NYC's late-'70s no wave scene. Formed in the fall of 1985 by drummer Rick Brown (ex-Information, V-Effect), bassist Sue Garner (ex-Vietnam, Last Round Up) and keyboard player David Sutter, Fish & Roses' decision to eschew guitar gives the material a feel that is both convoluted and light. While the group's sound can be compared to Virginia's Orthotonics or France's Etron Fou, the songs have a political dimension that has more in common with the Minutemen.

Both of Fish & Roses' records are excellent. The full-length We Are Happy to Serve You (produced by Thurston Moore) may be a better introduction than the seven-song Fish & Roses, since it includes the classic "Hillbilly in a Can" (Georgia-born Garner's best recorded vocal turn) and a wide selection of other post-beat hoot. Those looking for Rick Brown's coolest singing, however, are advised to seek out Noisy Champs by Les Batteries, his drum trio with Etron Fou's Guigou Chenevier and Charles Hayward (of Quiet Sun/This Heat fame). On this singular LP, Rick howls a cover of Harry Partch's "The Letter" that is absolutely breathtaking. [bc]

FISHBONE

Fishbone EP (Columbia) 1985 ●

In Your Face (Columbia) 1986

It's a Wonderful Life (Gonna Have a Good Time) EP (Columbia) 1987

Truth and Soul (Columbia) 1988 ●

Ma and Pa EP (nr/Epic) 1989 ●

Bonin' in the Boneyard EP (Columbia) 1990 ●

The Reality of My Surroundings (Columbia) 1991 ●

One of America's greatest and most overlooked bands, this rowdy gang from LA specializes in ska with overtones of go-go, funk and rock. (Imagine George Clinton producing the first Beat LP.) On the Fishbone EP, their sense of humor is surpassed only by the six tracks' non-stop hyperkinetic energy. Whether the lyrics are socially relevant ("Another Generation" and especially "Party at Ground Zero") or just plain silly ("Ugly"), the vim and vigor level is maintained. If you can sit still throughout this, you're probably dead.

In Your Face is branded with a then-uncommon "EXPLICIT LYRICS—PARENTAL ADVISORY" warning, but the real warning should be to fans. With David Kahne's inappropriately slick production, the band mellowed out considerably for their debut long-player. Nothing wrong with trying a new direction, but several cuts here are just MOR soul-rock, and that's simply not what this bunch is cut out to play. The lyrics are nowhere, too—the promising title "Post Cold War Politics" is an instrumental. Back to the drawing board.

It's a Wonderful Life, also produced by Kahne, is a Christmas EP that puts a casual ho-ho-ho twist in your stocking. The title tune is actually the least interesting of the four gratuitous charmers; the soulful disenchantment of "Slick Nick, You Devil You" ("Spilling Jack Daniels all over the drapes/Tattoos on his arms and knees/I never thought Santa Claus would be such a sleaze") and the funk-ed-out "Just Call Me Scrooge" are the real winners. A welcome gift to cheer up any celebration.

Shot in the foot by a poor sequencing job and a baffled record company, the brilliant Truth and Soul should have been Fishbone's breakthrough. While the first side is distinguished only by a scorching metallic cover of Curtis Mayfield's "Freddie's Dead," the second half is a dazzling grand-slam of the band's vibrant stylistic array. From the party anthem "Bonin' in the Boneyard" to the scalding anti-racist "Slow Bus Movin' (Howard Beach Party)," the near-hardcore of "Subliminal Fascism" to the soulful "Ghetto Sound-wave" and the acoustic (!) racial-unity ballad "Change," it updates and rivals Sly's finest work.

Abortive sessions produced by the Jungle Brothers figure prominently in the Bonin' EP, which couples two radical revisions (one of them completely X-rated) of the two-year-old title track with three insane B-sides.

Over a year in the making (eighteen engineers are credited), the sprawling Reality of My Surroundings reprises much of Truth and Soul's spirit and sound, but is far more ambitious in scope and philosophy. Utilising the format of a rap album (lots of mini-songs and chatter between the longer ones), Fishbone tackles even more styles than before: while their characteristic punkfunk-rockerska is prominent, the band also explores Sly Stone-land ("Everyday Sunshine"), Funkadelia ("Behavior Control Technician") and even psychedelic territory ("Those Days Are Gone"), finishing the album off with the brilliant "Sunless Saturday," which manages to be the band's most radio-ready single and one of its most poignant lyrics to date ("I see the shards of shattered dreams in my street/I face the morning with my customary sigh"). And although Kahne carries an associate producer credit, most of the production (and all of the songwriting) was done by the band. Once again, they sequenced the best tracks towards the end but, despite the occasional misfire, Reality is Fishbone's best and most important album yet.

While the septet's manic stage act belies the members' considerable talents as musicians, Fish (Phillip Fisher) is the group's secret weapon. A soulful blend of Charlie Watts, Keith Moon and assorted great jazz drummers, he's guested on tracks by Little Richard and Bob Dylan. Various 'Bones have stomped, yelled or blown on records by Jane's Addiction, Keith Levene, Thelouious Monster and the Red Hot Chili Peppers.

[dgs/l/ja]

MORGAN FISHER

See Hybrid Kids

FIXX

Shattered Room (MCA) 1982 •
Reach the Beach (MCA) 1983 •
Phantoms (MCA) 1984 •
Walkabout (MCA) 1986 •
React (MCA) 1987 •
Calm Animals (RCA) 1988 •
Greatest Hits: One Thing Leads to Another (MCA) 1989 •
Ink (Impact-MCA) 1991 ◊

Although they sound like a dozen other pretentious synth-heavy atmospheric English dance bands of the early '80s, London's Fixx (originally the Fix), aided immeasurably for a time by producer Rupert Hine's ability to sculpt their mundane songs and uncover marginal tense appeal, have managed to become enormously successful, regularly drawing a couple of irritating hits from each album. Shattered Room offers "Red Skies" and "Stand or Fall"; Reach the Beach contains "One Thing Leads to Another" and "Saved by Zero"; Phantoms has "Are We Ourselves?" Showing remarkable consistency, they are all equally unpleasant and trivial. (Not too surprisingly, the Fixx's American success has been met by nearly total UK indifference.)

React, a "greatest hits live" package, contains performances, recorded at two late-1986 Canadian shows, of every one of those songs, plus three especially wretched new studio cuts. One Thing Leads to Another also includes the original versions of those memorable tunes (except that "Stand or Fall" is live) and more, several in alternate mixes. The rock-oriented Calm Animals, the Fixx's first album for a new label, has no songs worth mentioning.

Returning to its former corporate home after a three-year recording hiatus, the Fixx raised guitar's role on Ink, managing a fair INXS impression in spots but otherwise doing what the group has always done with no significant evidence of either fatigue or imagination.

[1]

FLAG OF CONVENIENCE

Life on the Telephone EP (PVC) 1982

FOC

Should I Ever Go Deaf EP (nr/MCM) 1987
Northwest Skyline (nr/MCM) 1987
War on the Wireless Set (MCM America) 1988
Exiles EP (nr/MCM) 1988

When Pete Shelley disbanded the Buzzcocks in March 1981, guitarist Steve Diggle and drummer John Maher formed Flag of Convenience. Diggle had played the Dave Davies role in the group—writing and singing his two or three songs per LP, getting an occasional A-side, and improving all the while—so it was logical for him to carry on the Buzzcocks' frantic, ambitious pop as Shelley opted for techno-blip dance music. Sadly, they labored long in obscurity, releasing only four singles between 1981 and '86.

Life on the Telephone, a US 12-inch with two versions of the title track and a pair of other songs, is immediately agreeable, the clever parts come into focus after a while.

War on the Wireless Set, which compiles outtakes from '81-'86 (plus one previously released 45, "New House"), is just the kind of hardhitting, bawlsy material you'd expect from the people involved. "Heartbreak Story" is a particularly good find, with a martial beat and "Peter Gunn" guitar line. The real killer is "Back of My Mind," one of two tracks here recorded by three-quarters of the Buzzcocks (sans Shelley) for that band's fourth LP, which was scrapped when the band broke up. "Back of My Mind" proves again (as "Harmony in My Head" and "Airwaves Dream" had during the Buzzcocks' existence) that Diggle was really coming into his creative own.

Maher quit around '86, but Diggle carried on under the FOC acronym, releasing Northwest Skyline as his first real album. (Maher sits in on three songs.) Though seemingly more cheaply recorded than War on the Wireless Set, Diggle himself sounds more committed and more convincing, especially on social-issue lyrics (concerning such topics as racial prejudice and northern England's chronic unemployment). Both "Northwest Skyline" and "Pictures in My Mind" (with Maher's easily identifiable buzzsaw rolls) are especially impressive. (All four songs on Should I Ever Go Deaf are repeated on Northwest Skyline.)

In 1988, Diggle finally assembled a real, permanent band, including Gary Couzens, founding member of a then-unknown Manchester outfit called Stone Roses (he had left after one single, "So Young"), on second guitar. The resulting Exiles EP towers over the rest of FOC's canon. Virtually a Buzzcocks single that never was, "Exiles" flies a "Boredom"-style guitar pattern into a furious verse and a piledriving chorus. A steam-powered hit heard by few, it proved that the writer of "Fast Cars" and "Harmony in My Head" was still capable of greatness. The EP's other three tracks are nearly as good.

Ignored by the press and the public, the frustrated guitarist changed his band's name to Buzzcocks FOC, after a massive Paris concert was unexpectedly advertised under the past/present moniker. When the rechristened group issued a single ("Sunset" b/w the vastly superior "Life with the Lions"), the press stopped ignoring Diggle long enough to howl in predictable outrage. While that led (indirectly) to the 1989 Buzzcocks reunion, it also meant the end of FOC and its finest lineup. On their own, Couzens and drummer Chris Goodwin wasted little time in forming a new group, the High. [jr]

See also Buzzcocks, High.

FLAMING LIPS

The Flaming Lips (Lovely Sorts of Death) 1985 (Restless) 1987 •

Hear It Is (Pink Dust) 1986 •
Oh My Gawd!!! ... the Flaming Lips (Restless) 1987 •
Telepathic Surgery (Restless) 1989 •
Unconsciously Screamin' EP (Atavistic) 1990
In a Priest Driven Ambulance (Restless) 1990 •

MERCURY REV

Yerself Is Steam (Rough Trade) 1991 •

The Flaming Lips play around with the same sort of cartoon-psychedelia imagery used by lots of similarly inclined combos, but these disenfranchised Oklahomans (led by songwriter/guitarist Wayne Coyne) possess wit and ingenuity most of the acid-added competition lacks. From its uniquely disgusting front cover to the brilliant alienation anthem "My Own Planet," The Flaming Lips shows considerably more promise than just about anything else in the college-radio underground's drooling-garage-thrash brigade.

Hear It Is fulfills some of that promise. While affectionately borrowing riffs here and there, the Lips (now a trio, with Coyne inheriting vocal duties from his now-departed brother Mark) show real originality, balancing the rockin' grunge of "With You" and "Jesus Shootin' Heroin" with softer acoustic passages. One CD collects the contents of the first two records, adding a version of "Summertime Blues" that's considerably closer to Blue Cheer than Eddie Cochran.

The inventively self-produced Oh My Gawd!!! is a surprisingly mature and confident work, with more consistent material and performances. Odes to paranoia ("Everything's Explodin'"), unselfconsciously anachronistic Pink Floydisms ("One Million Billionth of a Millisecond on a Sunday Morning") and moments of genuine sensitivity ("Love Yer Brain"), allow Oh My Gawd!!! to transcend the Lips' wacky-cult-band image, marking them as one of the American heartland's brightest—if least likely—new hopes.

Unfortunately, Telepathic Surgery is a competent but uninspired time-filler, lacking the manic unpredictability that made its predecessors special. Rather than attempting to reconcile their disparate components into a cohesive style, the Lips stick mainly to a straightforward rockish approach that only serves to make them sound more like everybody else. Curiously, Telepathic Surgery's most exciting numbers (not counting a two-and-a-half minute monologue on UFOs) are the two CD bonus tracks: the frantic "Fryin' Up" and "Hell's Angel's Cracker Factory," a mind-melting 23-minute jam that would do Hawkwind proud.

In a Priest Driven Ambulance is an impressive return to form, with stronger material, committed performances and imaginative production—in short, all the fun and intensity missing from Telepathic Surgery. Coyne has developed into a skillful enough songwriter to draw deep emotional truths out of his cartoonish (and sporadically religion-obsessed) lyrical imagery without sacrificing meaning or humor. Similarly, the retooled band (a quartet again, with a new drummer and an added second guitarist) demonstrates new-found finesse, lifting such ravers as "Unconsciously Screamin'" and "Mountain Side" into the stratosphere, and adding an audible sense of discovery to introspective items like "Stand in Line" and "Five Stop Mother Superior Rain." The album ends with a rendition of the Louis Armstrong classic "What a Wonderful World" that's both reverent and playful. (Incidentally, the packaging resorts to an old Phil Spector ruse, listing all of the tracks' running times as 3:26.)

The limited-edition Unconsciously Screamin' EP (with a dandy holographic sleeve) teams the title track with three otherwise-unreleased outtakes from the Ambulance sessions. Like early pressings of Oh My

Gawd!!! and Ambulance, and the Restless reissue of the debut EP, it's on colored vinyl.

Mercury Rev is a quintet that was formed in Buffalo, NY, prior to guitarist John "Dingus" Donahue's joining the Flaming Lips. (He appears on Ambulance, an album co-produced by his Mercury Rev bandmate, bassist Dave Fridmann.) After eighteen months in the Lips, Donahue put Rev back in gear and completed the long-simmering Yerself Is Steam. [hd]

FLAMIN GROOVIES

Sneakers EP (Snazz) 1968 (Hol. Skydog) 1975

Supersnazz (Epic) 1969 (nr/Edsel) 1986 (CBS Special Products) 1990 ●

Flamingo (Kama Sutra) 1970 (nr/Big Beat) 1990 ●

Teenage Head (Kama Sutra) 1971 (nr/Dajo) 1990 ●

This Is the Flamin Groovies (Ger. Kama Sutra-Metronome) 1975

Flamingo/Teenage Head (nr/Buddah) 1975

Shake Some Action (Sire) 1976 ●

Still Shakin (Buddah) 1976

Slow Death EP (nr/United Artists) 1976

Flamin' Groovies Now (Sire) 1978

Jumpin' in the Night (Sire) 1979

Flamin' Groovies '68 (Fr. Eva) 1983

Flamin' Groovies '70 (Fr. Eva) 1983

Bucketful of Brains (Voxo) 1983

Slow Death, Live! (Fr. Lolita) 1983

The Gold Star Tapes (Fr. Skydog) 1984

Live at the Whisky A Go-Go '79 (Fr. Lolita) 1985

Roadhouse (nr/Edsel) 1986

One Night Stand (nr/ABC) 1987 ●

Groovies' Greatest Grooves (Sire) 1989 ◊

The Rockfield Sessions (Aus. Aim) 1989

Starting out in San Francisco as early as 1965 (pre-dating the Grateful Dead), the Flamin Groovies have always been out of step with the rock world. Ten years before anyone knew about bands releasing their own independent records, the Groovies issued a 10-inch mini-album, Sneakers; in the '70s, when that same do-it-yourself spirit was inspiring countless innovative bands to try and challenge the old boundaries, the Groovies retreated to make albums of beat group nostalgia, wearing period clothes and refusing to acknowledge that times had indeed changed.

Always more cult-popular and influential than commercially successful, the Groovies, led by irascible but talented guitarist/singer Cyril Jordan and (until 1971) singer/guitarist Roy A. Loney, always embodied the rebellious, youthful spirit that fueled punk, but held tenuously to their musical roots—'50s American rock-'n'-roll and '60s British pop. In effect, they provided inspiration for countless bands (how many covers of "Slow Death" can you name?), and are legendary for good reason.

The Groovies' recording career, generally more exciting on hit-and-run singles than in a sustained album situation, began with the competent amateurism of Sneakers—Loney originals played with great energy and a slight psychedelic undercurrent—and continued on their major-label debut, Supersnazz, which encompasses a variety of disparate rock-'n'-roll styles (peaking with killer versions of Little Richard's "The Girl Can't Help It" and Eddie Cochran's "Somethin' Else") but is more ambitious than impressive. Flamingo and Teenage Head (years later, the former was reissued as This Is the Flamin' Groovies in Germany) are the band's strongest early efforts, taking advantage of improved skills and equipment to make loud, brash records in sharp contrast to the era's prevailing bland and puffed-up music.

Following Loney's departure, the Groovies drafted talented guitarist-singer Chris Wilson and began heading in a new direction. The band moved to England, hooked up with the likeminded Dave Edmunds as their producer and, in 1972, recorded the music that would close one phase of the band's career and open the next. Only things didn't exactly work out that way. Later collected as The Rockfield Sessions mini-album, those first seven efforts yielded a pair of rock 'n' roll singles (including the absolutely classic "Slow Death" b/w "Tallahassee Lassie"), a B-side of Chuck Berry's "Little Queenie" and—most importantly—two harbingers of the Groovies' new past that wouldn't surface for four years. When the Groovies finally reemerged with the Edmunds-produced Shake Some Action in 1976, it was those two '72 leftovers—"You Tore Me Down" and the amazing, apocalyptic Byrds-like title track—which most reflected the group's power-pop reorientation.

Still Shakin was rushed out by their old label (Bud-dah and Kama Sutra being related) as a last chance to cash in, combining tracks from Flamingo and Teenage Head with a 1971 live-in-the-studio side.

Meanwhile, the Groovies were busy reversing into the future. Now and Jumpin' in the Night delve further into the past, mixing studiously reproduced British Invasion (and related '60s American) standards with sound-alike originals. While these records are faintly ridiculous and too historically reverent to be taken very seriously, both contain catchy, melodic pop tunes that are impossible to disdain. Besides including the band's fine "Yeah My Baby," Now faithfully revisits the Stones ("Paint It, Black," "Blue Turns to Grey"), the Beatles ("There's a Place") and—perhaps most convincingly—the Byrds ("Feel a Whole Lot Better"). Produced without Edmunds, Jumpin' in the Night is less effective, with such inadvisable digressions as Warren Zevon's "Werewolves of London" and Bob Dylan's "Absolutely Sweet Marie" joining the Beatles ("Please Please Me") and Byrds ("SD," "It Won't Be Wrong" and "Ladyfriend").

The Groovies didn't issue any new recordings between 1979 and 1987, leading to suspicions that the band had ceased to exist. During that period, however, ongoing European (especially French) interest prompted the release of numerous reissues, compilations and vintage concert material. Slow Death, Live! and its equivalent American release, Bucketful of Brains, date from a 1971 Fillmore West show; Roadhouse is a British repackage combining tracks from the two Kama Sutra albums. Groovies' Greatest Grooves, a graphics-encoded 24-track CD, contains most of the non-covers from the band's three Sire albums, as well as five non-originals and some earlier classics, like "Teenage Head," "Slow Death" and "Tallahassee Lassie."

Although a modest return by any measure, Cyril, bassist George Alexander and three new bandmates did record a new album in 1986 One Night Stand, which was done in a single day (two, if you count mixdown) in an Australian studio, sounds live and contains shaggy roadhouse renditions of classic originals ("Shake Some Action," "Slow Death," "Teenage Head") as well as Paul Revere and the Raiders' "Kicks," the Who's "Call Me Lightning" and other covers. If not quite a record to cherish, a reassuring audible reminder that the band lives on—and that Jordan's heart is still in it. [1]

See also Barracudas, Rev Loney and the Phantom Movers

FLAT DUO JETS

In Stereo EP [tape] (Dolphin) 1985

Flat Duo Jets (Dog Gone) 1990

Go Go Harlem Baby (Sky) 1991 •

Led by good ol' boy Dexter Romweber (guitar-whacking brother of Snatches of Pink drummer Sara Romweber), this smokin' trio (lately a duo) from Chapel Hill, North Carolina, uncorks some of the greasiest, most soulful rockabilly since the real old days. Mixing obscurities with authentic-sounding originals on the eponymous album, Flat Duo Jets avoid the cutesy revivalism of early '80s roots-rock, wringing emotion from the songs instead of championing orthodoxy. The loose, rubbery grooves and Dexter's hillbilly-on-fire vocals have all the immediacy of a late-breaking news flash. Yaa-hoo! [1]

FLATMATES

Happy All the Time EP (nr/Subway Organisation) 1987

You're Gonna Cry EP (nr/Subway Organisation) 1987

Shimmer EP (nr/Subway Organisation) 1988

Janice Long Session EP (nr/Night Tracks-Strange Fruit) 1988

Heaven Knows EP (nr/Subway Organisation) 1988

Love and Death (The Flatmates 86-89) [CD] (nr/Subway Organisation) 1990 •

Over the course of four years, England's Flatmates unleashed a series of loudly perfect two-to-three-minute pop blasts, all on singles or four-song 12-inch EPs. That they never made an album is a telling clue to the quartet's aesthetic, favoring the fix of one radio-ready masterpiece over the cumbersome yearly compiling of a "major" work. Had the Shangri-Las (perhaps fronted by Nico!) been backed by the Buzzcocks, the Flatmates would have been soulmates.

From the quartet's heart-grabbing first single ("I Could Be in Heaven") to its exquisite feedback finale ("My Empty Head"), the Flatmates' approach remained consistent, with only a gradual upgrading of sound quality marking the years. How jewels like "Heaven Knows" and "Turning You Blue" avoided becoming international smashes is beyond comprehension. The 20-track posthumous Love and Death CD gathers together most of the band's work, adding a few glittering odds and ends. [sm]

FLESH EATERS

EP (Upsetter) 1979

No Questions Asked (Upsetter) 1980

A Minute to Pray, a Second to Die (Ruby) 1981

Forever Came Today (Ruby) 1982
A Hard Road to Follow (Upsetter) 1983
Greatest Hits—Destroyed by Fire (SST) 1986
Live (Homestead) 1988 ●
Prehistoric Fits Vol. 2 (SST) 1990 ●
Dragstrip Riot (SST) 1991 ●

Young poets on the East Coast were originally attracted to punk by its simplicity, directness and malleability. Most prominently, Patti Smith and Richard Hell found that crudely executed rock'n'roll provided the perfect backdrop for their verbal barrages. Though less celebrated, California's Chris Desjardins made equally ambitious records with a constantly changing set of Flesh Eaters that virtually amounted to a who's who of Los Angeles' new wave notables. Singing in a style akin to Hell's delirious hysterics, Chris D. turns morbid, sensational subjects like murder, vampirism and necrophilia into diverting entertainment through relentlessly intense lyrics. And though their demented tone will drive off most listeners, his albums bear hearing.

Like most visionary types, Mr. D.'s report card was often branded "doesn't work well with groups," which makes it tough for him to maintain a consistent lineup (Plugz guitarist Tito Larriva and then-guitarist Stan Ridgway headed the list of early cohorts). To capture at least a glimpse of said vision, Desjardins finally borrowed an existing band—LA's flower-punk Flyboys—to record the first Flesh Eaters EP. 'Twas a wise choice: the trebly, hyperkinetic playing matches him lunge for lunge on four breathless numbers, including the well-beyond-Costello conflagration "Radio Dies Screaming."

Cramming fourteen tracks into 25 minutes, No Questions Asked uses the simplest punk structures to illustrate such overbearing tales as "Cry Baby Killer" (the name comes from an early Jack Nicholson film), "Suicide Saddle" and "Dynamite Hemorrhage." A formative effort.

By comparison, A Minute to Pray is like seeing Technicolor after a grimy home movie. Partial credit goes to a stellar band that includes the Blasters' Dave Alvin and X's John Doe and D.J. Bonebrake, but primarily it's due to Chris D.'s increased flamboyance. He roars instead of snarling, and his tunes are lively and varied horror-movie stuff. Highlights: "Digging My Grave," "See You in the Boneyard" and "Divine Horseman." For fans of carnival fun houses.

Forever Came Today reverts to a spot about mid-way between the first two LPs, but it's still riveting. The rudimentary quality of the band matters little when Chris tears into epics of sweaty desperation like "The Wedding Dice" and "Drag My Name in the Mud." A Hard Road to Follow features a revamped lineup and is the closest Chris D. has come to a conventional attack. With the group offering its own warped approximation of hard rock, he chews through a fetid batch of tunes that includes "Life's a Dirty Rat" and the Sam and Dave classic, "I Take What I Want."

Although Desjardins abandoned the Flesh Eaters moniker for his more introspective late-'80s work, the band's rabid followers were left with a variety of compilations. The first SST collection contains relevant tracks from all the albums and adds a few rarities, including the previously unissued "Hard Road to Follow" and "Lake of Burning Fire" and an alternate version of "Impossible Crime."

While Prehistoric Fits unearths no totally buried treasures, it does dust off a few more early tracks (all previously issued) and makes a nice—if not totally essential—companion piece. Lovingly compiled and packaged with appropriate trashiness, the career-spanning live LP is a welcome document of the thug-gish, proto-metal stomp the band (depending on who it included) was so adept at serving up in concert.

Following the Divine Horsemen and the one-off Stone by Stone project, Chris D. reformed the Flesh Eaters in late 1990. In keeping with its title, the sprawling double-LP Dragstrip Riot emphasizes D.'s woozy, pulp-fiction persona-hopping rather than his more fundamentalist santeria-punk ravings. The all-new lineup (especially masterful guitarist Wayne James) proves potent enough to keep pace without clinging to their leader's tornado-swept coattails, whether the context is quietly malicious delta blues ("The Youngest Profession"), Alice Cooper-via-Jim Thompson power-metal ("Sugarhead and Panther Breath") or stripped-down docudrama (the ten-minute title track), not to mention a handful of territory-defining covers (from the Groovies' "Slow Death"—one of the two items deleted from the CD version—to Mott the Hoople's "The Moon Upstairs"). Length alone makes Dragstrip Riot tough to handle in one sitting, but it's hard to imagine taking it off in the middle. [jy/dss]

See also Divine Horsemen.

FLESH FOR LULU

Flesh for Lulu (nr/Polydor) 1984
Blue Sisters Swing EP (nr/Hybrid-Statik) 1985 ●
Big Fun City (Caroline) 1985 ●
Long Live the New Flesh (Beggars Banquet-Hughes-Capitol) 1987 ●
Plastic Fantastic (Beggars Banquet-Hughes-Capitol) 1989 ●

The ready adaptability of this Brixton quartet enabled them to rise from the ashes of London's ill-fated Batcave scene—a curious association to begin with, since these masccaraed, leather-clad poseurs are more closely related to old-fashioned rock than gothic grave-robbing. With undisguised superstar aspirations, they signed to Polydor and released two excellent singles ("Restless" and "Subterraneans"). The self-titled album that followed, despite the inclusion of both songs, sinks into the mire, an overlong, overproduced '80s punk take on the Rolling Stones (check the cover of "Jigsaw Puzzle"), a commodity for which there is no pressing demand.

Retreating to the world of independent labels, Flesh for Lulu released the controversial (some deemed the cover art sacrilegious) Blue Sisters Swing EP. An unexpected and most impressive change of course, the five tracks rock with verve and abandon, sometimes approaching heavy metal. Best song title: "I May Have Said You're Beautiful, but You Know I'm Just a Liar."

Big Fun City marks yet another transformation. Though sticking to rock, traces of other musical styles enter the mix: funk, country-western, punk-pop. Still a bunch of vain poseurs, their musical changes don't follow any fashion trends. (The UK CD issue also contains Blue Sisters Swing.)

Forever the chameleons, Flesh for Lulu did another about-face on their third album, Long Live the New Flesh. This time it's quite clear in which direction the band's course is set—towards popular American acceptance. "I Go Crazy," Flesh for Lulu's contribution to the soundtrack of the John Hughes film Some Kind of Wonderful, got a lot of airplay; the entire LP is similarly tailor-made for American radio. "I Go Crazy" (left off the British edition) and "Siamese Twist" are as adventurous as this record gets; the remainder is homogeneous AOR synth/guitar rock.

With Plastic Fantastic, another helping of danceable "alternative" rock, glossily enhanced by producer Mark Opitz's decidedly commercial sheen, the group tries yet again to grasp that golden ring. The record starts out strong with the frantic "Decline and Fall" and the heavenly pure pop of "Every Little Word," but is soon overcome by a dark blur of genericism, brightened only momentarily by some laughably lame lyrics and the title track's echoes of "Hot in the City." In fact, beyond its lack of sales, there's little to distinguish this effort from a Billy Idol album. [ag/db]

FLESHTONES

Up-Front EP (IRS) 1980

Roman Gods (ROIR) 1981

Blast Off [tape] (ROIR) 1982 [CD] (Fr. Danceteria) 1990 ϕ

Hexbreaker! (IRS) 1983

Speed Connection (Fr. IRS) 1985

Speed Connection II (IRS) 1985

Fleshtones vs. Reality (Emergo) 1987 \bullet

The Fleshtones: Living Legends Series (IRS) 1989 ϕ

Soul Madrid (Sp. Impossible) 1989

FULL TIME MEN

Fast Is My Name EP (Coyote) 1985

Your Face My Fist (Coyote-Twin/Tone) 1988

PETER ZAREMBA'S LOVE

DELEGATION

Spread the Word (Moving Target) 1986

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Time Bomb! The Big Bang Theory (Skyclad) 1988

New York's Fleshtones are caught in the common contradiction of self-consciously seeking to re-create the unselfconsciousness of '60s rock'n'roll, pre-Sgt. Pepper and pre-psychedelia. In other words, they've put a lot of thought and effort into becoming a mindless party band. Although the Fleshtones only occasionally fully capture their high spirits in the studio, the payoff is swell when they do. Nobody else rocks quite like these guys on a good date.

Up-Front's five-song menu includes a fake surf instrumental and a jumped-up account of the Stones' "Play with Fire." Frontman Peter Zaremba's humorously tough approach comes through loud and clear, but the recording's cleanness borders on aridity.

The Fleshtones take a big leap forward on Roman Gods by adding new personality and passion to the beat, as witnessed by "I've Gotta Change My Life" and "Let's See the Sun." However, the album's standout underlines the progress remaining to be made elsewhere. "The World Has Changed" crackles like vintage Yardbirds, making ill-advised ventures such as the cover of Lee Dorsey's "Ride Your Pony" seem all the more unfortunate.

Blast Off dates from abortive 1978 sessions for Red Star Records and succeeds beautifully on its own limited terms. It's raw, noisy and incomplete-sounding—just right for debauchery, though unsuitable for careful listening.

Hexbreaker! is the Fleshtones' finest record, an exuberant collection of memorable numbers made even better by brilliant playing and spot-on production by Richard Mazda. "Right Side of a Good Thing," with its hysterical falsetto chorus; "New Scene," a pulsing fuzz-guitar punk raveup; and the shingaling title tune all roll with soul and frolic in the sounds of the '60s without ever losing a grip on the band's own identity. An ultimate '80s garage-rock classic.

The only way to match that achievement was to do it live, smearing as much sweat and personality on the vinyl as possible. It took two attempts: the first Speed Connection was issued in France but deemed inferior to the second, which was recorded at a different 1985 Paris show and released in the US and UK. Although technically casual, Speed Connection II is a stupendous, old-fashioned warts'n'all concert record, loaded with all the chaos and frantic rock panache the Fleshtones can muster. Especially potent is their brilliant "Kingsmen Like Medley," as well as "Return to the Haunted House" and "Wind Out," the latter featuring guest guitar by Pete Buck of R.E.M.

Buck also collaborated with Fleshtone axeman Keith Streg on the first Full Time Men record, a three-song 12-inch. Although pleasantly unchallenging, the slightly retro-minded countryish pop tunes would have benefited from a more confident vocalist than Streg. Concocting a fuller version of the side band (without further involvement by Buck, although the EP's "I Got Wheels" turns up again), Streg made a full album with three-fourths of the Fleshtones—Gordon Spaeth (sax/harmonica), Bill Milhizer (drums) and Robert Warren (bass)—and a spare guitarist. A busman's holiday of rocking originals and cool covers (by Marvin Gaye and the Creation—now that's versatility!) enthusiastically played by a studio full of low-rent superstars, Your Face My Fist is as easily enjoyable as it's meant to be.

Undeterred by the outside world's lack of interest, the Fleshtones continue to pursue party nirvana with Fleshtones vs. Reality. Typically, the results vary, though the high points are sublime: the snarling prehistoric Kinks guitars of "Way Up Here," the raise-the-dead soul fervor of "Whatever Makes You Happy," a swift remake of "Treat Her Like a Lady" and so on. (The CD adds one track.)

The 20-song Living Legends compilation starts with the best tracks from Up-Front and Roman Gods, adds an odd three-song selection from Hexbreaker! and then starts piling on the rarities: the dynamic "American Beat '84" (from the Bachelor Party soundtrack), some singles and a pair of previously unissued covers. Rockalicious—but hold on to your copy of Hexbreaker! all the same. Soul Madrid, a double-live album, was recorded and released in Spain.

Despite relentless good humor, Zaremba's Love Delegation LP (with Streng, a horn section and such guest vocalizers as Barrence Whitfield) illustrates the dangers of unchecked '60s camp revivalism—it sounds more disposable than dynamic. "Turn Me on Again" and Aretha's "Save Me" burn real good, but fluff like "Shama Lama Bing Bang" and a pseudo-heavy remake of Lee Hazelwood's "Some Velvet Morning" (which Thin White Rope does better) are more typical of Spread the Word's dippy spirit.

Time Bomb!, ostensibly a various artists compilation, features variously permuted side projects by Fleshtones and their pals, along with non-LP tracks from the band proper. Love Delegation, Full Time Men, Action Combo, Cryin' Out Loud, Mad Violets and Wild Hyenas all toss in OK cuts, but the disc really catches fire on the Action Dogs' sizzling "I Can't Get Through to You," starring Peter Case, and the mothergroup's "I Was a Teenage Zombie," from the film of the same name. [jy/i]

FLIPPER

Album—Generic Flipper (Subterranean) 1982
Blow'n Chunks [tape] (ROI/R) 1984 [CD] (ROI/R-Important) 1990 ϕ

Gone Fishin' (Subterranean) 1984
Public Flipper Limited Live 1980–1985 (Subterranean) 1986

Sex Bomb Baby! (Subterranean) 1988 \bullet

ANY THREE INITIALS

Ruins of America (Subterranean) 1988 \mathcal{A}

NEGATIVE TREND

We Don't Play, We Riot (Subterranean) 1982

Like a 45 slowed down to sub-LP pace, San Francisco's Flipper delivers a flawless impression of a downed-out hardcore band. The harsh music lumbers and creaks, oozing feedback all the way, while the singer (bassist Will Shatter or bassist—yes, that's right—Bruce Lose) moans and shouts painfully. Flipper could be your car on the verge of a total breakdown or your worst hangover nightmare amped up to brain-splitting volume. And yet, for all the intentional sloppiness and gratuitous noise, not to mention the superficial shock of Album tunes like "Life Is Cheap" and "Shed No Tears," Flipper can be uplifting. Underneath the tumult you'll find compassion, idealism and hope, best represented by "Life" ("the only thing worth living for"). That kind of moral statement takes courage.

Blow'n Chunks is a primo live tape of the band onstage in New York, November 1983. Playing all the hits that made them a legend—like "Love Canal" and "Ha Ha Ha"—as well as previewing some songs that made it onto the next LP, the quartet drones along like a factory shutting down for the weekend, a stunning roar of guitar noise and bass pounding that is simply the ultimate loud rock'n'roll imaginable. A real classic album, and the ideal floor-clearer for any club.

Flipper's second studio album, Gone Fishin', makes an ambitious effort to add unexpected sonic components to the din. With vocals taking a clearly predominant role, oddities like clavinet, sax, piano and even open spaces (!?!?) lurk around, while newly sophisticated rhythms (as on the consti/synco-pated "First the Heart") and a relatively restrained mix make Flipper resemble a "normal" band at times. If all you want from Flipper is a visceral thrill, try the live tape; if you want to understand their creative mind, Gone Fishin' is the ideal synthesis of sickness and health.

Perhaps sensing that stages held the key to truest Flipperhood, the band's next release was the two-record career-spanning concert compilation, Public Flipper Limited. (The PiL parody here is revenge for that group's apparent appropriation of Flipper's generic labelling concept for their 1986 Album.) Wrapped in a foldout poster-cum-"Flipper on Tour" game, the LP offers a fine selection of tracks, from "Love Canal" to "Sex Bomb" to "Life" to "Flipper Blues." (Locales include San Francisco, New York, Toronto, Washington, DC, and Los Angeles.) The obnoxious onstage patter only adds to the mind-boggling raucous entertainment.

Shatter's death in December 1987 (from a heroin overdose) ended Flipper's on-again-off-again existence once and for all, but didn't stanch the vinyl flow. Sex Bomb Baby! compiles all of Flipper's singles (six sides) and tracks from sampler albums, going as far back as the group's 1979 recorded debut on Subterranean's first release, the SF Underground collection. The cassette adds three live tracks from the 1980 Live at Target compilation; limited quantities of the album contain Bruce Lose's solo single as a bonus.

Any Three Initials, a Shatter side project, was recorded in 1986. Joined by three local musicians (two from the band Bad Posture), Shatter is the lyricist and singer on A3I's Ruins of America, a varied album of country music, dirge-rock, PiL-esque anti-pop and other related styles, with subject matter as diverse as meteoric conditions and humanist philosophy. When the going gets rough, the ghost of Flipper rises from the platter; other tracks might be by anybody but that group.

Shatter and Flipper drummer Steve DePace were in a pre-Flipper band called Negative Trend, which released the four-song We Don't Play, We Riot, recorded in 1978, on Subterranean. [jy/i]

FLOAT UP CP

See Rip Rig + Panic.

FLOOR KISS

See Bush Tetras.

ROSIE FLORES

See iScreamin' Sirens!

FLOUR

See Breaking Circus, Rifle Sport.

KLAUS FLOURIDE

See Dead Kennedys.

FLOWERS

See Icehouse.

FLOY JOY

Into the Hot (nr/Virg.n) 1984

Weck in the Presence of Beauty (nr/Virg.n) 1986 •

Don Was produced both of this English dance-music trio's LPs, giving it a full-blown wash of horns, synthesized strings and other high-tech keys to commercial success. On Into the Hot, brothers Shaun and Michael Ward (with assistance from Monsieur Was and guests) churn out their music with ease and style, allowing Carroll Thompson's swell, big voice to dominate the record.

Thompson and Shaun Ward subsequently bailed out (resurfacing a few years later in a group called Everyday People) leaving hornman Michael Ward to draft singer Desy Campbell and bassist/drum programmer/co-writer Robert E. Clarke and put together a new all-male Floyd Joy. The second LP is more appealing for its material (the title track—which received fine treatment in a 1987 cover by Alison Moyet—is excellent) than its occasionally sterile Was-oriented dance-soul-funk performances.

[i]

FLUID

Punch n Judy (Rayon) 1986 •

Clear Black Paper (Sub Pop) 1988 •

Roadmouth (Sub Pop) 1989 •

Glue EP (Sub Pop) 1990 •

Formed from a pair of prominent Denver punk groups, Fluid sets to reviving the Stooges and MC5 (minus the outlook and outrage) and reliving '60s garage-punk and folk-rock on its raunchy-sounding self-produced debut. Punch n Judy benefits from the quintet's obvious knowledge of Creem's classics, but the twin-guitar attack and John Robinson's vocals are neither retro-cool nor distinctive, and the haphazard song-writing rarely yields anything memorable.

Adding Grand Funk, the Amboy Dukes and Alice Cooper to its stylistic reference library, Fluid updates punchy riff-based guitar rock with a measured dose of post-punk noise on Clear Black Paper (the CD and cassette of which also contain Punch n Judy). Caught indecisively between the past and the present, the LP cruises along on a fairly even keel with only limited success. Try as they might, the band's best efforts—simply functional songs like "Cold Outside," "Try, Try, Try" and "It's My Time"—just don't pack enough sonic power to ignite.

Producer Jack Endino fixed that problem on the geometrically more intense Roadmouth, sharpening up a wailing knife of dual guitars over which Robinson snarls tensely controlled vocals with real conviction. Besides significantly better playing, Fluid comes up with greatly improved '60s-derived material: "Ode to Miss Lodge," "Twisted & Pissed" and the monumental "Fool's Rule."

The six-song Glue (which has Roadmouth added to its cassette and CD) cranks the Fluid motor even more. Starting with a spectacular cover of a little-known Troggs' song ("Our Love Will Still Be There") that kicks out the Jams with charging neo-mod catchiness, producer Butch Vig captures up a buzzing punky blitz, pouring flammable Fluid across the entire audio spectrum and igniting it with cool tunes like "Black Glove" and the hooky "Pretty Mouse."

[i]

FLUX OF PINK INDIANS

Neu Smell EP (nr/Crass) 1981 (nr/One Little Indian) 1987

Strive to Survive (Causeing Least Suffering Possible

(nr/Spiderleg) 1982 (nr/One Little Indian) 1987 •

The Fucking Cunts Treat Us Like Pricks (nr/Spiderleg)

1984 (nr/One Little Indian) 1987 •

FLUX

Uncarved Block (nr/One Little Indian) 1986 •

Instead of the near-literate (and proud of it) hedonistic roughneckism of some hardcore outfits, this quartet (originally affiliated with the Crass organization and later the proprietor of the commercially potent One Little Indian label) is one of the semi-intellectual, fiercely political bands who use stripped-down guitar punk as the medium for their strong leftist and/or anarchist views. Besides the bracing intensity of their music, Flux has always distinguished itself for impressive packaging standards—Strive to Survive boasts a snazzy twelve-page booklet and a dignified gatefold jacket.

The band has a good deal of punchy precision to its crisp drumming and distorted-chord guitar. The catch is that it's all sort of military, as in the way the tuneless vocals resemble the bark of a drill instructor. Like the graphics, these "melodies" and lyrics (not to mention the politics) are all black and white, and aside from the sterility inherent in preaching to the converted, Flux's monochromatic asceticism is ultimately numbing.

The Neu Smell reissue—solid np-snooring protest punk on a stylishly dressed, loud'n'clear 12-inch—puts the three horrible drum-noise'n'screaming tracks from the 1984 "Taking a Liberty" single on the flipside.

Eliminating punk and reducing the political content, Flux's original and often fascinating Uncarved Block leans a bit towards the industrial world, alternating muscular mid-tempo rock (which boasts atmosphere and melody for a change) and bizarre free-form ambient improvisations, in which drums pound as instrumental blasts and distorted sound effects leap in and out of the sparse mix.

[jg/i]

FLYBOYS

See Choir Invisible.

FLYING COLOR

Flying Color (Grifter-Frontier) 1987

HECTOR

Hector (Cryptovision) 1988

Though hardly revivalist, the first LP by this Bay Area quartet abounds with unrepentant Beatlephilia, with generous servings of ringing choruses, exquisite guitar splashes and endearingly ragged harmonies. Sweetly stunning sensitive-but-not-wimpy pop-rock items like "Dear Friend" and "One Saturday" stand out, but Flying Color is equally adept with rock songs ("I'm Your Shadow," "Believe Believe"). Unfortunately, guitarist Richard Chase—author and singer of the memorably melancholic "It Doesn't Matter" and "Bring Back the Rain"—jumped ship shortly after this album was finished, and Flying Color apparently dissolved.

Bassist Hector Penalosa's solo effort—on New York's Cryptovision label, which had released Flying

Color's debut single—includes contributions from Chase and Flying Color drummer John Stuart (who sings lead on one song), but Penalosa handles virtually all of the remaining instruments himself. For the most part, this immensely likable effort offers a less rocking version of Flying Color's sweetly melancholy jangle. But the whooping rocker "Northwest Trip" and the haunting violin-dominated instrumental "Manuela" (both curiously buried on Side Two) indicate that there's more to Hector than just power pop. Here's hoping his departure won't keep Flying Color from fulfilling the promise of this debut. [hd]

FLYING LIZARDS

The Flying Lizards (Virgin) 1979

Fourth Wall (nr/Virgin) 1981

Top Ten (nr/Statik) 1984 •

DAVID CUNNINGHAM

Grey Scale (nr/Piano) 1980

Led by pianist David Cunningham, the Flying Lizards started as (and largely continued to be) a novelty group that took classic rock songs and reduced them to parody with neo-Kraftwerk synthesizer minimalism and robotic deadpan vocal readings (as epitomized on the eponymous debut album by "Summertime Blues" and "Money"). The serious work shows Cunningham leaning towards the arty high-tech drone of Tangerine Dream, though, and that suffers from comparison with the inspired lunacy of the comedy turns.

Fourth Wall attempts to evolve a happy medium, with helpers including New Yorkers Pat Palladin and Peter Gordon and new-jazz artist Steve Beresford. Cunningham moves uneasily between electro-pop and trance music (as in Steve Reich and Philip Glass). Well-produced and interesting as individual songs, but it fails to jell as an album.

He attempts strictly serious music on Grey Scale, improvising on the piano by allowing the course of the music to be altered by random outside events. Though the technique derives from John Cage, the result falls closer to Reich and Terry Riley.

Following a long layoff, the Lizards returned in 1984 with Top Ten, another wacky album of demented rock-'n-roll revisionism, this time assaulting the songwriting of Little Richard, Jimi Hendrix, James Brown, Leonard Cohen, Larry Williams and others. Purists and musical conservatives will find this impossible; keep an open mind and forget about the originals, and you'll be amazed at Cunningham's arcane wit and inventive dissection/reconstruction skill. [sg/i]

F MACHINE

See Simon F.

FOC

See Flag of Convenience.

FOETUS INC.

Sink (Self Immolation-Wax Trax!) 1990 •

YOU'VE GOT FOETUS ON YOUR BREATH

Deaf (nr/Self Immolation) 1981

Ache (nr/Self Immolation) 1982

SCRAPING FOETUS OFF THE WHEEL

Hole (Self Immolation-ZE-PVC) 1984 •

Nail (Self Immolation-Some Bizzare-Homestead) 1985 •

WISEBLOOD

Dirtish (K.422-Some Bizzare-Relativity) 1986 •

FOETUS ALL-NUDE REVIEW

Bedrock EP (Self Immolation-Some Bizzare-Relativity) 1987

CLINT RUIN/LYDIA LUNCH

Stinkfist EP (Widowspeak) 1988 •

FOETUS INTERRUPTUS

Thaw (nr/Self Immolation-Some Bizzare) 1988 •

Rife (no label) 1989

Thank goodness for rock'n'roll—otherwise, what hope would there be for people like Jim Thirlwell (aka Clint Ruin, Scraping Foetus off the Wheel, Foetus Uber Frisco, Phillip and His Foetus Vibrations, You've Got Foetus on Your Breath, Foetus Art of Terrorism, etc.)? Although enormously talented and possessed of a wide and masterful sonic palette, it's virtually impossible to pin down just what the Australian-born/English-launched New Yorker does. Suffice it to say his projects are all characterized by violence, intensity, irreverence, abrasion, unpredictability and an incredible grasp of music-making's never-ending possibilities to disturb.

The only thing to do with Hole, Foetus' first American release, is to jump in and pray you survive. The LP has a little of everything: industrial cacophony ("Clothes Hoist"), high political drama ("I'll Meet You in Poland Baby"), spare crypto-blues ("Sick Man"), demented surf music ("Satan Place"), something sick built on a swing beat ("Water Torture"), the Batman theme and lots more. Played at a confusion level that makes Christmas Eve at K-Mart seem placid, the cadences would do Test Dept. proud and the lyrics might upset Frank Zappa. Simply put, you've never heard anything like this before. (The album's US edition adds a bonus disc containing all four songs from 1985 12-inch singles by You've Got Foetus on Your Breath and Foetus Uber Frisco plus a rare compilation track.)

Nail is another delicious voyage into Foetus' fevered world. From the soundtrack-styled opening ("Theme from Pigdom Come"), through a generally cinematized concept collection of high-octane rants—sort of Birthday Party with a sense of humor meets latter-day Pink Floyd—Foetus goes about his usual business, layering sound on sound, insult on injury. An apparently nonexistent instrumental entitled "!" is the LP's definitive existential high point, but such vehement audio orgies as "The Throne of Agony" and the '40s-jazzy "Descent into the Inferno" provide plenty clever lyrical competition.

Wiseblood is a duo of Clint Ruin and ex-Swan/producer Roli Mosimann, assisted on Dirtish by Robert Quine, Hahn Rowe of Hugo Largo, Norman Westberg of the Swans and Phoebe Legere. While the pair shares music writing chores (thereby diluting Foetus' awesome power), leaving Ruin in charge of words and vocals ensures that the familiar growled litany of sexually charged insanity will be as damaging to the psyche as ever. (What does "The Fudge Punch" suggest to you?) So if the LP lacks a full load of explosive Foetus audio dynamite, there's more than enough ugliness and venom here to obliterate a roomful of hoodlums.

The title track of Bedrock (most assuredly not about Fred and Wilma's hometown) fills one side of the EP and plays at 45 rpm; the four crunching rants on the back run at 33. "Diabolus Musica" and "Shut" are really one slow-starting instrumental that revs up to noise concrète (complete with machine guns, metallic clangs and animal noises) strong enough to peel layers off a boulder at a hundred paces; meanwhile, the vituperative and deliciously vulgar "Bedrock" (and its alternate take, "Bedrock Strip") is a guttural Tom Waits-like swing rap sneered over acoustic bass and bongos. One version adds horns and a backing chorus; both feature an industrial-strength rusty-door guitar solo.

Clint Ruin, Lydia Lunch and a host of celebrity percussion-pounders whip up a rhythm riot on the title track of Stinkfist as the happy couple chant the title and make halfhearted sex noises. "Meltdown," the EP's other main track, is a three-part Lunch recital accompanied by a full-scale rock attack and such Ruinous sound effects as car crashes, foghorns and violin scrapings. Unfortunately, nothing in the grooves is half as striking as the record's copulatory cover.

Broiling up an explosive sonic smorgasbord in a free-fire zone, Foetus completely outdoes himself on Thaw, an album so intense that it makes his previous platters seem like tune-ups. His arsenal here includes machine guns, clanging industrial percussion, a symphony orchestra and virulent lyrics about suitably violent subject matter spewed out in a voice so shredded it would give Freddy Krueger the willies. Unpredictably amid the successive pin-you-to-the-wall onslaughts, Foetus drops back and whispers a verse or two over acoustic piano and string bass (or, in one case, sitar and tabla). Oppressive in the most rewarding fashion imaginable, Thaw (which concludes with the charming "A Prayer for My Death") is the score to a film I would be terrified to see.

Following Thaw's release, Thirlwell formed Foetus Corruptus—borrowing Raymond Watts (of the like-minded Pig) and members of Prong and the Swans—and went off to do a European tour, an event documented on the double-LP Rife authorized boot.

The Sink compilation (another two-disc set) digs all the way back to the very beginning (1981's "OKFM," by Foetus Under Glass) in its coverage of the madness that is Foetus, compiling twenty (mostly EP) tracks from all phases of his career. While the set contains some rarities and loads of great music, the odd selection logic reproduces nearly all of Bedrock and both sides of Foetus Art Terrorism's 1984 single ("Calamity Crush" b/w "Catastrophe Crunch"), the latter of which is merely an instrumental scratch remix. [i]

See also Lydia Lunch.

ELLEN FOLEY

Spirit of St. Louis (Cleveland Int'l) 1981

Ellen Foley made other solo albums after gaining fame in the performing company of Meat Loaf, but this one is very different. It was produced by "my boyfriend"—Mick Jones of the Clash—and features his band in toto plus its musical associates (Tymon Dogg, Mickey Gallagher, etc.) as her accompaniment. Additionally, half the songs are new (and otherwise unissued) Strummer/Jones compositions; three others are Dogg's. Coming right after the loose, throwaway feel of Sandinista!, Jones did an about-face and created precious arty backing that strains Foley's vocal talent beyond endurance. Her interpretive abilities disappear under the weight of such screamingly pretentious tripe as "The Death of the Psychoanalyst of Salvador Dali." (What books were those boys reading?) A bizarre Clash footnote. [wk/i]

FOLK DEVILS

Fire and Chrome EP (nr/Karbon) 1985

Goodnight Irony (nr/Situation Two) 1987

KING BLANK

Mouth Off EP (nr/Situation Two) 1988

The Real Dirt (nr/Situation Two) 1988 •

IAN LOWERY GROUP

King Blank To (nr/Situation Two) 1989 (Beggars

Banquet-RCA) 1990 •

Heir to the existential angst of such late-'70s luminaries as John Lydon and Tom Verlaine, England's Ian Lowery (whose first recorded musical strivings were with a late-'70s punk band, the Wall) talk-sings in that wonderfully curdled sneer we've heard a million times before. But few do it as well.

Lowery has had his current moves down pat since the days he fronted the Folk Devils. Goodnight Irony reeks with attitude; the band rocks hard and sullen as Lowery grunts, gasps and snarls. Tracks like "Evil Eye," "English Disease" and "Beautiful Monster" would all seem dumb without his theatrical flair.

Going out on his own under the King Blank moniker, Lowery continued his wicked ways on the three-track Mouth Off, featuring the input of Screaming Blue Messiahs honcho Bill Carter, who produced and played on one song and co-wrote two. With the Messiahs backing him on the title track, Lowery seems newly dangerous, even throwing in a good imitation of a shivering fit.

Lowery then assembled some sympathetic sidemen and turned King Blank into a real band. Mimicking Dylan's Bringing It All Back Home on the cover of The Real Dirt, Lowery broadened his range without any reduction in arrogance. Thanks to his versatile sidemen, he's able to touch on rockabilly, woozy ballads, vicious boogie, a chugging throwback to the Velvet Underground ("Uptight"), even bogus country music ("Bulletproof t," as in crucifix). Nasty and delectable.

Renaming King Blank (with only a drummer change) to give himself star billing, the Ian Lowery Group made its debut with an outstanding album. King Blank To features harsh, clanging guitars, unpleasantly throbbing beats and an avalanche of knotty, clenched-fist lyrics from the uptight Mr. L. High points: the ominous "A Kind of Loathing" ("The only help that I'd give you is to hand you your pills/And close your eyes when you're gone"), the rollicking "Never Trust Me" ("Crack that bottle Jack and we'll kill this rage in our souls") and other sagas of revenge and regret. [jy]

DREDD FOOLE AND THE DIN

Eat My Dust Cleanse My Soul [tape] (Religious) 1984

(Homestead) 1985

Take off Your Skin (PVC) 1987

Pseudonymous singer Dredd Foole (Dan Ireton) was a longtime friend and musical associate of the Mission of Burma; the Bostonian borrowed that group, redubbed it the Din and had it back him on an early single. Volcano Suns—a Burma offshoot—fulfilled the same role on Eat My Dust, originally released on cassette but reissued on vinyl. Recorded live to two-track and including covers of the Doors' "People Are Strange," the Animals' "I'm Crying" and Iggy's "I Got a Right," the LP reveals Foole to be a tuneless bellow; his wobbly marble-mouthisms fit strangely with the skillfully played demi-punk garage music. Enthusiasm may not be a problem, but melody sure is.

Take off Your Skin, which uses the same Din (Peter Prescott, Jon Williams and Jeff Weigand of Volcano Suns, plus guitarist Kenny Chambers, soon to join Bullet LaVolta), manages to make something more listenable out of Ireton's devolved oral emissions. By noising up the music and harnessing a more controlled singing style, the LP hits a workable—almost Crampsian—equilibrium that's plug ugly but bracing in its forceful post-punk courage. [i]

See also Mission of Burma, Volcano Suns.

FOOL KILLERS

See True West.

FOOLS

Sold Out (EMI America) 1980

Heavy Mental (EMI America) 1981

World Dance Party (PVC) 1985

Wake Up ... It's Alive!!! (PVC) 1988 •

After an auspiciously flip debut—"Psycho Chicken," the hysterical barnyard parody of Talking Heads' "Psycho Killer"—Boston's Fools proved to be neither funny (intentionally or otherwise) nor musically enthralling on either Sold Out or Heavy Mental, despite the best efforts of accomplished producers (Pete Solley and Vini Poncia, respectively). After several years of national-scene silence, the Fools returned with World Dance Party in 1985, sporting a half-new lineup and a bit of sunny cowpoke vapidly called "Life Sucks ... Then You Die."

The club-rocking live album, recorded in Boston in early 1987 by the same humorless but competent quartet, includes terrible versions of "Mack the Knife" and "The Sound [sic] of Silence" along with equally enthralling originals, almost none drawn from prior albums. [i]

FOOLS DANCE

See Cure.

FOR AGAINST

Echelons (Independent Project) 1987

December (Independent Project) 1988 •

In the Marshes EP (Independent Project) 1990

For Against are one of the best new American bands of the late '80s, but that's a secret the US new music public has yet to discover, possibly because the trio hails from the unlikely mecca of Lincoln, Nebraska. Although obviously influenced by the UK post-Joy Division sound, For Against add their own distinct ripple; singer Jeffrey Runnings' frantic bass and Greg Hill's charging drums are unusual for such atmospheric music. Yet all through Echelons, the echoed sound of guitarist Harry Dingman arouses a berserk fireworks show careening like a thousand power drills. Pin it to the non-stop rhythm section and Runnings' boyishly sweet catchy pop voice, and For Against are a waterfall of sound. When the tempo slows down, they draw you in like a hypnotist, as on the tantalizing six-minute closer, "Broke My Back."

December is a stunner, a high-water mark for UK-inspired American music. Dingman pulls out all the stops for a neo-psychedelic spiderweb of sound. Runnings' bass lines are also more forceful, well supported by Hill's Stewart Copeland-on-speed bashing, a pulsing drive marked by rapid cymbal rolls and floor tom flourishes. There's greater scope, too, from the slow doorbell chime of "The Effect," the moody, emotional collapse of the title track and the brave despair of "The Last Laugh" to the exciting arousal of "Clandestine High Holy" and "Stranded in Greenland." A remarkable and ambitious effort.

In the Marshes is a 10-inch artifact of 1986 demos. Predating both albums, these six tracks bear little relation to their manic pop thrill (especially with Hill supplanted by a no-frills drum machine). Attempting a 4AD-style chamber atmosphere, For Against succeeds only twice, on the bitter "Purgatory Salesman" and the spindly "Amnesia."

Dingman and Hill departed in '89 to form the Millions, while Runnings has switched to guitar and recruited three new For Against members. [jr]

FORGOTTEN REBELS

This Ain't Hollywood ... (Can. Star) 1983

In Love with the System (Can. Star) 1984

The Pride and the Disgrace (Can. Other People's Music) 1985

Surfin' on Heroin (Restless) 1988 •

(Untitled) (Restless) 1989 •

CHRIS HOUSTON AND THE SEX MACHINE

Hate Filled Man (Can. Caucasian) 1986

Ridiculous but fun, these Ontario glam punks lead off their first LP with a buzz-saw version of Gary Glitter's "Hello Hello" and then blast a perfect merseybeat melody into the Ramonized present. Elsewhere, they cover "Eve of Destruction," go "Surfin' on Heroin" and vent their frustration about the balance of rock trade in "England Keep Yer Stars." Throughout, singer Mickey DeSadist fights off an overactive echo chamber as the other three Rebels pound out efficient wall-of-guitar punk.

The second LP finds the revamped Rebels in a much more aggressive mood, cursing a lot and resembling Sham 69 on shoutalong choruses like "Bomb the Boats and Feed the Fish" and "In Love with the System." In spots, DeSadist affects an outdated Johnny Rotten voice. The subject matter is similarly well-trod: "Rich and Bored," "Elvis Is Dead," "The Punks Are Alright" (rewriting the Who's "Kids Are Alright"). Also, the playing is fancier, with dynamics and arrangements that often resemble early Clash. It's a weird mixture: pop-punk/straight punk. Not very inventive, but a highly enjoyable throwback.

A new gang of Rebels (DeSadist and guitarist Mike Mirabella are still in charge) cropped up in 1988 with an American album containing all-new recordings of previously released songs. Surfin' on Heroin retreats "Bomb the Boats," "Elvis Is Dead," "I'm in Love with the System" and others, adding a couple of topical new compositions (like "A.I.D.S.") for good measure. The vibrant, loud punk-rock sound recalls the Dead Boys or Generation X; low-brow/high-energy songwriting that crosses the Monkees with the Ramones gives the Rebels a solid basis for their polite blow-torch assault. If a total lack of originality can be excused, Surfin' on Heroin is a big fun date. But who played the organ?

DeSadist (now spelled DeSadest) is the only original Rebel on (Untitled). The material is as derivative and uneven as ever, but a capable new guitarist (Jeffrey Dee) and crisp, roaring sound give the LP a powerful charge. Over the course of this zany set, the quartet delves into Bowiesque glam ("Wild Eyed Darlin'"), gets a good fix on Johnny Thunders ("The Girl Can't Come"), trashes Tommy Roe's "Dizzy" and parodies Johnny Cash in the offensively vulgar "I Gotta Axe." Capping off the silliness is "Science Fiction Double Feature," a dumb name-check of B-movie stars. The (Untitled) CD also contains the Surfin' on Heroin LP.

Bassist Chris Houston—who went under the name Pogo Àù Go Go on In Love with the System—put his own dixieland version of "Surfing on Heroin" on Hate Filled Man, a casual solo outing (with a wacky astro-turf cover!) that followed his departure from the Rebels. But that song is all that connects the two career phases. Houston exercises his cultural misanthropy in a mixture of rudimentary studio tracks and even simpler solo live performances that have nothing in common with glam punk except the fear of conventionalism. From the woody blend of trumpet, piano, simple drums and bass on "Ecstasy of Ignorance" to the tremolo electric guitar ravings of "Baby Jesus Looks Like Elvis" to the funky rock of "Negative Groove," Houston demonstrates a quick wit and enough musical skill to make this strange album more than a little entertaining. [i]

ROBERT FORSTER

See Go-Betweens.

FORTUNATE SONS

See Barracudas.

45 GRAVE

Sleep in Safety (Enigma) 1983

Autopsy (Restless) 1987 •

Only the Good Die Young (Restless) 1989 •

SILVER CHALICE

Evil Birds EP (XES) 1985

CELEBRITY SKIN

Celebrity Skin EP (Triple X) 1990 •

Los Angeles' 45 Grave were the leaders of the 1981 death-rock explosion that also birthed, among others, Christian Death and Dance with Me-era TSOL. The group was a breath of fresh graveyard air and, unlike many serious gloomsters, always kept tongue firmly in cinematic cheek. Playing with punky venom and a slick metallic sound (the goth-horror edge made it an absolutely prescient mix), the fearsome foursome (later a quintet) was led by Phoenix-bred guitarist Paul B. Cutler and his vampiric inamorata, vocalist Mary "Dinah Cancer" Sims, rounded out by ex-Germes drummer Don Bolles and bassist Rob Graves (Ritter), also a member of the Bags and Gun Club.

The legendary "Black Cross"/"Wax" single and three cuts on the seminal Hell Comes to Your House compilation inaugurated 45 Grave's career in '81, establishing the blend of Cutler's crisp, offbeat riffing and Cancer's artless, icy shrieks. By the time their first album shambled in, Paul Roessler had joined, adding his effervescent keyboards into the macabre brew. The consistently creepy Sleep in Safety contains most of the band's best songs: multi-textured creations like "Insurance from God," "Dream Hits" and "Phantoms" (an '82 single), the catchy "Evil," a delightfully unexpected Ventures-like instrumental ("Surf Bat"), the giddy "45 Grave" theme song and a fist-waving anthem ("Partytime," redone the following year as the B-side to a snazzy version of Alice Cooper's "School's Out").

By '85, Cutler and Cancer had split, effectively ending the band. Cutler went on to a prominent and influential career as a record producer and session player, and joined Dream Syndicate in 1986. Autopsy was commissioned to fill in some gray areas, mainly documenting early, punky material: the first single, demo versions of later hits, a hilarious compilation track ("Riboflavin-flavored, Non-carbonated, Polyunsaturated Blood") and nine previously unreleased songs.

Meanwhile, Graves and Bolles formed Silver Chalice with producer/guitarist Geza X; the group also included a guitar-playing songwriter and poppy singer Kim Komet. Despite the name and crypto-metal artwork, the quintet's one EP (released on Geza's label) is surprisingly unthreatening and unpunky, a small-scale rock-pop effort with neither style nor personality.

A few years later, 45 Grave began doing irregular West Coast reunion tours. The full-length Only the Good Die Young captures an '88 Hollywood gig with ace sound quality. The invigorated original quartet shreds through all the big numbers and a bevy of entrancing new songs, including "Sorceress," "Akira Raideen," the rib-tickling "Fucked by the Devil" and a surreal version of Dave Brubeck's jazz classic "Take Five" (the jumping-off point for a psychedelized Cutler solo interlude). Ritter died of an OD in 1990.

Bolles' current outfit, Celebrity Skin, comes on like a high-octane mix of early Cheap Trick, Hanoi Rocks and the Dickies. The three-song (four on CD) Celebrity Skin EP offers two doses of humorous hard pop with a snaky glam edge ("Monster" and Abba's reliable "S.O.S.") and a filler metallic instrumental ("Clown Scare"). Nice try. [i/gef]

See also D.C.3, Dream Syndicate, Pat Ruthen-Smeat, Thelonious Monster.

FOUNDATION

Voyage (Fartblossom Enterprises) 1986

Tied Up with a Monkey (DSI) 1988

For proof that underground music thrives outside of big cities, consider the Washington, DC, suburb of Reston, Virginia, a planned community originally built by the Mobil Corporation. One of a fine array of young bands that exist there, distinct from their DC peers, Foundation explores a thoughtful punk/rock hybrid with some interesting twists.

Recorded as a quartet, the 23-minute Voyage mini-album includes "Winter Vision," an instrumental that treads dangerously close to a '70s wizards and warlocks sound, as well as some above-average rockers ("Halfway to 50," "It's Not as Bad") and the title track, a mixture of pop-punk and new wave cheesiness that is somewhat reminiscent of a certain Psychedelic Furs song. Foundation's bassist, lead guitarist and drummer each share lead vocal duties, sacrificing continuity but adding variety to a set of songs that might otherwise go stale.

After a lineup change, the trio wound up on a Virginia label, which released the remarkably mature Tied Up with a Monkey. Intricate punky rockers like "Emo O.D." and "Walking on Stilts" are great tracks, as is the band's theme song, "Foundation." A hardcore sendup ("Must You Keep Us Awake with Your Constant Urinating") and a cover of the Byrds' "The World Turns All Around Her" are also worth hearing. [icm]

4 SKINS

The Good, the Bad & the 4 Skins (nr/Secret) 1982

A Fistful of 4 Skins (nr/Syndicate) 1983

From Chaos to 1984 (nr/Syndicate) 1984

The Wonderful World of the 4 Skins: The Best of the 4 Skins (nr/Link) 1987

A Few 4 Skins More Volume 1 (nr/Link) 1987

A Few 4 Skins More Volume 2 (nr/Link) 1987

Live and Loud!!! (nr/Link) 1989

One of the mainstays of second-wave Brit-punk, London's harsh and serious 4 Skins—not as intense as Crass, but far more earnest than Sham 69—endured major lineup changes (they went through four lead singers including, at one point, the quartet's manager) long enough to record three albums in the early '80s.

The studio side of The Good, the Bad & the 4 Skins starts out with a delightful ska-beat tune ("Plastic Gangsters") and then turns angry skinhead generic for shoutalongs like "Justice" and "Yesterdays Heroes." The seven-song live side is equally forbidding (Panther's vocals are especially unpleasant).

With only bassist Hoxton Tom remaining from the first LP, A Fistful of 4 Skins moderates a more musical punk sound that makes adequate material (the group's lyrics are actually pretty sharp) easy to take but hard to remember. Packaged in one sleeve, the first two albums were later reissued in toto as A Few 4 Skins More Volume 1.

The 4 Skins' last release before splitting in late '84 was the live From Chaos to 1984, recorded in a studio before an audience of invited friends. That album comprises one disc of the double A Few 4 Skins More Volume 2; the other is a rarities compilation of the group's earliest efforts, B-sides and other obscure ephemera for the hardcore hardcore. The sixteen-track Wonderful World retrospective collects up a definitive sampling of singles, album cuts and compilation contributions. [i]

BRUCE FOXTON

Touch Sensitive (Arista) 1984

Although he was one-third of an ultra-successful band, Foxtton had to try and relaunch his career virtually from ground zero after Paul Weller bagged the Jam in 1982. Surprisingly, the bassist's first solo album is quite good, and happily free of any attempt to recapture the sound which made him a star. With a four-man band and a bunch of guests, Foxtton sings and plays ten original tunes in a number of styles, from busy dance-rock to wistful big-production pop. Throughout, he adapts his bluff voice as best he can; ingenuous earnestness is a strong suit. The lyrics regularly mention loss, individual responsibility and uncertainty—it's obvious the Jam's end was a traumatic experience—but Touch Sensitive is a promising (albeit unsuccessful) new beginning for a sincere, talented performer. [i]

See also Jam.

JOHN FOX

Metamatic (nr/Metal Beat-Virgin) 1980

John Foxx (Can. Virgin) 1981

The Garden (nr/Metal Beat-Virgin) 1981

The Golden Section (nr/Metal Beat-Virgin) 1983

In Mysterious Ways (nr/Metal Beat-Virgin) 1985 •

After three albums as lead vocalist, John Foxx (Dennis Leigh) left Ultravox to pursue a solo career. A prime factor in the group's original sound, Foxx was, by extension, a major influence on the new romantic movement that followed in its wake. Fortunately, both Ultravox and Foxx solo continued to make music of quality and distinction.

Metamatic is Foxx's first venture alone into the world of synthesizers, Ultravox's subsequent instrument of choice. In emulation of his own work and Conny Plank's production on Ultravox's Systems of Romance, Foxx (aided by another synthesist and a bassist) finds the perfect counterpart for his themes of alienation and dislocation in sterile, minimalist electronic sounds. His vocals are oddly distant, like echoes, but the record has an honesty and directness that are quite affecting. (John Foxx is a Canadian compilation that rearranges a number of songs from Metamatic.)

The Garden is a lush, thick paean to Foxx's catholicism and the mysticism that has always lurked beneath his austere urbanity. Pastoral in tone, the album flourishes under a denser sound, replete with acoustic instruments that offset the onslaught of synthesizers. Foxx's themes remain the same, which is good, and his songwriting and flair for imagery reach new peaks on masterpieces like "Europe After the Rain" and "Walk Away," which provide melancholic views of familiar, mysterious worlds.

Co-produced by Foxx and Zeus B. Held, The Golden Section has a bizarrely Beatlesque sound on several tracks, mildly resembling the Fab Four's late-career psychedelia. Foxx is his usual enigmatic, inventive self, spinning moody creations that neatly sidestep synthesizer clichés; the only flaw is in his dramatic vocals. “Endlessly” (also a single) is the album’s clear standout, a magnificent multi-level pop creation that parallels Foxx’s former group’s development while clearly displaying a character all his own. The cassette version has six extra tracks.

In Mysterious Ways deals largely in romantic clichés (e.g., “Stars on Fire,” “This Side of Paradise”)—in some cases the title’s even the dominant lyric!—and the bombast quotient is sometimes heightened by overuse of female backing vocals (girl-groupy on “Enter the Angel,” gossily on “This Side of Paradise”). But Foxx’s earnest, electro-rock casanova charm somehow makes it work. From the dance-rock of “What Kind of Girl” to the Astral Weeks-iness of “Morning Glory,” the mix may not be all that original, but it’s still consistently entertaining. [sg/i/jg]

See also Ultravox.

FRANK CHICKENS

We Are Frank Chickens (nr/Kaz) 1984

The Best of Frank Chickens [CD] (nr/Kaz) 1987 •

Get Chickenized (nr/Flying Lecords) 1987 •

Club Monkey (nr/Flying Lecords) 1989 •

The two Japanese women (Kazuko Hohki, Kazumi Taguchi) who comprise Frank Chickens are both proud of and amused by their country’s diverse cultural contributions to the world. On one hand, the debut album pays tribute to Ninja warriors and emotional Enka ballads, but the duo also sings with mock reverence on “Mothra,” named for a classic low-budget monster movie. Lyrics and liner notes are both hilarious and/or absurd (see “Shellfish Bamboo”). Musically mixing synth-pop (created in the main by the English writing/production team of Steve Beresford and David Toop) with funk and jazz, the Chickens also incorporate Japanese musical traditions. Very entertaining.

Taguchi became an ex-Chicken and was replaced by Atsuko Kamura prior to Get Chickenized. Lyrics are even more preposterously campy than before, this time dealing mostly with observations of, and experiences with, Western culture. “Yellow Toast” concerns being a hip but exploited flavor-of-the-month in England: “You think we are full of Zen/But we prefer lots of yen/We are stupid little Japs/And you are splendid English chaps.” Other songs are not as bitter and sarcastic as that, instead addressing subjects ranging from non-sensical Japanese lessons to female wrestling. The premature fifteen-track Best of Frank Chickens draws from the debut LP and early 45s.

Always in danger of being viewed strictly as a novelty act, Frank Chickens manage to avoid such trappings by remaining uniquely bizarre. Club Monkey tells a story about “Monkey People” who eat dogs as a drug and burn dead bodies so they can revive them as ghosts. After repression by the English squashes these time-honored traditions, they plot a revolution, to be led by a kung fu movie star. Got that? There might be something in there about animal rights; if so, it’s a lot more amusing than a similar message from Morrissey. Musically, the Chickens offer the same oddball mélange as earlier albums, and the lyrics are as farcical as ever. [dgs]

FRANKIE GOES TO HOLLYWOOD

Welcome to the Pleasuredome (ZTT-Island) 1984 •

Liverpool (ZTT-Island) 1986 •

HOLLY JOHNSON

Blast (Uni) 1989 •

Hallelujah EP (nr/MCA) 1990 •

Dreams That Money Can’t Buy (nr/MCA) 1991 •

PAUL RUTHERFORD

Oh World (4th & B’way) 1989 •

In one of rock’s most spectacular hypes (certainly the greatest since Malcolm McLaren first perpetrated the Pistols swindle), Frankie Goes to Hollywood—a minor hi-NRG dance outfit with genealogically fascinating origins in the ‘70s Liverpool scene—became a highly controversial and enormously successful UK chart phenomenon in 1984, thanks to the combined talents of producer Trevor Horn and critic-turned-propagandist Paul Morley, via their ZTT label. The blatant homoerotic of “Relax” got Frankie banned on English radio while the leather-bar setting of its accompanying video earned them similar turndowns on television. “Two Tribes,” an inchoate condemnation of the nuclear threat, complete with thundering dancebeat, continued the band’s phenomenal rise. Having reached dizzying heights via what seemed like dozens of remixes of the two songs, all that remained for the icon of a million clever T-shirts was to record an album. And (thanks to the uncredited musical skills of former Ian Dury sidemen, it was later revealed) make one—or, precisely, two—they did.

Welcome to the Pleasuredome has four sides of the Frankies in all their artificial/superficial glory. From the hits (the two pre-LP singles plus “War” and “Welcome to the Pleasuredome”) to the pits (“Ferry Cross the Mersey,” “Do You Know the Way to San Jose,” “The Power of Love”), Frankie say, “We may not be able to do it ourselves, but when you care enough you get the very best to cover for us.” A brilliant load of bullshit, served with as much panache—marketing and musical—as the 1980s could muster.

It proved increasingly difficult for the pseudo-group to even appear to work together harmoniously, and the prospects of a second album seemed remote. Nonetheless, Liverpool was eventually cobbled together and issued: eight long songs that mimic the sound but possess none of the Oz-like glory that was Frankie. With the golden goose laying nothing but plastic, the group collapsed in 1987.

After surviving an altogether embarrassing legal altercation with his former label, lead singer Holly Johnson began a solo career, issuing the bland-as-beans Blast with no residual Frankieness (other than a few vocal gimmicks). Clearly more skilled as a songwriter than he will ever be as a vocalist, Johnson provides himself with goodnatured soul-pop-dance tunes (produced by Dan Hartman and others) but lacks the talent and personality to personalize them on record. If David Bowie ever decides to remake Young Americans, he should ask Johnson to return some of these stylistic borrowings. Hollelujah contains half a dozen remixes.

Frankie's other vocalist, Paul Rutherford, shaved off his moustache and stepped into the dance club spotlight with a slick series of shallow neo-soul and house singles, some produced/performed by ABC. A compilation of UK hits and more, Oh World is a routine dance record that reveals Rutherford to have a personably plain voice and no special aptitude for this sort of music. [i]

See also Big in Japan.

FREAKWATER

See Eleventh Dream Day.

FREIHEIT

See Munchener Freiheit.

FRENCH, FRITH, KAISER, THOMPSON

See Henry Kaiser.

FRANK FRENCH AND KEVN KINNEY

See Drivin' n' Cryin'.

DOUG E. FRESH & THE GET FRESH CREW

Oh, My God! (Reality) 1986

The World's Greatest Entertainer (Reality) 1988 ◊

Typical of the fast-moving New York rap scene, these two albums by Doug E. Fresh (Davis)—the original human beatbox, and one of the leading young rhymer to pick up from the original old-schoolers like Grandmaster Flash and Kurtis Blow—sound amazingly quaint after only a few years. Far removed from the strong content and intense beats of the Public Enemy/N.W.A. generation, Fresh runs a moderate course, with a bit of reggae toasting, polite tracks and very little attitude. Originally partnered with Ricky Dee (who later went solo as Slick Rick), Fresh—like nearly all MCs until the late '80s—stuck with 12-inch singles, scoring a 1985 international hit with "The Show (Oh, My God)."

Oh, My God! makes good use of live musicians (trumpeter Jimmy Owens, synthesist Bernard Wright, etc.) and contains an anti-abortion number; The World's Greatest Entertainer also uses real players (including drummer Charlie Drayton), boasts several tracks co-produced by P.E.'s Bomb Squad and ends with a thoughtful rap about visiting Africa. [i]

See also Slick Rick.

FRESHLY WRAPPED CANDIES

I Like You (T.E.C. Tones-Ralph) 1989 •

Mental health professionals know that it's healthy to let the child inside you come out and play every now and then. Freshly Wrapped Candies do it in the recording studio. Most of I Like You sounds either like a polite juvenile version of the Butthole Surfers or kindergarten teachers on acid; even when the musical style is avant-rock vignettes, it gets topped with nonsense lyrics sung in goofball voices. Most of the songs (ranging from just over ten seconds to almost ten minutes) feature only guitars and vocals, but others actually get their titles from their instrumentation, like "Flute(s)" and "Majestic Popular Keyboarding." (Unfortunately, "Voltage Regulator" doesn't fit into that category.) On the down side, several tracks annoyingly emulate a Walkman with dying batteries. Freshly Wrapped Candies' collective elevator might not make it all the way to the top floor, but they do provide goofy, mildly irritating fun in a nicely art-damaged kind of way. But don't play it for your therapist. (The CD contains seven bonus tracks.) [dgs]

FREUR

Doot—Doot (Epic) 1983

Get Us Out of Here (nr/CBS) 1985

UNDERWORLD

Underneath the Radar (Sire) 1988 •

Change the Weather (Sire) 1989 •

An insular and intentionally remote British art-pop band, Freur was originally identified only by an unpronounceable squiggle rather than a proper name. When the gimmicky hubbub subsided, all that was left for posterity was Doot—Doot's title track, four magnificent minutes of lilting, haunting synthesizer ambience with quirky vocals and choral backing.

Freur faded from sight after a second album met with even less response, but four-fifths of the quintet returned in 1988 as the Underworld, an enigmatic but more commercially geared organization. Rupert Hine's production of Underneath the Radar gives it a sturdy dance backbone and the familiar sound of late-'80s British techno-beat; Heaven 17 leaning towards the Thompson Twins. A shade above average with a fair share of ideas and invention, but still nothing to compare with the participants' one extraordinary item.

If singer Karl Hyde were Michael Hutchence, "Change the Weather" would be an INXS single, but the song is not typical of the unchallengingly accessible album named for it. Loudly textured modern rock played on guitars and keyboards, Change the Weather has better vocals, more focus and personality (some of it evidently borrowed from more successful groups) than the Underworld's debut. Presentably chart-worthy without being vile—these days, that's quite a feat. [i]

GAVIN FRIDAY AND THE MAN SEEZER

See Virgin Prunes.

FRIGHTWIG

Cat Farm Faboo (Subterranean) 1984

Faster, Frightwig, Kill! Kill! (Caroline) 1986

Phone Sexy EP (Boner) 1990 •

With songs like "My Crotch Does Not Say Go," "Hot Papa" and "Vagabondage," the women of San Francisco's Frightwig make no bones about their topical focus on Cat Farm Faboo. The provocative lyrics' blunt observations on aspects of love would be more worth considering if not for the band's awful noise, a disorganized tumult of screechy vocals and sloppy guitar droning.

Bolstered by a new member and a soft spot for tempo and harmonic coordination, the quartet got Beefheart sideman Eric Drew Feldman to co-produce and contribute a bit of keyboards to Faster, Frightright (the title a nicely ironic poke at filmmaker Russ Meyer). Playing a moderate form of Flipperesque grind-rock with prominent lumbering bass and guitars that sound like they might be on fire, Frightright puts its satirical outrage (and outrageous satire) to good use in songs like "Punk Rock Jail Bait," "Crazy World" and "American Xpress" (guitarist Susan Miller's bizarre travelogue). Finishing the record on a genuinely tender note, "I Am Here Alone" compresses the band's surging music into a gentle bed of noise, while "Freedom" gets a handsome folksy chorus together for a touching gospelly plea.

By the time Redd Kross' McDonald brothers arrived to produce the six-song Phone Sexy, Frightright had become a trio, with only founding bassist/singer Deanna Ashley and guitarist/singer Rebecca Tucker remaining from the previous lineup. (Sister Double Happiness drummer Lynn Perko completes the package.) Kicking out the hard-rock jams with kitschy chanted vocals and guitar feedback on a remake of "American Xpress," Frightright comes off like Julie Brown doing a heavy metal parody; covering Shonen Knife's "Public Baths" they sound like the Runaways with bigger amplifiers. Is this progress or what? [i]

ROBERT FRIPP

Exposure (EG-Polydor) 1979 (Editions EG) 1985 •

Under Heavy Manners/God Save the Queen

(EG-Polydor) 1980

Let the Power Fall (Editions EG) 1981 •

The League of Gentlemen (EG-Polydor) 1981 + 1985

Network EP (nr/EG) 1985 (EG) 1991 •

ROBERT FRIPP/THE LEAGUE OF GENTLEMEN

God Save the King (Editions EG) 1985 •

ROBERT FRIPP AND THE LEAGUE OF CRAFTY GUITARISTS

Live! (Editions EG) 1986 •

TOYAH & FRIPP

The Lady or the Tiger (Editions EG) 1986 •

SUNDAY ALL OVER THE WORLD

Kneeling at the Shrine (EG) 1991 •

In the last half of a seven-year hiatus between King Crimson, Robert Fripp—self-styled thinking-man's musician and guitarist's guitarist—played axeman/producer to the stars (David Bowie, Peter Gabriel, Blondie, Talking Heads, Brian Eno, Hall and Oates, the Roches) and cut a series of solo LPs reflecting his then-current obsessions.

The loosely autobiographical Exposure is the closest Fripp has come to a pop effort, with guest vocals by Gabriel, Daryl Hall, Peter Hammill and Terre Roche. Interlarded with tape-loop guitar episodes and enigmatic spoken-word communiqués from several sources, the record manages to overcome the self-referential preciousness inherent in such an enterprise—but just barely.

Under Heavy Manners/God Save the Queen offers two concepts for the price of one; both, unfortunately, are flops. The first half gets "Frippertronics" off to a bad start with a suite of samey, lackluster performances. It was Eno who showed Fripp this two-tape-recorder strategy that allows accumulation of rich textures. In performance, Fripp would build towering edifices of looped guitar sound and then spin stunning lead solos over them. The loops remained on tape; the solos didn't, thus the best parts of the concerts that produced God Save the Queen never made it onto the record. Under Heavy Manners, Fripp's first stab at "discotronics" (his version of dance-oriented rock) sounds less austere than impoverished, despite a memorable David Byrne vocal.

The next pair of LPs, continuing Fripp's self-appointed "Drive to 1981," gamely picked up the pieces. Let the Power Fall continues the Frippertronics methodology of God Save the Queen; although both were recorded during the same 1979 tour, this album's loops provide a far greater wealth of sounds, moods and ideas—Fripp's editing skills evidently having improved with time. However, several bootlegs documenting Frippertronics with the leads intact remain definitive, as much as Fripp may detest them.

Harnessing himself and keyboardist Barry Andrews (ex-XTC) to an adequate rhythm section (that included future Gang of Four bassist Sara Lee), Fripp created the one-shot League of Gentlemen band/tour/LP and firmly claimed his dance-rock territory. A typical League cut took a simple medium-to-fast backbeat over which Fripp and Andrews locked horns, with melodic development emerging slowly, surely, subtly. On the 1980 tour, Fripp played marvelous leads, on the LP (whose cover art is, oddly enough, by Danielle Dax), they are replaced by spoken-word in-jokes. God Save the King is a revised, remixed, remastered single-disc distillation of Under Heavy Manners/God Save the Queen and The League of Gentlemen albums.

In the mid-'80s, Fripp founded a guitar school in West Virginia and set about teaching the instrument to disciples in most extraordinary fashion. The all-acoustic League of Crafty Guitarists (his students) album, conceived as an educational challenge and recorded in concert at George Washington University, features seventeen diligent pupils performing pastoral Fripp instrumentals with delicacy and quiet appeal. (The LP does contain one lengthy and alluring Frippertronics piece for good electric measure.) Without the master on hand, some of Fripp's students also recorded New Music for Acoustic Guitar Ensemble, issued on cassette around '89.

Another school project provided the basis for The Lady or the Tiger, wherein Fripp's missus, singer/actress Toyah Willcox (who has an extensive record catalogue of her own, beginning in the late '70s), recites Frank R. Stockton's 1882 story (and its sequel, The Discourager of Hesitancy) over a mild bed of inconspicuous guitar textures composed by Fripp and performed with the League of Crafty Guitarists. Sunday All Over the World is Fripp's new rock band. [mf/i]

See also King Crimson, Shriekback.

FRIPP & ENO

(No Pussyfooting) (Antilles) 1973 (EG) 1981 •
Evening Star (Antilles) 1975 (EG) 1981 •

FRIPP + SUMMERS

I Advance Masked (A&M) 1982
Bewitched (A&M) 1984 •

The two early collaborations between Fripp and ex-Roxy Music muckraker Brian Eno are excursions into effete electronics, with Fripp simply playing his guitar through Eno's synthesizers/tape recorders. The resulting side-long montages of loosely structured sound on the first album are pleasant and recall the work of Terry Riley. Evening Star breaks no new ground; it is more a re-exploration of similar terrain.

What did Fripp and Policeman Andy Summers do on their summer vacations? Using a wide harmonic palette, they recorded I Advance Masked, a duet LP whose primary mood is tranquility, although Fripp the soloist ultimately reveals himself in ecstatic flights of fancy.

As the sequel proved, however, Andy Summers is no Brian Eno. Given another brief reprieve from producing those lighter-than-air guitar textures for the Police, he thickens the mix with electronic muck, leaving little solo space for himself or Fripp, who co-wrote only half the material on Bewitched; the rest is Summers' alone. Maybe they were too busy toying with the synth-pop trappings that dominate the record to bother playing much guitar. [jw/mf]

See also Brian Eno, Andy Summers.

FRED FRITH

Guitar Solos (nr/Caroline) 1974
Gravity (Ralph) 1980 (East Side Digital) 1991 •
Speechless (Ralph) 1981 •
Live in Japan (Jap. Recommended) 1982
Cheap at Half the Price (Ralph) 1983
The Technology of Tears (SST) 1988 •
The Top of His Head (Bel. Crammed) 1990 •
Step Across the Border [CD] (RecRec-East Side Digital) 1990 •
Guitar Solos Complete [CD] (East Side Digital) 1991 •

FRED FRITH ET AL.

Guitar Solos 2 (nr/Caroline) 1976
Guitar Solos 3 (Riff) 1979

If Fred Frith were remembered only for being the guitarist in Henry Cow he would be just another shadowy figure in the history of art-rock. Instead he pursued a unique and influential solo career in the '80s that made its mark on leading avant-gardists worldwide. Frith's sessioning and collaborative work has figured prominently on records by Material, the Golden Palominos, Brian Eno, John Zorn and others. Massacre, his trio with the Material rhythm section, produced an unforgettable powerful record. His duo, Skeleton Crew, beguiled audiences all over the world. He has played and recorded effectively with Voice of America, compiled three early records of avant-guitar playing (Guitar Solos 1, 2 and 3; Complete consists of 1 plus the Frith contributions to 2 and 3) and recorded duet LPs and live tapes of varying quality with Cow drummer Chris Cutler, saxophonist Lol Coxhill, guitarists Henry Kaiser and Rene Lussier and others.

But Frith's most engaging work was for Ralph, the Residents' label. Structurally, the records resemble Henry Cow's early album in that they, like Frith himself, tend not to stay in one place long enough to try the attention span of neophytes. As such they are perfect vehicles for corrupting straitlaced rock'n'rollers into this world of joyful noise, which can include anything from polytonal polyrhythmerama to Eastern European folk tunes to a taped snippet by New York's 13th Street Puerto Rico Summertime Band.

Gravity was recorded with members of several bands, the most substantial contributions coming from Sweden's Zamla and the Maryland-based Muffins (not Martha's). Frith's bass, guitar and violin are prominent, yet merged into a whole that is stronger than its dove-tailed parts, all held together by ingenuity and force of will. Yes, "Dancing in the Streets" is a cover of you-know-what.

Speechless continues the process with a greater emphasis on reeds that should give Henry Cow fans a strong sense of déjà vu—yet Cow never did anything this strong. Many of Frith's melodies are influenced by the same strain of European folk music that inspired Béla Bartók. Helping out are Etron Fou Leloublan on one side and Massacre on the other. (Some of the latter's material has turned up, rearranged, on Massacre's album and during Skeleton Crew gigs.) Endlessly fascinating, this is Frith's best solo record.

Cheap at Half the Price marks not one departure but several. For the first time on a solo album, Frith sings. The songs are edgy whimsy squeezed out in a weird high-pitched tone, except "Same Old Me," whose rough lyrics emerge in a tape-slowed drawl over angry riffing. Much of the record, especially instrumental tracks, suffers from an experiment in recording "at home on a 4-track."

For those ready to graduate from the prog-rock safety of the Ralph platters to something harder and weirder, there's Live in Japan, which captures Frith's "guitars on the table" approach, concentrating not on standard instruments but on homemade ones that are plucked, raked, abraded and assaulted with a variety of objects. The two discs can be bought separately or together in a black corrugated box containing booklets in English and Japanese. A must for noise fans.

Much of Frith's work in the late '80s was oriented towards film and theater scores. The Technology of Tears offers not one but three of Frith's dance-company commissions. Two sides of the double album contain the titular piece, created in 1986 with John Zorn, an occasional scat vocalist and fake-art turntable manipulator Christian Marclay. Although largely a flighty and disjointedly arhythmic effort, parts do coalesce with the arcane logic of Frith's structuralism. The high-strung and disturbing "Jigsaw" (also from '86, with trombonist Jim Staley) and the enticingly diverse episodes of "Propaganda" ('87) each fill a side.

Assembled from enormously varying sources, Step Across the Border is a very bizarre version of a film soundtrack. Besides previously unissued live and studio recordings covering a decade, three continents and countless musical variations, the 26 selections include items from Massacre, Skeleton Crew and Cheap at Half the Price. As such, this is as much a Frith retrospective as it is a new work. But without the movie to connect the dots, it's impossible to discern what internal logic makes these individually intriguing snippets fit together.

[mf/i]

See also Golden Palominos, Henry Cow, Henry Kaiser, Material, Skeleton Crew.

FROGS

The Frogs (Frogs) 1988

It's Only Right and Natural (Homestead) 1989

There is very little, uh, "hard" information available regarding the Frogs. Purported brothers Jimmy and Dennis Fleming were first noted on the "thank you" list for Die Kreuzen's Cows and Beer EP back in '82. Since then, the Milwaukee duo has done a lot of home recording, resulting in two LPs. The first is a curiously out-of-time blend of Anglo-clever pop-clichés, heavily referential to Roy Wood and Sparks but with some unusual Christian/smut lyrics tossed into the stew. That few people noted its release is no great surprise.

Then, according to rumor, the Frogs began to send around cassettes of a similarly appointed second LP, backed with some examples of the pair "goofing around." The latter caught the ear of Gerard Cosloy, then head of Homestead Records, and some of the songs were issued as the Frogs' second LP. Declaring themselves leaders of the "Gay Supremacist" movement, the Flemings/Frogs caused a lot of ruckus with their (presumably) tongue in cheek lyrical thrust. Encased in a sleeve showing a little boy wearing a pink triangle badge, songs like "Been a Month Since I Had a Man" and "These Are the Finest Queen Boys (I've Ever Seen)" generated an enormous amount of pissed-off press, but the crazy Tyrannosaurus Rex-like psychedelia and the weird aura created by the lyrics deserve to be heard. "I've Got Drugs (Out of the Mist)" was certainly among 1989's most played songs at this house. Since the release of It's Only Right and Natural, the Flemings toured once (with Couch Flambeau's Jay Tiller helping out) but have otherwise been silent. More's the pity. [bc]

FRONT 242

Geography (Bel. RRE) 1982 (Wax Trax!) 1987 ●

No Comment EP (Wax Trax!) 1987 ●

Official Version (Wax Trax!) 1987 ●

Back Catalogue (Wax Trax!) 1987 φ

Front by Front (Wax Trax!) 1988 ●

Tyranny for You (Epic) 1991 ●

That avant-garde industrial dance music produced by Belgian art terrorists could compete in the 1991 American mainstream says much for the progress of the digital beat through the '80s. While Front 242's early records (best exemplified by their debut album, Geography) were firmly rooted in the clinically crisp synthesized sound of Kraftwerk and Cabaret Voltaire, the group's initial approach was no more threatening than Depeche Mode.

When Richard 23 joined founding members Daniel Bressanutti, Patrick Codenys and Jean-Luc De Meyer in 1983, however, Front 242's sound began moving away from alternative pop and into harder, trans-European disco garnished with politically relevant samples. A series of 12-inch singles (later assembled with other '82-

'85 material for Back Catalogue) and the six-track mostly instrumental No Comment chronicle this progression, but the music remained stark and controlled; it wasn't until Official Version that Front 242 truly became a distinctive force.

Ranging from the subliminal pop of "Quite Unusual" through the pummelling industrial dance of "Aggresiva Due," mixing up sub-symphonic instrumentation on "Slaughter" and using sampled bible-thumpers to frightening effect on "Angst," Official Version at last captured the band's potential on tape. Having already established a reputation for demonic audio-visual performances, the album helped Front 242 emerge from relative obscurity to become a significant cult force, selling loads of records all over the world.

Front by Front took this confrontational manifesto a logical step further. Images of control, power and war are evident in titles like "Until Death (Us Do Part)" and "Terminal State," and in the frequent use of militaristic beats and samples. But variety again abounds: "First In/First Out" takes their dancefloor obsession closer to the mainstream, while vocal tracks ("Circling Overland" and "Headhunter V 3.0") use dark imagery to commercial gain. (As a single, "Headhunter" became Front's anthem.)

The long wait prior to Tyranny for You was marked by one unexceptional single ("Never Stop") and a licensing deal to just the sort of mega-corporation their imagery and music so frequently attacks. But anyone imagining a temperate performance from the band would have been disappointed: released at the start of the Gulf War, Tyranny's edge matches its era. With a fuller sound and less use of straightforward songs, it's a soundtrack to the chaos of a violent world. The "Tragedy for You" single aside, vocals appear sparingly—the chorus of "recession, regression, repression" on "Gripped by Fear" is consciously unnerving—but the hard dance feel is ever present on semi-instrumentals like "Moldavia" and "Neurobashing." [tf]

See also Revoltng Cocks.

FUGAZI

Fugazi (Dischord) 1988

Margin Walker EP (Dischord) 1989

13 Songs (CD) (Dischord) 1990 ●

Repeater (Dischord) 1990 ●

As the figurehead and backbone of Washington DC's punk scene throughout the '80s, singer/guitarist Ian MacKaye has led the Teen Idols, Minor Threat, Egg Hunt and Embrace; his latest band (and the city's newest musical legend) is the culmination of it all, a new rock music built on a hardcore foundation.

Fugazi's impressive debut, a seven-song 12-inch, blends an early-DC hardcore sensibility with a mature, objective outlook and crisply produced mid-tempo songs that are dynamic, aggressive and accessible. ("Waiting Room" is an especially catchy shoutalong, with a style of call-and-response vocals that have scant punk precedent.) Both MacKaye and former Rites of Spring vocalist Guy Picciotto have traded their punk anger for an introspective, almost poetic vision, using abstractions in strongly structured compositions like "Bulldog Front" and "Give Me the Cure" (a contemplation on death). The combination of MacKaye's and Picciotto's abilities gives the quartet a rare strength; the two singer/songwriters complement each other perfectly.

Margin Walker—another 12-inch, this one with a deeply distasteful cover photo—illustrates just how far Fugazi's four have come since their hardcore beginnings. The bracing EP oozes confidence—in MacKaye's melodic guitar work, the tight, fluid rhythm section, the incisive lyrics and the sharply arranged vocal exchanges. The songs are great, from the raging title track to the funky Gang of Founsh verses and poppy chorus of "And the Same" to the thickly chorded "Lockdown." Continuing to develop the stylings he began with Minor Threat, MacKaye manages to make the expletives in the vigorously monotonal, part spoken "Promises" sound somewhat eloquent.

Fugazi put the relatively slick sound of Margin Walker up on blocks and stripped it down to the bare essentials for the group's first full-length LP. Repeater is the blueprint for a post-hardcore world, a stunning and adventurous new stage in Fugazi's development. The title track—indicative of the album at large—offers a more powerful three-minute burst than anything on the first two records, with a dizzying bass line, speedy, powerful drumming and a repetitive squeal that is barely recognizable as guitar. Repeater's only disappointment is its weak lyrics; both MacKaye and Picciotto do a lot of finger-pointing at Joe Average, but the overzealous pontification should not be a distraction from what is otherwise an amazing album.

13 Songs combines Fugazi and Margin Walker on one CD; the CD of Repeater adds the 3 Songs 7-inch.

[icm/i]

See also Minor Threat, Pailhead, Rites of Spring.

FULL FATHOM FIVE

The Cry of a Falling Nation (Link) 1987

4 a.m. (Link) 1988 •

Multinational Pop Conglomerate (Link) 1989 •

Proof that serious Midwest post-punk exists outside of the usual locales, this trio from Iowa City, Iowa, (hometown of the wonderful Dangtrippers) builds a vintage Bob Mould wall-of-rhythm-guitar sound and tops it off with winsome Shoeshy vocals on The Cry of a Falling Nation, a neat declaration of style. Since he hasn't got the pipes to compete straight-on with his own surging guitar power, Boston native Eric Melcher solves the problem (on record, at least) by relaxing and floating above the pop-rooted dn. Unfortunately, that makes his clumsy/serious lyrics all too audible.

Despite a general reduction in the sugar content, 4 a.m. offers pretty much the same thick guitar rock as the first LP. Amid the familiar roar, unwarranted stylistic digressions (like the jazzy piano backing of "The Firing Line") suggest ambitions that may be beyond the band's ken. And what is the inexplicable "Paula's First Piano Recital"—a live instrumental that could be exactly as billed—doing on the album?

With a new face behind the skins and a reaffirmation of the first album's rich, tuneful rock approach, Melcher delivers his best-sounding songs yet on Multinational Pop Conglomerate. But one nagging problem remains. To quote from the marvelously catchy "A Little Hope":

"As the world runs the course of entropy/We tend to think that it will all come down next week." Help!

[1]

FULL FORCE

Full Force (Columbia) 1985

Full Force Get Busy 1 Time! (Columbia) 1986

Guess Who's Comin' to the Crib? (Columbia) 1987 •

Smooove (Columbia) 1989 •

The six members of Brooklyn's Full Force—three brothers and three others—write, play, sing and produce themselves as well as other artists. In a very short time, boundless energy and a positive outlook have turned Paul Anthony, Bowlegged Lou, B-Fine and their three associates into a remarkably successful full-service hit machine and one of the most influential organizations in "black music."

Full Force first found fame by creating and performing the music for U.T.F.O.'s "Roxanne, Roxanne" smash. They did the same for Lisa Lisa and Cult Jam, yielding huge hits in "I Wonder If I Take You Home," "Head to Toe" and "Lost in Emotion." Their own debut album ties things up in a neat package, with "United," a track that features U.T.F.O., Lisa Lisa with Cult Jam and the Real Roxanne with Howie Tee. It also includes an answer to their own (rhetorical) song, "Girl If You Take Me Home." Full Force is nothing but genuine urban contemporary music, a vibrant mix of rap, rhythm, soul and rock.

Get Busy 1 Time! displays the same stylistic dexterity. Whether they're juicing up a mellow soul tune ("Temporary Love Thing," "Body Heavenly") with restrained beatbox percussion, harmonizing over a busy scratch track ("Never Had Another Lover," "So Much"), or showing their affection for Sly Stone ("Old Flames Never Die"), Full Force absorbs and processes various influences into a unique collection of dance sounds.

In a strangely directed crossover bid, the cover of Guess Who's Comin' to the Crib? shows a white suburban family breaking out over the Full Force record in the hands of their sunglasses-sporting little girl. Musically, the band is on an energy rush, busying up the tracks with synth horns, complex vocal arrangements and all sorts of percussion action. Downplaying the ballads for a funkier streetwise rhythm sound, Full Force employs dialogue, slang, sound effects and turntable tricks to enliven the dance-ready cuts and provide surprises at every sonic turn. An entertaining record that, cover aside, isn't especially geared to appeal across color (or format: check out "Black Radio") lines.

Smooove is so diverse, accomplished and easily appealing that it doesn't take much imagination to envision Full Force hosting a Saturday night variety show on network television. Besides carefully thanking everybody under the sun, the polite sextet runs a master class in modern African-American music, setting their songs in handsome, lush productions with enough rhythm to move even the most casual listener onto the dancefloor. The program contains rap, soul (a reverent medley of classics from Motown, New York and Philadelphia avoids any single stylistic identification), mild house (with guest vocals by Samantha Fox) and new jack swing, all walking a rare line between street credibility and mainstream accessibility. [tr/i]

See also UTFO.

FULL TIME MEN

See Fleshtones.

FUN BOY THREE

The Fun Boy Three (Chrysalis) 1982

Waiting (Chrysalis) 1983

The Best of Fun Boy Three (Chrysalis) 1984 ●

It came as quite a surprise when, at the height of the Specials' popularity, vocalists Terry Hall and Neville Staples and rhythm guitarist Lynval Golding broke away to form their own self-contained group, making an off-beat LP that spawned two UK hit singles and took a large step towards injecting an African-based influence into the new pop music vocabulary. On The Fun Boy Three, the trio's imaginative use of various conventional and exotic instruments—though the emphasis is on vocals and percussion—is countered by a pervasively dark, pessimistic feel, more so on the US edition, which places most of the brooding stuff on Side Two. Dick Cuthell (horns) and Bananarama, whom the Fun Boys backed in return, occasionally brighten the proceedings.

Waiting, produced by David Byrne, follows that somber avenue much further, using assorted jazzy styles in minor keys to express cynicism in "The More I See (the Less I Believe)," tell a harrowing tale of molestation on "Well Fancy That!" and explode the mythical side of young romance on "The Tunnel of Love." The centerpiece of the album, however, is "Our Lips Are Sealed"—the Go-Go's hit written by Hall and Jane Wiedlin—given a dramatically different reading here, slowed to dirge speed and laden with heavy atmosphere and a resigned feel, yet somehow played with a preternatural lightness. A remarkable track on a phenomenally powerful album.

The ever-restless Hall left the band in '83 to form another trio, the Colour Field, a move which prompted a concise Fun Boys compilation: nine album selections plus Bananarama's (featuring FB3) "Really Saying Something" and a lazy version of George Gershwin's "Summertime." Hall's bandmates stuck together as Sunday Best, working with ex-Selector vocalist Pauline Black. [jg/i]

See also Colour Field, Specials.

FUNKY KINGS

See Jules Shear.

FURYO

See U.K. Decay.

FUZZBOX

See We've Got a Fuzzbox and We're Gonna Use It.

FUZZTONES

Leave Your Mind at Home (Midnight) 1984

Lysergic Emanations (nr/ABC) 1984 (Pink Dust) 1985

Live in Europe (Ger. Music Maniac) 1987 ●

Nine Months Later EP (Ger. Music Maniac) 1988

Creatures That Time Forgot (Ger. Music Maniac) 1989 (Skyclad) 1990 ●

In Heat (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1989 ●

Hurt on Hold EP (nr/Situation Two) 1989

Action EP (nr/Situation Two) 1990 ●

SCREAMIN' JAY HAWKINS AND THE FUZZTONES

Live EP (Midnight) 1984

LINK PROTRUDI AND THE JAYMEN

Drive It Home! (Ger. Music Maniac) 1987

Missing Links (Skyclad) 1989

TINA PEEL

Extra Kicks [tape] (Limpp) 1980

New York's garage-rocking Fuzztones—Rudi Protrudi, Deb O'Nair and three lesser-named cohorts—do their wild Crampably thing on Leave Your Mind at Home, seven numbers recorded live. The sound approaches bootleg quality, but that hardly matters—the shrieks and demented guitar solos here don't exactly call out for laser-level fidelity. Raveup enthusiasm is all that counts, and that's exactly what the record delivers.

Lysergic Emanations is a fab studio LP, released originally in the UK and then, with new graveyard cover art (by Protrudi) and two different tracks, in the States. (It's also available as a pic disc.) The sound is pure '60s garage punk—the Seeds, Chocolate Watch Band, Yardbirds, Animals, ? and the Mysterians, Standells, Shadows of Knight—produced clearly but without any excessive slickness. Absolutely first rate.

In fine early '60s rock'n'blues tradition, the 1984 live EP consists of the Fuzztones backing up veteran grandmaster Screamin' Jay Hawkins on four of his classics, including "I Put a Spell on You" and "Constipation Blues."

Live in Europe is preferable to Leave Your Mind in most areas: fidelity, audience participation and song selection are all superior. The only weak link is the band: with the onset of either boredom or laziness, they sleepwalk through this date. The Fuzztones' original lineup fell apart not long after but, as Creatures That Time Forgot certifies (in screaming day-glo), not without leaving quite a legacy. Single and compilation tracks are interspersed with demos (neanderthal stomps through "The Witch" and the otherwise unavailable "Fabian Lips" really stimulate the adrenal glands) and deadpan interviews from sources as unlikely as The Larry King Show and Finnish radio. Priceless.

Protrudi relocated to Los Angeles and assembled an all-new Fuzztones, largely with fellow New York expatriates. This edition had precious little in common with its antecedent—instead of energized '60s raunch, the emphasis is on sludgy, sub-Steppenwolf biker rock (although, applying a you-can-fool-some-of-the-people-all-of-the-time mentality, the psychedelic trappings remain unchanged). Kindred chameleonic spirit Ian Astbury (who'd soon regress backward to the exact same spot where had Rudi arrived) helped the band procure the record contract that yielded In Heat, a jumbled mess of styles that'd fit easily into Astbury's closet.

The few involving moments—the incongruous anti-draft missives “It Came in the Mail” and the self-explanatory “Me Tarzan, You Jane”—date back to the band’s first incarnation. Newer Protrudi compositions like “Nine Months Later” and “Hurt on Hold,” both of which appear on In Heat and their respective EPs, are at once listless and noisily monochromatic (though the Hurt on Hold EP boasts a fair rendition of the Troggs’ “Can’t Control Myself”). Action’s four songs further prove the Fuzztones’ original reactionary philosophy to have been right on (man).

Between the Fuzztones’ East and West Coast eras, Protrudi assembled the Jaymen, a short-lived reverb instrumental trio. With recording quality that would make a bootleg dealer blush, both the full-length German album and the eight-song American mini-LP (no overlap; the latter boasts a nutty live version of “Batman”) are the fun-filled results of an informal 1986 session and sound—thanks in no small part to the genuine-article songs and properly reverent originals—like long-lost Link Wray outtakes.

Before the Fuzztones, Rudi and Deb were at the center of Tina Peel, a loosely constructed Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, power-pop troupe that also tangentially involved future actress/Bongwaterite Ann Magnuson. The Extra Kicks tape contains perhaps rock’s best poodle-in-the-microwave ditty (“Fifi Goes Pop”) and a mind-numbing selection of penile paeans—two of which (“Wang It” and “Exception to the Ruler”) can also be found on the legendary You’ll Hate This Record compilation. [dss/i]

See also Headless Horsemen.

F-WORD

Like It or Not Live (Posh Boy) 1978

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Beach Blvd (Posh Boy) 1979

Tooth & Nail (Upsetter) 1980

SLAVES

The Slaves (Happy Hermit-IRS) 1990 •

Though considered outsiders, F-Word nevertheless bullied their way into the Los Angeles ’77 punk scene by virtue of a pummeling, primal sound led by guitaris Dim Wanker and a truly remarkable singer, Rick L. Rick. Playing at hyper tempos long before hardcore (only the Dils were as fast), the quartet never captured its flashpaper assault in the studio, leaving only a live album recorded at San Francisco’s Mabuhay Gardens in February ’78.

Not only was Like It or Not Live the first LP release on the pivotal Posh Boy label, it’s the first West Coast punk album from an era when most groups stuck to 7-inch singles. Covers of the New York Dolls’ “Bac Girl” (great choice, so-so rendition), the Germs’ “Shut down” (before the Germs were a big deal), the Stooges’ “No Fun” Pistolized and the Animals’ “I’m Crying” prove F-Word’s roots-punk credibility, but it’s the wild and gutsy originals—the punishing “Do the Nihil” and the equally merciless (in more ways than one) “Hillside Strangler”—that still hold up.

F-Word was short lived, and Rik L. Rik (dropping his c’s along the way) latched onto San Francisco’s Negative Trend in time for that group’s appearance on the seminal LA punk compilation, Tooth & Nail. (The five worthy cuts of his that appear on the Beach Blvd sampler, although not credited as such, also apparently feature Negative Trend.) In ’82, he released a terrific solo single (“Dominique” b/w “Soul Power”).

Rik’s recent re-emergence, however, is a less pleasant development. The Slaves are strictly sterile classic-rock pap: tired, undemanding, melodramatic hard wank. Not only does The Slaves bastardize both songs from his old single, the group’s neo-metal version of Joy Division’s “Transmission” is appalling. Refuse this refuse. [jr]

See also Flipper.

PETER GABRIEL

- Peter Gabriel (Atco) 1977 ●
- Peter Gabriel (Atlantic) 1978 ●
- Peter Gabriel (Mercury) 1980 ●
- Ein Deutsches Album (Ger. Charisma) 1980 (nr/Virgin) 1987 ●
- Peter Gabriel (Geffen) 1982 ●
- Deutsches Album (Ger. Charisma) 1982 (nr/Virgin) 1987 ●
- Peter Gabriel/Peter Gabriel [tape] (nr/Charisma) 1983
- Plays Live (Geffen) 1983 ●
- Music from the Film Birdy (Geffen) 1985 ●
- So (Geffen) 1986 ●
- Sledgehammer EP (nr/Virgin) 1986
- Big Time EP (nr/Charisma) 1987 ♣
- Passion: Music for The Last Temptation of Christ (Geffen) 1989 ●
- Shaking the Tree: Sixteen Golden Greats (Geffen) 1990 ♣

VARIOUS ARTISTS

- Passion—Sources (Real World-Virgin) 1989 ●

As Genesis' original lead vocalist, Peter Gabriel was the grand old man of the theatrical/commercial wing of the mildly progressive art-rock movement. He abandoned that position in 1975 for a solo career, and has successfully positioned himself as the prototypically individualistic world musician. His work is marked by dark humor, mature intelligence, strong compositional skill and excellent, often innovative use of rhythm and electronics.

Like unnumbered issues of a magazine, his first four albums are titled only with his name, which appears in the same typeface and position on each. (The fourth Peter Gabriel was issued as Security by his American label, a move Gabriel did not endorse.)

The symphonic pretensions of the first Peter Gabriel power a dramatic perception of personal and global apocalypse. Produced by Bob Ezrin, and featuring the playing of Robert Fripp, Tony Levin, Steve Hunter and the London Symphony Orchestra, the album's dark rock songs ("Solsbury Hill," "Modern Love") on Side One are paired with disturbing visions of armageddon ("Slowburn," "Here Comes the Flood") on Side Two, delivered in a wall of sound that fills in every musical corner.

In contrast, the second Peter Gabriel, produced in Holland by Fripp, employs the spare and uncluttered sound popularized by the punk movement. (Although you would hardly mistake this for a punk album, Gabriel does neatly display his cognizance and support of what was going on with the song "D.I.Y.") The new method showed Gabriel condensing his songs into tight units linked by themes of paranoia. Freed from the onus of art-rock, Gabriel presents his most obsessive and personal compositions (e.g., "On the Air," "Perspective"), packets of insight that are misleadingly restrained. (A 1983 British cassette combines the first two records.)

Gabriel returned to a fuller sound on his third album, emphasizing striking electronics developed over unusual rhythms and delivered with seeming desperation. The ballads of social violence and urban fear—including "I Don't Remember" and "Family Snapshot"—feature lyrics and intricate music finally blended (under producer Steve Lillywhite's direction) into perfectly integrated high pop. "Biko," a haunting political anthem about the South African martyr, and the internationalist "Games Without Frontiers" reveal Gabriel's deepening commitment to global issues and social action.

The fourth Peter Gabriel refines this, drawing further on exotic rhythms (from Africa, Asia and America) with a musique concrète technique made possible by the Fairlight synthesizer, which allows unlimited manipulation of recorded sounds. Gabriel delivers his examinations of fear and disaster with an oddly paradoxical new emphasis on hope and restraint, displaying his usual fine craft and quality. "Shock the Monkey," "I Have the Touch" and "Kiss of Life" are among the best things he's ever done, combining all of his strengths—lyrical, melodic, structural and experimental—into bracingly original pop music with a solid footing.

Peter Gabriel numbers three and four were both issued (separately) in Germany—and later, on CD only, in the UK—under the name (Ein) Deutsches Album, with Gabriel singing all the lyrics in German (as translated by Horst Königstein). Not every song holds up equally well to the linguistic reworking: "Spiel ohne Grenzen" ("Games Without Frontiers") and "Schock den Affen" ("Shock the Monkey"), for example, gain tension and emotional power in German, but the language is too harsh for fragile songs like "Biko" and "Contact."

Three live tracks, recorded in 1979 and 1980, appear on the second edition of the Bristol Recorder, a combination album/magazine issued by a small English label in 1981, a forerunner of Gabriel's full-length live album. The two-disc Plays Live was recorded in America in 1982 (although some acknowledged "cheating" was later done) and features a good recap of his solo career, relying most heavily on the two most recent records. The four-piece band includes Tony Levin and Larry Fast. (The double-CD contains the entire album; in Britain, fans on a budget could also choose an abbreviated single disc.)

In the mid-'80s, Gabriel began doing film soundtracks. For the Birdy score, he wrote new material and adapted previous recordings. Although it's uncommon to hear sustained instrumental work from someone so known for vocal music, the score is audibly identifiable, and provides a fascinating glimpse into his adaptational thinking. A strongly affecting work, a major challenge met admirably with style and character.

So, Gabriel's first new studio album in four years, is another adventurous, varied and striking record, with atypically self-reflective lyrics, some of them clearly demarcating a past-present-future boundary. (The cover portrait also suggests an attitudinal change of some sort.) Gabriel's characteristically sophisticated music touches on funk ("Sledgehammer"), lightly gospel-inflected balladry ("Don't Give Up," with prominent vocals by Kate Bush), folk ("In Your Eyes," with vocal backing by Jim Kerr and others) and catchy dance-rock ("Big Time," featuring Stewart Copeland on drums). The commercial sound and resultant big-time success of the record led to complaints that Gabriel had compromised himself artistically but, on its own merits, So doesn't support such carping.

The Sledgehammer 12-inch EP contains a dance mix of the title track, an extended edit of "Biko," the non-LP "Don't Break This Rhythm" and a remix of 1982's "I Have the Touch." The cassette and CD of the Big Time EP have different track assortments, but both include three non-LP items.

Beginning in 1982 with his pivotal role in the WOMAD festival and organization, Gabriel has made ethnic world music a major focus of his work. Via the Real World label, he has brought out records by artists from a wide variety of cultures, and his own music has become increasingly intertwined with traditional styles well outside Western forms. In creating the soundtrack for Martin Scorsese's Last Temptation of Christ, Gabriel first made field recordings (a selection of which are compiled on Passion-Sources) from musicians in such places as Turkey, Senegal, Egypt and Morocco. Those provided the inspiration (and, in some cases, actual material) for his original compositions on the two-record Passion. This extraordinary mating of modern and ancient musics unifies an enormous geographic spread into a vaguely Middle Eastern sound that is utterly engrossing in its multitudinous use of instruments and Gabriel's deft manipulation of atmospheric sounds into narrative music of exceptional beauty and drama.

Shaking the Tree edits Gabriel's solo oeuvre to reflect his current concerns. There's only one track from the first album ("Here Comes the Flood" also appears, but in a brand-new acoustic piano rendition) and nothing from the second; other than token choices from Passion and Youssou N'Dour's The Lion that are unlikely to be on many fans' top-sixteen lists, the material comes entirely from the third and fourth Peter Gabriel albums and So. Still, the compilation does cover most of the essentials, with only "Contact," "Kiss of Life" and "D.I.Y." standing out as notable omissions. [sg/i]

DIAMANDA GALAS

The Litanies of Satan (Y) 1982 (Mute-Restless) 1988 •

Diamanda Galas (Metalanguage) 1984

The Divine Punishment (nr/Mute) 1986 (Mute-Restless) 1989

Saint of the Pit (nr/Mute) 1986 (Mute-Restless) 1989

The Divine Punishment & Saint of the Pit [CD]

(Mute-Restless) 1988 •

You Must Be Certain of the Devil (Mute-Restless) 1988 •

Masque of the Red Death Trilogy [CD] (Mute-Restless)

1989 •

Plague Mass (Mute) 1991 •

Radical Southern California avant-garde diva Galas' first record, The Litanies of Satan, was not a heavy-metal prayer but rather a vocal adaptation of a poem by Charles Baudelaire. Using many electronic modifications (many learned during her working with such exemplary contemporary composers as Iannis Xenakis), Galas created a disturbing and provocative piece that was almost topped by the composition on the album's second side, the amusingly titled but harrowing "Wild Women with Steak-Knives (The Homicidal Love Song for Solo Scream)"—an endurance-defying unaccompanied stream of hideous vocal noises.

Besides showcasing her astonishing voice and real knowledge of electronic manipulation, the two pieces on Diamanda Galas display her social conscience: "Panoptikon" is based on Jeremy Bentham's 1843 proposal for a prison where the inmates could be kept under constant observation by unseen captors, and "Tragou-thia Apo to Aima Exoun Fonos" translates from the Greek as "Song from the Blood of Those Murdered."

Desperate times lead to desperate actions. The Divine Punishment, Saint of the Pit and You Must Be Certain of the Devil comprise Masque of the Red Death, "the plague mass," Galas' strident but striking response to AIDS, sparked by her brother's 1986 death.

The Divine Punishment is a collection of somehow appropriate Old Testament quotes delivered—in everything from a glass-breaking soprano to an urgent whisper to a depraved shriek to a wicked multi-voiced regurgo rumble—over droning synthesizer music with jarring sonic effects. The more operatic Saint of the Pit sets French decadent poetry (by Baudelaire, Nerval and Corbière) into wild vocal excursions, accompanied by keyboards that vary from subtle atmospheric to melodramatic horror-movie organ. Galas' astonishingly varied singing styles and the hypnotic effect of the record's three claustrophobic, obsessive pieces makes Saint of the Pit a powerful document of suffering.

Completing the trilogy on a conceptual high note, Galas fills You Must Be Certain of the Devil with lyrically specific (mostly) original songs, played with backing musicians. The record gets off to a bracing start with a unique a cappella interpretation of "Swing Low Sweet Chariot" and continues in an unassuming electro-rock vein as Galas warbles, sometimes singing counterpoint with herself in multi-track arrangements, using voice as both a percussion and melodic instrument. The audio intimacy here exaggerates emotional intensity beyond legal limits.

The Divine Punishment and Saint of the Pit are contained on one CD; the limited edition two-CD Masque of the Red Death Trilogy is a complete set of all three albums.

Plague Mass is a bravura live album recorded in October 1990 at New York's Cathedral of St. John the Divine and includes the recorded premier of "There Are No More Tickets to the Funeral," a new section of the ongoing work. [gk/i]

GALAXIE 500

Today (Aurora) 1987 (Rough Trade) 1991 ●

On Fire (Rough Trade) 1989 ●

Blue Thunder EP (nr/Rough Trade) 1989 ●

This Is Our Music (Rough Trade) 1990 ●

Jumping off a Chemical Imbalance flexidisc, Galaxie 500's singsongy psychedelic "Oblivious" was so sweet and lo-fi that it might have been actual innocence instead of the Velvet Underground's received ghost. Today, which features a rendition of Jonathan Richman's "Don't Let Our Youth Go to Waste," confirmed it: this trio (based in New York but formed in Boston; all three are Harvard alumni) may sound as ragged and ambitious as your first guitar plugged into your first amp, but they had a way with dirge and seemed to mean every note. With plaints like "I don't wanna stay at your party/I don't wanna talk with your friends/I don't wanna vote for your president/I just wanna be your tugboat captain," Galaxie 500 made a virtue of lethargy. (The CD adds two.)

On Fire acknowledges a past master of mopery with an unsanctimonious cover of George Harrison's "Isn't It a Pity." This second release shapes out the spaces between Dean Wareham's proto-strum and whine/wail, Naomi Yang's exceptionally melodic bass lines (the band's true emotional center) and Damon Krukowski's economical drumming. Kramer (producer of the band's entire output to date) throws in enough reverb and echo to nearly cover lyrics like "I stood in line and ate my Twinkie" beneath a fuzzy warm sonic blanket. Wareham's lead guitar lines are clearer and more confident here and, with nice touches like saxophone on "Decomposing Trees," the songs are immersion chambers of atmosphere.

This Is Our Music is slicker and features more dynamic crescendos—in places the trio sounds like a treble-free low-tech Feelies—but the melodies aren't as engaging as on the first two discs. For the adventurous, there's a feeling cover of Yoko Ono's "Listen, the Snow Is Falling." The EP reprises "Blue Thunder" from On Fire (with a sax part added) and features a powerful cover of New Order's "Ceremony" as well as two other non-LP tracks. [mp]

GAME THEORY

Blaze of Glory (Rational) 1982

Pointed Accounts of People You Know EP (Rational) 1983

Distortion EP (Rational) 1984

Dead Center (Fr. Lolita) 1984

Real Nighttime (Rational-Enigma) 1985

The Big Shot Chronicles (Rational-Enigma) 1986

Lolita Nation (Rational-Enigma) 1987 ●

2 Steps from the Middle Ages (Enigma) 1988 ●

Tinker to Evers to Chance (Rational-Enigma) 1990 ◊

VEIL

1000 Dreams Have Told Me (Plastic Medium) 1984

Game Theory is a clean, and for a time, mildly psychedelic, pop band from northern California, which means their departures from conventional meat-and-potatoes reality are more quirky than trippy. Like most over-educated popsters, they tend towards wimpiness—at which times the arcane lyrics don't help—but the hip catchiness of the songs mostly keeps them out of trouble.

With awfully thin sound and more enthusiasm than skill, the young guitar-and-keyboards quartet made its promising debut on the self-released Blaze of Glory. Switching drummers, Game Theory then returned with the schizy six-song Pointed Accounts. The first side is light; guitarist/singer Scott Miller's songs are slightly off-kilter, with cryptic lines ("She likes metal and glass exact"—huh?), but the hooks make them go down smoothly. Bassist/singer Fred Juhos carries things further out on the second side with two tunes, including "I Wanna Get Hit by a Car." Juhos' vision is darker and somewhat more intriguing, but he isn't Miller's equal as a tunesmith.

The five-song Distortion, co-produced by Michael Quercio of the Three O'Clock, is fuller, if not as fresh sounding as the debut. Unfortunately, the more baroque presentation makes Miller's fey falsetto and fragile melodies sound too precious. Pleasant listening, and the good ideas are still there, but it doesn't draw you in. Dead Center compiles the two EPs, adding three extra items.

Real Nighttime, the band's second album, was produced by Mitch Easter, with Quercio and others helping out. Miller wrote all the songs, except for a cover of Alex Chilton's Big Star-era "You Can't Have Me." The wispy vocal sound unsurprisingly crosses the Three O'Clock with Let's Active, but the music is tougher and more unpredictable than either influence. Whiny melodica, jagged guitar lines, ominous percussion and noisy sound effects lace through the arrangements, creating an odd but often productive tension. By consciously undercutting power-pop convention, Game Theory steers Real Nighttime into uncharted terrain that, for the most part, gives them something to sing about.

Sticking with Easter and paraphrasing John Cheever for its title, The Big Shot Chronicles lights the afterburners for aggressively electric pop, louder and more powerful than anything in Game Theory's past. Miller's new lineup without Juhos doesn't fool around, keeping the arrangements relatively unadorned; unfortunately, his fly-away singing (self-described here as a "miserable whine" and later characterized as "my usual obnoxious vocals") can sound silly competing with stacks of highly amplified rock; restrained songs that lean towards acoustic guitars (e.g., "Erica's World," "Where You Going Northern") provide a more conducive setting. With a swell organ hook, the catchy "Crash into June" hits just the right balance and is hummably memorable.

The ambitious and occasionally bizarre two-disc Lolita Nation adds synthesizers and assorted crazy noises to an inconsistent set of songs—delivered in unpredictable lengths—and immerses them (especially on Side Three) in tape experimentation, spoken-word bridges and other audio ephemera. This new lineup—a resourcefully vocal quintet, here assisted by longtime band associates—provides variegated support that works wonders some of the time but falls flat in spots. Guitarist Donnette Thayer sings commendable lead on a few tunes, but isn't the strong counterpoint to Miller that would prevent the onset of listening fatigue.

The same five-person Game Theory then returned to power pop earth with an uninterrupted set of discrete songs on 2 Steps from the Middle Ages. The band's light mélange of wispy vocals, acoustic/electric guitars and gently colorful keyboards makes an unfailingly pleasant (except for the clunky distraction of Gil Ray's drumming) and intelligent—but utterly uninvolved—sound. The bland consistency of both Miller's strained (and hookless) melodies and Easter's uneventful production damns 2 Steps to a familiar monotony.

Along with Miller's amusingly self-deprecating liner notes and substantial samples of every prior Game Theory record (only his songs), the ample 22-cut Tinker to Evers to Chance compilation offers charming new recordings (by an ad hoc band) of several old songs—two reclaimed from Blaze of Glory—and a remix of Pointed Accents: "Penny, Things Won't."

Prior to joining Game Theory, Donnette Thayer led Sacramento's Veil (not related to the contemporaneous British-based quartet), a slightly tacky melodic rock quartet, whose competent but colorless 1984 LP of her songs was produced by Scott Miller and engineered by former GT drummer Dave Gill. After leaving Game Theory, Thayer joined up with Steve Kilbey of the Church to form Hex. The latest GT lineup features Quercio and ex-Thin White Rope drummer Jozef Becker, Ray having shifted from percussion to guitar and keyboards. [j/l/v]

See also Hex.

PHIL GAMMAGE

See Certain General.

GANG GREEN

Drunk and Disorderly, Boston MA EP (Deluxe) 1986
 Another Wasted Night (Taang!) 1986 •
 P.M.R.C. Sucks 12" EP (Taang!) 1987
 You Got It (Roadracer) 1987 •
 I81B4U EP (Roadracer) 1988 •
 Older... (Emergo) 1989 •
 Can't Live Without It (Emergo) 1990 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

This Is Boston Not L.A. (Modern Method) 1982

Led by singer/guitarist Chris Doherty, Boston's greatest beer-soaked contribution to the skate-punk genre began as a faster'n'louder hardcore trio, with seven sketchy smears (e.g., "Snob," "Kill a Commie" and "Rabies") averaging under a minute each on a 1982 scene compilation. A breakup (during which Doherty played in Jerry's Kids), lineup changes and a handful of singles and EPs followed, then Another Wasted Night. Cogent power and a notable melodic sense marks the quartet as a superior breed of punk. Doherty's Lemmylike shriek is a fiendish attribute, as is Chuck Stilphen's occasional blitzkrieg solos. "Skate to Hell" is a rallying cry for skateboarders; the other originals are convincing thrash. While the decision to cut a slow but incompetently irreverent cover of "Til Tuesday's "Voices Carry" (complete with synthesizer riff) probably had more to do with local band politics than musical taste, it's still a good giggle. Both the cassette and CD add bonus tracks. (The green-vinyl P.M.R.C. EP—which features a priceless cover photo of Doherty and "Til Tuesday's Aimee Mann together—contains two versions of "Voices Carry," plus "Skate Hate" and "Protect & Serve.")

You Got It finds an overhauled four-piece again celebrating Budweiser and boards with ace playing and a stringent mid-tempo punk sound. (Kudos to lead guitarist Fritz Erickson.) The anthemic "We'll Give It to You" and "Born to Rock" are blistering statements (skatements?) of teen party solidarity; "L.D.S.B." ("let's drink some beer") typifies the band's commitment to hedonistic irresponsibility.

The casual-sounding five-song I81B4U offers yet another homage to beer ("Bartender"), its side effects ("Lost Chapter") and sex ("Put Her on Top") all produced with a dull meta-metallic roar by Daniel Rey; meanwhile, a bratty protest against "Rent" returns to the band's punky roots.

Claiming "I'm Still Young" with little conviction, Gang Green skates into a new stage of life on the roilingly dynamic Older . . . (the punny cover art completes the ellipsis with the inevitable Budweiser), a great leap forward by these aging veterans. Driven by the rhythm section's charging gallop, Doherty's frantic shouts and Erickson's full-throttle arena-scale guitar lift the quartet out of small-scale adolescent punk to embrace metal, speed-rock and regular ol' hard rock. While "Church of Fun" and the acoustic/orchestrated power "Ballad," which closes the LP on an absurdly funny note (actually, it's D), restate old values, other songs acknowledge other subject matter.

The louder-than-bombs Can't Live Without It (no points for guessing what the title might refer to: these guys have long since raised their obsession with beer to a total lifestyle) was recorded live in London at the beginning of 1990. Covering such classics as "We'll Give It to You," "Voices Carry" and "Rabies" with clear, dynamic sound, the fifteen-track onslaught is a breathless power surge that could probably pulverize concrete. [i]

See also Jerry's Kids, Mallet-Head.

GANG OF FOUR

Damaged Goods (nr/Fast Product) 1978
 Entertainment! (Warner Bros.) 1979
 Gang of Four EP (Warner Bros.) 1980
 Solid Gold (Warner Bros.) 1981
 Another Day/Another Dollar EP (Warner Bros.) 1982
 Songs of the Free (Warner Bros.) 1982
 Hard (Warner Bros.) 1983
 At the Palace (nr/Phonogram) 1984
 The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1986
 The Peel Sessions Album (nr/Strange Fruit) 1990 (Strange Fruit-Dutch East India) 1991 •
 A Brief History of the Twentieth Century (Warner Bros.) 1990 •
 Mall (Polydor) 1991 •

If the Clash were the urban guerrillas of rock'n'roll, Leeds' Gang of Four were its revolutionary theoreticians. The band's bracing funk-rock gained its edge from lyrics that dissect capitalist society with the cool precision of a surgeon's scalpel.

The Gang saw interpersonal relationships—"romance," if you must—as politics in microcosm, a view that gives Entertainment! its distinctive tartness. Jon King declaims brittle sentiments with the self-righteous air of someone who couldn't get to first base with his girlfriend the previous evening. The basic backing trio of bassist Dave Allen, drummer Hugo Burnham and guitarist Andy Gill churns up a brutal, nearly unembellished accompaniment on this challenging album debut.

Solid Gold delves further into a quicksand of discontent. More choppy rhythms and pared-down arrangements drive home cries of despair like "Paralysed," "Cheeseburger" and "What We All Want." Not the sort of thing to pack discos, but as compelling as a steamroller Songs of the Free is a more upbeat dance of death. With Allen off to form Shriekback, new bassist Sara Lee (fresh out of Fripp's League of Gentlemen) and Joy Yates' backing vocals relieve the gloom of "We Live as We Dream, Alone" and (with typical irony) contribute to the dancefloor success of the anti-militaristic "I Love a Man in a Uniform." King's impassioned delivery, the songs' on-target attacks on society's ills and the band's musical wallop make Songs of the Free one of the most stirring, innovative "rock" albums you can find.

Unfortunately, the Gang's next outing exposed an aesthetic about-face of Stalinesque proportions. Inappropriately co-produced by Ron and Howard Albert (Crosby Stills and Nash, Firefall), Hard shifts from a political to a personal frame of reference; King drones lyrics against dirge-like music. It might be symbolic of disillusionment. It's certainly a sorry end to the group's career. Drummer Hugo Burnham left months prior to Hard's release (there is no drummer credited on the LP); the Gang pressed on for a bit before disbanding in 1984.

At the Palace (Hollywood's, that is) is a souvenir of the Gang's final tour. With Steve Goulding replacing Burnham (who briefly sat in with ABC before joining Illustrated Man, later becoming Shriekback's manager and then an A&R executive), the album listlessly rehashes better days. Farewell, comrades! (The cassette has two bonus salvos.)

To relieve between-album tension, the band's US label twice released 12-inch EPs consolidating British singles. Gang of Four contains "Armalite Rifle" from the band's 1978 Damaged Goods three-song debut, a non-LP flipside and both sides of the then-current "Outside the Trains Don't Run on Time" 45 (both later re-recorded for Solid Gold). Another Day/Another Dollar contains both sides of the "To Hell with Poverty" single and another non-LP flip ("History's Bunk!")—all required listening for fans—plus two live-in-London versions of Solid Gold songs that show the Gang's prime-time concert intensity.

Rendering the one-session Peel EP (from January '79) redundant, the eleven-song album (available in the US on CD and cassette as The Peel Sessions) offers that artifact as well as return visits to the BBC radio studios from July '79 and March '81. Not quite an alternate greatest hits, the full-length collection nonetheless offers such Gang classics as "To Hell with Poverty," "At Home's He's a Tourist" and "I Found That Essence Rare," all rendered with stiff-backed ferocity.

In 1988, guitarist Andy Gill released a solo single and produced the music for a Derek Jarman film. In 1990, as he and King reunited and began working on a new Gang of Four record (releasing only a single by year's end), the monumental 20-song Brief History of the Twentieth Century compilation (with liner notes by Greil Marcus) was issued to indoctrinate a new generation.

The new Gang LP, Mall, was well worth the wait. Without trying to jump the bandwagon they helped launch, King and Gill—aided by various rhythm sections and backup singers—get back in the old groove with ease, doing an updated (but not selfconsciously so) version of the band's essence that is as bracingly political and musically potent as ever. The inclusion of a Vietnam War drama ("F.M.U.S.A.") is weird but extremely effective; other songs attack consumer culture and American politics with varying (but generally high) degrees of musical and lyrical success. (The cover of Bob Marley's "Soul Rebel" is white-boy lame.) Sounding in spots like the Clash's funky dance side, Mall easily justifies the Gang of Two's return, proof that not all legends should stay out of the action. [si/i]

See also Illustrated Man, Shriekback.

NICK GARVEY

See Motors.

GAS

Emotional Warfare (nr/Polydor) 1982

From the Cradle to the Grave (nr/Good Vibrations) 1983

Frequently compared to Elvis Costello, and sometimes even to Graham Parker and the Clash, the Gas were more of the punk-pop-mod school of outfits like the Jam and Chords. Emotional Warfare, a ripping pop LP, shows the trio's sharp attack and some of the busiest music this side of the Buzzcocks. "Definitely Is a Lie" and "Losing my Patience" are the kind of aural pummels one never expects from music so catchy; similarly, the band's vitality masked the incredibly bitter lyrics by singer Donnie Burke, an intelligent yet disillusioned and terminally unsatisfied frontman. Imagine someone who'd been left in the lurch by a thousand women and you'd still have trouble imagining Burke's bleak anger. By comparison, the young Costello seems complacent in comparison. Emotional Warfare indeed!

The title track of From the Cradle to the Grave (which sets the theme for the LP) predates the Godfathers' Birth, School, Work, Death by four years, stating almost exactly the same pessimistic outlook on life in Britain. While the battering ram of Burke's rage and despair continues, it's married here to a more somber sound, with pretty piano, light tempos and atmospheric guitar. This soundtrack for a tear-gushing movie of an unhappy life was ignored by the Gas' older fans who preferred their fast and loud origins, and avoided by the post-punk doom and gloom school. The LP faded without much fanfare, as did the band soon thereafter. [jr]

GAWK

See Ritual Tension.

GAYE BYKERS ON ACID

Everything's Groovy EP (nr/In Tape) 1986

Nosedive Karma EP (nr/In Tape) 1987

Drill Your Own Hole (PFX-Caroline) 1987

The Janice Long Session EP (nr/Night Tracks-Strange Fruit) 1988

Stewed to the Gills . . . (Caroline) 1989 •
Groovedivesoapdisch (nr/Bleed) 1989
Cancer Planet Mission (nr/Naked Brain) 1990 •
Pernicious Nonsense (nr/Naked Brain) 1991 •

Crazy times and the enormous reach of rock'n'roll have made the challenge of turning conscious weirdness into a commercial property increasingly difficult, one that few neophytes are equal to. As arbiters of grebo, the dirty, ugly Bykers, a post-pop-culture quartet from Leicester, cross leather-clad Mad Max apocalyptics with late-'60s London people's-band values to forge a forward-looking/backward-thinking image.

Produced by Jon Langford (Three Johns/Mekons), the 12-inch Everythang's Groovy EP is plodding and dull, with unnecessarily silly lyrics that attempt to combine '60s underground memorabilia with punk's aggressive snottiness. A feeble attempt, but the band survived, seemingly propelled by the strength of its name alone.

If Nosedive Karma demonstrates a bit of maturity, it brings the band from, say, fourth grade to sixth. The use of sound bites from Star Trek throughout the record is one of its more unappealing features; the samples' haphazard placement makes them seem like an end in themselves. "Don't Be Human Eric, Let's Be Frank" stands out as the Bykers' best tune up to this point, a catchy pop-punk ditty that tries to tell a semi-intelligible story with a minimum of nonsensical '60s references. (The first two EPs were later reissued as Groovedivesoapdisch.)

Drill Your Own Hole was produced with maximum gimmickry (and, compared to the band's previous work, supreme ability) by Alex Fergusson (ATV/PTV) and includes a cover of a song by radical hippiedom's legendary Edgar Broughton Band. The intentionally chaotic noisy guitar rock (dressed up in wah-wah and moronic solos) shows some improvement in skill and lyrics (which still rely on drug culture jokes); the self-conscious posturing is spottily ear-catching but basically horrible.

Stewed to the Gills suggests that the post-grebo Bykers might have finally learned a lesson; in lieu of TV snippets and antiquated lifestyles, the quartet takes subtle jabs at current pop and underground culture, shrugs off fancy production (Langford again did the honors) and surrenders to sloppy musical technique. The result is one of the most remarkably disjointed mock-concept albums ever, a creation of purposeless nonsense for nonsense's sake, fraught with casual, easily missed micro-parodies. Bravo.

Come 1990, and the cavalier Bykers seem to care less than ever. In the case of Cancer Planet Mission, however, that very lack of forethought produced an uncommonly likable platter of noisy trash. Although you're not likely to find anything useful in its grooves, there's a whole lot of real good nothing going on here. The scattershot mixture of filthy grunge-metal, swampy, reggae-like dub and adrenaline-laced punk is utterly unfathomable; the songs are surrounded with frightening bits of sampled noise (industrial and otherwise), ethnic music, and whatever they could pinch off TV.

The Janice Long Session (recorded in '87) contains radio-broadcast versions of three songs from the first two EPs and one from Drill Your Own Hole. [i/vcm]

G.B.H.

See Charged G.B.H.

GEAR DADDIES

Let's Go Scare Al (Gark) 1988 (Polydor) 1990 •
Billy's Live Bait (Polydor) 1990 •

Hailing from Spam-town (Austin, Minnesota, home of Hormel), the Gear Daddies serve up slices of Americana Norman Rockwell forgot to paint. The low-budget Let's Go Scare Al showcases singer-guitarist Martin Zellar's somber, country-tinged songs. (Although guitarist Randy Broughten often plays pedal steel and a snippet of a Bob Wills tune finds its uncredited way in, this is definitely a rock band.) Zellar's lyrics are populated with small town folks having trouble coping with life: tear-in-my-beer music without the false sentimentality. These guys would get run out of Nashville on a rail, but they'd probably be welcome in the other Austin.

On Billy's Live Bait, the quartet upgrades its sound and rocks more forcefully, with Zellar and Broughten bouncing guitar rhythms off one another. The portraits here are maybe a shade less grim than on Let's Go Scare Al, but it's still no laugh-fest. In fact, the album's only real humorous moment—an untitled ditty about a guy who dreams of riding the Zamboni machine used to smooth an ice rink—comes after the supposedly final song. Alas, even that wish goes unfulfilled. [ds]

BOB GELDOF

Deep in the Heart of Nowhere (Atlantic) 1986 •
Love Like a Rocket EP [CD] (nr/Mercury) 1987 •
The Vegetarians of Love (Atlantic) 1990 •
Love or Something EP (nr/Mercury) 1990 •

In mid-1986, after making enormous efforts on behalf of others, ex-Boomtown Rat Bob Geldof took a few steps in his own behalf, writing an autobiography (Is That It?) and signing a solo record deal. Best heard on CD or cassette (the vinyl version has three fewer tracks; others are truncated), Deep in the Heart of Nowhere bears the onerous marks of Rupert Hine's tritely commercial overproduction, but also contains some swell tunes and affecting lyrics. "This Is the World Calling" and the outstanding "Pulled Apart by Horses" (amazingly omitted from the vinyl version, but wisely included on the UK Love Like a Rocket EP, along with another of the deletions, two mixes of the title song and "This Is the World Calling") both resemble Rat tracks and allude to recent experiences; "In the Pouring Rain" could easily have come from The Fine Art of Surfacing. The record contains some true wretchedness (the melodramatically recited "The Beat of the Night") that will confirm skeptics' worst fears about Geldof's ego, but this is by no means a bad showing. Musical supporters here include Dave Stewart, Annie Lennox, Midge Ure, Brian Setzer, Eric Clapton and Alison Moyet.

Four years later, with Hine again producing and ex-Rat Pete Briquette on bass, Geldof adopted a jolly and appealing neo-folk approach for The Vegetarians of Love, a casual and light, mostly acoustic, album that gains a mild Irish accent from violin, accordion and pennywhistle. But while the sensitively played music sounds lighthearted, Bob hasn't changed his outspoken and pointed (but amusingly couched and casually conversational) lyrical ways. After ironically listing all the things he doesn't care about in "The Great Song of Indifference," Geldof spends the rest of the album airing his philosophical and emotional angst. "Crucified Me" is a quietly bitter love song; "The Chams of Pain" addresses several world crises with a cry of optimism; "The End of the World" and "Thinking Voyager 2 Type Things" go all existential. "I'm thinking big things," he sings, "I'm thinking about mortality/I'm thinking it's a cheap price that we pay for existence."

The CD edition of the 1990 EP picks the rockiest and poppiest tune (co-written with Dave Stewart) from Vegetarians and adds a trio of non-LP cuts, two of which ("Out of Order" and "One of the Girls," played on garage guitar and accordion) are well worth hearing. The four-song 12-inch replaces "One of the Girls" with a remix of "The Great Song of Indifference." [1/pn]

See also Boomtown Rats.

GENE LOVES JEZEBEL

Promise (nr/Situation Two) 1983 (Geffen) 1987 •

Bruises EP (Can. Beggars Banquet-Vertigo) 1983

Immigrant (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1984 (Situation Two-Relativity) 1985 •

Desire EP (Relativity) 1985

Discover (Beggars Banquet-Geffen) 1986 •

The House of Dolls (Beggars Banquet-Geffen) 1987 •

Kiss of Life (Beggars Banquet-Geffen) 1990 •

For most of Promise, Welsh twins Jay and Michael Aston generate a powerful, dense sound that falls somewhere between U2, Adam Ant and Public Image: thickly textured guitars coloring a driving beat under aggressively impassioned, generally tuneless vocals that occasionally lapse into YokOnoesque wailing. The songs have a decidedly sexual air, but it's the sheer din—roughly produced but convincing—that makes Promise worth repeated listenings. Numbers that don't go for maximum impact peddle a sensitive, spacious attractiveness that suggests considerable range and skill. (Bruises is a six-song précis of the album.)

On the enjoyable, atmospheric Immigrant, intelligently produced by John Leckie, the Jezebels (acknowledging a five-piece lineup) resemble a pop-sensitized version of Bauhaus, a gritty U2 or a smacked-out Duran Duran. "Always a Flame" is aggro-dance rock with a wallopping beat and a real melody; "Shame" has similar attributes, plus a catchy refrain. The US edition of the LP appends Promise's "Bruises," a solid number which brings all of the band's U2 tendencies to the fore. ("Worth Waiting For" is equally Bonoesque.) The Desire 12-inch combines two mixes of that song with three album tracks for a dose of Gene Loves Jezebel's best side.

"Desire" also appears on Discover, the band's first American major-label release (a development reflecting their burgeoning haircut-based popularity on college radio and in alternative media) and their first to feature veteran London guitarist James Stevenson (Chelsea, Generation X). Beyond "Desire," however, Discover wavers from obnoxious (the Lotte Lenya-meets-Bauhaus sound of "Heartache," the annoying push of "Sweetest Thing") to melodious ("Kick" and "A White Horse," which suggest a mild New Order influence). Throughout, Michael Aston warbles miserably in an unmusical voice which blends the worst excesses of Siouxsie and Bono; it hardly matters how well Gary Lyons' production renders the instrumentation as long as the vocal mic stays on. (The British tape configuration adds eight live tracks recorded in Nottingham in early 1986. Original pressings of the UK album included a bonus disc entitled Glad to Be Alive of the same performance.)

A transparent effort to commercialize the Jezebels made The House of Dolls their most listenable—that's not to say likable—record yet. Excepting a pair of songs ("The Motion of Love" and "Suspicion") handled by Jimmy Iovine, the LP was produced by Peter Walsh (Simple Minds, China Crisis, Peter Gabriel's live LP), who multi-tracks Aston's vocals (without completely curbing his habit of yelping and wailing unexpectedly) and surrounds them in clearly articulated and tuneful arena guitar rock, leaving the impression that GLJ is on the verge of discovering a most unpleasant hybrid of Van Halen, U2 and a billy goat.

Michael Aston's subsequent departure from the group left Jay in the driver's seat for the slow-moving and uninspired Kiss of Life. "Jealousy" and "Evening Star" follow the LA-styled hard-rock path laid down on The House of Dolls, but the general tone is far less overbearing this time. ("Tangled Up in You" is virtually a folk song; acoustic guitar is prominent throughout.) Cutting away the bombast, however, reveals insipid lyrics ("Why can't I see you smile/Just once in a while/Let me see you smile") forms the intellectual body of one seven-minute song), simpleminded musical ideas and a serious shortage of personality. [i]

See also All About Eve.

GENERAL PUBLIC

... All the Rage (IRS) 1984 •

Hand to Mouth (IRS) 1986 •

RANKING ROGER

Radical Departure (IRS) 1988 •

DAVE WAKELING

No Warning (IRS) 1991 ◊

After terminating the perfect Beat, leader Dave Wakeling and color commentator Ranking Roger (Charlery) stuck together to form General Public, which ultimately involved other 2-Tone veterans. It's hard to hear why the Beat had to die for General Public to live, but evidently the pair felt they needed to leave some people and other career baggage behind. Although an unequal trade, General Public upheld the commitment to excellence that hallmarked the Beat.

Ex-Clashman Mick Jones plays guest guitar on the first LP (although just where on this democratic undertaking is impossible to peg); Aswad's brass section and Gary Barnacle also pitch in. For their part, Wakeling and Roger craft passionate pop, packed with clever tempo shifts, in several styles: a happy Motown bounce ("Tenderness" and the romantic "Never You Done That"), textured drama ("General Public," the political "Burning Bright") and a bluebeat kick ("Where's the Line"). On the negative side, GP engage in annoying verbal play on "Hot You're Cool" and "As a Matter of Fact." Some tracks go on too long and a few of the arrangements are overly busy, but those are small quibbles. All the Rage is a rich, mature album filled with intelligence and invention from a band fairly bursting with talent.

The second and final installment in the General Public saga was Hand to Mouth, a milder and less striking record. The well-rehearsed lineup of six (augmented by ex-Beatman Saxa, Gaspar Lawal and others) exudes an air of relaxed precision on an easygoing pop program that shows little evidence of creative exertion. Although hardly exceptional, "Too Much or Nothing" is the album's best track; "Faults and All" and "Murder," with snappy horn charts, echo the first record but don't build on it. All in all, the music goes down smoothly enough, but without any lasting impression.

In 1988, with their long partnership at an end, Ranking Roger and Wakeling each set out to launch solo careers. Adding semi-melodic singing to his vocal repertoire, Roger got so far as making Radical Departure, a socially conscious but duff album of pop and dance-rock originals that holds little value for fans of his prior endeavors. Wakeling never left the starting gate. Although IRS promised a 1989 release for an album entitled The Happiest Man in the World, the record wasn't completed and Wakeling left the music business. But that isn't quite the end of the story. In 1991, the album—or some version thereof—was issued as No Warning. [i]

See also (English) Beat.

GENERATION X

Generation X (Chrysalis) 1978 ●

Valley of the Dolls (Chrysalis) 1979 ●

Kiss Me Deadly (Chrysalis) 1981 ●

Dancing with Myself EP (nr/Chrysalis) 1981

The Best of Generation X (nr/Chrysalis) 1985

Appearing on the London punk scene shortly after the Sex Pistols, Generation X was an extraordinary but ill-fated outfit that issued five tremendous singles, one classic album and some real dross. It also launched the mega-career of Billy Idol and the ditzy Sigue Sigue Sputnik, developments one must weigh when considering the band's historical significance.

With Idol as the band's voice and image and guitarist Bob "Derwood" Andrews providing its rock power, Generation X broke a lot of punk conventions, and were ultimately ostracized by their peers for refusing to be (or even feign being, as many others did) anti-commercial. Their breakup can be viewed as a parallel to the dispersal of the original punk spirit, although Billy Idol's phoenix-like ascent to world chart domination is equally indicative of the subsequent salability of that ethos.

Following a string of tremendous 45s ("Your Generation," "Wild Youth," "Ready Steady Go"—all included on the US version of the first LP) that crossbred punk insolence with kitschy '60s pop culture to produce catchy, roaring anthems for disaffected youth, Generation X's debut album bore out their promise—not a bum track in the bunch. A commercial streak didn't preclude a punky outlook or closeness to their audience; while the songs don't threaten the established order, they do retain a cocky irreverence that made Generation X more than a latter-day Mott the Hoople. Generation X, regardless of the reputational damage Billy Idol may have subsequently caused, is a classic record. The superior US version deletes "Listen," "The Invisible Man" and "Too Personal"—all fairly unessential—and adds the two single sides ("Wild Youth" and "Your Generation") omitted from the UK album, a definitive John Lennon cover ("Gimme Some Truth") and the amazing pioneering reggae-mix of "Wild Dub."

Valley of the Dolls, produced by Ian Hunter, pales in comparison. Two or three numbers (e.g., "Running with the Boss Sound," "King Rocker") recall the sonic magnificence of the early singles, but the surrounding tracks leave much to be desired. A typical sophomore-record material shortage.

Kiss Me Deadly, recorded after Idol and bassist Tony James (co-writer with Idol of the band's songs) had sacked Andrews and drummer Mark Laff, is a shoddy affair, containing only the wonderful "Dancing with Myself" to recommend it. Their moniker truncated to Gen X, Idol and James employed once and future Clash drummer Terry Chimes and a trio of guitar stars—Steve Jones, John McGeoch and Chelsea's James Stevenson—but the spirit was gone from the music, and the LP is merely a pale shadow of the band's early glories. Indeed, by the time of its release, Idol—under the tutelage of ex-Kiss manager Bill Aucoin—had already declared himself a solo act.

In recapitulating all three records, The Best Of catches just about everything worth saving off the second and third albums ("Valley of the Dolls," "Running with the Boss Sound," "King Rocker," "Dancing with Myself") but omits a couple of early masterpieces. For the best of Generation X, you could still do worse than the American Generation X. [i]

See also Billy Idol, Sigue Sigue Sputnik.

GERMS

(GI) (Slash) 1979

What We Do Is Secret (Slash) 1981

Germicide—Live at the Whisky [tape] (ROIR) 1982

Let the Circle Be Unbroken (Gasatanka) 1985

Lion's Share (Aus. Ghost o' Darb) 1985

Rock n' Rule (XES) 1986

In retrospect, it's easy to dismiss the Germs as the epitome of LA's early identipunk scene. Singer Darby Crash (Paul Beahm) was a barking spiky-haired brat, an alarming adolescent combination of Johnny Rotten's snarling vocal ferocity and Sid Vicious' self-destructive cool. Three years after the band's first live performance (at the Whisky in 1977), Crash died of a drug overdose, reportedly self-inflicted in morbid tribute to Vicious' own fatal OD in 1979.

Germicide, a cassette release of that first show, reinforces that notion. The tape is a raw documentary of spirited incompetence, with Crash ranting through "Sex Boy" and the rather prophetic "Suicide Madness" in a cynical bawl. Behind him, the band plods along with all the cheer of a migraine. A good third of the tape consists of Crash trading obscene insults with the crowd. Also of note: a tortuous disembowelment of the Archies' "Sugar Sugar."

After that, (GI) is a revelation, a kinetic outburst of brute punk force. Two years of tightening and a new drummer (Don Bolles, later of 45 Grave) turned the Germers into a manic punk locomotive, speeding along with Damned intensity in spite of tinny production by Joan Jett. Aside from the overlong live "Shut Down," the songs go by in a breathless rush, fueled by Pat Smear's staccato fuzz guitar and Crash's sometimes confused but often potent punk protest imagery. A key album in the development of American hardcore.

What We Do Is Secret, a posthumous bow to Darby, packages what's left of the Germers' recorded legacy on a 12-inch mini-album. The material includes a 1977 stab at Chuck Berry's "Round and Round" with X drummer D.J. Bonebrake, an outtake from (GI) and live tracks recorded in late 1980, shortly before his death. Lion's Share is an Australian compilation containing live cuts and assorted rarities.

Recorded under battle conditions by Geza X on a four-track, the fair-sounding Rock n' Rule documents a motley but amusing 1979 Christmas party at the Whisky—the noise of flying bottles crashing onstage only adds to the grimy charm. Let the Circle Be Unbroken is another document of the band's chaotic concert existence. [df/1]

See also 45 Grave, Pat RuthenSmear.

GHOST DANCE

See Sisters of Mercy.

GIANT SANDWORMS

Will Wallow and Roam After the Ruin EP (Boneless) 1980

GIANT SAND

Valley of Rain (Enigma) 1985

Ballad of a Thin Line Man (nr/Zippo) 1986

Storm (What Goes On) 1988

The Love Songs (Homestead) 1988 •

Long Stem Rant (Homestead) 1989 •

Giant Songs: The Best of Giant Sand (nr/Demon) 1989 •

Giant Sandwich (Homestead) 1989 •

Swerve [CD] (Amazing Black Sand) 1990 •

BAND OF BLACKY RANCHETTE

The Band of Blacky Ranchette (Fr. New Rose) 1985 •

Heartland (nr/Zippo) 1986

Sage Advice (nr/Demon) 1990 •

Guitarist/singer/pianist Howe Gelb moved from Pennsylvania to Tucson, Arizona, in the late '70s and formed the Giant Sandworms, a quartet preserved on a white-vinyl 7-inch EP: five nifty songs of off-kilter electro-rock that owes rudimentary debts to Roxy Music, Devo and XTC.

Five years of local influence later, only Gelb and three syllables of his band's name remain. Bassist Scott Garber and two drummers (playing on different cuts) join him on Valley of Rain, a brash outpouring of dusty Southwestern rock. Gelb's enthusiastic vocals and the charging, well-written music set this apart from other bands of the region (and those from LA who fancy themselves cultural expatriates) who mix cowboys into their music. Green on Red's Chris Cacavas adds piano to one song.

The next Giant Sand incarnation resulted from the departure of one drummer and the arrival of Paula Jean Brown (vocals/guitar), who had served a short tenure (taking Jane Wiedlin's spot) in the Go-Go's. Ballad of a Thin Line Man moves in acoustic circles, adding equal parts of country and bracing Neil Youngesque electricity. Gelb and Brown harmonize richly; his songs about real life with an uncommon outlook just keep getting better. Guests on the LP include Falling James (Leaving Trains), who co-wrote and sings "Last Legs," a smokey piano ballad with an atmospheric '30s feel. A peppy cover of Johnny Thunders' "You Can't Put Your Arms Around a Memory" speeds up the song and adds piano, but keeps its basic sound intact with mangy singing and noisily strummed guitar.

Storm is the best Giant Sand record to that point. Brown moved over to bass, Garber left and Neil Harry joined to play almost imperceptible pedal steel. (Drummer Tom Larkins was still maintaining his concurrent membership in both Giant Sand and Naked Prey.) Crisp production plays up Gelb's guitarings, which sound remarkably like Neil Young at his grungiest; at times, his vocals hit an unnerving Lou Reed plateau. The band is in fine and sophisticated form, mixing up styles with aplomb. Burgh-oriented songs like "Town with Little or No Pity," "Bigger Than That" and "Town Where No Town Belongs" (which opens on the same riff as Cheap Trick's "She's Tight") demonstrate abundant talent and wit, especially in the lyrics department. A distinctive and invigorating album.

The fractious scat-singing of "Almost the Politician's Wife" and the shambling beatnik prose of "Fingernail Moon, Barracuda and Me" are about the only streams-of-outré-consciousness to trickle over the sides of The Love Songs' solid, Band-like dam of chunky riffs and churning organ (Gelb and Green on Red's Chris Cacavas switch off on keys). The restraint only intensifies the wallop packed by Gelb's lyrics. "One Man's Woman/No Man's Land" is a litany of betrayal, with Gelb carefully piling on the clichés ("One man's meat is another man's poison . . .") until he delivers the kicker ("One man's woman is . . . another man's woman"). It's positively jolting, as is the medicine-show blues "Wearing the Robes of Bible Black." A misguided Teutonic cover of Leiber and Stoller's "Is That All There Is?" suggests that Gelb has spent entirely too much time in Europe but, digested in its entirety, The Love Songs is Giant Sand's most consistent, clear disc. Another significant development is the arrival of drummer John Convertino, who has stuck with Gelb ever since. (Original copies of the LP came with a bonus 7-inch; the CD and cassette add the tracks.)

Long Stem Rant finds both its greatest strength (a contagious, breathless spontaneity) and its greatest weakness (a surfeit of tangled loose ends) in the circumstances of its creation—a sleepless, cathartic one-weekend spurt of near-total improv that followed hot on the heels of Gelb and Brown's divorce. That helps account for the raw emotion that pours from Gelb on "Loving Cup," but the electric intensity that he and Convertino (the entire band here) generate can only be traced to more supernatural sources (and isolation in a windowless barn—pictured on the cover—where it was recorded). Seconds-long stretches of jazzy, freewheeling raves, though often niftily titled ("Patsy Does Dylan," "Lag Craw") add little aesthetically, but do contribute to the you-are-there atmosphere.

Swerve mates the best elements of the last two releases, tempering Rant's scalding emotionalism with more strictly implemented structure. There's a blurry, almost numb feel to the matter-of-fact fatalism of "Can't Find Love" and the mumbling "Sisters & Brothers" (which can easily be traced back to his relationship with Brown), and the mercurial jamfests appear—by dint of title ("Swerver," "Swerving," "Swervette") and sound (a desolately creeping art-blues wave)—to have been hacked from a single piece of rough cloth. The cover of Dylan's "Every Grain of Sand" features backing by Poi Dog Pondering and that other guests include Juliana Hatfield (Blake Babies), Falling James, Steve Wynn and Chris Cacavas.

Folks wanting to test these, er, waters can dip eustachia into two equally worthy pools. Giant Songs draws pretty evenly from the first four Giant Sand discs, adding three tracks from Heartland. The Giant Sandwich CD is a particularly good choice, as it nearly doubles the LPs number of what Gelb's notes call "shy" (read: hard to find) songs and steps rather confidently forward with some previously unheard material, like the very early "Artists" and a very different, starkly emotional reading of "Black Venetian Blind."

The Band of Blacky Ranchette is Gelb's parallel country-western outfit, in which he indulges a passion for Hank Williams and Jimmie Rodgers. Though seldom unauthentic (Gelb's Appalachian roots break the soil of every track), Blacky's eponymous bow is only marginally distinct from Giant Sand. Covers of "Evil" (with manic slide guitar sawing by Rainer Ptacek) and Neil Young's "Revolution Blues" diverge only in Gelb's drawing delivery. Heartland is more unique—only the angst-ridden "Roof's on Fire" is the least bit Sand-y—and emphasizes the western half of the C&W equation in its high lonesome duskiness. Gelb's weary weathered croon gives an empathetic kick to the wistful title track and "Moon Over Memphis," and he proves himself a solid roadhouse piano player as well.

Recorded piecemeal over several sessions in '89 and '90, Sage Advice further westernizes the sound—a rending version of Waylon Jennings' "Trouble Man" underscores the outlaw feel—by generously slathering Gelb's spooky high-desert ballads with dobro and pedal steel. Blacky sneaks back onto Sand territory again, as well—reinventing Long Stem Rant's "Loving Cup" as a western swing two-step and again as a mournful, Williams-esque croon (the latter retitled "Blanket of Stars"). The CD of Sage Advice lassos six of Heartland's best tracks as a bonus. [i/dss]

See also Low Max.

ALEX GIBSON

Passionnel EP (Faulty Products) 1981

Suburbia (Enigma) 1984

BPEOPLE

BPeople (Faulty Products) 1981

Petrified Conditions 1979–1981 (Restless) 1986

PASSIONNEL

The Apostle EP (Enigma) 1984

Our Promise (Enigma) 1985

Alex Gibson (vocals, guitar, main songwriter) led LA's BPeople for several years around the turn of the decade. Beginning as the Little Cripples, the quartet (with the ubiquitous Paul Cutler on bass) turned into BPeople after singer Michael Gira left for New York (forming Circus Mort and then the Swans). The eponymous 1981 eight-song mini-album consists of dark, moody music somewhere between Joy Division and Soft Cell, neither as jarring or desperately distorted as the former, nor as pervasively pop as the latter. On the positive side, there's smart use of sax and organ, but at times the music seems to be pulling in different directions, and poetic license should not be granted for lyrics like "We, they, it, that" (an actual line!).

Petrified Conditions—a full album of original recordings (some, but not all, previously issued on BPeople and other vinyl) remixed in 1984-'85 by Gibson and Paul B. Cutler—is a more convincing introduction to BPeople's artsy sophistication. The sonic and stylistic variety is impressive, and Gibson's songwriting displays structural abilities far beyond the punk club milieu in which the band existed. A worthwhile archaeological find.

After BPeople collapsed, Gibson wrote, singlehandedly performed and produced Passionnel, an excellent four-song 12-inch of wide-screen rock, made grandiose with timpani and long strains of synthesizer that lurk prominently in the near-background. Very English in sound—like Simple Minds or Ultravox—but not particularly derivative, Passionnel is a remarkable achievement for an individual, and a frighteningly good piece of theater in itself.

Not content with the confusion level his career had engendered up to that point, Gibson's next move was to create a band called Passionnel. The Apostle (including a surprisingly straight cover of the Beatles' "Glass Onion") offers rhythmic rock of varying intensity, from even-handed ("Make Like You Like It") to intense sheets of dense sound ("Everything Golden"), over which Gibson spills emotional, semi-tuneful vocals. Occasionally chaotic to the point of unpleasantness, elsewhere delicate and pretty, The Apostle is striking, but not always for the right reasons.

Gibson scored Penelope Spheeris' punk film, Suburbia, the results of which occupy one side of the sound-track album. Performed with only Passionnel's drummer joining him, the music consists of brief, aggressive rock instrumentals that rely on drums for drive and sharp-edged guitar for flavor. Several pieces sound as if they might have been edited from a long jam session (hard to imagine given the size of the band); other portions create a somber, relaxed mood with synthesizer and piano.

Released under the Passionnel moniker, Our Promise pairs the contents of The Apostle on one side with five new tracks. Well-crafted, cleanly produced and varied (within Gibson's limited musical field), the songs make some impact but leave only a faint impression. [j/g/i]

GIBSON BROS

Build a Raft [tape] (Old Age) 1986

Big Pine Boogie (OKra) 1988 (OKra-Homestead) 1988

Dedicated Fool (Homestead) 1989

The Man Who Loved Couch Dancing (Homestead)

1991 •

GIBSON BROS/WORKDOGS

Punk Rock Truck Drivin' Song of a Gun (Homestead)

1990

Columbus, Ohio, may not be the crazed rockabilly capital of America, but the Gibson Bros—a noisy minimalist quartet which includes rock-critic-turned-drummer-turned-guitarist-and-singer Don Howland (ex-Great Plains)—are doing their level best to put the town on the map without resorting to B-movie junk culture or hiccups. Although often compared to the Cramps (also from Ohio, as it happens), the Gibsons cast a wider musical net, digging their wildly reverbed guitars, super-simple drumming and Jeff Evans' frantic vocals into obscure blues and hillbilly tunes, gospel classics and derivative originals (where the lyrics can get pretty bizarre), all with equal fervor. Not always focused—or tuned up—enough to be enjoyable, the willfully hapless Gibson Bros are still capable of deep wit and high excitement.

Big Pine Boogie boasts the hysterical mantra of “Bo Diddley Pulled a Boner,” while Dedicated Fool (on which the group dispenses with bass and has a guest saxman on two songs) has clearer crappy production and reveals a taste for rock’n’roll (“Tight Capris,” Elvis Presley’s “Trying to Get to You,” Alice Cooper’s “Caught in a Dream”) amid the blues (“No Way to Get Along”), gospel (“Lone Wild Bird”) and junkabilly (“Poor White Trash”).

The quartet then undertook a joint project with the Workdogs, a skilled Hoboken rhythm section that has recorded on its own and backed Half Japanese, the Velvet Monkeys and others. Drummer Scott Jarvis and bassist-singer-songwriter Rob Kennedy temper the Gibsons into quick semi-respectability, discouraging the excesses of their intentional amateurism in favor of loose-limbed, unfancy country, rock and rockabilly. Gathering up enough eighteen-wheeler songs to justify the album title, the Gibdogs also rev up a version of “Shakin’ All Over” and such originals as “Talk Italian to Me.” [i]

See also Great Plains.

JERRY GIDDENS

See Walking Wounded.

BRUCE GILBERT

See Dome, Wire.

MICHAEL GIRA

See Circus Mort, Alex Gibson, Lydia Lunch, Swans.

GIST

See Young Marble Giants.

GIZMOS

The Gizmos EP (Gulcher) 1976

Amerika First EP (Gulcher) 1977

Gizmos World Tour EP (Gulcher) 1978

Never Mind the Sex Pistols Here's the Gizmos EP (Gulcher) 1978

DOW JONES & THE INDUSTRIALS/GIZMOS

Hoosier Hysteria (Gulcher) 1980

KENNE HIGHLAND CLAN AND THE EXPLODING PIDGINS

The Kenne Highland Clan and the Exploding Pidgins (Stanton Park) 1987

While the serious end of the new wave was busy rewriting the rules of the game, this motley crew of fanzine writers, Marines and Richard Meltzer fans (the label's name is a tribute to his 1972 book) were goofing around the college town of Bloomington, Indiana, issuing records of their silly songs. The music on the EPs (all 7-inch singles, each containing four to seven short tunes like “Pumpin’ to Playboy,” “Human Garbage Disposal,” “Gimme Back My Foreskin” and “Tie Me Up”) is fresh-faced fratboy guitar pop going on garage rock, but the alternately obnoxious/funny lyrics are emblematic of the mentality that continues to prevail in much of the alternative rock world. (Incidentally, World Tour is “Live—in the studio.”)

By the time of the fourth EP (which includes a mistitled cover of the Pistols’ “Did You No Wrong”), the Gizmos had undergone a number of lineup changes and were nearing a final incarnation with guitarist/singer Dale Lawrence writing most of the songs. On their side of Hoosier Hysteria (shared with another Bloomington quartet), the Gizmos play no-frills rock’n’roll that tears down “Progressive Rock” and pokes tasteless fun at “Dead Astronauts.” Closing out with a punked-up version of Al Green’s “Take Me to the River” (T. Heads had already been there), the Gizmos bade farewell.

Years later, original Gizmos vocalist Ken Highland (a Marine who had to leave the band when he was stationed in Maryland) returned to vinyl duty in Massachusetts. Singing and playing original retro-garage rockers with shifting sidemen on an album he shares with a related '60sish pop-rock group called the Exploding Pidgins, Highland displays the same unfettered enthusiasm as ever—and a welcome adult mentality. [i]

See also *Crawlspac*e, Vulgar Boatmen.

GIZZARDS

See MX-80 Sound.

GLASS EYE

Marlo EP (no label) 1985

Huge (Wrestler) 1986

Bent by Nature (Bar/None-Restless) 1988 •

Christine EP (Bar/None-Restless) 1989

Hello Young Lovers (Bar/None-Restless) 1989 •

From the very first bars of its six-song debut, Austin's Glass Eye staked out an utterly distinct spot on the cusp of pop and the avant-garde. With edgy vocals over herky-jerky rhythms and, slithering under it all, Brian Beattie's groaning, jazzy fretless bass lines, the quartet's music is sparse, angular and seemingly immune to genre divisions.

Guitarist Kathy McCarty's plaintive vocals wear a bit thin on Marlo (Beattie sings one song), but there's already ample evidence of daring songwriting that straddles the line between artiness and genuine fun and emotion. An acoustic piano provides a welcome counterpoint to the plinky electronic keyboards.

Drummer Scott Marcus and keyboardist/singer Stella Weir left after Huge and were replaced, respectively, by Dave Cameron and Sheri Lane for the ambitious Bent by Nature and Christine. Two of the EP tracks are on the album, and all five are on the CD, including the intriguing Latin essay of "Perder la Guerra," the goofy metallic "Ballad of Abraham Lincoln" ("oh, how he hated to shave!") and a cover of Paul Simon's "Cecilia."

In a surprising turn, Marcus and Weir rejoined Glass Eye prior to Hello Young Lovers. The reconstituted group's unique sound isn't very different, although richer and more fleshed-out this time. (The democratic songwriting and increased instrumental versatility doesn't hurt any.) Most importantly, Glass Eye continues to come up with lovely melodies, challenging rhythms and affecting lyrics, on stunning tracks like "God Take All" and "The Crooked Place."

Outside the group, McCarty contributed a solo cover of Daniel Johnston's "Living Life" to the 1989 Bar/None sampler, Time for a Change. Weir and Marcus also play in a band called Prohibition, while Beattie has produced LPs for the Dead Milkmen and Ed Hall. In late 1990, Glass Eye launched a spoof-metal side project under the name Mönikker. [ws]

GLEAMING SPIRES

Songs of the Spires (Posh Boy) 1981

Life Out on the Lawn EP (Posh Boy) 1982

Walk on Well Lighted Streets (Posh Boy-PVC) 1983

Funk for Children—Party EP (Vodka) 1984

Welcoming a New Ice Age (Tabb) 1985

For much of the '80s, Les Bohem (bass/vocals) and David Kendrick (drums) led a dual existence as members of LA's Gleaming Spires and as the rhythm section of Sparks. Both had been in the punk-oriented Bates Motel; their subsequent work together has taken two divergent paths. The first Spires album is full of catchy, synthesizer-strewn silliness ("Are You Ready for the Sex Girls?," "How to Get Girls Through Hypnotism"), while Life Out on the Lawn is more arty and serious, allowing electric guitar and wailing sax to routinize the sound, if not their bizarre outlook. While a somber cover of "Somewhere" (from West Side Story) demonstrates a continuing flair for incongruity, this approach is far less entertaining or original than their jollier early work.

As of Walk on Well Lighted Streets, the Spires became a quartet and the stylistic influence of their Sparks experience is beginning to show. The lyrics are more bizarre than ever, while the music manages to be simultaneously catchy and quirky, throbbing with drive but punctuated with oddball effects and gimmicky production by Stephen Hague. Best tune: "A Christian Girl's Problems."

Funk for Children consists of four tracks on one side and extended versions of two on the flip. The title tune incorporates a children's chorus and "party" percussion for novelty effect, but is otherwise boring. Two numbers are essentially bubblegum rock-pop—robust and catchy, similar to the Spires' early efforts. The program is rounded out with a Zappa soundalike, "Brain Button." Unfortunately, the remix side features the wrong two songs.

Welcoming a New Ice Age isn't as funny as other Spires' endeavors, but its uncanny resemblance to contemporaneous Sparks records makes one wonder when

Russell's voice is going to appear and push Bohem's aside. [i]

See also Devo, Sparks.

GLOVE

Blue Sunshine (nr/Wonderland-Polydor) 1983 (Rough Trade) 1990 •

The band is named after the villain in Yellow Submarine, the record after a variety of LSD; the cover is a '60s memorabilia scrapbook. This one-off project by Banshee bassist Steve Severin and Cure leader Robert Smith (at the time also the Banshees guitarist) sounds much like their own bands crossed with the Beatles, circa 1967. The ten pseudo-psychedelic ditties (thirteen on the reissue's CD) show neither participant in top form, although the single "Like an Animal" (with Siouxsie-like guest vocalist Landray) and "Mr. Alphabet Says" do stand out. Not a band to make a career of, but good harmless fun. [dgs]

See also Cure, Siouxsie and the Banshees.

CRISPIN HELLION GLOVER

THE BIG PROBLEM ≠ the solution. The Solution = LET IT BE. (Resless) 1989 •

For a truly bewildering experience, try listening to this indescribable sideshow by actor Crispin Glover (River's Edge, Back to the Future). And try is the operative word: there's no guaranteeing anyone's ability to endure this entire program of cut-up found stories and neurotic songs. Barnes and Barnes provide the appropriately unsettled music for the album's bizarre musical escapades, which include a multi-part homage to masturbation, Charlie Manson's "Never Say 'Never' to Al-ways" and a tearful version of "These Boots Are Made for Walking." [i]

See also Barnes & Barnes.

JEREMY GLUCK WITH NIKKI SUDDEN & ROWLAND S. HOWARD

See Barracudas.

GOBBLEHOOF

GobbleHoof EP (New Alliance) 1990

The fact that J Mascis (Dinosaur Jr.) is the drummer on this six-song 12-inch ensures a measure of fanzine-level interest for the Massachusetts group's debut. However, the person who really makes GobbleHoof worth hearing is vocalist Charles Nakajima (formerly a bandmate of Mascis' in Dinosaur's hardcore precursor, Deep Wound), less a singer than a dramatic (not melodramatic) speaker with a commanding presence. As guitarist Tim Aaron reels off competent postmodern grungerock (complete with wah-wah and all the trimmings), Nakajima recounts his lyrics in a weary, resonant deep voice, occasionally reaching out to embrace melody notes but generally tying the band's sound up in a distinctive, attention-grabbing package. [i]

See also Dinosaur.

GO-BETWEENS

Send Me a Lullaby (nr/Rough Trade) 1981
Very Quick on the Eye—Brisbane, 1981 (Aus. Man Made) 1982

Before Hollywood (nr/Rough Trade) 1983 ●
Springhill Fair (nr/Sire) 1984
Metals and Shells (PVC) 1985
The Able Label Singles EP (nr/Situation Two) 1986
Liberty Belle and the Black Diamond Express (Big Time)
1986 ●

Tallulah (Big Time) 1987 ●
16 Lovers Lane (Beggars Banquet-Capitol) 1988 ●
1978–1990 (Beggars Banquet-Capitol) 1990 ●

ROBERT FORSTER

Danger in the Past (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1990
(Beggars-Banquet-RCA) 1991 ●

One of the most critically respected and cultily adored neo-pop bands to emerge from Australia, Brisbane's Go-Betweens began in 1977 as a Dylan-inflected duo but had expanded to a more original-sounding trio by the time Send Me a Lullaby was recorded. With shades of Television and the Cure, the cool but not chilly LP offers a charming view that isn't overly pop—no slick gimmickry here—and songs that are more fascinating lyrically than melodically. Remarkably, the band's jagged, slightly coarse guitar sound has little trouble accommodating occasional intrusive blurs of blank sax noise. Very Quick on the Eye is a collection of outtakes and demos, some of which made it onto Lullaby.

Before Hollywood is a major improvement—more tunefulness, stronger harmonies, less stridency—suggesting R.E.M. and Aztec Camera a bit. The Go-Betweens, however, are clearly not just like anybody. Outstanding tracks: “Two Steps Step Out,” “Dusty in Here” and the utterly wonderful, airy “Cattle and Cane.” A marvelous, invigorating record.

Four Go-Betweens recorded the more mellifluous Springhill Fair in France, making it so smooth and well-ordered that it verges on commercialism. They still make genteel pop music, but color it with guest keyboards, strings, horns and even (gasp!) synthesizer. Fortunately, the Go-Betweens write such musically pleasant, lyrically fascinating and intelligent songs that even creeping complexity and slickness can't seriously damage their appeal.

Liberty Belle leaves a few more rough edges intact than its predecessor. The songwriting is again sharp and the sound nicely augmented with light touches of strings, vibes, bassoon, accordion and Tracey Thorn's backing vocals—all without even approaching overproduction. (The CD adds two numbers.) Metals and Shells is a get-acquainted compilation for America, where the band has yet to break much ground. The Able Label Singles reissues the band's two earliest 45s: “the first four songs we ever recorded.”

Tallulah sounds like a stab at creating an essential yuppie acquisition. There's isn't anything very different going on, it's just so much more slick and professional sounding than ever before. Now a five-piece, they've incorporated a violinist/oboist (!) who adds relatively little, since they have often thrown in a few odd-instrument sidemen. Songwriters Grant McLennan and Robert Forster are not in top form at all, especially obvious on “The House That Jack Kerouac Built,” a song that ought to be a lot livelier and possess sharper lyrics if such a venerated name is going to be invoked. They will do better next time.

And better they did. 16 Lovers Lane proffers ten bittersweet, smart relationship songs that find Forster and McLennan at their most lyrically acute. The music is even more impressive, replacing Tallulah's gloss with a clean but intimate sound, effectively incorporating Amanda Brown's violin and oboe into the mesh of Forster and McLennan's intertwined guitars. Amid such consistent quality, highlights include the single “Was There Anything I Could Do?” and “You Can't Say No Forever” (“My world's tumbling down/Stone by stone to the ground/Please take out the garbage”). This one really works.

In early 1990, having reached such a high point, the Go-Betweens went their separate ways. The posthumous 1978–1990 (two discs on vinyl, one CD) collects album tracks, singles, a radio session item and one outtake; 22 songs in all. Like any set of this type, the selection is debatable—the final two albums, for instance, are represented by such weak cuts as, respectively, “Kerouac” and “Streets of Your Town”—but it's still a fitting farewell to a band that will be missed.

Given the length of time Forster was the Go-Betweens' main voice, it's easy (if not necessarily fair) to compare his solo debut, Danger in the Past, to the band's work. There's nothing drastically different in his songwriting techniques; he still blends lilting melodies and a relaxed delivery with sweet and sour lyrics. But here he travels to Berlin, employing Mick Harvey (Nick Cave's chief Bad Seed and a member of Crime & the City Solution) as producer, and engaging the services of Bad Seed/die Haut drummer Thomas Wydler and former Bad Seed guitarist Hugo Race. Harvey (who also plays several instruments on the LP) gives Forster a somewhat more eerie backdrop than he had with the Go-Betweens, and it brings the darker side of his songs more to the fore. Although the bands in which Forster and Harvey began were at the opposite ends of Australia's rock spectrum, their collaboration works surprisingly well.

See also Hex. [i/dgls]

VIC GODARD & THE SUBWAY SECT

What's the Matter Boy? (nr/Oddball-MCA) 1980 +
1982

Songs for Sale (nr/London) 1982
A Retrospective (1977–81) (nr/Rough Trade) 1984

VIC GODARD

T.R.O.U.B.L.E. (Upside) 1986

Although the Subway Sect shared stages with the Clash, Sex Pistols and Buzzcocks as far back as 1976, the group's debut vinyl was a 1978 single; their first longplayer didn't follow until two years later. (The Sect did record an album in '78 for Clash manager Bernard Rhodes, but it was never released. As a result, Bristol-born singer-songwriter-arranger Vic Godard broke up the band, and original drummer Mark Laff joined Generation X.)

By 1980, the Sect had reformed (at least once). Several of these early hard guitar-pop incarnations are chronicled on A Retrospective, which consists of two singles and a radio broadcast from '78, a cut from that lost LP plus a 1981 45 side. The evidence is plain that the early Subway Sect had incorporated a strong Buzzcocks influence (plus flashes of Lou Reed and Television), and that Godard was a talented musician slowly fashioning an identity.

By the time they finally got to make an album, the Sect had again been revamped and was serving merely as a backing band for Godard, who had developed into a skillful vocalist with a budding predilection for folksy, low-key, non-aggressive—hell, non-rock!—music. Considering the band's background, What's the Matter Boy? is a surprising belated debut. The cover is terrible and Rhodes' production is totally flat, but the charming songs' upbeat freshness and originality (start with "Enclave") more than compensates for the flimsy presentation.

The Subway Sect (who transmuted the following year into JoBoxers) may share titular credit with Vic on Songs for Sale—a collection of homages to (and one cover of) his idol, Cole Porter—but Godard is entirely in charge. Abandoning rock'n'roll completely, Songs for Sale is a wonderful record of concise pop creations delivered in a cool, suave voice. Proving himself a masterful tunesmith and crooner, Godard manages to update 1930s/'40s Tin Pan Alley without resorting to mimicry or self-consciousness. As produced by Alex Sadkin, the memorable, sturdy tunes sound of the period without being corny. Sure it's a pose, but Godard is evidently sincere in his nostalgic affection, and he makes the music his own with real panache.

Finally emerging as a solo artist, Vic made T.R.O.U.B.L.E., a brasher, more ambitious and almost equally winning swing record with one Porter tune and eleven lively originals. Dance rhythms of the '40s subtly seasoned with horns and a spot of accordion energize the giddy romance of songs like "The Devil's in League with You," "Caribbean Blue" and "Stop That Girl." "Out of Touch," a snazzy guitar instrumental that could have come from a '60s spy flick, is an intriguing change of pace. [i]

GOD BULLIES

Plastic Eye Miracle [tape] (Mad Queen) 1988 (Ger.)

Amphetamine Reptile-Glitterhouse) 1989

Mamawombwomb (Amphetamine Reptile) 1989

Dog Show (Amphetamine Reptile) 1990 ●

Join Satan's Army EP (Amphetamine Reptile) 1990

They cover such songs as Link Wray's "Preacher Man" and Terry Jacks' "Which Way You Goin' Billy." Every other word out of their mouths has to do with god in some shape or form. There are enough sermons embedded between the notes to stock a religious radio station. One song even begins with a sweet little girl singing a hymn. But make no mistake about it: gospel this ain't. The God Bullies are everything Sister Mary Elizabeth warned you about.

Formed in Kalamazoo, Michigan, the God Bullies debuted in 1988 with the single "All I Want Is My Mama" (a different recording of which appears on Mamawombwomb) and followed that with the cassette-only half-live/half-studio Plastic Eye Miracle (later vinylized in Germany). Hooking up with Amphetamine Reptile, the quartet has proceeded apace, recording songs like "Monster Jesus," "Red Blood" and "Let's Go to Hell" with and without the Jesus Goes to Hell Singers (Mary Kate Murray and Tabatha Predovich).

As the voice of the beast, Mike Hard has learned his lessons well from the Sisters of Mercy: a slow, deep growl interspersed with a glazed-eyed psycho laugh so gleeful and ghoulish that you wonder if it's an act or just the Halidol wearing off. Guitarist (and electronic keyboardist, but fear not: no pseudo strings here) David B. Livingstone works in a harsh and nyarling style on Mamawombwomb and in a grungier and scuzzier vein with bassist Mike Corso for Dog Show. On the former's "Sex Power Money," the guitar twists like a slug in the garden. In "Follow the Leader," a megaphoned tribute of sorts inspired by Jim Jones, the voice exhorts "All my children, my little sheep, let's go to heaven in a tangled heap" while the guitar squirms in sinew-grunge. Like Foetus, this band revels in badness. Religion and death, murder and death, suicide and death, psychosis and death. It's all locked within the music's hard, guts-über-alles grooves.

The version of "Act of Desire" on Mamawombwomb (the song also appears in a live rendition on Plastic Eye Miracle) opens with a loop of "Art Linkletter, Art Linkletter" and a repeated "do it now," then proceeds to introduce burbling synthesizers that tweet like the filaments of a 1950s Frankenstein lab, interlaid with soft sirens, followed by television sermonizer Jack Van Impe preaching the evils of rock'n'roll music.

After Dog Show, drummer Adam Berg was replaced by Tony Oliveri of the Cows, who made his debut on the double 7-inch Join Satan's Army EP: three mutated covers (including Hot Chocolate's "You Sexy Thing") and the metal-parody title track. [e]

GODFATHERS

Hit by Hit (Link) 1986 ●

Birth, School, Work, Death (Epic) 1988 ●

More Songs About Love and Hate (Epic) 1989 ●

Cause I Said So EP (nr/Epic) 1988 ●

Out on the Floor EP (nr/Epic) 1990 ●

Unreal World (Epic) 1991 φ

Remember Dr. Feelgood? How 'bout Eddie and the Hot Rods? Well, if the white-hot pre-punk R&B/rock'n'roll of those two bands means anything to you, chances are you'll love the early Godfathers—formed by London brothers Peter (vocals) and Chris (bass/vocals) Coyne, initially as the Syd Presley Experience—to death. Not coincidentally, the late Vic Maile (original producer of both the Feelgoods and Hot Rods) was at the helm for the first three Godfathers discs. (He died shortly after the completion of More Songs.) With lyrics of working class angst in a Britain where, as Peter Coyne sings in "The Strangest Boy," "My future's past, already gone and been," the Godfathers lay out the worst-case scenario of the Pistols' "No future in England's dream": a landscape of poverty, drugs and desperation. Unlike the punks of yore, though, the Godfathers remain motivated, if only by sexual and material desires and a stubborn streak of self-preservation. Punk meets mod at the bottom of the social barrel.

Hit by Hit presents a band already sporting a remarkably clear vision. Titles like "I Want Everything," "This Damn Nation," "I Want You" and "I'm Unsatisfied," replete with explosive riffing and angry vocals, tell you nearly all you need to know about how the Godfathers saw their lot in Maggie Thatcher's England. A strong cover of John Lennon's "Cold Turkey," and a version of Rolf Harris' "Sun Arise" that makes Alice Cooper's sound sickly round out an essential debut.

Birth, School, Work, Death is even tougher and more focused than Hit by Hit. The dynamic title track and "Cause I Said So" are the high points of a record that just seethes with the anger and aggression that seems to have all but gone out of non-hardcore British post-punk rock.

The fatalistic vision articulated on the song "Birth, School, Work, Death" fully flowers on More Songs About Love and Hate (which could just as easily have been titled More Songs About Resignation and Fate). Whereas the Godfathers could once sing "I Want Everything," they now realize that dream (such as it was) is behind them. "Life Has Passed Us By" (which ironically offers the music hall ambience of the Stones' Between the Buttons and the Small Faces Ogden's Nut Gone Flake), "How Low Is Low?," "Those Days Are Over" and "This Is Your Life" (which ends with one guitar chord being hit more than 75 times) are all bleak views of a life where things only get worse. At this point the group seems to live by Pete Townshend's old maxim that great rock'n'roll spells out your troubles, then lets you dance all over them. They certainly offer little hope of any other cure for what ails them.

Although marked by increased allusions to '60s influences, Unreal World doesn't get overly reitroid (the fab cover of the Creation's "How Does It Feel to Feel" marches the song straight into the '90s). In fact, it's pretty well rooted in the here-and-now, largely due to producer Steve Brown (previously their engineer and mixer, taking over from Maile) and new lead axeman Chris Burrows (replacing Kris Dollimore), who doesn't hesitate to wield wah-wah with a modern flair. Also welcome is the increase in vocal harmonies (especially a high voice/low voice gambit not unlike Squeeze's). End to end, a catchy, rocking album—in fact, if anything, the second half (with gems like "Something About You" and the Beatlesque psychedelic sarcasm of "I Love What's Happening to Me") is better than the first! [ds/jg]

GODFLESH

Godflesh (nr/Silverfish) 1988 (nr/Earache) 1990

(Earache-Combat) 1991 •

Streetcleaner (nr/Earache) 1990 (Earache-Combat) 1991 •

Slavestate EP (Earache-Combat) 1991 •

SWEET TOOTH

Soft White Underbelly EP (nr/Staindrop-Earache) 1990

Ex-Napalm Death guitarist Justin Broadrick formed Godflesh in 1988 upon his departure from Head of David (in which he was the drummer). Godflesh is a sonic bulldozer, its ultra-low tunings and distant, disembodied vocals (not unlike Pornography-era Cure) creating a bass-heavy lava flow of sound even more engulfing than early Swans, or Sabbath at half-speed. (Bassist G. Christian Green is said to own Geezer Butler's old amp.) Comprised of a surgically precise drum machine, Head of David-like tornado guitar, bass from another dimension and a mind-melting array of tape loops and effects, the band projects almost no midrange—the high frequencies skitter over the anesthetizing throb of the low. Basically, it's heavy as hell, and there's nothing metal or hardcore about Godflesh except the imagery and the damage.

Streetcleaner is more industrial, more cluttered and even more overwhelmingly powerful and destructive than the debut. Sounds attack from all angles (some cuts include a second guitarist); elements that seemingly have nothing to do with each other frequently run simultaneously. With the exception of the pulsing "Dead Head" (one of four CD bonus tracks), this album jolts where the debut grooved.

In a discographical tangle of singles, EPs and bonus cuts, Godflesh's third phase—basically their version of dance music—gradually coalesced. The first LP's 1990 reissue on Earache includes two brand-new cuts, among them the staggering "Wounds," a dance track so hard that it hurts: this twelve-minute intergalactic shooting gallery of beats and effects wipes the floor with the entire Chicago/Belgium axis (actually, a Godflesh/Al Jourgensen collaboration has been rumored). The four-song Slavestate EP finds the band charging full-on into an industrial-dance realm, giving Streetcleaner's lurch-and-crunch the twist of a rhythmic basis. The concurrent "Slateman" single found that format mutated into yet another shape, lofting a soaring vocal melody over one of the most pulverising riffs in the band's catalogue.

Sweet Tooth is a side-project trio—Broadrick, Head of David bassist Dave and a hyper-complex drummer named SDK (of Chicago's Slab)—that combines elements of Godflesh and HoD into a wild, almost jazz-like rock unit that thrusts and jolts with more fluidity than (and nearly as much innovation as) its parental units. [ja]

GOD'S LITTLE MONKEYS

New Maps of Hell! (Alias) 1989 •

MALCOLM'S INTERVIEW

Breakfast in Bedlam (nr/Special Delivery) 1987

To compete in the global village, today's self-respecting skiffle group has to have more up its sleeve than an enthusiastic rendition of "Rock Island Line." Besides a strong streak of radical politics, God's Little Monkeys—an acoustic/electric quartet (formerly known as Malcolm's Interview) from York, England—demonstrates a wonderfully broad stylistic reach on the excellent New Maps of Hell!, following an old standard like "Pay That Money Down" with the African-styled chanting of "Hangman Botha," and grouping the a cappella folk of "Sea Never Dry" with the Billy Bragg-styled "Where Were You?" and the Poguesy rock of "Tory Heart." Elsewhere, taking good advantage of tradition while ignoring restrictions on what musical regions are open to them, the group delves into rock and other styles, all led by the rich vocals of guitarist Jon Townend and keyboardist Jo Swiss. [I]

GO-GO'S

Beauty and the Beat (IRS) 1981 •

Vacation (IRS) 1982 •

Talk Show (IRS) 1984 •

Go-Go's Greatest (IRS) 1990 •

HOUSE OF SCHOCK

House of Sock (Capitol) 1988 •

GRACES

Perfect View (A&M) 1989 •

The enormous commercial success of Beauty and the Beat in America was not only a welcome breakthrough for new music, but proof that an all-female band could make it big without a man pulling the strings and without resorting to an image grounded in male fantasy, be it sex kitten or tough leatherette. The album mixes honest pop with healthy infusions of rock'n'roll and, besides containing two bona fide hit singles ("We Got the Beat" and "Our Lips Are Sealed"), provides a refreshingly different point of view on some familiar themes ("Lust to Love," "Skidmarks on My Heart").

If not as exuberant or confident as its predecessor, Vacation is at least more ambitious. The quintet sounds distinctive and skillful, but the songs generally fall short of the standards set by Beauty and the Beat. The exceptions, however, are delightful: the crisp, wistful title track, "I Think It's Me" and the bubbly, modernized girl-group sound of "This Old Feeling."

The third album exchanges the wise punk-pop production hand of Richard Gottehrer for a more challenging experience with Martin Rushent. Talk Show attempts a major revamp, turning up the rock energy on all fronts: Gina Schock's drumming receives new prominence in the mix while guitars blaze with added bite. As on the first two LPs, the material includes a few great singles ("Turn to You," "Head Over Heels" and "Yes or No," the last co-written by guitarist Jane Wiedlin with Ron and Russell Mael), plus a lot of forgettable filler. After all that, the first album remains the band's best.

After guitarist Jane Wiedlin left for a solo career, the group pressed on for a while, but disbanded in May 1985 without recording again. Joined by guitarist Charlotte Caffey, Belinda Carlisle made her solo debut the following year.

Drummer Gina Schock took a few years off and then unveiled a short-lived band. Schock sings and co-wrote the songs on House of Sock with bassist Vance DeGeneres; the backing trio surprisingly includes a drummer who takes her place on half the tracks. Gottehrer's deft production provides a bright, appealing sound, but Schock's limited voice and songs, both equally inoffensive, are easily forgotten.

While the pop world was unwittingly awaiting the multi-platinum arrival of another West Coast female trio, Caffey, Meredith Brooks and Gia Ciambotti formed the Graces, an obviously sound idea ruined by commercial ambition. Rather than let the group find its own use for three complementary voices, executive producer Jimmy Iovine threw an army of producers (including Carlisle's svengali of schlock, Rick Nowels), songwriters and session pros at the project, burying Perfect View in a slick but ineffectual wash. If the Graces had any personality, you'd never know it from this bland piece of product.

In 1990, after reuniting for a one-off charity performance, the Go-Go's decided to give it another try. By year's end, an unnecessary compilation—hits, dubious album selections and a worthless new run-through of "Cool Jerk," first covered on Vacation—was in the stores and the Go-Go's were on the road again. [ks/i] See also Belinda Carlisle, Jane Wiedlin.

GOLDEN PALOMINOS

The Golden Palominos (OAO-Celluloid) 1983 •

Visions of Excess (Celluloid) 1985 •

Blast of Silence (Celluloid) 1986 •

A Dead Horse (Celluloid) 1989 •

The Golden Palominos—an above-average avant-funk album—would have been a milestone if it had sounded anything like the Palominos' New York gigs. At one memorable show, the lineup included bandleader Anton Fier (drums), David Moss (drums/noise), Arto Lindsay (guitar/vocals), John Zorn (reeds), Bill Laswell (bass) and Jamaaladeen Tacuma (bass). The double rhythm section packed a wallop in unison, but more often the players broke off into intense and fascinating duets and trios.

On the first record, the Palominos add (Mark Miller, Fred Frith, Nicky Skopelitis) and subtract (most often Tacuma and Moss) players while preserving the basic material, tossing in a couple of new things ("Hot Seat," a song mostly by Miller, and "Cookout," a Fier percussion piece). Those who knew the magic of the Palominos' noise/funk synthesis firsthand will regret Fier's decision to go for the trendier Material sound in his co-production with Laswell. Still, when Lindsay rakes his untuned guitar and lets out a trademark yelp, or Zorn lowers some fragment of a clarinet under water and gurgles with weird ferocity, you know you're hearing a trace—just a trace—of the real thing.

The second phase of Fier's Palomino experiment took an entirely different direction, converting a loose caravan of talent into an unstable side-group which sporadically performs and records in countless permutations and combinations. Visions of Excess is a brilliant neo-pop album of tuneful, lyrical songs featuring such luminaries as Michael Stipe, John Lydon, Richard Thompson, Jack Bruce, Chris Stamey, Henry Kaiser and Jody Harris. As producer, drummer and co-writer of the songs, Fier is on stylistically unprecedented ground careerwise, but his control and taste are impeccable. A version of Moby Grape's "Omaha" sung by Stipe is a truly incisive piece of '80s psychedelia (with a crazed Kaiser breakdown solo) that sounds like a pop hit; "(Kind of) True" and "Buenos Aires," both starring talented newcomer Syd Straw, are equally memorable. Lydon's "The Animal Speaks" is, well, what you might expect from him. Just so no one should forget where this project is coming from, the LP closes with an Arto Lindsay extravaganza, "Only One Party." Essentially a revue of 1985's semi-underground stars and sounds, Visions of Excess is one disc everyone should own.

Blast of Silence continues the Palominos' singular existence, employing many of the same people as Excess (but notably not Stipe or Lydon), while extending the musical family to incorporate Peter Dinklage, Don Dixon, T-Bone Burnett and other meta-stars. The Pal-ominous' previous rotating ensemble work raised expectations of the unexpected, but this plain album has nothing to equal its predecessor's extraordinary content. Except for Straw singing Peter Holsapple's "Diamond," the material isn't especially interesting; the performances are routine and the darkening outlines of a repeatable formula discourage faith in the future of Fier's creative vision and energy.

Fier pretty much ditched the supersession concept for A Dead Horse, building this version of the Palominos around a more consistent lineup of Laswell and Skopelitis, with Numbers Band singer/guitarist Robert Kidney (who performed on Blast of Silence and wrote "The Animal Speaks" on Visions of Excess), ex-Information Society vocalist Amanda Kramer and a few guests, including Bernie Worrell and Mick Taylor. Similarly, the big-rock style of the previous two discs gives way to a calmer, more atmospheric approach. All seven songs are in-house creations (three by Kidney, four by Fier/Skopelitis/Kramer); Kidney's plaintive singing and Kramer's multi-tracked harmonies provide a surprisingly pleasant alternative to playing spot-the-star.

[mf/i/hd]

GONE

"Let's Get Real, Real Gone for a Change" (SST) 1986 •
Gone II—But Never Too Gone! (SST) 1986

Black Flag guitarist Greg Ginn has pursued numerous side projects in recent years. Gone is an instrumental power trio that could use a vocalist as well as more organized power; the first album (named after an Elvis Presley remark) meanders aimlessly like a badly run rehearsal session.

The song-things on Gone II (cover artwork by Ginn) are more coherent and tolerable, but still fall short of justifying the band's existence. Riffs with solos make good interludes, but sixteen unengaging pieces in a row do not a good time make. Is the world ready for heavy metal wallpaper? Still, give Andrew Weiss well-earned credit for bitchin' bass work.

[i]

See also Henry Rollins.

GONE FISHIN'

See Windbreakers.

GOOD MISSIONARIES

See Alternative TV.

GOO GOO DOLLS

Goo Goo Dolls (Mercenary-Celluloid) 1987

Jed (Death-Enigma) 1989 •

Hold Me Up (Metal Blade-Warner Bros.) 1990 ♪

Like vintage Replacements (their most obvious influence) or early Cheap Trick, Buffalo, New York's Goo Goo Dolls brandish soaring/searing grunge-garage powerpunkpop. Although recorded two years apart, the trio's first two albums are virtual carbon copies of each other, with flashes of brilliance amid silly covers and scrawny adolescent yapping.

As the Goos tightened up their act, they moved into the raucous stylistic space the 'Mats were abandoning, and the effervescent Hold Me Up really delivers the goods, focusing a variety of hard-rocking/good-humored impulses into a solid, distinctive sound all its own. An exhilarating rollercoaster of Ramonesy riffs and insistent hooks, the Goo Goo Dolls write cool originals and make good use of two covers: the Plimsouls' "A Million Miles Away" and Prince's "I Could Never Take the Place of Your Man," a tongue-in-cheek take with guest vocals by Lance Diamond, a schmaltzy crooner (who also contributed his stylings to Jed's crunching rendition of Creedence's "Down on the Corner"). Essential for fans of Cheap Trick and cheap beer.

[ja]

ROBERT GORDON WITH LINK WRAY

Robert Gordon with Link Wray (Private Stock) 1977

Fresh Fish Special (Private Stock) 1978

ROBERT GORDON

Rock Billy Boogie (RCA) 1979

Bad Boy (RCA) 1980

Are You Gonna Be the One (RCA) 1981

Too Fast to Live, Too Young to Die (RCA) 1982

Live at Lone Star (Fr. New Rose) 1989 •

Robert Gordon Is Red Hot [CD] (Ger. Bear Family) 1989 •

Singer Robert Gordon made one of the sharpest volte-faces in musical memory when he left New York pseudo-punkers Tuff Darts to reappear as a freeze-dried '50s rocker, complete with sideburns, pompadour, a songbook of Sun Records oldies and authentic guitar icon Link Wray in tow.

Superficial trappings aside, Gordon's strongest asset is his magnificent voice—a clear, clean baritone rarely heard in pop music of any stripe. His debut album, Robert Gordon with Link Wray, is suffused with rockabilly material (songs from Carl Perkins, Gene Vincent, Billy Lee Riley and Eddie Cochran), but the accompaniment by the Wildcats is more contemporary, with Wray contributing sizzling guitar licks.

Fresh Fish Special (named after Elvis Presley's haircut in Jailhouse Rock—as typical an homage as the use of the Jordanaires) is more of the same, with barely more sophisticated tunes. The odd track here is Bruce Springsteen's "Fire," which was a hit for the Pointer Sisters. Nevertheless, its inclusion proved Gordon didn't need to rely exclusively on nostalgia.

Besides the addition of echo, Rock Billy Boogie's distinction is the replacement of Wray with nimble guitarist Chris Spedding and its inclusion of "Black Slacks," a jivey Gordon signature number. On Bad Boy, Gordon seems to be evolving from the '50s into the '60s via schlockier songs (Roy Orbison's "Up-town," Kris Jensen's "Torture").

Gordon's time-traveling into the present continues on Are You Gonna Be the One, his most accessible album for those who don't worship at the House of Butchwax. Despite his '50s fixation, Gordon best puts across those songs without a 25-year-old aroma.

Too Fast to Live, Too Young to Die is a compilation of tracks from all the preceding albums except Bad Boy, plus a live version of "Black Slacks" and previously unreleased recordings of two Marshall Crenshaw songs.

A more recent concert document, Live at Lone Star, finds Gordon running through a classic rock'n'roll program onstage in New York, sharply backed by Spedding, bassist Tony Garnier and drummer Anton Fig. Starting with "The Way I Walk" and running through "Twenty Flight Rock," "Mystery Train," "Black Slacks," "Fire" and ten more, the great-sounding record proves that Robert Gordon is still a master of the form. [si/i]

GORDONS

Future Shock EP (NZ Flying Nun) 1980 + 1988 •

The Gordons (NZ Flying Nun) 1982 + 1988 •

Vol. 2 (NZ Flying Nun) 1984

BAILTER SPACE

Nelsh EP (NZ Flying Nun) 1987

Tanker (NZ Flying Nun) 1988

Grader Spader EP (NZ Flying Nun) 1988

Thermos (NZ Flying Nun) 1990 (Matador) 1991

In 1988, when the Gordons' long out-of-print Future Shock EP was re-released on 12-inch to coincide with Baitler Space's emergence, the New Zealand trio was retrospectively praised with frequent comparisons to Sonic Youth. But back in 1980, when the 7-inch first appeared, there simply were no precedents. Renowned locally for punishingly loud and relentless live shows, the Gordons' vinyl matched progressive punk songwriting and aggression with an uncategorizably deliberate yet extreme wall of flailing sheetmetal guitar.

The eponymous seven-song follow-up, recorded and mixed in 22 hours, almost entirely relinquishes the band's punk genetics in favor of spatial control and mood dynamics; still harsh and as heavy as anvil jewelry, the pace is less the point, with jagged chords and evocative song structures edging the vocals into far less prominence. (The Gordons CD appends Future Shock's contents.) With simpler riff-plus-chorus constructions elevated mainly by John Halvorsen's manic-depressive guitar-maiming, Vol. 2 comes surprisingly close to user-friendliness.

In 1987, Halvorsen reunited with the Gordons' other guitarist, Alistair Parker, to form Baitler Space, lining up drummer Hamish Kilgour (also concurrently involved in a Clean reunion and backing Chris Knox) as well. With ex-Gordon drummer Brent McLaughlin as engineer, and far more expansive production than the former band, Nelsh quite naturally sounds like the Gordons several years on: songs more familiarly structured, vocals still subservient and weak, guitar still inventive (albeit less abrasive), keyboards now filling spaces formerly occupied by feedback and overdrive.

The more confident and considered Tanker, an LP of well-constructed songs displaying varied intentions and style, lacks the old recklessness but substitutes a heretofore hidden morose pop skill, as well as vocals no more melodic nor less arresting than those of Ian Curtis. Add a sharpened instrumental prowess—oddly reflective of Sonic Youth (of all things)—and you wind up with an excellent time-capsule condensation of 1988 independent music at its apex. (The spin-off EP is curiously Gordonized, with appropriately B-side material.)

Thermos, with McLaughlin reclaiming drum chores to complete the tail-biting cycle, actually ups both the discordance and pop quotient for, at its frequent best, a monumentally alluring weave of soothing smooth and seething dysphonia.

(A rather dissimilar Boston band calling themselves the Gordons issued an indie album entitled 100 Holidays in '88, creating some potential confusion for overzealous mail-order consumers.) [ab]

See also Clean, Tall Dwarfs.

MARTIN L. GORE

See Depeche Mode

ROBERT GÖRL

See Deutsche Amerikanische Freundschaft.

GOVERNMENT ISSUE

Legless Bull EP (Dischord) 1981

Make an Effort EP (Fountain of Youth) 1982

Boycott Stabb (Dischord-Fountain of Youth) 1983 (Giant) 1988

Joyride (Fountain of Youth) 1984 •

The Fun Just Never Ends (Fountain of Youth) 1985 •

Give Us Stabb or Give Us Death EP (Mystic) 1985

Live on Mystic (Mystic) 1985

Government Issue (Fountain of Youth) 1986 (Giant) 1986 •

You (Giant) 1987 •

Crash (Giant) 1988 •

Strange Wine E.P. (Giant) 1988 •

Joyride/The Fun Just Never Ends [CD] (Giant) 1990 •

Beyond (Rockville) 1991 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Four Old 7's on a 12" (Dischord) 1985

One of America's longest-running hardcore shows, Washington DC's Government Issue is a multi-faceted band that has been widely underrated, despite a large and noteworthy catalogue that dates back to 1981. Following an early release on Dischord (the ten-song Legless Bull 7-inch, later compiled on Four Old 7's), the band—which initially included bassist Brian Baker, better known as a member of Minor Threat—cut the unprepossessing Make an Effort, exhibiting minor flashes of potential brilliance. "No Way Out" and "Twisted Views" are run-of-the-mill quickies, but "Teenager in a Box" is a well-crafted indicator of things to come.

Mainman/vocalist John Stabb Schroeder led a notably diminished Government Issue into a holding pattern on Boycott Stabb, sticking close to 'core style in a series of brisk soundalikes, only one (a new version of "Sheer Terror," a song included on both Legless Bull and Make an Effort) reaching the two-minute mark. Produced by Minor Threat's Ian MacKaye, the record isn't dreadful, it's just generic.

The GIs began to display marked maturity and a bit of stylistic independence on 1984's Joyride, loudly coproduced by Baker. With improvements in Tom Lyle's guitar work and Schroeder's singing, and the arrival of Mike Fellows, the quartet's third bassist (and most competent to date), Joyride takes a few cautious steps away from hardcore orthodoxy. (Admittedly, the heavy metal insinuations of "Joyride" and "Notch to My Crotch" are not necessarily a step in the right direction.) Odd inclusions: a sludgy but tuneful cover of "These Boots

Are Made for Walkin,” the second version of “Hall of Fame” (from Boycott Stabb) and another (uncredited) version of “Sheer Terror.”

With another change of bassist and Baker continuing as co-producer, GI made its last real hardcore record, The Fun Just Never Ends (also issued on a joint CD with Joyride, adding a live version of “Vanity Fare” as a bonus). Slowed to a solid mid-tempo chug, “Written Word” and “The Next Time” are neat and tuneful class-of-’77 rockers, proof that Government Issue was not just a face in the crowd.

Opening with a thickly melodic hypno-instrumental (“Visions and ?”), Government Issue (aka GI-5) edges the band away from its roots. The second track, “They Know,” uses hardcore as a stepping-off point, and then abandons the format entirely, turning literally post-punk on the next song, “Locked Inside.” With Lyle playing keyboards (organ on the backwards “Memories Past”—ha ha) and even electric sitar (on the misbegotten psychedelia of “Last Forever”), the album touches a number of memorably melodic bases, sounding in spots like mid-period Hüsker Du and/or mid-period Damned. (The CD and cassette add a bonus of—you guessed it—“Sheer Terror.”)

Having found its voice, GI (sporting a tremendous new rhythm section) ran with it on the next two albums, both of which are great. Produced by Lyle, You is a paragon of pop punk precision, a masterwork of meticulous playing and abundant hooks. Stabb’s emergence as an American Dave Vanian of sorts isn’t as weird as it sounds, and gangly backing vocals provide flip contrast on catchy songs like “Jaded Eyes” and the Clashy chorus of “Man in a Trap.” Special favorites: “Caring Line” and “Where You Live.”

The apex of GI’s studio career, Crash is something of a musical summary of the band’s eight-year history. Each track sounds as if it had been assembled on a loom, with fibers of hardcore, punk, pop metal and even early-’80s new wave knitted together. Strong cuts include “Time Will Rearrange,” “For Ever” and “Strange Wine.”

Strange Wine is a ten-track collection: the titular album cut, new decelerated studio renditions of “I’m James Dean” and “Teenager in a Box” (both from the band’s earliest days) and a live retrospective recorded at CBGB in August ’87. [icm/i]

See also Minor Threat.

HUW GOWER

See Records.

GRAB GRAB THE HADDOCK

Three Songs by Grab Grab the Haddock EP (nr/Cherry Red) 1984

Four More Songs by Grab Grab the Haddock EP (nr/Cherry Red) 1985

This terminally cute London quartet with the daft name spun off from the defunct Marine Girls but, unlike former bandmate Tracey Thorn (who went on to form Everything but the Girl), Alice Fox and her crew still hawk the chaotic tunelessness that made the Marine Girls so insufferable.

The first EP has a sparse, almost minimalist feel; even the use of atypical pop instrumentation (maracas, conga drum, cello) does little to alleviate the disjointed clatter. Fox’s childlike caterwauling further adds to the annoyance. Four More is a slight improvement—clear melodies and a near-logical organization level enhance the tracks. Guitarist/songwriter Lester Noel takes over vocal chores on “Last Fond Goodbye,” a bright pop song that provides the 12-inch’s only worthwhile interlude. [ag]

See also Marine Girls.

GRACE POOL

Grace Pool (Reprise) 1988 •

Where We Live (Reprise) 1990 ◊

Prior to forming the suavely commercial Grace Pool with singer Elly Brown, New York guitarist Bob Riley was the drummer/keyboardist in Rage to Live (Brown guested on the band’s first album) and also played in the Love of Life Orchestra. Produced with deft touches of synthesizer ambience and quiet grandeur by Steve Nye (whose work with Japan is duly noted in his efforts here), the quintet’s debut is an attractive-going-on-glib haute pop record with catchy songs, fine harmonies and intricately subtle arrangements.

Riley and Brown are the only original Pool-mates in the reconstituted quartet (drummer Frank Vilardi is on the album but not in the band); Riley produced the folkier second album with less sonic flair than Nye. While the sensitively poetic lyrics are easy to overlook in favor of the sweeping melodies, Where We Live just isn’t as striking or memorable as the debut. [i]

See also Rage to Live.

GRACES

See Go-Go’s.

GRANDMASTER FLASH AND THE FURIOUS FIVE

The Message (Sugar Hill) 1982

Greatest Messages (Sugar Hill) 1983

On the Strength (Elektra) 1988 •

GRANDMASTER MELLE MEL AND THE FURIOUS FIVE

Work Party (Sugar Hill) 1984

Stepping Off (Sugar Hill) 1985

GRANDMASTER FLASH

They Said It Couldn’t Be Done (Elektra) 1985

The Source (Elektra) 1986

Ba-Dop-Boom-Bang (Elektra) 1987 •

GRANDMASTER FLASH/ THE FURIOUS FIVE/ GRANDMASTER MELLE MEL

The Greatest Hits (Sugar Hill) 1989

Although they were not rap’s first stars, Grandmaster Flash’s galvanizing 1982 hit “The Message” was the earliest record to demonstrate the form’s potential for socio-political commentary and, preceding Run-DMC, initially served to convey rap’s excitement to an audience beyond urban blacks. Unfortunately, most of Flash’s early raps were of the let’s-party-and-tell-ourzodiac-signs variety, with absolutely no consciousness, political or otherwise—good for dancing, but not very stimulating. (Despite his star billing, DJ Flash is not the rapper; lead vocals are by Melle Mel, Rahiem and others. Adding to the credit-where-due confusion, most of the crew's early songwriting and performing was done, in large part, by the Sugar Hill house band.)

Greatest Messages splits the difference between hard-edged social realism and mindless partytime, from "Freedom" (their first hit) and "Flash to the Beat" to "Survival (Message II)" and "New York, New York" (the follow-up to "The Message"). The cassette has two bonus tracks. What the LP doesn't include is Melle Mel's brilliant 1983 anti-cocaine song, "White Lines (Don't Don't Do It)," the music for which, incidentally, was lifted from a Liquid Liquid instrumental.

Following a bitter legal dispute over contracts and ownership of the name, the band split in two: most of the members remained with Grandmaster Flash (Joseph Saddler), dropped the "Furious Five" appellation and signed to Elektra; Melle Mel, who also got to wear the Grandmaster crown, recruited a mostly new FF and stuck with Sugarhill. The former's They Said It Couldn't Be Done is a strained effort to diversify and make up for lost time and momentum. There's a rapped-up version of Fats Waller's "The Joint Is Jumpin'," a Run-DMC imitation unoriginally entitled "Rock the House" and two soulful all-singing tunes. Only "Sign of the Times" dips into topicality, employing a sound reminiscent of "White Lines."

The Source, which travels a number of awfully familiar verbal and musical roads, makes a regular point of arguing Flash's significance and supremacy. "Fastest Man Alive," the audio vérité "Street Scene," the hackneyed music-rap marriage of "Style (Peter Gunn Theme)" and the pretend-live "Freelance" make more personal introductions and absurd claims than a convention of used car salesmen. As a routine party record, it fulfills all the minimal obligations; as proof of Flash's creativity and ability to grow with the times, it's a sad example of commercial wheel-spinning.

The word funky gets an aromatically literal interpretation in Ba-Dop-Boom-Bang's "Underarms," an amazingly tasteless put-down about bad smells. Otherwise, the LP avoids The Source's hype to concentrate on praising women ("Them Jeans"), cars ("Big Black Caddy"), parties ("House That Rocked") and self-reliance ("Get Yours"). Interpolations of other people's music, including a lamely belated cover of Queen's "We Will Rock You" with other stuff stitched in, don't prevent Ba-Dop-Boom-Bang from being run-of-the-mill.

When members of Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five—specifically Mele-Mel (new spelling), Scorpio and Cowboy—reunited, the result was the distinctly superior On the Strength. The record gets off to a killer start with the streetwise "Gold"; the side ends with "King," a moving gospel-tinged tribute to MLK. (The intervening tracks are routine bragging, with only Flash's deadly turntable work on "Yo Baby" for diversion.) Side Two's bizarre highlight is a rock-rap cover of "Magic Carpet Ride" (shades of "Walk This Way"). Mr. Steppenwolf himself, John Kay, sings it; Flash's gang raps on the chorus and adds a few sections that I don't recall from the twenty-year-old original.

Stepping Off is a compilation; the two-record 1989 Greatest Hits contains Sugar Hill-era tracks by all of the original crew's various permutations. [i]

See also Duke Bootee.

DAVE GRANAY

See Moodists.

EDDY GRANT

Message Man (nr/Ice) 1977

Walking on Sunshine (Epic) 1979

Love in Exile (nr/Ice) 1980

My Turn to Love You (Epic) 1980

Live at Notting Hill (nr/Ice) 1981 + 1984

Can't Get Enough (nr/Ice) 1981 + 1983

Killer on the Rampage (Ice-Portrait) 1982 ●

Going for Broke (Ice-Portrait) 1984 ●

All the Hits (nr/K-Tel) 1984

Born Tuff (Ice-Portrait) 1986 ●

File Under Rock (nr/Blue Wave-Parlophone) 1988

(Enigma) 1990 ●

Harmless Piece of Fun EP (nr/Blue Wave-Parlophone) 1988 ●

Hits (nr/Starr-Polydor) 1988 ●

Walking on Sunshine: The Very Best of Eddy Grant

(nr/Blue Wave-Parlophone) 1989 ●

Barefoot Soldier (Ice-Enigma) 1990 †

Three expatriate Caribbeans plus two Englishmen equalled the Equals, whose blend of pop-rock, psychedelia, blues, R&B and, of course, a slight Carib accent yielded a wildly diverse and uneven batch of singles and albums in the late '60s. Despite their problems, they amassed a few Top 10 hits, including the oft-revived (most recently by Grant himself) "Baby Come Back," a smash on both sides of the Atlantic in 1968. Several of their other hits now sound like utter tripe, but "Black Skin Blue Eyed Boys" and the LP track "Police on My Back" (covered by the Clash) show just how talented they could be.

The group provided a musical (and music-business) education for its Guyana-born guitarist/chief songwriter/leader (but not lead singer) Eddy Grant, who eventually left to go solo and set up his own record company, Ice. He plays almost everything on his studio albums, except sometimes bass and/or drums, plus horns (when he doesn't use synthesizer instead).

Message Man was a dodgy start, yet Grant immediately began forging his own reggae style ("Jamaican Child") and continued the interracial/cultural theme begun with the Equals ("Cockney Black").

Walking on Sunshine shows his potential in full flower: "Living on the Frontline" is a superb electronic-reggae single, and its remarkable extension into "The Frontline Symphony" on the LP is a lengthy tour de force that features a mock-classical vocal section. The title track and "Say I Love You" (a monster hit in Nigeria) add extra value to an LP already well worth owning.

Love in Exile showcases Grant working in various soul styles (like the Teddy Pendergrass-ish semi-funk of the title track), albeit with his own oddly inflected vocals. "Preaching Genocide" is the one exception, a long mutant calypso political chant, but all in all it's only musical water-treading, and inferior. My Turn to Love You is the same record with an alternate title and graphics.

The live album is an excellent display of both Grant's talent as a performer and his best solo songs up to that point. It also makes available about half the otherwise rare songs from Message Man. Despite the usual live record drawbacks—it needn't have been a double—its best is mighty good.

Can't Get Enough is Grant's "I'm a love man" album, but it's great for what it is, as the catchy numbers take full advantage of Grant's genre-bending and blending. (The reissue adds a nifty instrumental, "Time Warp," that was originally available as the B-side of "Electric Avenue.")

The rock-oriented Killer on the Rampage is Grant's most consistent album to date, as well as his biggest commercial success in the US. "Electric Avenue" (the most rock-based track, save for some muscular guitar playing here and there) may prove to be an anthem of classic stature, and cuts like the title track and "I Don't Wanna Dance" demonstrate how Grant's songwriting has matured.

Proof that Killer was no fluke: although none of Grant's subsequent albums have high points quite as great as "Electric Avenue," all are quite enjoyable and nearly as varied. Going for Broke includes the theme song of the Romancing the Stone (only a smidge of which made the film's final cut), the wry Afro-Carib "Political Bassa-Bassa" and some strong rockish tracks. Born Tuff has a more varied, less rockified approach and a super title tune that's something of a more confident companion to "Living on the Front Line." If the album—on which Grant performs nearly every note—doesn't begin all that strongly, it does gather steam.

Grant also plays virtually all of File Under Rock and Barefoot Soldier, both of which maintain the quality level. The former isn't that much rockier than Going for Broke, but it does include a tribute to Chuck Berry and a decent remake of "Baby Come Back" (the original still rules, though). Barefoot Soldier is stylistically quite varied: Carib-beat, reggae, folk, country-rock (yup) and a bracing protest rocker, "Restless World." Social consciousness is prominent on the LP, which (at least in the US) includes his infectious anti-apartheid tune, "Gimme Hope Jo'Anna," an early-'88 UK hit. If some of the lyrics are obscure or dopey, Grant compensates with his usual charm, sincerity and catchy musical settings.

Harmless Piece of Fun contains "Electric Avenue," "Born Tuff," two swell tracks from File Under Rock plus a couple of new items. Walking on Sunshine is a pretty good best-of, except that it ignores "Born Tuff." [jg]

GRAPES OF WRATH

The Grapes of Wrath EP (Can. Network) 1984
September Bowl of Green (Can. Network) 1985
(Capitol) 1986

Treehouse (Capitol) 1987 •

Now and Again (Network-Capitol) 1989 •

Playing muscular power pop, this Vancouver trio in its early days alternately resembled Southeastern bands like Let's Active and West Coast folk-rockers like Translator. The impressive four-song EP is a little short on personality but locates a viable commercial midpoint between the radio and the road. Guitarist Kevin Kane is a proficient instrumentalist and a fair vocalist; drummer Chris Hooper indicates his enthusiasm by overplaying.

September Bowl of Green retrieves one fine song ("Misunderstanding," which Chris Stamey might have written) from the EP, but puts different versions of it (and another swell tune, "Love Comes Around") on the album's Canadian and American editions. The latter replaces the original tracks with similar but inferior productions and mixes by Red Rider chief Tom Cochrane. While the Canadian cassette adds bonus tracks, the US LP release deletes a harmonious rendition of the Beatles' "If I Needed Someone."

Cochrane produced all of Treehouse, giving Grapes of Wrath a crisp, clear sound, filled with airy guitar picking, subdued if busy drumming and delectable multi-voice arrangements. Neither novel nor progressive, Treehouse is simply flawless electric pop written and played with skill and taste.

Adding keyboard player Vincent Jones, Grapes of Wrath became a quartet in time for Now and Again, another delectable record. Producer Anton Fier wraps some of the songs in quietly lush orchestrations; while the gamble doesn't pose a grave threat to the band's personality, neither is it distinct improvement. Tunes performed straight are the most easily appealing; keyboards (some played by guest star Chuck Leavell) provide an agreeable extra dimension. Repeating a peculiar (for a band with no country personality, that is) instrumental feature of Treehouse, Pete Kleinow adds pedal steel guitar to a few numbers. [i]

GRAVEDIGGER FIVE

All Black and Hairy (Vox) 1984

The Mirror Cracked (Vox) 1987

On their first album, this now-defunct San Diego quintet puts down groovy, authentic-sounding (credit the production by label owner Greg Shaw) garage punk with convincing '60s clumsiness and sincerity. Any band that covers a song ("All Black and Hairy") by Screamin' Lord Sutch is already a few rungs up the cool ladder; the Gravediggers further add to the fun with a singer who fairly approximates the legendary T.S. Bonniwell and perfectly evocative arrangements and licks. If All Black and Hairy were twenty years old, it would now be a collectors' item.

Perhaps with that future possibility in mind, the first side of The Mirror Cracked consists of rehearsals and perfectly serviceable outtakes (mostly covers; one track features Paula Pierce of the Pandoras) from All Black and Hairy. The lo-fi live side, from a 1984 gig, repeats three of the same songs, including the title song and the cool prehensile sexism of "Be a Caveman." [i]

GREATER THAN ONE

Dance of the Cowards (nr/Kunst=Kapital) 1988 •

London (Wax Trax!) 1989 •

G Force (Wax Trax!) 1989 •

Index EP (Wax Trax!) 1991 •

Compared to other industrial dance bands, this London duo (Lee Newman and Michael Wells) is pretty easy on the ears, assembling their version of synth rhythms, found-sound samples and occasional chanted vocals with a reasonably light touch. Not that the four-sided London (which expands Dance of the Cowards by six tracks) doesn't rattle the walls now and then, but GTO tends to enfold often political (occasionally operatic) real-life samples (the prosaic "Now Is the Time," presented in two mixes here, includes Martin Luther King's "I Have a Dream" speech and calisthenic directions) in a supportive ambient/rhythmic bed rather than jam on the audio vérité just to pump up the tumult.

The duo favors its own voices and stronger beats on G Force, but the record is still fairly accessible. GTO isn't exactly bursting with ideas, but their work is not without imagination ("Why Do Men Have Nipples?" snatches some dopey Alaskan TV dating show, surrounding it with snappy synth percolations) or the power to provide diverting entertainment, on or off club floors.

[i]

GREAT PLAINS

The Mark, Don & Mel E.P. (New Age) 1983

Born in a Barn (Homestead) 1984

Naked at the Buy, Sell, and Trade (Homestead) 1985

Sum Things Up (Homestead) 1987 •

Colorized! (nr/Diablo) 1989

The Midwest not only provides a home to this casually intellectual Columbus, Ohio, quintet, it also informs their post-collegiate cultural outlook. Following the eight-song Mark, Don & Mel mini-album (a giddily rudimentary introduction to the band's non-caloric pop), the offhandedly XTC-styled folk-rock of Born in a Barn supports witty lyrics about "Lincoln Logs" (ol' Abe's face appears all over the crypto-religious cover), "Rutherford B. Hayes" and the "Columbus Dispatch." Singer/guitarist Ron House's tentative voice lends unavoidable humility to the simply conceived but eminently likable tunes.

Great Plains Naked at the Buy, Sell, and Trade is even better, a wonderful topical romp that knowingly tweaks the underground rock culture ("Letter to a Fanzine"), the king of music television ("Dick Clark") and themselves ("Real Bad," "Origin of My Silly Grin"). Silly but never unserious, Great Plains is a breath of fresh air in the non-mainstream rock scene. Excellent.

Not only does Sum Things Up cap things off, it cranks them up, with the loudest production sound the band has ever used. This is a bad thing, as the group's carefree spirit and charming wit wilts in such a brash environment. The punk psychedelia of "The Wind Blows, the Law Breaks" (featuring Mark Wyatt on organ), for instance, is not just clumsy, it's also too far outside the band's frame of reference to be taken seriously; elsewhere, sloppy guitar playing is amplified into hair-raising ineptitude. There may be a few good songs buried underneath the overcharged arrangements, but wearing other people's clothes ill suits the once great Great Plains. (The cassette and CD have two bonus tracks.) Colorized! is a compilation. [i]

See also Gibson Brothers.

GREAT UNWASHED

See Clean.

JOHN GREAVES & PETER BLEGVAD

Kew. Rhone. (nr/Virgin) 1977

JOHN GREAVES

Accident (Europa) 1982

LONGHOUSE

Longhouse (Warner Bros.) 1988 •

LODGE

Smell of a Friend (Antilles New Directions) 1988 •

John Greaves (ex-Henry Cow; music, keyboards) and Peter Blegvad (ex-Slapp Happy; lyrics, guitar) essay a jazzy theatricality on Kew. Rhone., a stunning joint endeavor with vocalist Lisa Herman. Featuring a large cast of new music sidepeople, the album is consistently lyrical and lovely, incredibly precise and enduringly intelligent.

On his first solo venture, Greaves encompasses a wide variety of sounds and moods. Some of the instrumentation on Accident recalls Henry Cow, and Greaves employs the Cow principle: if a particular sound doesn't pull you in, one on the next cut might, and all the songs are distinct unto themselves, even on first listening. Greaves' singing, however, is too flat and unemotive to sustain interest.

Released just prior to the Lodge album, Longhouse (produced by Anton Fier) is a showcase for Herman's original modern-pop stylings. Something of an analogue to Laura Nyro recordings, the LP is finely commercial and supremely tasteful, but not at all adventurous.

Herman guests on Smell of a Friend, the only issue so far from the Lodge, an arty and semi-commercial project formed by Greaves with Fier, guitarist Jakko Jakszyk and two Blegvads: Peter and his singing brother Kristoffer. The album brings intriguing ideas and techniques to bear on what—superficially, at least—are straightforward jazzy pop songs, loading them with delicate content. Like a painting whose fascinating details and subtle plans are revealed only upon close examination, Smell of a Friend rewards careful listening with a dose of the intelligence that went into crafting it.

See also Peter Blegvad, Henry Cow.

[mf/i]

GREEN

EP (Gang Green) 1984

Green (Gang Green) 1986 •

Elaine MacKenzie (Pravda) 1988 •

White Soul (Hol. Megadisc) 1989 •

Bittersweet EP (Bel. Megadisc-Play It Again Sam) 1991

White Soul & Bittersweet [CD] (Widely Distributed)

1991 •

LILACS

The Lilacs Love You! EP (Widely Distributed-Pravda) 1991

Drawing inspiration from the Kinks, Prince, Small Faces and Motown, Chicago's Green revolves around singer/guitarist Jeff Lescher, an ace songwriter able to shift between a stirring pop-rock voice, ear-pinning scream and scarifying gospely falsetto. On the debut EP (a four-song 7-inch), the trio overcomes rudimentary production values to skirt nostalgia and introduce Lescher's mix of '60s Anglo-melodicism ("Gotta Getta Record Out," "Better Way"), punky rock ("Not Going Down (Anymore)") and soul ("I Don't Wanna Say No"). Amateurish but inspired.

Re-recorded versions of those songs join ten new ones on Green, another inadequately produced but patently brilliant collection of weirdly derivative originals played with spirit and innate power. Occasionally pedestrian lyrics (as on "Big in Japan") don't interfere with the amazing rugged pop tunes, a unique and energetic pairing of merseybeat and punk. "She's Not a Little Girl" seemingly takes its chorus straight out of the Hollies songbook; "Technology" employs a catchy Bolanesque bop; "For You" and "Curry Your Favor" are ballads that display a tender, sensitive side. "I Play the Records" introduces the group's Prince influence, while "She, Probably" is achingly beautiful. An independent album that easily surpasses much of the mainstream competition. (The CD adds three bonus tracks.)

Elaine MacKenzie (neat cover painting by Lescher—look for the original textured paper sleeve) unveils a new rhythm section. Bassist Ken Kurson composed and delivers a pair of bilious demi-punk tunes, supplying albumwide backing vox as well; otherwise, the writing and singing is all Lescher's. Courageous ballads about screwed-up romance (including the haunting "She Was My Girl") coexist with Kinky nostalgia ("Saturday Afternoon," complete with subtle French horn accompaniment), a frantic Princely falsetto raveup ("My Love's on Fire") and the two-speed "Can't Seem to Get It Thru My Head," which somehow nails the Association to the Miracles. Endearingly corny puns and silly concepts demean songs like "Youth in Asia" and "Radio Caroline" but the group's overwhelming spirit and conviction handily saves the day (The European CD adds both sides of the 1988 REM single—"My Tears Are Dry" and "Love on Thin Air"—named in response to R.E.M.'s Green album.)

Hooking up with a Dutch label (which issued the band's catalogue on CD), Green—sporting a new drummer—released another great collection of memorable romantic pop songs. White Soul (which ironically downplays the group's R&B side) benefits from two significant steps forward: improved production quality and the consistency and maturity of Lescher's songwriting. (No more punny nonsense or obviously derivative tributes.) Subtle emotions and striking melodies fill simply executed gems like "She's Heaven," "Night After Night," "Monique, Monique" and "I Know"; Kurson's boppy "My Sister Jane" is a delightful pop-punk vestige of his hardcore background.

Green's first release with bassist Clay Tomasek (ex-Slammin' Watusis) in the lineup, the ace Bittersweet EP consolidates all of Lescher's many stylistic impulses into five fine new songs. The '60s-soul title track gambles with lush strings and horns but laces it all up in a spectacular vocal; "I'll Have Her" is alluring pop; the brutish hard-rock guitars and punky backing cheers of "Maybe You're Right" are topped off with an inveigling Kinky melody and Gary Numan synth for a really strange effect. Lescher unloads his professional frustrations in "The Record Company Song," a wry torrent of regret ("I'll do anything you ask/My will is broke and I'm tired and sad") set to an amazingly catchy rock tune. (The belated American release of White Soul includes Bittersweet.)

The Lilacs, Kurson's post-Green quartet, made its debut in early '91 with a four-song 7-inch of his witty post-adolescent rock and pop originals, produced by Jim Ellison of Material Issue. [1]

D. GREENFIELD/J.J. BURNEL

See Stranglers.

GREEN ON RED

EP (Green on Red) 1981
Green on Red (Down There) 1982 (Enigma) 1984
Gravity Talks (Slash) 1983
Gas Food Lodging (Enigma) 1985 + 1987 •
No Free Lunch (Mercury) 1985
The Killer Inside Me (Mercury) 1987 •
Here Come the Snakes (Restless) 1989 •
Live at the Town and Country Club (nr/China-Polydor) 1989
This Time Around (nr/China) 1989 (China-Polydor) 1990 ◊

Scapegoats (nr/China) 1991 •

CHRIS CACAVAS AND JUNKYARD LOVE

Chris Cacavas and Junkyard Love (Heyday) 1989 •

JACK WATERSON

Whose Dog? (Heyday) 1988 •

WILD GAME

Rhythm Roundup (Dangerous Rhythm) 1984

CHUCK PROPHET

Brother Aldo (Fire) 1990 •

Many of California's psychedelic revival bands originally drew on spacey/chaotic sources like the Velvet Underground, Pink Floyd or classic trance-inducers like the Serpent Power. But early records by the Phoenix, Arizona-born Green on Red alternately recall the fuzzified raunch of the Electric Prunes/Seeds and the merry flower power of the Strawberry Alarm Clock. Filling the seven tracks of Green on Red (not actually their debut: that was a little-known self-released 1981 red-vinyl 12-inch, with five songs and no overlap) with buzzing guitars, droning organ and pretty melodies, the quartet delivers transcendental lyrics in a monotonic stupor that precisely suggests total pharmaceutical oblivion. Good studio sound helps convey the sincere nostalgia.

Gravity Talks has a simplified and, in one spot, Dylanized feel. (The title track uses chipper organ and reeling vocals to evoke "Most Likely You Go Your Way (And I'll Go Mine).") Elsewhere, Green on Red largely abandons its previous style in favor of unembellished rock and folk-rock. At the LP's relative weirdest, Chris Cacavas' organ-playing sounds like several genres from the '60s, but only mildly; Gravity Talks never becomes as intentionally mannered as its predecessor. Unfortunately, Dan Stuart's not much of a singer and his songwriting could likewise be stronger.

Gas Food Lodging introduces guitarist Chuck Prophet IV to the lineup and adopts a full-scale countrified sound, a mangy cowpoke hybrid somewhere between Pat Garrett-era Dylan and old Neil Young. Stuart's boozy singing suits the sloppy playing and demi-melodies; the band's comfortable enthusiasm covers a lot of the record's flaws. (Original US copies were pressed on green vinyl and as a 10-inch; the CD adds a track.)

The country-rocking No Free Lunch makes it hard to believe that Green on Red was ever remotely connected to psychedelia. At its most effective, the mini-album includes a cover of Willie Nelson's "Funny How Time Slips Away." Otherwise, the band tries far too hard to fit into the boots of hard-drinkin', populist-minded Amurricuhns for the contents to be taken seriously. The music is adequate (for a loose, amateurish C&W bar band), but the fake accents and predictable lyrical imagery turn this would-be sincerity into a pretentious muddle.

With drummer Keith Mitchell, fresh from work with David Roback and Kendra Smith, joining the lineup, the freeway cowboys oddly add gospelly backup singers to the country-blues-rock mélange on The Killer Inside Me, roughly produced by Jim Dickinson. Stuart's raspy whine announces itself as the record's only consistent focal point; alternately overblown and ragtag arrangements don't help selfconscious tunes like "Clarks-ville" and "No Man's Land" stand on their own slender merits.

Backed by a local lineup featuring Alex Chilton bassist Rene Coman and co-producer Jim Dickinson, Stuart and Prophet immersed themselves in Memphis ambience to record the loose and likable Here Come the Snakes, an overtly Stonesy record that travels the backroads of American music to fine effect. Again switching easily among rock, blues and country idioms, what's left of Green on Red sounds relaxed and confident, a warm and boozy vehicle for Stuart's amusingly wry regrets and social observations. For once, Green on Red has realized its downwardly mobile ambitions.

Getting Glyn Johns to produce This Time Around, the Stuart/Prophet duo (backed by Coman, a drummer and an old-fashioned keyboard player) keep messing around in old Stones turf, but the resonant Memphis mood that made sense of the previous LP is in short supply here. Lacking conviction (or at least credibility), the new songs (like the dismal "Pills and Booze"), while of a similar mind, are more by-the-number constructions than emotional outpourings.

Keyboardist Chris Cacavas sings simple, unassuming rock and country-rock originals (with a nifty jazz slant on "Blue River") in a pleasant voice on his fine solo debut, produced by Steve Wynn. Free of his old band's obligation to sound wasted, Cacavas digs into similar roots and comes up with clearheaded, plain-spoken songs about love and loss, leaving out the ambience and attitude in favor of perceptive lyrics and stout melodies. (The CD and cassette add a bonus track.)

Jack Waterson, who was Green on Red's bassist up through The Killer Inside Me, also made his solo debut in '89. With primary instrumental backing by a drummer and ex-Long Ryder bassist Tom Stevens (who also played guitar and produced), the acoustic/electric Whose Dog? is one of those records that was probably more fun to make than it is to hear. Waterson is neither a talented singer nor a substantial songwriter, and the album is too loosely organized to build on his efforts.

Prior to joining Green on Red, Chuck Prophet had a San Francisco quartet called Wild Game. The seven-song Rhythm Roundup is rather a stylistic roundup, with songs that favor early Dexys (with R&B horns and blurted vocals), crisp country (with Nashville guitar), Jam-like Joe Jackson rock and acoustic hootenanny folk. Weird but promising.

Prophet's solo record—slow, sparsely produced swamp/country rock (imagine Johnny Cash, John Hiatt and John Fogerty swapping songs) with snappy guitar frills—is actually a duo effort with singer Stephanie Finch, who provides honeyed balance to Prophet's rough voice. The material on Brother Aldo is simple and homey, flimsy but adequate to the pair's approach, which favors mood more than content. [i]

See also Danny & Dusty, Giant Sandworms, Naked Prey, Opal.

GREEN RIVER

Come on Down EP (Homestead) 1985

Dry as a Bone EP (Sub Pop) 1987 •

Rehab Doll (Sub Pop) 1988 •

More than any other single band, Seattle's Green River (named after a local serial killer) was responsible for the rise of long-haired dudes in Sub Pop T-shirts standing around in clubs, shaking their manes like so many lost Status Quo guitarists. It's tough to hold that existence-as-a-bad-influence against the group though since, in its prime, Green River was a commanding and awesome unit, and one of the first post-punk units to recapitalize the word ROCK. The combination of Mark Arm's full-throated Ig-chunk vocals and the band's powerful downer-punk-blues-shit still sound mighty nice.

Rehab Doll (the CD and cassette of which add Dry as a Bone) is the best example of Green River's neck-twitching meta-bunk, and even includes a few guest moans by Sonic Youth's Kim Gordon. The band dissolved when Mr. Arm rejoined original guitarist Steve Turner (who appears on the six-song Come on Down) to form Mudhoney. Green River is less formalist and fuzz-specific than Mudhoney, but it's easy to discern the latter's roots on this earlier vinyl scuzz. [bc]

See also Mother Love Bone, Mudhoney.

GREGORY'S FUNHOUSE

Obey (Big Chief) 1988 •

Brooklyn's own Gregory Ambrose Pittman intones rude sexual euphemisms in a stunningly sepulchral bass voice straight out of "The Monster Mash" as his skilled sidemen sling out winningly poppy goth rock (with nods to early Alice Cooper) on this amusing novelty record. Upholding the gimmick through ten tracks—including the wittily dictatorial "I Give It, You Take It" and a leering cover of "Go Away, Little Girl"—while keeping the guitars on a consistent fuzz boil make Obey an impressive (and embarrassingly entertaining) oddity. [i]

CLIVE GREGSON

Strange Persuasions (nr/Demon) 1985 •

Welcome to the Workhouse (nr/Special Delivery) 1990 •

CLIVE GREGSON & CHRISTINE COLLISTER

Home and Away [tape] (nr/Eleventh Hour) 1986

(Cooking Vinyl-Flying Fish) 1987 •

Mischief (nr/Special Delivery) 1987 (Rhino) 1988 •

A Change in the Weather (nr/Special Delivery) 1989 (Rhino) 1990 •

Love Is a Strange Hotel (Rhino New Artists) 1990 φ

With minimal outside contributions on drums, horns and backing voices, Strange Persuasions, the first solo record by former Any Trouble leader Clive Gregson, is a one-man show that plainly lays out its author's heart-break and pain. In "Summer Rain," a deeply personal stunner actually based on a friend's experiences, the Mancunian singer/guitarist/songwriter/producer questions the wisdom of a court's child-custody decision; elsewhere Gregson limns love lost and mistakes made with self-critical resignation. Over simple music that is attractive and effective, Gregson sings with pride and dignity, making this a deeply moving document of sincere, honest emotions set into song.

Gregson then formed a lasting partnership with Isle of Man-born vocalist Christine Collister, a guest on Strange Persuasion who, like Gregson, has toured and recorded with Richard Thompson. The folky Home and Away—recorded at a handful of acoustic 1986 gigs and chez Gregson—handsomely blends her deep, strong voice with his on a broad assortment of originals (Any Trouble material like "Northern Soul" and "All the Time in the World," as well as tunes from Strange Persuasion) and classics (Merle Haggard's "Mama Tried," Carl Perkins' "Matchbox," Larry Williams' "Slow Down") that is as warmly likable as it is unaffected.

Mischief fits the same heartfelt songwriting and rich singing into full-blown arrangements, many of them tastefully rocked up with drums (by Any Trouble alumnus Martin Hughes) and electric guitars. Gregson's striking melodies and deeply incisive lyrics are more than adequate to the stronger environment; the duo's voices rise to the occasion as well, making Mischief an easy record to like (except perhaps by crabby folk purist misled by the pair's habit of performing with just Gregson's acoustic guitar). Highlights: "Everybody Cheats on You," the unflattering "I Specialise," the mournfully romantic "We're Not Over Yet" and the reluctantly happy "This Tender Trap."

Gregson and Collister successfully raised their ambitions and widened their stylistic reach on A Change in the Weather, an even better collection of songs and settings. Joining their voices in more intricate harmonies and testing out more complex material, the duo soars through poignant essays on wife abuse ("This Is the Deal"), mortality ("How Weak I Am"), the hollowness of pop stars and culture ("Jumped Up Madam," the CD-bonus "Temporary Sincerity") and overdriven children ("Talent Will Out"). On a lighter note, Gregson reveals an abiding enthusiasm for Elvis Presley with the witty and personal "(Don't Step in) My Blue Suede Shoes," to which Collister adds a rocking rendition of the King's own "Tryin' to Get to You." A tremendous record without one mediocre or ineffectual track.

Rather than build on A Change in the Weather, the duo next cut a simple acoustic collection of quiet cover versions with no outside assistance. From the delightfully surprising (10cc's "Things We Do for Love") to the solid (Merle Haggard's "Today I Started Loving You Again," Bruce Springsteen's "One Step Up") and the sappy (Jackson Browne's "For a Dancer"), Love Is a Strange Hotel has a quiet, casual charm but not much backbone. Many of the selections are far from standards (Aztec Camera's "How Men Are," Paul Carrack's "Always Better with You," the Boo Hewardine/Darden Smith title tune), which leaves the unadorned demo-like performances to stand on their own, and they're altogether too unprepossessing for that.

Released earlier in 1990, Welcome to the Workhouse provides a fine footnote to Gregson's early career with ten previously unreleased demos and outtakes recorded alone or with simple accompaniment between 1980 and 1985. Any Trouble songs ("I'll Be Your Man") in drastically different form, band versions of "This Tender Trap" and "Standing in Your Shadow" (both now in the duo's repertoire), an acoustic cover of Michael Jackson's "She's Out of My Life" and several otherwise unavailable Gregsongs make this a rich, significant collection. [i]

See also Any Trouble.

GRID

See Dave Ball.

GRONG GRONG

See King Snake Roost.

GROOVE B CHILL

Starting from Zero (A&M) 1990 •

Moving into the daisy age, other rap crews have begun taking cues from De La Soul and the Jungle Brothers, rejecting pimp/gangster B-boy roles for ingratiating, soul-based middle-class positivity. This intelligent suburban New York trio's debut (two tracks, including the delightful "Top of the Hill," were produced by the genre's acknowledged master, Prince Paul) has some witty samples, a few entertaining bouts of casual group-singing and two good numbers: "Hip Hop Music" (a clear discussion of rap's significance) and "Reminiscent" (a charming musical memory with non-sampled quotes from Otis Redding, Al Green, the Association). Though clearly promising, Starting from Zero hasn't got quite enough personality for serious fun. [i]

GUADALCANAL DIARY

Watusi Rodeo EP (Entertainment on Disc) 1983

Walking in the Shadow of the Big Man (DB) 1984

(Elektra) 1985 •

Jamboree (Elektra) 1986

2 X 4 (Elektra) 1987 •

Flip-Flop (Elektra) 1989 •

This underappreciated Georgia quartet distinguished itself from any number of smart, tuneful American guitar combos by combining accessible songcraft with provocatively twisted lyrics. Singer/guitarist Murray Attaway's songs reflect a bizarre variety of far-flung interests, from a preoccupation with the supernatural to a fascination with American cultural imperialism; the band delivers them all with rootsy irony.

Conveying a sense of wonder as well as a sense of humor, Watusi Rodeo—which doesn't include the song of the same name—is an appealing debut, with four fine, offbeat numbers (most notably "Michael Rockefeller" and "Dead Eyes," both later re-recorded on Jamboree) and sturdy playing.

"Watusi Rodeo," a pillicking tale of American cowboys pillaging African wildlife, does appear on Guadalcanal's first longplayer, Walking in the Shadow of the Big Man. Produced on the cheap by Don Dixon, the album presents rocking explorations of several of Attaway's pet themes: religious fanaticism ("Why Do the Heathen Rage?"), Civil War mythology ("Trail of Tears") and spontaneous human combustion ("Fire from Heaven"). There's also a pair of enjoyable instrumentals, plus an unlikely (though somehow appropriate) rendition of "Kumbayah."

Jamboree, produced by mainstream Southern-rock specialist Rodney Mills (with two additional tracks helmed by Englishman Steve Nye), features upgraded sound quality and contains some fine tunes, but overall the album is more competent than inspired. Standout tracks include "Pray for Rain," "Fear of God" and the title tune, all of which take dark views of religious faith; "Country Club Gun" and "Cattle Prod" (smartass redneck character studies); and "I See Moe," which uses the head Stooze as a metaphor for unchecked personal aggression.

Dixon—and inspiration—returned for the smashing 2 X 4, on which the group's members dip into their shadowy art-rock pasts (Attaway once fronted a Yes cover band) to finally create music as distinctive as the lyrics. "Litany (Life Goes On)," "Newborn" and "Winds of Change" sport big, ambitious arrangements that suit their subject matter just fine; "Lips of Steel" is an effective stab at space-rock, while "Say Please" and "Let the Big Wheel Roll" make rude cowpunk noise. Perhaps most impressive, however, is "3 AM," Attaway's quietly harrowing account of alcoholism. The CD adds a good cover of the Beatles' "And Your Bird Can Sing."

Flip-Flop, which proved to be Guadalcanal's final album, finds drummer John Poe emerging as a worthy songwriter, supplanting guitarist Jeff Walls as Guadalcanal's auxiliary composer. Poe's moralistic rockers "Pretty Is as Pretty Does" and "The Likes of You" are among Flip-Flop's highlights, alongside Attaway's sardonically wistful "Always Saturday," the psychedelic "Fade Out" and the wacky singalong "... Vista."

When last heard from, Attaway was working on a solo album and Poe had joined Love Tractor. [hd]

GUMBALL

See B.A.L.L.

GUN CLUB

Fire of Love (Ruby) 1981 •

Miami (Animal) 1982

Death Party EP (nr/Animal) 1983 •

The Las Vegas Story (Animal) 1984

The Birth the Death the Ghost (nr/ABC) 1984 •

Sex Beat 81 (Fr. Lolita) 1984

Two Sides of the Beast (nr/Dojo) 1985

Danse Kalinda Boom: Live in Pandora's Box (nr/Dojo) 1985

Mother Juno (Fundamental) 1987 •

Pastoral Hide and Seek (nr/Fire) 1990 •

JEFFREY LEE PIERCE

Flamingo EP (nr/Statik) 1985

Wildweed (nr/Statik) 1985

Jeffrey Lee Pierce pulled the Gun Club together in LA around his obsession with the blues. But being unseasoned, young, middle-class, white and barely able to play guitar didn't mean he had to be to the blues what the Cramps are to rockabilly. For Pierce, the blues is a highly personal medium through which he can (and does) broadcast/exorcise inner demons.

Fire of Love is bona fide mutant blues, with Pierce using the musical structures and lyrical imagery for his own ends. Exciting, intense—even cathartic—and badly (if appropriately) recorded, with a dash of punk leavening, this also has homey and effective touches like bits of violin and slide guitar (by Ward Dotson and Jeffrey Lee). Miami expands to include a little folk, country and pop-rock without diluting the strength one whit, not even via harmony vocalizing (by a pseudonymous Debbie Harry, for one). Producer and Animal magnate Chris Stein does procure a clearer sound, although bringing Pierce's generally strong Jim Morrison-styled vocals to the front of the mix does focus attention on his disconcerting tendency to hit notes sharp. (The cassette adds tracks from the Death Party EP.)

The next couple of turbulent years yielded little of value. Death Party dates from Pierce's 1983 sojourn in New York with a pick-up edition of Gun Club that includes Bush Tetras drummer Dee Pop and guitarist Jim Duckworth from Panther Burns; it's a lackluster episode that can safely be forgotten. The lineup of the first two albums is documented live on the poorly recorded, indifferently performed Sex Beat 81 LP; the somewhat better live album on ABC—recorded at various LA shows—features a later lineup, with pre-Fire of Love guitarist Kid Congo Powers back in the Club following his stint with the Cramps. There's an overlap of five songs; The Birth also has several otherwise unreleased numbers.

By The Las Vegas Story, the Club was properly reconstituted (notwithstanding a switch of bassists that brought ex-Legal Weapon/future Sister of Mercy Patricia Morrison into the band). Even with the realigned sound and some guest guitar from Blaster Dave Alvin, it's an uneven album. Evidently intended as a snapshot-mosaic portrait of America, with Pierce attempting to carve himself a Morrison/John Fogerty niche, it simply doesn't wash. That's not to say it's bad—just too unfocused and ineffectual for its ambitious goal. (The issue is further confused by opening Side Two with Pharaoh Sanders' "Master Plan" and following it with "My Man Is Gone Now," from Porgy and Bess.) Finally, it's instrumentally too sloppy/punky for the Middle America saga it aspires to be. (The cassette has a bonus track: "Secret Fires.")

With that, the Gun Club fell apart again. As a post-humous live record and the two-disc live/studio compilation Two Sides of the Beast were released, Pierce made his solo album, Wildweed. Although typically erratic and idiosyncratic, it's his best and most fully formed work since Fire of Love. Produced in London by Craig Leon, it's crisply played by a good little band, and Pierce helps himself surprisingly well on lead guitar. All nine songs are strong; if at times the lyrics seem offhand, the music backs it up. He has apparently become a consistently worthwhile songwriter; one can only hope that he gets a chance to develop even further. (There's also a bonus 45 which features silliness like a drunken Pierce reciting a strange poem as if he plans to become his generation's William S. Burroughs.)

Pierce then reformed the Gun Club with Powers and a dandy new rhythm section. Produced in Berlin by Robin Guthrie of the Cocteau Twins, Mother Juno is one of the band's best LPs yet. "The Breaking Hands" (a single which resembles some of Wildweed), is relatively ornate; the rest takes a no-frills approach, sometimes more hard-rock than usual but entirely suited to Pierce's typically grim visions. The album cover painting (by Claus Castenskiold, known for his Fall sleeves) captures the mood: through a car windshield revealing a pair of dice and a plastic Jesus, we see a forlorn couple driving through the desert, a booze bottle on its side on the seat between them. The man's face is grim; the woman's got her eyes covered, but can't help peeking.

[lg]

See also Barracudas, Legal Weapon, Pontiac Brothers, Sisters of Mercy.

GURU JOSH

Infinity (Deconstruction-RCA) 1990 •

Paul Walden was not the only former rock'n'roll musician to be converted by Britain's dance explosion of the late 1980s. He was, however, one of the first (after Adamski) to recognize the masses swaying to records at all-night raves as a potential audience. Arriving on stage—often uninvited—with portable keyboards and a sax player by the name of Mad Mick, the self-proclaimed Guru quickly became a fixture at such events, noted as much for his audacious behavior as his acid house melodies. With the track "Infinity," separated from other squiggly keyboard instrumentals by dint of its haunting saxophone melodies, he created a dance anthem and a massive hit single. But by the time he could deliver an album of the same name, the scene had slowed down, and the Guru's constant self-promotion had alienated much of his audience. Leaving aside the embarrassing live cover versions of "Louie Louie" and "Popcorn"—which suggest that the performance quality at raves was lower than the audience's drug-colored memories—Infinity is a high-quality electro-dance record, full of lush melodies and warm instrumentals.

[tf]

GUT BANK

The Dark Ages (Coyote) 1986

Gut Bank was a Hoboken, NJ, quartet whose original lineup included Sonic Youth drummer Bob Bert as its "token male." The band's sole LP (recorded after Bert's departure; the configuration here includes a female drummer and a male rhythm guitarist) was co-produced with Roger Miller and features a combination of neo-noise guitar crunch and songwriting reminiscent of Patti Smith at her most Stones-worshipful. Beyond the fact that The Dark Ages is a decent record, the band's straight-ahead, high-energy shows prefigured those of later non-'60sish gal combos like L7, Babes in Toyland et al. Gut Bank were victims of severe anti-female backlash in the fanzine press, but didn't hang around long enough to destroy their detractors. [bc]

GUTTERBOY

See Kraut.

GWAR

Hell-O! (Shimmy-Disc) 1988 •

Scumdogs of the Universe (Metal Blade-Warner Bros.)

1990 ♠

To judge Gwar on its musical merits is like judging Kiss by its lyrics or the Butthole Surfers by Gibby's singing ability. To an even greater extent than any of its illegitimate forefathers, songs and musicianship are just one of the many props in the totality of Gwar, the grandest guignol of heavy metal. Claiming to be the spawn of aliens stranded in Antarctica, Gwar (originally a bunch of creative college students from Richmond, Virginia) perform in bizarre papier-mâché variations on suits of armor; their psychotically theatrical show includes mock decapitations, bestiality, gallons of stage blood and a vocalist with a three-foot fake penis.

By any standard, Hell-O! is a terrible album—the songwriting, playing and production (a rare sub-par job by Kramer) are below demo quality, and the vocals are nothing but toneless yelling. However, the lyrics are hilarious, and the album boasts some of the funniest liner notes in rock history, a series of conceptual cartoons that includes a photocopy of Picasso's Guernica (retitled "Kickasso's Gwar-nica") defaced with Gwar regalia.

Scumdogs of the Universe is a big improvement, elevating Gwar at least to the musical status of an independent-label thrash band. But there is one memorable track, "Horror of Yig," wherein Gwar meets its ideal production team: Hypo Luxa and Hermes Pan (aka Al Jourgensen and Paul Barker of Ministry), who should have done the whole album. [ja]

H H H H H H H

NINA HAGEN BAND

Nina Hagen Band (nr/CBS) 1979 •
 Unbehagen (nr/CBS) 1980
 Nina Hagen Band EP (Columbia) 1980

NINA HAGEN

Nunsexmonkrock (Columbia) 1982
 Fearless (Columbia) 1983
 Nina Hagen in Ekstasy (Columbia) 1985
 Punk Wedding EP (Can. Amok) 1988
 Nina Hagen (Ger. Mercury) 1989 •

Although born in East Berlin, one-of-a-kind singer/songwriter Nina Hagen is restricted by no national boundaries, working and living in Germany, England and America. Her radical approach to vocal expression is consistently bizarre—she runs the gamut from quirky sing-song (à la Lene Lovich, whose “Lucky Number” gets a translation/transmutation on Unbehagen) to an anguished howl (much of Nunsexmonkrock). Throughout, Hagen projects amazing intensity as well as a consistent and total lack of selfconsciousness in both delivery and subject matter.

Nina Hagen Band, her first LP, is relatively restrained; all-German vocals mask the subject matter for non-linguists. (Although “TV-Glotzer” is an adaptation of the Tubes’ “White Punks on Dope.”) A serviceable rock trio provides generic rock’n’roll backing which she easily upstages, even without dipping far into her seemingly bottomless bag of vocal tricks.

Unbehagen is light years better. While the band (expanded to a much-improved quartet that later recorded on its own as Spliff) offers convincing, precise modern rock with neat keyboard work, Hagen sings, screams, growls, whispers and wails her way through nine gripping tales of decadence. Listening to Unbehagen is like stumbling into a monster’s lair—feelings of revulsion and transfixion mingle to make this true rock-at-the-edge art.

The American Nina Hagen Band EP is a 10-inch with a pair of songs from each of the first two albums, including both aforementioned cover versions.

Hagen recorded Nunsexmonkrock in New York with a band that includes both Paul Shaffer and Chris Spedding. To describe it as wild hardly suffices—the drugs-sex-religion-politics-mystical imagery that spills out is nearly incomprehensible in its bag-lady solipsism, but the music and singing combine into an aural bed of nails that carries stunning impact. It almost doesn’t matter that Hagen sticks to English; what counts is the phenomenal vocal drama. Her range seems limitless, and the countless characters she plays make this fascinating.

Conceptually outdoing herself again, Hagen enlisted Giorgio Moroder and Keith Forsey to produce Fearless in California; unlike most of their projects, however, the artist emerges as the dominant force. The album finds her in a dance frame of mind, singing about club life

(“New York New York”), enlisting the Red Hot Chili Peppers for a rap number (“What It Is”), doing the funky Hare Krishna (“I Love Paul”) and generally acting the warped disco queen while opening her Felix the Cat bag of voices to roam operatic to munchkin, Grace Jones to Mr T. It’s not clear whether this alliance with naked commercialism was expected to deliver a hit record; Hagen’s rampant individuality almost precludes mass comprehension, let alone full-scale popularity. Nonetheless, Fearless—which bears out its title—is hypnotic and hilarious. One of her best records.

Reflecting Hagen’s continuing fascination with Los Angeles, Ekstasy pursues a similar set of mental and musical notions. “Universal Radio” and “Gods of Aquarius” are straightforward (well . . .) and catchy dance rock with (why not?) metaphysical lyrics. “Russian Reggae” (shades of Unbehagen’s “African Reggae”) and “1985 Ekstasy Drive” are Hagenized metal; her “Lord’s Prayer” adds new meaning to the word sacrilegious. But then, for different reasons, so do her versions of “My Way” (take that, Sid Vicious!) and Norman Greenbaum’s “Spirit in the Sky.”

Hagen’s 1987 marriage to an 18-year-old hardcore kid inspired her to cut a four-song EP about it the following year. The self-produced Punk Wedding giddily celebrates the event in English, German, rock and punk variations littered with the sound of wedding bells and the wedding march. One hopes the couple’s happiness is more enduring than this amusing but trivial effort.

Nina Hagen is another mishmash of kitsch (“Viva Las Vegas”), ’70s rock (Janis Joplin’s “Move Over”), religiosity (“Ave Maria”) and original visions (“Michail, Michail (Gorbachev Rap),” “Live on Mars”). But Zeus B. Held’s witless (and, on the oldies, disastrous) dance production (with incongruous Hendrix quotes) is a straitjacket, and leaves Hagen—who makes no effort to escape—sounding like a guest singer on a Grace Jones record. Snore. [i]

PAUL HAIG

Rhythm of Life (nr/Crépuscule-Island) 1983
 Paul Haig EP (Crépuscule-Island) 1984
 Swing in ’82 (nr/Crépuscule-Island) 1985
 The Warp of Pure Fun (nr/Crépuscule-Island) 1985 •
 European Sun: Archive Collection 1982–1987 (Bel. Crépuscule) 1988 •
 Paul Haig (nr/Circa-Virgin) 1989 •
 R.O.L. (nr/Circa-Virgin) 1990 •

For his first album following the dissolution of Scotland’s Josef K, singer-guitarist-keyboardist Paul Haig enlisted some impressive sidemen—including Anton Fier, Tom Bailey and Bernie Worrell—and producer Alex Sadkin. A mostly pleasant but unexceptional and uneven record, the synth-driven tracks on Rhythm of Life variously resemble lighter-hearted versions of New Order and the Human League. Haig demonstrates a danceable solution that doesn't bang on your head; some of the numbers, however, do drag along tunelessly, replacing invention with mere repetition and nuance with clumsiness. The subsequent American EP offers five-ninths of the album (a wise condensation) as remixed by an obscure New York club DJ. By leaving off a couple of dogs, it makes a better musical introduction.

The Warp of Pure Fun teams him with ex-Associate Alan Rankine for a slicker, more adventurous and entertaining excursion. Haig's not much of a singer—a little dramatic and gruff for the dance-poppish material—but the nimble arrangements and some resilient melodies cover such deficiencies. "The Only Truth" crosses New Order with the Thompson Twins and, like "Love & War," features Bernard Sumner on guitar; "Heaven Help You Now" injects a bit of folk into synth-rock. A triumph of style over substance, but a likable record with some fine moments.

European Sun compiles several of Haig's singles (including his first solo effort, "Running Away") and unreleased recordings from '82 through '87. A near-rockabilly cover of Suicide's "Ghost Rider" is neat, as is "The Executioner," a disturbing collaboration with Cabaret Voltaire. [i]

See also Josef K.

HAIRCUT ONE HUNDRED

Pelican West (Arista) 1982 •

Paint and Paint (nr/Polydor) 1983

NICK HEYWARD

North of a Miracle (Arista) 1983 •

Postcards from Home (nr/Arista) 1986 •

I Love You Avenue (nr/Warner Bros.) 1988 (Reprise) 1989 •

NICK HEYWARD AND HAIRCUT ONE HUNDRED

The Best of Nick Heyward and Haircut One Hundred (nr/Arista) 1989 •

One of 1982's bright new chart groups, the six energetic young Londoners of Haircut One Hundred created a crisp mixture of melodic pop and African-American and Latin rhythms, seasoned with horns and an occasional dash of jazz. Haircut's funk-oriented songs tend to be a bit samey (placing three of them—"Favourite Shirts," "Lemon Firebrigade" and "Marine Boy"—together on the American version of Pelican West doesn't help); their pop songs are more successful. "Love Plus One" and "Fantastic Day" are delightful, near-perfect confections with hooks that will snare even the tone deaf; "Snow Girl" and "Surprise Me Again" run a close second.

Following leader/singer Nick Heyward's departure for a solo career, Haircut promoted percussionist Mark Fox to frontman and recorded the agreeably bland Paint and Paint, which reprises Pelican West's chirpy humbability but not its flashes of ironic wit. The group eventually dissolved, and drummer Blair Cunningham went on to stints with the Pretenders and Echo and the Bunnymen.

Heyward, meanwhile, launched his solo career with the pristinely produced (credit Geoff Emerick) North of a Miracle, an awesomely pleasant outing that's everything a disposable pop record should be. Filled with layered vocals ("Whistle Down the Wind" sounds remarkably like the Association) and peppy music played by a large collection of studio hands (including Steve Nieve), the album finds Heyward gracefully adopting a more adult persona with no loss in tunefulness.

But there's a line between disposable and useless, and Heyward's technically proficient but emotionally empty I Love You Avenue crosses it. With the songs divided into brassy, insubstantial dance-pop and sappy singer-songwriterism, this self-produced disc is sorely lacking in both character and fun. [ks/i/hd]

HALF JAPANESE

Calling All Girls EP (50 Skidillion Watts) 1977

1/2 Gentlemen/Not Beasts (nr/Armageddon) 1980

Loud (nr/Armageddon) 1981

Horrible EP (Press) 1983

Our Solar System (Iridescence) 1984

Sing No Evil (Iridescence) 1984

Music to Strip By (50 Skidillion Watts) 1987 •

Charmed Life (50 Skidillion Watts) 1988 •

The Band That Would Be King (50 Skidillion Watts) 1989 •

We Are They Who Ache with Amorous Love (T.E.C. Tones-Ralph) 1990 •

HALF JAPANESE/VELVET MONKEYS

Big Big Sun [tape] (K) 1986

JAD FAIR

The Zombies of Mora Tau EP (nr/Armageddon) 1980 (Press) 1982

Everyone Knew ... but Me (Press) 1982 + 1985

Monarchs (Iridescence) 1984

Best Wishes (Iridescence) 1987

Great Expectations (Ger. Bad Alchemy) 1988

Greater Expectations [CD] (Psycho Acoustic Sounds) 1991 •

JAD FAIR AND KRAMER

Roll Out the Barrel (Shimmy-Disc) 1988 •

The Sound of Music (Shimmy-Disc) 1990 •

JAD FAIR AND DANIEL JOHNSTON

Jad Fair and Daniel Johnston (50 Skidillion Watts) 1989 •

COO COO ROCKIN TIME

Coo Coo Party Time (50 Skidillion Watts) 1990 •

Within and without Half Japanese, Maryland (by way of San Francisco) genius Jad Fair, America's pre-eminent and enormously influential idiot savant of revealingly primitivist rock, has built his professionally amateurish career on a uniquely honest and unselfconscious approach to music making. Originally comprising Jad and his brother David (what must mom and dad have thought?), 1/2 Jap's early records were noisy and slapdash; untuned guitars and an uncertain backup band provided minimalist settings from art rock to pre-punk.

The Fairs recorded Calling All Girls alone, cramming nine uninhibitedly neurotic songs ("Shy Around Girls," "Dream Date," "The Worst I'd Ever Do") onto a crude and unsettling 7-inch.

Heavy on the percussion and making no claims to melody, 1/2 Gentlemen/Not Beasts is a three-record boxed set (!) that combines elementary musicianship and electronics with tuneless vocals bursting with angst and ennui. Nods to Devo, the Ramones and Iggy Pop (whose "Fun Time" gets crushed) indicate that the atonal, jagged results are no accident. Many favorite punk tunes are "covered" with surprising results.

Loud expands the music's range, with help from six-part accompaniment, including horns, more guitar and almost avant-garde drumming. The tendency towards jazz doesn't strip Half Japanese of its atavistic charm or chaotic raucousness. Loud includes a dirge-like rendition of Jim Morrison's "The Spy."

Horrible, the pair's first release after a long vinyl silence, is a five-song 12-inch obsessed with ghouls and horror movies. "Thing with a Hook" matches the tale of a one-handed insane man-beast "pulling heads off boy/girlfriends down in lover's lane" with truly distressing music; other tracks are about "Vampire" and "Rosemary's Baby." Where the Cramps do this type of cinematic craziness for fun, Half Japanese sounds genuinely tormented.

Music to Strip By, produced (and played on) by Kramer (the Shimmy-Disc mogul who had been a mainstay of Shockabilly) and pressed on clear red vinyl, is a relatively sophisticated and appealing outing by a full-fledged band that might have actually rehearsed a few times. Working without his brother, Jad is comfortably in control, singing typically strange lyrics in a typically artless voice. "Stripping for Cash" reflects a recent news item; "My Sordid Past" and the countryfied "Ouija Board Summons Satan" scan like what they probably are—lifts from a supermarket tabloid. "Sex at Your Parents' House" would be funnier if it weren't being sung with apparent conviction by an adult. Versions of "La Bamba," Fats Domino's "Blue Monday" and Willie Dixon's "Hidden Charms" add to the stability of this eminently likable 22-song album.

David Fair rejoined the band (which at this point included Don Fleming of Washington DC's Velvet Monkeys, with whom Half Japanese once shared a live cassette release) on Charmed Life, contributing lyrics as well as guitar and harmonica. This solidly entertaining record finds a presentably casual form for Jad's wonderful (and not at all creepy) way of looking at life. Gripped in the throes of romance ("I always thought love would change things/And now I know," he sings), Jad gushes about romance, poets and miracles with infectious conviction, making songs like "Penny in the Fountain," "Miracles Happen Every Day" (with fine sax work by John Dreyfuss) and the mildly bitter "One Million Kisses" exemplary outpourings of informed naïveté. (The cassette and CD have ten bonus tracks, bringing the total to 31!)

Besides Fleming (guitar) and producer Kramer (organ, bass), The Band That Would Be King gets instrumental contributions from Fred Frith and John Zorn. (No David Fair this time.) Fortunately, all that talent doesn't impede Jad's ability to be himself—he just has to sing a little louder to be heard over the friendly hubbub. Taking on more varied subject matter (which now seems clearly fictionalized and not at all personal) than the rapturous Charmed Life, this 30-song collection visits "Daytona Beach," reveals "My Most Embarrassing Moment," delivers the "Curse of the Doll People" and attacks "Ventriloquism Made Easy." A lot of the songs are fragmentary, and the music—a sloppy mess of guitars, harmonica and saxophones—sounds largely improvised, but a few tunes ("Some Things Last a Long Time," "Postcard from Far Away," etc.) are genuinely delightful.

Compared to We Are They Who Ache, however, The Band That Would Be King is a mainstream masterpiece. With a rotating stack of fellow noisemakers, Jad manages to deliver some quietly cogent (if unexceptional) performances ("The Titanic," "All of Me," "Three Rings," "Secret" and a few others), but a sizable chunk of the record is unlistenable indulgent nonsense. A couple of thrashy rock covers ("Gloria," "Going Home," "Up and Down") are lost in amateurish overmodulation and should really have stayed in the cassette recorder; other tracks are just noisy improvs in the musical sandbox.

Jad's solo records have generally been weirder than Half Japanese's, but that's a rather rarefied judgment. Everyone Knew . . . but Me contains 29 sessions (mostly originals about girls, but two James Brown covers as well) of him whining and vocalizing (singing isn't exactly the word for it), accompanying himself on what sound like pots, pans and guitar. Emerging amid all the painful primitivism, however, is touching defenselessness, a pitiful lack of social abilities and success.

The one-man Best Wishes, recorded between 1982 and 1985, is a collection of 42 brief instrumentals, all titled either "O.K." or "A.O.K." Listenable? Yes—in brief spurts, as long as you keep the volume down and don't pay too close attention. Creatively significant? Er, no.

To call Jad's non-solo/non-band efforts "collaborations" would be misleading. He simply proceeds, blinders on, to do his "thing" while his partner du jour scurries to keep up. There's precious little give and take, and therein lies the difficulty with the pair of virtually interchangeable Fair/Kramer outings. As a skilled producer, Kramer contributes plenty of atmosphere, but little (needed) direction. Roll Out the Barrel is, by a nose, the better-realized of the two: 24 short tracks (including nine condensed covers from sources as oddly appropriate Bob Dylan, whose "Subterranean Homesick Blues" is turned into an unintelligible B-movie jungle hunt score, and Hoagy Carmichael) that offer up some steep peaks and deep, deep valleys. Sound of Music repeats virtually all the above tricks, but dons the sensible shoes of (college) radio-readiness, thereby bulldozing most of the peaks.

The Daniel Johnston disc (which really oughta be subtitled "Dueling Neuroses") is much more gripping, if somewhat painful to endure. The instrumentation on Fair's earlier work may have been amateurish, but the toy piano and de-tuned guitar here is positively novitiate. Johnston bubbles over with the album's best, most hyperactively excited moment ("I Met Roky Erickson"), but the handful of co-written pieces (like the squalling "Frankenstein Conquers the World") occasionally deliver. Most moving though, is the duo's take on Phil Ochs' "Chords of Fame," which has rarely rung truer.

Declaring himself the King of Co Co Rockin Time, David Fair takes his solo band out for a spin on Co Co Party Time, a casual and kooky rock'n'roll record with one foot in the '50s and the other in a typically Fairian can of '80s whimsy. With John Dreyfuss' sax blaring in the foreground, Fair (who wrote all the lyrics and painted the creepy cover) sings about such vintage subjects as "All-Night Drive-In Movie Party," "Rock Me Daddy-O" and "Oldsmobile Girl Magnet 88" and agitates for more good music in "Plenty of Room on the Radio," the anti-CD "Put Records Back in the Record Store" (ironic, considering) and "Coo Coo Record Party Time," which offers this great suggestion: "If you buy a record that you don't like/Don't be upset by that/Just get an iron and heat it up/And iron the record flat/Iron out all the old songs/Until it's smooth again/Then scratch in a new line round and round/With a knife or the point of a pin." [sg/i/dss]

See also Daniel Johnston, Maureen Tucker, Velvet Monkeys.

HALF MAN HALF BISCUIT

Back in the D.H.S.S. (nr/Probe Plus) 1985 ●
The Trumpton Riots EP (nr/Probe Plus) 1986 ●
Back Again in the D.H.S.S. (nr/Probe Plus) 1987 ●
The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1988 ●
ACD [CD] (nr/Probe Plus) 1989 ●

This entertaining Liverpool quintet emerged from total obscurity to become a dominant British indie chart regular in the first half of 1986. Playing low-key garage-punk singalong ditties (imagine a cross between Mark Riley and Jonathan Richman), the Biscuits like to name names—songs on Back in the D.H.S.S. include "Fuckin' 'ell, It's Fred Titmus," "The Len Ganley Stance" and "99% of Gargoyles Look Like Bob Todd." Throughout, they remain completely unassuming, and exhibit a dry, sarcastic wit. A top-notch debut.

The Trumpton Riots EP is a little heavier—with raw drive and distorted synths, the snarling title cut and "Architecture, Morality, Ted and Alice" are both reminiscent of the early Stranglers. Side Two lightens up with the more hilarious "1966 and All That." Fans should look for the edition which adds a fifth track, "All I Want for Christmas Is a Dukla Prague Away Kit," the best soccer song since the Fall's "Kicker Conspiracy."

Half Man Half Biscuit called it quits in 1987, hence the title of their second album, Back Again in the D.H.S.S. (Department of Health and Social Services—where Britons get their unemployment checks). Some of the Trumpton Riots cuts are reprised, as is the penchant for titles with real-life stars ("Rod Hull Is Alive—Why?" and "The Bastard Son of Dean Friedman"). The band is a bit tighter this go-around, and has cleaner (but hardly what you'd call glossy) production. The record's highlight is "Dickie Davies Eyes," which contains the inspirational verse, "And all those people who you romantically like to still believe are alive are dead/ So I'll wipe my snot on the arm of your chair/as you put another Roger Dean poster on the wall." No folks, it doesn't get any better than this.

Apparently bored with the dole, HMHB reformed and began playing again in 1990. Along came the ACD compilation, seventeen tracks taken from Back Again and Peel sessions, plus live versions of material from the first album and Trumpton Riots. Catchy, irreverent and always funny (even if their humor is on the level of football hooligans), it's good to have this crew around again. Ever hear a crowd shout "Fuckin' 'ell, it's Fred Titmus!" on cue? [dgs]

JOHN S. HALL

See King Missile (Dog Fly Religion).

MICHAEL HALL

See Wild Seeds.

HALO OF FLIES

Garbage Rock! EP (Twin/Tone) 1987
Headburn EP (Amphetamine Reptile) 1987
Garbageburn (nr/What Goes On) 1988
Four from the Bottom [tape] (Amphetamine Reptile) 1988
Singles Going Nowhere (Ger. Amphetamine Reptile-Glitterhouse) 1990 ●
Death of a Fly EP (Amphetamine Reptile) 1990
Live EP (Silt Breeze) 1990
Winged EP (Forced Exposure) 1990

Revered and reviled (both, generally, for all the wrong reasons) by post-mods scattered across many lands, this Minneapolis (but don't think that reveals anything) trio has consistently chiseled out the most physically and cerebrally assaultive post-hardcore you'll ever hear. Leader Tom Hazelmyer, who pulled stints in both Otto's Chemical Lounge and the Marines (not a band), has become a counter-counterculture guru of sorts for folks whose righteous disaffection extends to most things "alternative." His persona, aptly self-assessed as "sexist, homophobic, pro-vivisectionist straight-edge litterbug," colors, with varying degrees of irony, virtually all the plentiful releases on his own Amphetamine Reptile label.

Halo of Flies initially doled out tightly wound, intricately improvisational punk rock in impossibly limited editions that believers prize like slivers of the True Cross. Those who missed out can catch up with Four from the Bottom, a cassette that compiles the entire contents of the band's four AmRep 7-inches, or the similar Singles Going Nowhere (the cover of which is a careful tribute to the Buzzcocks' Singles Going Steady), which omits a few of those tracks but adds a two-song salvo (a cover of the Creation's "How Does It Feel to Feel" and the MC5's "I Want You Right Now" retitled "Drunk in Detroit") that hints at Halo's live power. Both are bracing samplers of the band's sub-three-minute virtuosity.

Moving up to 12-inch releases, Halo displays greater savvy in both studio usage and song structure; though the intensity dips just a notch on Garbage Rock!, Hazelmyer's spinning, Hendrix-on-Carbona guitar implorations occur regularly enough to sate the feedback-dependent. Headburn, however, brings it all together, with disjointed lyrics that have become more violent (apocalyptic, even) in their reflexive response to the outside world. What's more, the rhythm section's brute force can be felt for the first time. Combined in the UK as Garbageburn, these two discs provide the easiest entry into an otherwise hermetically sealed universe.

Between breakups, Halo of Flies continues to sporadically disgorge small-scale releases. Death of a Fly retreats to basic sonic cruelty, while Winged takes a sharp U-turn towards conceptual territory with an all-covers, all-insect bill of fare, highlighted by a version of the Cramps' "Human Fly." It's the live EP, however, that best captures the surly Halo spirit, from the opening

"This whole fucking city needs a haircut!" through the screeching coda of "Ballad of Extreme Hate," Hazelmyer and his unit reassert their place as an essential kink in the gears of alternative rock's gray train.

[dss]

LUCY HAMILTON

See Lydia Lunch.

PETER HAMMILL

Nadir's Big Chance (nr/Charisma) 1975 (Blue Plate) 1990 •

A remark by Johnny Rotten citing Peter Hammill's Nadir's Big Chance as an influence cast a brief but bright UK hip-media spotlight on an artist who has otherwise spent most of his long career in the shadows. (Lydon later publicly insulted Hammill—not rotten enough?)

In 1966, while at university in Manchester, the London-born Hammill formed Van der Graaf Generator, a progressive-rock band that had just enough success to remain an active loss-leader for years. Not as hollowly contrived as many likeminded explorers, VdGG's guitar-bass-drums-organ-sax lineup featured no virtuosos. Actually, the band's chief instrument was Hammill's baritone voice, able to swoop into adjacent registers and rasp wickedly like nobody's business. If anything has put people off Hammill, it's been the occasional overkill of his delivery and lyrics, which commonly concern extremists, and the direst contortions into which intellect and emotion can twist each other. He has no compunction about singing from a point of view which he—or we—may only inhabit at a moment of extraordinary emotional duress.

Until the group's demise in 1978, Hammill split his studio time between Van der Graaf (ten LPs) and solo recordings made with some or all of his bandmates. The most influential and best remembered of these is the 1975 LP (Hammill's fifth) for which he assumed the identity of "anarchic" teenager Rikki Nadir. While some tunes and arrangements may be simpler than his usual, none of it's really punk, rather more like Hunky Dory, though less image-conscious, much bleaker, more confessional and barely produced at all. A stimulating, affecting record.

Hammill has continued to churn out solo LPs (even to this day with the help of ex-VdGG people, as well as ex-Vibrators guitarist John Ellis). Musically, he has modernized somewhat, but he's still his own unpretentiously pretentious self. Or is that pretentiously unpretentious? [jg]

HAND OF GLORY

See LeRoi Brothers.

HANGMANS BEAUTIFUL DAUGHTERS

Trash Mantra EP (nr/Dreamworld) 1987

The Hangmans Beautiful Daughters (Vox) 1989

Daniel Treacy of the TV Personalities co-produced, plays keyboards and wrote a few songs for this trippy London quartet (named for a 1968 Incredible String Band album), whose sound isn't as kooky or stylized as his. On the 12-inch EP and the overlapping (all six tracks) album, Emily Brown sings mildly psychedelic '60s pop in a wispy, imperfect-pitch voice as her three bandmates play droney (but brisk) 12-string folk-rock with cute accents like finger cymbals and harpsichord. Things improve a bit when guitarist Gordeen Dawson sings lead on the modish "Something About Today," but the disappointing fact is that the group's image is more colorful than its music. [i]

HAPPY FLOWERS

Songs for Children EP (Catch Trout) 1985

Now We Are Six EP (Catch Trout) 1986

Making the Bunny Pay (Catch Trout) 1987

My Skin Covers My Body (Homestead) 1987

I Crush Bozo (Homestead) 1988

Oof (Homestead) 1989 •

Too Many Bunnies (Not Enough Mittens) [CD]

(Homestead) 1989 •

Lasterday I Was Been Bad (Homestead) 1990 •

LANDLORDS

Hey! It's a Teenage House Party! (Catch Trout) 1985

Our Favorite Songs! EP (Catch Trout) 1987

This Charlottesville, Virginia, duo of Mr. Anus (Charlie Kramer) and Mr. Horribly-Charred-Infant (John Beers) has built a distinctive and unexpectedly productive career out of tuneless sub-garage childhood-trauma rants. The pair's spontaneously composed primal scream tragicomedies recount a litany of prepubescent horrors with an oddly compassionate mix of humor and pathos, adding up to a surprisingly compelling aesthetic that's unlike anything else in underground rock.

Making the Bunny Pay (a 12-inch which compiles the band's two early 7-inch EPs: the three-cut Songs for Children and the six-song Now We Are Six), My Skin Covers My Body and I Crush Bozo all effectively evoke a harrowing world of junior angst; titles like "Mom and Dad Like the Baby More Than Me," "I Wet the Bed Again," "All My Toys Hate Me," "There's a Worm in My Hand" and "I Saw My Picture on a Milk Carton" give a good indication of the songs' contents. (And, for those not artistically inclined towards Happy Flowers' jolly preference for indulgent inarticulate rage over traditional musicality, about all the entertainment value they are likely to provide.) These enormously entertaining records are, to put it as mildly as possible, an acquired taste.

Oof covers similar subject matter, but vague hints of accessibility can be heard (if you listen real close) creeping into such numbers as "BB Gun" and "There's a Soft Spot on the Baby's Head"; Messrs. Anus and Infant even attempt the blues on "Ain't Got Nothin'." Most shockingly, though, Oof's final track, a cover of Yoko Ono's "Mrs. Lennon," actually conforms to traditional Western notions of melody and song structure. (On CD and cassette, that song is followed by one of the two bonus tracks, "Charlie Said the F-word Again.")

Though it'll still probably sound like a bunch of noise to your mom, Lasterday I Was Been Bad ("recorded live in the studio . . . no mixing, no dubbing") makes a few more lurches in the direction of melody, with fairly straightforward covers of Big Star ("Thirteen”) and UFO (“I Don’t Want to Share”), hard-rockish originals “Call Me Pudge” and “If This Gun Were Real (I Could Shoot You and Sleep in the Big Bed with Mommy),” and the serenely womblike instrumental “Embryo.” Still, “Not a Happy Birthday,” “Leave Me Alone” and “I Shouldn’t Have Eaten That Stuff” demonstrate that the Flowers haven’t yet outgrown their bangin’-and-yellin’ stage just yet.

Too Many Bunnies (Not Enough Mittens) is a 26-item CD compilation: LP tracks, singles, outtakes, compilation cuts and “I Crush Bozo,” which had appeared as one of two cassette-only bonuses on the album of the same name. (The tape version of My Skin Covers My Body—an LP which contains a remake of Songs for Children’s “Mom, I Gave the Cat Some Acid”—also has two extra tracks, but neither appears here.)

Before forming Happy Flowers, Kramer (guitar) and Beers (vocals) were half of the Landlords, a free-wheeling punk band with an incisive sense of satire but no special musical merits. (Landlords bassist Eddie Jetlag continues to wield his influence, penning liner notes for several Happy Flowers records.) The band’s lone album offers intelligently ironic songs about rape, bigotry, kids, suicide and nihilism; the 7-inch EP (recorded after the Flowers were underway) contains nose-thumbing punk-pop covers of “The Night Chicago Died,” Leonard Cohen’s “Suzanne” and two more. [h/d]

HAPPY HATE ME NOTS

Scrap EP (Aus. Waterfront) 1987

Out (Waterfront-Rough Trade) 1988 •

Playing power pop with muscle, this Sydney quartet—sort of a punkier, street-level Hoodoo Gurus—fills Scrap with six spunky songs about love and introspection that are both fresh-sounding and high on buoyant energy. Guitarists Paul Berwick and Tim McKay intertwine and interact—one a warm box filled with enough fuzz to choke a lint screen, the other dripping shimmering droplets of clear, clean shine—in “This Is the Wrong World.” Horn (on “Go Away”), piano (on “Blue Afternoon”) and choral refrains throughout paint the other songs with frown-proof commercialism that never stoops to please.

Berwick’s amusedly pessimistic lyrics (“Things Wearing Thin,” “Think About Tomorrow,” “Modern Times”) and strong rock’n’roll vocals give Out’s fast-paced and sturdy tunes, occasionally punctuated by a horn section, a Jam-like intensity. Producer Rob Younger (ex-Radio Birdman) captures the live-and-loud sound with all of the quartet’s nuance intact, making Out a robust demonstration of the Hate Me Nots’ amazing ability to give songs a wallop without knocking the pop stuffing out of them.

By the end of ’90, the Hate Me Nots had recorded an album’s worth of new material, with an eye towards ’91 release. [e/1]

HAPPY MONDAYS

Squirrel and G-Man Twenty Four Hour Party People
Plastic Face Carni Smile (White Out) (nr/Factory)
1987 •

Bummed (nr/Factory) 1988 (Elektra) 1989 •

Madchester, Rave On (nr/Factory) 1989 •

Hallelujah EP (Elektra) 1989 •

Peel Session EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1990 (Strange Fruit-Dutch East India) 1991 •

Pills’n Thrills and Bellyaches (Elektra) 1990 •

To call Manchester’s Happy Mondays one of the most significant and influential rock groups to emerge in England since the Smiths would not be an indulgence in hyperbole. Together since 1981, the Mondays came to prominence as leaders of the late-’80s British rave scene, a hedonistic party-oriented club culture characterized by its participants’ preference for baggy clothes, LSD and the euphoric drug Ecstasy (the E of countless song titles). The Mondays’ carefully evolved sound—an odd, trancelike hybrid of ’60s flower-power rock, cheesy ’70s R&B and ’80s acid house, accompanied by the straining, stream-of-unconsciousness words of vocalist Shaun Ryder—became the blueprint for numerous local (later global) imitators. A sextet that includes dancer/drug-tester Bez (Mark Berry), the Mondays are favorites of the British tabloids, which have made much of the members’ controlled-substance exploits and generally daft behavior.

Those searching for the key to the Mondays’ success won’t find it on the bizarrely titled debut, a rather low-key batch of mostly meandering funk tunes, produced with no apparent flourishes by John Cale. Over such transparent and repetitive backing, it’s hard not to notice how off-key Ryder’s vocals are. Although “Oasis,” “24 HR Party People” and “Kuff Dam” are all designed to reflect/support the burgeoning dance phenomenon, the record is no timeless pop classic. One surprise: the gloomy Cure-like intro to “Cob 20.”

Martin Hannett (the legendary punk-era producer who died of a heart attack in 1991) stepped in to produce the livelier Bummed, the Mondays’ pivotal release. (Available in DAT for you techno hounds.) Over liquid, hypnotic grooves supplied by what has become an extremely competent band, Ryder spouts frequently unintelligible lyrics that, by his own admission, don’t mean anything but lend the songs a quirky character.

A Vince Clarke remix of Bummed’s “Wrote for Luck” appended to the album’s CD edition spelled out the discofied direction the band was to take on its next British release, the Madchester, Rave On EP, lengthened and issued in the US as Hallelujah. Employing no less than four remixers, the seven-track, five-song American edition is a great dance record. Whether it rewards casual listening depends on one’s tolerance for lysergically loosened music that quite noticeably, and successfully, sounds a bit off.

Having made a sizable commercial impression in Great Britain, the Mondays then released their bid for world domination. Pills’n Thrills and Bellyaches is a luscious hodgepodge of the dodgiest of post-punk influences—a Labelle quote on “Kinky Afro,” the Sal-soul string sound on “Dennis and Lois,” the “Sweet Jane” references on “Harmony”—all reinforced by the sturdy production of Steve Osborne and Manc DJ Paul Oakenfold. More so than on the other records, Ryder’s uncensored rough-hewn lyrics (when understandable) are offhandedly funny, as in the fashion tribute of “Loose Fit.”

The Peel Session EP, which was recorded in 1989, contains three songs: “Tart Tart,” “Mad Cyril” and “Do It Better.” [db]

PEARL HARBOR AND THE EXPLOSIONS

Pearl Harbor and the Explosions (Warner Bros.) 1980

PEARL HARBOUR

Don't Follow Me, I'm Lost Too (Warner Bros.) 1981

Pearls Galore! (Island) 1984

Pearl Harbor and the Explosions came out of San Francisco's early new wave scene, but their lone album consists of bouncy little pop tunes suitable for FM radio: watered-down soul and funk overtones topped off by Pearl E. Gates' theatrical vocal posturings. Danceably forgettable.

Harbour (dropping Gates and adopting the British spelling) hit her stride as a solo artist on Don't Follow Me, I'm Lost Too, a headlong plunge into rockabilly and similarly ancient styles. Smothered by producer Mickey Gallagher in waves of flutter echo, Pearl wails like a demon, obviously happy to have a sympathetic setting. "Fujiyama Mama" and "At the Dentist" rock wildly with old-fashioned panache; "Heaven Is Gonna Be Empty" takes a more countryfied, though equally quaint, approach. This one's a memorable instant party.

A belated follow-up produced by Richard Gottehrer employs twenty musicians—from Ellie Greenwich to Chris Spedding to Masa Hiro Kajiuira—for more fun in the old world. Harbour starts off by covering that 1963 Rocky Fellers chestnut, "Killer Joe," and then launches into a program of girl-group soundalikes that quiver with melodic conviction and shake with appropriate, cliché-free backing. Sounding uncannily like Kirsty MacColl in spots, Pearls Galore! is a winning collection of tunes by a talented, adaptable vocalist who should be far better known than she is. [jy/i]

See also Chrome, Henry Kaiser.

JOHN WESLEY HARDING

If Happened One Night (nr/Demon) 1988 •

God Made Me Do It: The Christmas EP (Sire-Reprise) 1989 •

Here Comes the Groom (Sire-Reprise) 1989 •

The Name Above the Title (Sire-Reprise) 1991 •

Onto a stage that has already supported three decades of witty and wise topical troubadours strides England's John Wesley Harding (real name: Wesley Harding Stage), well-armed to find a place among the ghosts of Bob Dylan, Phil Ochs, Elvis Costello and Billy Bragg. Wes' folkly debut, a friendly but unconvincing acoustic album recorded live in London, offers simple tales about common people and humorously pointed satire. (There's an especially clever number about Live Aid.) He's not a strong melodicist, and his lyrics can be a bit artless, but Harding's voice and personality are disarming, and a few of the songs ("The Devil in Me," "Famous Man," "You and Your Career") are quite pungent.

With three new tunes, a handsome cover of Madonna's "Like a Prayer" and a wacky nine-minute natter between Wes and the inimitable Viv Stanshall, the promising God Made Me Do It (the title a lyric from "Here Comes the Groom," included on the EP) indicates what Harding can do in a studio with an ace band (dubbed the Good Liars) that includes ex-Attractions Pete and Bruce Thomas.

Crisply produced by Andy Paley, and reprising several numbers from the live LP, the delightful Here Comes the Groom is a fine modern realization of the same honest singing and playing that typified England's pub-rock graduates, informed by a solid knowledge of pop music and its traditions. (In a no-tech variation on spot-that-sample, Wes makes reference to everyone from the Everly Brothers to Steve Miller to Junior Walker to John Otway.) With a load of great (non-topical) songs, the album's only problem is Harding's too-cozy-by-half relationship with the melodies and phrasing of early Elvis Costello.

If Wes spent too much of the last album hanging around Elvis' house picking things up, The Name Above the Title simply backs up a truck to the MacManus residence and tries to cart it all away. While Harding doesn't sound as if he's intentionally trying to imitate anybody, there's no getting around the way it comes out. And while he brings plenty of talent and originality (especially the lyrics, which are strictly his own style) to this enjoyable and intelligent party, the frequent resemblance to Costello gives what is in fact a fine album a waxy air of familiarity. [i]

HARD-ONS

Smell My Finger (Aus. Waterhouse) 1986

Hard-Ons (Big Time) 1987

Hot for Your Love, Baby (Aus. Waterfront) 1987

Worst of the Hard-Ons (nr/Vinyl Solution) 1987

Dickcheese (Taang!) 1988 •

Love Is a Battlefield of Wounded Hearts (Taang!) 1989 •

Yummy! (Aus. Waterfront) 1990

STUPIDS AND HARD-ONS

No Cheesel (Aus. Waterfront) 1988

Possessing roughly the same obsessions as a B-grade nerd comedy, Australia's premier surf-punks sing about farting, kissing, sex and rejection with various levels of goodnatured crudity. The Sydney trio—Blackie (guitar), Keish (drums/vocals) and Ray (bass/artwork)—has been tooling around since 1980, having a good pubescent laugh and playing some really great tuneful punk rock.

Ray's "granny" drawing on the original Australian issue of Smell My Finger was nixed for the US, where the title was changed as well (to Hard-Ons). But the songs—from teen angst punk with Descendents-like melodies to more lash'n'thrash like "Dancing Girls"—remained untouched.

More bubblepunk than raw bashing, Hot for Your Love, Baby has "I Wanted Everything," in which Keish and crew sound like spoiled schoolkids on a rampage. While the upfront vocals on "Love Song for Cindy" could be an elementary school poetry project, there's catchy redemption in its sophomoric simplicity. The album's British edition (on Vinyl Solution) adds the raveup "All Set to Go."

With between-track vignettes and high-speed slashers like "Fuck Society" and "Yuppies Suck," the heavier-sounding Dickcheese thrusts the Hard-Ons towards metal. The vinyl has eighteen tracks; the CD and cassette add three, including a rendition of Kiss' "Rock and Roll All Nite." (No Cheesel is an eight-song document of the Hard-Ons' tour with British hardcore humorists, the Stupids.)

Love Is a Battlefield brings the Hard-Ons back to pop punk, though the tunes are generally less memorable than the group's early singles. While some songs seem genuinely romantic (the nifty "I Don't Wanna See You Cry") and others lay belly-up, there's mindless fun in the Satan-shrouded "Kill Your Mum" and the scrubbed-clean "Missing You, Missing Me." The CD adds a bonus bone.

Yummy!'s "Feast on Flesh" revs to hardcore velocity, and a few guitar twists distinguish "Something I Don't Want to Do," but few other tracks stand out as they breeze along. Still, the band's acoustic bludgeoning of "Stairway to Heaven" is carefree, basic and amusing—a fair description of the Hard-Ons as well.

[mg]

HARM FARM

Spawn (Alias) 1990 •

Nice Job, Einstein (Alias) 1991 •

Because of their San Francisco home, prominent use of violin and spirited instrumental forays into ethnic territories, Harm Farm has no doubt gotten used to seeing the name Camper Van Beethoven mentioned in the first paragraphs of their clippings. CVB's hijacking of original violinist Morgan Fichter would have doomed lesser bands, but Harm Farm survived, stronger than ever. Drummer Noah Chasin deftly jumped to fiddle, and Melanie Clarin (who played vital roles in the exceptional recorded outputs of both the Cat Heads and Donner Party) stepped in behind the skins. Produced by Henry Kaiser, Spawn is Appalachian mountain music on a skewer, waved about in all directions, raising up dust, and spearing bits of whatever it finds. The quartet is at its impressive best on wild twisted-tempo medleys like "Sleep/Señor Tuchus" and "Snapdragons Green-eyedgirl," and at its excusable worst on the intentionally silly (but still fairly irritating) "Clams." Strong debut.

[sm]

See also Camper Van Beethoven, Cat Heads, Donner Party.

HARMONY

See Boogie Down Productions.

CHARLIE HARPER

See U.K. Subs.

JODY HARRIS

It Happened One Night (Press) 1982

JODY HARRIS AND ROBERT QUINE

Escape (Lust/Unlust) 1981

Jody Harris has worked with such New York luminaries as the Raybeats and James White and the Blacks, but remains one of the most underrated guitarists on the scene. His schizophrenic solo album proves him to be an accomplished composer as well, turning his talents toward straight pop ("It Happened One Night"), rockabilly ("I'm After Hours Again"), blues ("You Better Read This Before You Sign") and various forms of jazz, from be-bop to Stephane Grappelli. Harris amply proves that old forms can be given new life, especially with his exquisite, modernistic guitar work.

Along with Robert Quine (Richard Hell's Voidoids, later of Lou Reed's band) Harris made the beautiful Escape, which drifts through a plethora of styles—Frippist drone tunes, jazz, country swing—and proves that these two consistently surprising guitarists are even more surprising than suspected. Though hardly rock, Escape has a vitality and joy missing in most music today, and so much fun it's sexy. Highly recommended.

[sg]

See also James Chance, Richard Hell, Raybeats, Lou Reed.

JOEY HARRIS AND THE SPEEDSTERS

See Beat Farmers.

JERRY HARRISON

The Red and the Black (Sire) 1981

Casual Gods (Sire) 1987 •

JERRY HARRISON: CASUAL GODS

Walk on Water (Fly-Sire) 1990 •

BONZO GOES TO WASHINGTON

"5 Minutes" EP (Sleeping Bag) 1984

All of the Talking Heads have participated in extra-curricular musical activities, and guitarist/keyboardist Harrison is no different—only less successful. Recorded during the band's 1981 sabbatical, The Red and the Black continues the pan-ethnic, cross-rhythmic musical explorations of Remain in Light—not a surprise, since many of the auxiliary Heads (like Adrian Belew, Bernie Worrell and Nona Hendryx) also appear on Harrison's record. The results are fairly funky, albeit in a relaxed, slow-motion way.

A few years later, Harrison joined bassist Bootsie Collins in a hip-hop groove for the "5 Minutes" 12-inch, a found-sound dance record (in three mixes) that uses Reagan's notorious "We begin bombing . . ." extemporization.

Harrison's second album, Casual Gods, leads with its chin: the cover and inner sleeve photos show hordes of poor Brazilians working under horrendous conditions as goldminers. The music, however, is slick rock-funk with lyrics that are serious but not radical. Harrison, who's not a bad singer (his voice sounds a bit like John Cale's), doesn't write songs so much as techno grooves with sketchy melodies; his accomplished cohorts play with chops but little feeling.

With the Heads on indefinite hiatus, Harrison threw himself into Walk on Water, earnestly creating a contrasting variety of finely crafted (if a bit clunky) songs: bottom-heavy, soul-tinged rock ("Flying Under Radar"), charming Headsy pop ("Never Let It Slip"), weird Cale-ish dissonance ("The Doctors Lie") and a quiet lullaby ("Sleep Angel"), with a minor smattering of socio-political conscience ("I Cry for Iran," "Cowboy's Got to Go," "Facing the Fire"). Collaborating with the Thompson Twins, Dan Hartman, Bernie Worrell, former Modern Lover bandmate bassist Ernie

Brooks and others, Harrison still lacks the adequate musical inspiration and vocal character that would make Walk on Water a feat for the ears. [mp/i]

See also Talking Heads.

DEBBIE HARRY

KooKoo (Chrysalis) 1981

Rockbird (Geffen) 1986 •

DEBORAH HARRY

Def, Dumb & Blonde (Sire-Reprise) 1989 •

DEBBIE HARRY/BLONDIE

Once More into the Bleach (Chrysalis) 1989 •

The Complete Picture: The Very Best of Deborah Harry and Blondie (nr/Chrysalis) 1991 •

Stepping out of Blondie for her first solo spin, a collaboration with Nile Rodgers and Bernard Edwards of Chic (plus a little help from bandmate Chris Stein), KooKoo finds Harry out of her depth. Trying to insert herself into their musical format, she strains for vocal personae (serious romantic and quasi-politically street-wise) to which she is unsuited. About a third of the record is moderately successful infectious funk-pop. For all of its shortcomings, however, the then-controversial pairing with the pre-crossover Chicmen still stands as an example of the adventurous and prescient trailblazing that had typified Harry and Stein within Blondie.

The couple lost the next few years to Stein's extended and debilitating illness, although Harry did contribute a song to the 1985 Krush Groove soundtrack and pursue the acting side of her career. Regrettably, Rockbird, Harry's first attempt at a real comeback after Stein's recovery, is nearly a cipher. Although nicely produced (by J. Geils Band keyboardist/songwriter Seth Justman), and starting strong with the bouncy "I Want You," the album carries little overall impact. There aren't many catchy tunes; the lyrics are surprisingly flat. "Secret Life" is particularly annoying for announcing a revelation but saying nothing at all. The song that most recalls Blondie's lovable playfulness is "French Kissin'," but Harry had no hand in writing it.

While Harry did little recording over the next few years, fans got a chance to see her in Hairspray and on TV's Wiseguy, where she portrayed (natch) a rock singer.

Considering how badly their career is going, it's ironic that the Thompson Twins wrote and co-produced the best song on Def, Dumb & Blonde. "I Want That Man" is a kicky love song with an immediate hook and delightfully flip lyrics. (Their other contribution, "Kiss It Better," is patented TT bounce-pop that Harry coos alluringly.) Otherwise, the surprising reunion with Blondie producer Mike Chapman yields one handy reminder of that band's surging '60s guitar pop ("Maybe for Sure") and a lot of dull stylistic rereads. The CD adds four, including the old-fashioned "Bike Boy" and Harry's crisp rendition of the Fast's kitschy "Comic Books."

Once More into the Bleach is a dance-mix compilation. Besides an assortment of Blondie hits, it features Harry's solo "Rush Rush" (from Scarface) plus a handful of tracks from KooKoo and Rockbird. [jg/i]

See also Blondie.

HARRY CREWS

See Lydia Lunch.

GRANT HART

2541 EP (SST) 1988 •

Intolerance (SST) 1989 •

NOVA MOB

Admiral of the Sea EP (Rough Trade) 1991 •

The Last Days of Pompeii (Rough Trade) 1991 •

Popular perceptions of Hüsker Dü's implosion cast Bob Mould as the wounded victim and Grant Hart—drummer, singer, songwriter—as the problem child. Although Mould vented the depths of his disillusion and anger on 1989's Workbook, Hart got in the first word on the plucky title track of a 1988 three-song 12-inch, painting the split in terms of a couple's first apartment—the number of which just happened to coincide with the band's office/studio address. (Hart denied that was his intent but few believed him.) In any case, "2541" is a touchingly sad acoustic folk-rock number with a typically catchy melody.

A moving description of Hart's pain as well as an assertion of his survival, Intolerance—a simply played one-man-band solo project that avoids familiarity by using '60s-style organ as the most prominent rhythm instrument—deals with more than one traumatic aspect of his life. The obsessively driven (with strings) "Fanfare in D Major (Come, Come)" (remade from the EP, as was "2541," which gets a much rockier arrangement with surprisingly Mouldish vocals) and the shambling (complete with dentist drill) "You're the Victim" are clearly aimed at Mould. In the same vein, the Dylanesque—with wailing harmonica and a killer chorus—"Now That You Know Me" discusses a relationship in vague terms that could apply to the band. But "The Main" is about drug addiction, and the solemn "She Can See the Angeles Coming" recalls the band's manager, Dave Savoy, who committed suicide in 1987.

In late '89, Hart—now sticking to vocals and guitar—formed Nova Mob, a rock trio with a really good bassist and an inferior drummer. (Nova Mob was also the name of an obscure but historically significant late-'70s Liverpool outfit that included Julian Cope, Budgie and Pete Wylie.) Written and performed as a rock opera, The Last Days of Pompeii is a weirdly produced (and, for the genre, typically oblique) concept album that is part madness and part fascinating ambition. As a vehicle for quixotic lyrics about ancient history and space exploration, the simple music balances Hart's pop-ulism and sweeping rock ideas with sure strength, if not much ingenuity. (But don't be too surprised if you find yourself idly humming a tune called "Wernher Von Braun.")

Released as a preview of the Pompeii LP, Admiral of the Sea contains two mixes of its clunky organ-churning title track (a showcase for drummer Michael Crego's shortcomings), a single mix of the catchy "The Last Days of Pompeii," an instrumental mix of a third album track and a live'n'loud "I Just Want to Make to Love to You," recorded in Switzerland. [i]

See also Hüsker Dü.

RICHIE HASS & THE BEATNIKS

See Zoogz Rift.

JON HASSELL

See Brian Eno.

DIE HAUT

Schnelles Leben (Ger. Monogram) 1982

Headless Body in Topless Bar (Ger. What's So Funny About) 1988

Die Hard (Ger. What's So Funny About) 1990

DIE HAUT WITH NICK CAVE

Burnin' the Ice (nr/Illuminated) 1983

Rising out of Berlin's post-punk bleakness, die Haut ("the skin") is a largely instrumental quartet with Beefheartian and psychedelic overtones but possessing a disciplined ferocity that yields a strikingly Germanic sound. Schnelles Leben is a seven-song, eighteen-minute disc that utilizes terse bass and drum rhythms topped with scratchy guitar work, rarely settling into a tonal center. Five of the tracks are vocal-less and tend to lack development and textural variety. Not so much produced as simply recorded, in many places vocals are conspicuous by their absence.

Die Haut enlisted the services of Birthday Party singer Nick Cave for Burnin' the Ice and even gave him co-billing. Cave supplies all vocals and lyrics (for four of the seven cuts), generating an air of leader and backing band. Much of the manic double-guitar work on Schnelles Leben turns into psychedelic droning behind Cave's bellowing, but at least the songwriting and production show improvement.

The band wasn't heard from again until 1988's Headless Body in Topless Bar (the title courtesy of a legendary New York Post headline), an album halved between instrumental and vocal tracks, the latter featuring Cave, Anita Lane and a handful of Bad Seeds (die Haut's drummer, Thomas Wylder, is also in Cave's ensemble). In the band's guest-less work, early influences have been replaced by the distorted metallic guitar (by Jochen Arbeit and Rainer Lingk) riding atop Wylder's adept rhythms. But the results are the same: the work still sounds like unfinished songs and is of minimal interest. The vocal side, however, has more character(s). Cave's contribution is a cover of "Just Dropped In (To See What Condition My Condition Was In)," that laughable 1968 attempt at groovy psychedelia from none other than Kenny Rogers. Bad Seed guitarist Kid Congo Powers is featured for two cuts more similar to die Haut's own work; it sounds as though he's the missing vocalist. Lane's "The Bells Belong to the Ashes" is largely motionless art-noise with lots of timpani (thankfully, she speaks rather than sings). Die Haut knows how to collaborate, but not a whole lot else.

[dgs]

See also Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds, Lydia Lunch.

HAVALINAS

The Havalinas (Elektra) 1990 •

Rejoining another former member of the Rockats (British stand-up bassist Smutty Smith), New York singer/guitarist Tim Scott McConnell ended (or at least shelved) his trend-jumping solo career by forming a tough and dusty California trio with ex-Plugz/Cruzados drummer Chalo Quintana. A selfconscious cowboy rock album played on acoustic instruments, The Havalinas (deftly produced by Don Gehman, who does much the same work for John Mellencamp) sets McConnell's any-style-in-a-storm songs into an atmospheric and energetic—but ultimately unconvincing—campfire stew. [i]

See also Cruzados, Plugz, Rockats, Tim Scott.

HAVANA 3 A.M.

See Clash.

GREG HAWKES

See Cars.

HAWKWIND

Hawkwind (UA) 1970 (nr/Sunset) 1975

In Search of Space (UA) 1971 •

Doremi Fasol Latido (UA) 1972

Space Ritual (UA) 1973

Hall of the Mountain Grill (UA) 1974 •

Warrior on the Edge of Time (Atco) 1975

Road Hawks (nr/UA) 1976 (nr/Fame) 1984

Astounding Sounds, Amazing Music (nr/Charisma) 1976 •

Masters of the Universe (nr/UA) 1977 (nr/Fame) 1982 •

Quark Strangeness and Charm (Sire) 1977 •

P.X.R.5 (nr/Charisma) 1979 •

Live '79 (nr/Bronze) 1980

Repeat Performance (nr/Charisma) 1980

Levitation (nr/Charisma) 1980 •

Sonic Attack (nr/RCA) 1981

Church of Hawkwind (nr/RCA) 1982

Choose Your Masques (nr/RCA) 1982

Hawkwind Friends and Relations, Volume 1 (nr/Flicknife) 1982 •

Zones (nr/Flicknife) 1983 •

Bring Me the Head of Yuri Gagarin (nr/Demi-Monde) 1983 •

Independent Days, Volume 1 EP (nr/Flicknife) 1984

Hawkwind Friends and Relations: Twice Upon a Time (Volume 2) (nr/Flicknife) 1984 •

This Is Hawkwind, Do Not Panic (nr/Flicknife) 1984

Hawkwind Friends and Relations, Volume 3 (nr/Flicknife) 1985 •

The Chronicle of the Black Sword (nr/Flicknife) 1985 •

Space Ritual, Volume 2 (nr/APK) 1985 •

Ridicule (nr/Obsession) 1985 •

Independent Days, Volume 2 (nr/Flicknife) 1986

Anthology, Volume 1 (nr/Samurai) 1986 •

Anthology, Volume 2 (nr/Samurai) 1986 •

Anthology, Volume 3 (nr/Samurai) 1986 •

Quark Strangeness and Charm/P.X.R.5 [tape] (nr/Charisma) 1986

The Collection (nr/Castle Comm.) 1986 •

Live 1970–1973 (nr/Dojo) 1986 •

Angels of Death (nr/RCA) 1986

Out & Intake (nr/Flicknife) 1987 •

Early Daze (nr/Thunderbolt) 1987 •

British Tribal Music (nr/Start) 1987 •

The Official Picture Log Book (nr/Flicknife) 1987

Live Chronicles (GWR-Profile) 1988
 Levitation/Live '79 (nr/Castle Comm.) 1988 •
 The Xenon Codex (GWR-Enigma) 1988 •
 The Text of Festival (nr/Thunderbolt) 1988 •
 Spirit of the Age [CD] (nr/Virgin) 1988 •
 Zones/Stonehenge [CD] (nr/Flicknife) 1988 •
 The Best of Hawkwind, Friends & Relations [CD] (nr/Flicknife) 1988 •
 Night of the Hawk (nr/Power House) 1989 •
 Stasis (The U.A. Years) (nr/EMI) 1990 •
 Acid Daze Volume 1 (nr/Receiver) 1990 •
 Acid Daze Volume 2 (nr/Receiver) 1990 •
 Acid Daze Volume 3 (nr/Receiver) 1990 •
 Space Bandits (GWR-Roadracer) 1990 •
 Palace Springs (Roadracer) 1991 •

HAWKLORDS

25 Years On (nr/Charisma) 1978 + 1982 •

HAWKWIND ZOO

EP (nr/Flicknife) 1981

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Greasy Truckers Party (nr/UA) 1972
 Revelations (Glastonbury Fayre) (nr/Revelation) 1972
 Travellers Aid Trust (nr/Flicknife) 1988 •

DAVE BROCK

Earthed to the Ground (nr/Flicknife) 1984 •

DAVE BROCK AND THE AGENTS OF CHAOS

The Agents of Chaos (nr/Flicknife) 1988 •

ROBERT CALVERT

Captain Lockheed and the Starfighters (nr/UA) 1974 •
 Lucky Leif and the Long Ships (nr/UA) 1975 (nr/Beat Goes On) 1987 •
 Freq EP (nr/Flicknife) 1984

Test-Tube Conceived (nr/Demi-Monde) 1986 •
 Hype (nr/See for Miles) 1989 •
 Live at the Queen Elizabeth Hall (nr/Clear) 1989

LLOYD LANGTON GROUP

Outside the Law (nr/Flicknife) 1983
 Night Air (nr/Flicknife) 1985
 Time Space and Lloyd Langton Group (GWR-Restless) 1988

HUW LLOYD-LANGTON

Like an Arrow (nr/Gas) 1986

MELODIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Stranger in Mystery (Can. Energy) 1979

STEVE SWINDELLS

Fresh Blood (Atco) 1980
 Messages (nr/RCA) 1981

NIK TURNER

Sphynx Xitintoday (nr/Charisma) 1978

Hawkwind's influence has been extensive, if often indirect and, when acknowledged at all, done so grudgingly. The group's faults (most notably a chronic tendency towards excess) have generally been over-criticized to the exclusion of its virtues: that gargantuan and impenetrable pre-metal/hardcore drone, those great riffs, that inexorable drive to destinations unknown. Un-fashionable in Britain for most of its existence and unknown outside of a cult following in the US, Hawkwind has often been judged offensive merely for existing. If that isn't pure punk . . .

Through a checkered twenty-years-plus history, Hawkwind has been ruled either by a dictator under the guise of near anarchy or by a purported leader with no control at all. Whichever it be, Dave Brock has been the lineup's only constant through 40 or so personnel changes. A busker who did a stint in the Dharma Blues Band (preserved on anthologies of early British blues), he formed Group X—which became Hawkwind Zoo and then Hawkwind—in London in 1969. Since then, Brock has written and sung the great majority of the material and played most of the guitar, not to mention a fair amount of synthesizer.

Hawkwind's first album is an unexciting hodge-podge of street folk/blues, riff-rock and electronics, with Nik Turner's sax and flute thrown in. The LP's indulgent improvisations fit in with the band's rebellious hippie image, as evinced by their early drug busts and indefatigable benefit-playing, which initially got them positive attention in the alternative culture media. Stacia, a voluptuous (and frequently topless) dancer who joined in 1971, also drew attention to the group and probably had some influence on it; she eventually got a full vote in Hawkwind affairs.

Despite its intricate, attractive unfolding sleeve (designed by the late Barney Bubbles), In Search of Space is pretty lukewarm; the sole song of canonical note here is "Master of the Universe." Most important, though, the aforementioned musical elements, along with a more explicit science-fiction orientation, can now be heard as a stylistic blend, integrating Turner, electronics gremlin Dik Mik and newly added synthesizer player Del Dettmar. Some of the electro-noise/saxoid drone bears a strange resemblance to subsequent mid-song blasts by early Roxy Music, whose own electronics specialist Eno had resided, like Dik Mik, in London's funky Ladbroke Grove.

Doremi Fasol Latido is Hawkwind's first strong album. The band's intensity was lifted a notch or two by the manic hyper-drive of new bassist and occasional guitarist Ian "Lemmy" Kilminster, who had played in '60s beat group the Rockin' Vicars and horrible drummerless psychedelicians Sam Gopal. Also, Robert Calvert, who'd drifted into the group's periphery, began to shape its mythology, writing and declaiming some of its lyrics, just as Turner's own writing was starting to emerge.

Earlier the same year, Hawkwind had played at a London benefit concert for the Greasy Truckers, an alternative music organization. The subsequent double live album included a full side of Hawkwind but, more significantly, an outtake from it, the queerly poppy space-chug "Silver Machine." Penned by Brock (under his then-wife's name), it was released as a single and became Hawkwind's only UK hit—a huge one, which didn't appear on LP until years later. That success financed the tour chronicled on Space Ritual. The double live LP (from London and Liverpool) includes versions of "Master of the Universe" and two-thirds of Doremi's songs (although two had chunks cut out); the new material included Calvert and Brock's synth-embroidered recitations of scary scenarios (e.g., the armageddon classic "Sonic Attack") penned by Calvert and their new buddy, noted sci-fi novelist Michael Moorcock. The LP is solid to super, and not as longwinded as you might imagine.

Dik Mik departed before Hall of the Mountain Grill and was replaced by violin-wielding keyboardist Simon House; Calvert left to do his solo albums. By Warrior on the Edge of Time, Dettmar had gone too, and Alan Powell picked up the slack for injured drummer Simon King, subsequently playing alongside him. House added formal musical knowledge and skill for a fuller, often more melodious brew. The actual sound of the discs was also clearer, which pointed up the anarchy of the droning psychedelic raveups.

Hall of the Mountain Grill's highlights include the rampaging "Psychedelic Warlords (Disappear in Smoke)" and Lemmy's bleak "Lost Johnny" (co-written by Mick Farren). Warrior on the Edge of Time has four tracks co-written by Moorcock, who makes a murky, overly echoed thespian debut on two of them. It also sports Brock's own rocking pseudo-mythology ("Magnu") and a quiet, thoughtful tune ("The Demented Man"), as well as "Kings of Speed," released as a single. The latter's B-side was "Motorhead"; Lemmy took that name for the band he formed after being sacked from Hawkwind following a 1974 on-tour Canadian drug bust. (Although it ceased to exist in reality, the Lemmy lineup resurfaced in fiction as the protagonists—dubbed the Hawklords, led by "Baron Brock"—in a trilogy of books by Moorcock and Michael Butterworth.)

By that point, Hawkwind had achieved all it ever would, in terms of trailblazing; since then, it's all been refinements, variations, even regurgitations. This isn't to say none of the subsequent albums are any good, just not particularly original, and move in a more normal direction. When the band switched UK labels from UA to Charisma, UA decided to do some summing up. Road Hawks is a fine retrospective, and includes "Silver Machine"; Masters of the Universe is a strong secondary collection.

Astounding Sounds noticeably backed off from the heaviness of the Lemmy era. His replacement, Paul Rudolph (ex-Pink Fairies), had lots of zip, just no overkill. Meanwhile, Calvert had returned, more fully part of the band than ever. Almost every cut is quite good but too long by half, except for the single "Kerb Crawler," which is sharp and to the point. More internal problems: Turner was asked to leave; Rudolph and Powell, allegedly engaging in power play tactics, got the boot.

So next came—what else?—one of Hawkwind's best, most pop-oriented albums. Quark Strangeness and Charm features tuff tracks like "Hassan I Sahba" (clever mating of Hawkwind's patented drone with Middle Eastern music) and the delightfully rollicking (!) title tune.

P.X.R.5 contains some gems'n'junk cut in '77 and '78, including three previously unreleased live tracks and two cuts with Brock playing everything but drums. House departed to play with Bowie's touring band, and the Hawks' subsequent US trek so depressed Brock that he quit and sold his guitar. He soon joined up with the Sonic Assassins (with whom Hawkwind had done a one-off gig in '77): Calvert, songwriting bassist Harvey Bainbridge and drummer Martin Griffin. With the addition of keyboardist Steve Swindells (ex-String Driven Thing/Pilot), Hawkwind was reconstituted . . . sort of.

For legal reasons, and to reflect a new direction, the group was christened the Hawklords. Flippy futuristic in lyrical slant, and more succinct and modern (almost—gasp—new wave) in sonic approach, 25 Years On is immediately likable and catchy, if surprisingly lightweight. (King and House made contributions in the LP's early stages.) But the Lords started playing the old songs live and blessed the release of P.X.R.5; soon they transmuted back into Hawkwind and signed to Bronze. (Repeat Performance is a fine distillation of the Charisma era, although it omits "Hassan I Sahba.")

After Live '79, Swindells left to make his solo LPs, become an outspoken member of the gay musical community and turn into a hotshot club DJ. Tim Blake (ex-Gong) joined in his stead, while Griffin was replaced by Ginger Baker (!). None of this, however, could compensate for the loss of Calvert (back to his solo career); Levitation is bland and tame, its main grit supplied by newly returned guitarist Huw Lloyd-Langton, who'd left Hawkwind after cutting the very first album a decade earlier! (Levitation and Live '79 were later paired and reissued jointly in all three formats.)

Griffin returned to replace Baker, and Bainbridge and Brock took up the keyboard slack for the departed Blake as the band moved over to RCA. Actually, as they started to do Sonic Attack—somewhat of a return to the earlier Hawkstyle and less playful lyrical stance—Griffin came down with German measles, and the other three started in on the very electronic Church of Hawkwind LP. In any case, the net impression left by the three RCA albums is of a hard, heavy and humorless band, but one often capable of being grimly evocative; the generous Angels of Death compilation is an apt summary.

At this point, the band began a prolific association with the Flickknife label. The union's first issue—the Hawkwind Zoo EP—contains an alternate version of "Hurry Sundown" (presumably recorded before the first album), a live "Kings of Speed" and the early (and surprisingly erotic) "Sweet Mistress of Pain." The 12-inches that followed—some with newly recorded material (e.g., "Night of the Hawks," with Lemmy guesting)—were later collected on two volumes of Independent Days.

The three Friends and Relations discs consist of outtakes, concert recordings, demos, side projects, related bands, etc. Volume 1 has live Hawkwind, Hawklords and Sonic Assassins ('77 and '78), plus studio sides by Hawkwind, Nik Turner's Inner City Unit and Michael Moorcock's Deep Fix, but the series goes downhill from there. (Volume 3 is absolutely bottom-of-the-barrel scrapings.) The best two-thirds of all three is crammed onto the 1988 CD, The Best of Hawkwind, Friends and Relations.

Zones is a punchy live LP featuring the pre- and post-RCA lineups (including Nik Turner, who rejoined in '82); This Is Hawkwind, Do Not Panic, recorded live at Stonehenge in the summer of '84 (with a bonus 12-inch), shares its title with the band biography published around the same time. (On CD, Zones is piggybacked with an album's worth of live cuts from Stonehenge.)

In '85, after some realignment, Hawkwind endeavored to make its first all-new LP in three years. With Turner reforming Inner City Unit, Bainbridge took on keys and synth exclusively, while singing/writing bassist Allan Davey and drummer Danny Thompson (son of the same-named Pentangle bassist) completed the lineup. With Moorcock's help (but not actual participation), The Chronicle of the Black Sword successfully adapted his popular Elric sword-and-sorcery sagas, possibly the band's most disciplined, ambitious undertaking yet. Even better is Live Chronicles (from the '85 tour), which includes versions of most of that record, numbers from the RCA years and even "Magnu" and "Master of the Universe." Hawkwind could still smash and slash.

With two rhythm sections (Davey/Thompson and Bainbridge/Griffin) sharing the work, Out & Intake is dominated by songs spotlighting band members other than Brock—including, on two, Nik Turner in a guest role. Some of the material is new, some old but not the work of these musicians (like the two Calvert numbers). Hodgepodge but good.

The next year, using Motörhead producer Guy Bidmead, Hawkwind came up with The Xenon Codex, an entertaining romp through familiar territory with some enjoyable twists, like the "Magical Mystery Tour"-ish vocals and cinematic sweep of the "Neon Skyline/Lost Chronicles" medley, and the comedic hijinks of "Good Evening."

The (Hawk)winds of change swept through once again. Lloyd-Langton went off to follow his own muse (such as it was/is), Thompson gave way to Richard Chadwick, and a young ex-schoolteacher (?) named Bridgett Wishart stepped in as lead and harmony vocalist (and onstage mime). The results, on Space Bandits, are intriguing but uneven. Tuneful female vocals make a neat change on "Images," which otherwise has all the earmarks of a typical Hawks hyperdrive romp (i.e., overlong but enjoyable); "Black Elk Speaks" features a Native American declaiming the words of the 19th-century Sioux prophet; half of Side Two offers unsettling atmospherics and uneasy dreams. Prodigal son Simon House is a welcome musical presence throughout, but for personal reasons did not continue with the group after the recording.

As for the rest of the Hawkwind albums listed above, they are almost all live recordings, like Bring Me the Head of Yuri Gagarin and Early Daze, both tapes from the personal collection of In Search of Space-era bassist Dave Anderson, and Ridicule, also from the same time frame. Likewise, Text of Festival is a double album, with both the expected songs and side-long jams. For what it's worth, the (not scrupulously labelled) Anthology series later came out as the Acid Daze series which, in CD form, is on two discs.

The Official Picture Log Book is vinyl picture discs of Chronicle, Out & Intake and Do Not Panic, plus an interview disc, badge and poster. The Collection is a best-of that doesn't contain the "hits" in their original versions. ("Silver Machine" is the only one explicitly marked live, but most of it is.) The studio material includes two old blues standards, done straight. A couple of tracks seem like arbitrarily edited jams; in fact, there are a surprising number of awkward moments (tracks starting by fading in, abrupt edits, etc.). All the same, much of it is really pretty good.

In the solo album department, there's Brock's batch of demos, Earthed to the Ground, "recorded at home while waiting for Hawkwind to get going again." The writing and playing are pretty thin, although the odd number like "Green Finned Demon" suggests it would've been worth an EP.

Much better is The Agents of Chaos, which is evidently just him (guitars and synths) with the limited assistance of someone named Crum (four pseudo-Terry Riley/new age instrumentals credited to Crum are not great recommendations). It's safe to say that the best of Agents has been done better with Hawkwind, but if you have all the other studio albums (heh, heh) and are just dying for another, help yourself. (Flickknife combined the two Brock solos on one compact disc.)

Calvert's Captain Lockheed is a deluxe concept album dramatizing the true story of an airplane disastrously modified into an unstable, unsafe machine (aka the Widow Maker). The project is ambitiously outfitted with Rudolph, Lemmy, King, Dettmar, Turner, Brock, plus Eno (!) and—reading dialogue, yet—Viv Stanshall and Jim Capaldi, all overseen by Roy Thomas Baker. Despite some decent tracks, the talk segments are just plain awkward, and make it impossible for the songs to sustain a flow.

Another Calvert concept album, Lucky Leif argues that the Vikings really discovered America. Is this trip necessary? Some of it's just plain silly. Produced by Eno, music dominated by Rudolph, with House and Turner along for the ride. Other participants: Winkie Brian Turrington, Roxy bassist Sal Maida and Moorcock on banjo.

Freq is Calvert's industrial record, in a sense. Five of the six tracks (played on guitar and synths by him and two cohorts) relate to the workplace; the other is about a bomb squad. Kernels of good ideas/images abound, but the only one that's well and fully realized is "All the Machines Are Quiet," a song about being on strike. The weirdness ante is upped by the inclusion of union-related conversations and speeches scattered throughout the album. Calvert suffered a heart attack and died at the age of 43 in the summer of 1988.

The best of the solos is Swindell's Fresh Blood. It's just him (producing, too), with Lloyd-Langton, King and ex-Van der Graaf Generator bassist Nic Potter. It sounds like Thin Lizzy meets Graham Parker with a rocket up his ass. Narsty. Roger Daltrey sang Swindell's "Bitter and Twisted" in the soundtrack of his film, McVicar.

As for Del Dettmar, he resurfaced in the Vancouver area in the Melodic Energy Commission, making new age music before there was such a thing, and cosmic hippy-dippy mystic electronic folk. Blech.

Believe it or not, the Travellers Aid double LP, cut at various late-'80s free festivals in Great Britain, isn't a load of crap. Despite the billing, not much of it is Hawkwind, though: one and a half okay tracks, plus one great one by Agents of Chaos. Nik Turner brings up the rear with a crowd sing-along of "Silver Machine." In between is very promising punky hard-rock to a ska beat by Culture Shock, Tubilah Dogs (Hawkwind-cum-Blue Öyster Cult that kind of works), some variable but amusing punk (Hippy Slags, Screech Rock), two decent-to-good reggae bands (Israel Movement and Rhythmites) and some goofballs (2000 D.S., Radio Magnolia and Ozric Tentacles), some of which is gruesomely interesting. [jg]

See also Inner City Unit, Motörhead.

BONNIE HAYES WITH THE WILD COMBO

Good Clean Fun (Slash) 1982
Brave New Girl (Bondage) 1984

BONNIE HAYES

Bonnie Hayes (Chrysalis) 1987 •

Originally known around San Francisco as the Punts, singer Bonnie Hayes and her backing trio take the grossly overused pure pop formula and actually manage to turn it interesting again on Good Clean Fun. She follows in the tradition of early Blondie and the Go-Go's by making bright, simple melodies hop and skip incessantly. Hayes and crew avoid the monotony that sometimes plagues their counterparts by downplaying the preciousness and incorporating a wide variety of influences, including jazz and R&B.

Hayes' 1987 major-label album employs a larger backing band and a brand-name producer (Stewart Levine), but nothing can stop the vim and infectious enthusiasm of this adorable one-woman pop dynamo. Hayes writes mature songs about romance from a gingerly hopeful, self-reliant standpoint and performs them with pristine, airy simplicity that at one point ("The Real Thing") precisely resembles Todd Rundgren at his most joyfully upbeat. [jy/i]

HAYSI FANTAYZEE

Battle Hymns for Children Singing (RCA) 1983

Battle Hymns is one of the most willfully annoying records of all time. With Paul Caplin pulling the strings, singing characters Jeremiah Healy and Kate Garner spew out juvenile nonsense lyrics attached to bouncy dance rock, tricked out with gimmicky production to make it reach maximum quirky obnoxiousness. A few tracks (like the McLarenesque square-dance rocker "Shiny Shiny" and the Bow Wow Wow-like "More Money") are fine for very occasional listening, but enduring this entire album in one sitting is like having painful dentistry performed by an overbearing three-year-old. Garner made some solo records after the London group evaporated; Healy has done some remixes (including the Clash) and recorded for Boy George's label as the Ezee Posse. [i]

OFRA HAZA

Yemenite Songs (nr/Globestyle) 1985 •
Fifty Gates of Wisdom (Shanachie) 1987 •
Shaday (Sire) 1988 •
Desert Wind (Sire-Warner Bros.) 1989 •

Whether or not music is indeed the universal language, the fact is that if you slap on a contemporary dance beat, people will buy just about anything, no matter how exotic its origins. Such is the case with Yemenite singer Ofra Haza, who funk'd up ancient Hebrew music and became the international darling of folks who would never bother to borrow an ethnic record from the public library.

After her sinuous singing was sampled by Coldcut onto a remix of Eric B. and Rakim's "Paid in Full" and from there onto M/A/R/R/S' "Pump Up the Volume" in 1987, Haza—a huge pop star at home in Israel—gave a rethink to three selections from her traditional-minded Yemenite Songs (issued in the US as Fifty Gates of Wisdom) and rocked them into the late 20th century on her next album. Bits of Shaday (mostly done with British producer Wally Brill) are intriguing blends of strange and familiar sounds (a bit reminiscent in approach to Monsoon), but most of the LP is horrible globopop disco (in English) that could almost be mistaken for Gloria Estefan.

With production by Arif Mardin and Thomas Dolby (as well as Haza and her longtime collaborator/manager, Bezalel Aloni), Haza settled down on Desert Wind, forging a subtler, more organic hybrid. Making a self-conscious effort to maintain a connection to her musical roots while reaching out for mainstream appeal, Haza locates a fascinating midpoint between the Middle East and the Midwest on "Ya Ba Ye," "I Want to Fly" and "Da'Asa"; elsewhere, she drops instrumental and vocal accents into otherwise characterless concoctions and, on two tracks, succumbs to Dolby's high-tech irrelevancy. [i]

HEAD

A Snog on the Rocks (nr/Demon) 1987 •
Tales of Ordinary Madness (nr/Virgin) 1988 •
Intoxicator (nr/Virgin) 1989 •

Led by Gareth Sager (ex-Pop Group/Rip Rig + Panic/Float Up CP) and featuring guitarist Nick Sheppard (a onetime Cortina who played in the Clash's miserable afterlife), this loopy Bristol rock quintet—a casually clever in-joke that's not hard to share—has a jolly old time on its first album, indulging in fake sea chanteys and traditional folk songs, sending up Elvis Presley and making mincemeat of assorted rock (i)conventions. Clevedon Pier's commanding Iggy-like voice and the band's ever-changing musical approach makes A Snog on the Rocks as unpredictable as a Three Johns record, but a lot easier on the ears.

The stronger Tales of Ordinary Madness (on which the slightly refigured group uses an entirely different set of pseudonyms) turns Head's light on rambunctious, occasionally panoramic rock (with horns and piano as well as load guitar and mighty rhythms), taking in quite a bit of stylistic ground. The funky "Get Fishy," which sounds like Foetus getting busy with the J. Geils Band, follows the brassy theatricality of "Machete Vendetta"; complete with strings, the jazzed-out "1000 Hangovers Later" evokes swanky nightclub dissolution with a distinct Nick Cave bent, while "32a" gives an Exile on Main Street treatment to the subject of jukebox addiction. Crazy, and loads of fun.

Co-produced by Michael Jonzun (brother of New Kids on the Block svengali Maurice Starr), Head's rock, funk and soul are disappointingly unambitious—even sappy—on Intoxicator, a flat-sounding album that displays no more than a glimmer ("Under the Influence of Books") of the previous records' feverish invention, humor or radicalism. Pier's dramatic voice gives the songs most of their character; otherwise, both the material and presentation (with the exception, on both fronts, of the brisk Sager-produced pop of "B'Goode or Be Gone") are entirely lusterless. [i]

See also Rip Rig + Panic.

JOWE HEAD

See Swell Maps.

(THEE) HEADCOATS

See Thee Mighty Caesars.

HEADLESS HORSEMEN

Can't Help but Shake (Resonance) 1987

Gotta Be Cool EP (Resonance) 1988

CHRIS SUCH AND HIS SAVAGES

EP (Chaos) 1989

The Fuzztones (as they existed in NYC) were '60s garage snazz with a smirk. The Tryfles were the same, but with reverence. When the two split and melded, the resultant Headless Horsemen began to rebuild a lost past somewhere between the Flamin Groovies and Easybeats. Initially a trio overly inclined towards acne-era Who, by the time they hit vinyl, the re-aligned Horsemen foursome had invented a more stylistically singular pop music, spanning quiet introspection to hyperkinetic blueball odes. Echoing Green in their Kinksian romanticism of lust and longing, the Horsemen also shuffled frontmen and moonlighted occasionally as Chris Such and the Savages (incisive Anglo-rock esoterica name), playing spirited covers of familiar beat rockers. Interestingly, the Such EP was recorded and mixed in stereo, then folded into mono by an overzealous label owner striving for "authenticity," accounting for some odd sound levels. The Headless Horsemen disbanded as the decade turned. [ab]

See also Fuzztones.

HEAD OF DAVID

Dogbreath EP (nr/Blast First) 1986

LP (nr/Blast First) 1986

CD [CD] (nr/Blast First) 1986 •

The Saveana Mixes EP (nr/Blast First) 1987

Dustbowl (Blast First-Dutch East India) 1988 •

White Elephant (nr/Blast First) 1989 •

Progenitors of Britain's extremist grindcore scene, Head of David (who hail from the industrial backwater of Dudley, near the Birmingham birthplace of Black Sabbath) may not have been the first band to blur the line between industrial music and grunge metal, but one need look no further than their calculated, incessant pounding to witness its near obliteration. The virulent sterility of Dogbreath suggests what Big Black might have sounded like had Steve Albini been obsessed by Black Sabbath's Paranoid: an overwrought guitar barrage and sinister, neanderthal machine rhythms (best put to use on a faithfully compulsive cover of Suicide's "Rocket USA").

LP (digital copies, which include Dogbreath's four tracks, are appropriately dubbed CD) is at once more minimalist and more selfconsciously anti-emotional. It's blessedly easy, though, to ignore such stunted, subsonic Youth lyrical fixations as "Joyride Burning X" and "Snuff Rider MC" since the dense, omnivorous metalslide sweeps up the lot with fascinating, twisted grace. Producer John Fryer extracts more surprises from the band's hermetic sound on the Saveana Mixes EP, including some noirish ambience on "Adrenicide."

By Dustbowl, Head of David had removed most of the electro-shock trappings (except for the devastatingly powerful rhythm machine) in order to be cast as tequila-swigin', Harley-ridin' zombies from the Planet Hopper . . . Dennis, that is. While the psychotic Americana overkill quickly surpasses mere laughability on its way up the scale from Police Academy to (Monty Python's) Killing Joke, Head of David pull off the stiff-limbed metal swagger with all the necessary thuggishness. Once again, production (this time by Albini in the wiry flesh) saves the day by submerging most of the verbiage. After Dustbowl, drummer/singer Justin Broadrick (who had been serving concurrently as the guitarist in Napalm Death) left to form the even more abrasive Godflesh. Head of David pressed on as a three-piece, but hadn't issued any new material by the end of 1990.

White Elephant's eight tracks are drawn from a pair of John Peel radio sessions (1986 and '87). [dss]
See also Godflesh, Napalm Death.

TOPPER HEADON

See Clash.

HEARTBREAKERS

L.A.M.F. (nr/Track) 1977 (nr/Jungle) 1984 •

Live at Max's Kansas City (Max's Kansas City) 1979

D.T.K.—Live at the Speakeasy (nr/Jungle) 1982

JOHNNY THUNDERS & THE HEARTBREAKERS

L.A.M.F. Revisited (nr/Jungle) 1984

D.T.K. L.A.M.F. (nr/Jungle) 1984 •

Live at the Lyceum Ballroom 1984 (nr/ABC) 1984
(nr/Receiver) 1990 •

The New York club circuit's first supergroup, the Heartbreakers originally (circa 1975) consisted of ex-NY Dolls Johnny Thunders (Genzale) and Jerry Nolan, ex-Television bassist Richard Hell and ex-nothing guitarist Walter Lure. Hell quit to go solo and was replaced (in only the most technical sense) by Billy Rath; the band moved to England and recorded a technically disappointing debut LP, L.A.M.F., for Track Records. The irony of that label's name was not lost on Heartbreakers fans, who suspected that the group's move to Britain was motivated primarily by the UK's heroin-maintenance program. So feeble was the album's mix that drummer Jerry Nolan actually quit over it, though the material itself shows the band to be masters of the stripped-down, souped-up arrangement later copied by many punk groups.

The Heartbreakers subsequently returned to New York, where they performed an endless succession of "farewell" gigs with various pickup drummers, most often Ty Styx. One of these shows was preserved for the Live at Max's LP, an ultimate party record—loud and sloppy with lots of dirty talk—and probably the best official document of any local band of the era.

In 1982, a 1977 London performance was sprung from the vaults and released as D.T.K.—Live at the Speakeasy. Recorded with Nolan, it presents the darker side of the ambience that pervades the Live at Max's set, if only because the band has a more secure drummer. Clearly the Johnny Thunders show, the LP exposes some incredibly sloppy playing, self-righteous audience baiting and a few devolved lyrics (like a reworking of “Can’t Keep My Eyes on You” into “Can’t keep my cock in you.”)

Another live release—this one from a March '84 show at London's Lyceum—turned up a few years later, showing how far the Heartbreakers had come and how little they had changed. The program is a full-fledged Thunders retrospective: the Dolls' "Personality Crisis," the Heartbreakers' "Born To(o) Lo(o)se," his solo "So Alone" and a couple of chestnuts (like "Pipeline" and "Do You Love Me?") from his youth. The show is hot and reasonably coherent, with fine singing by JT and Lure; clear production helps immeasurably.

In 1984, Thunders (assisted by Tony James) remixed L.A.M.F. to repair its miserable sound, and the Heartbreakers' lone studio album was given a much improved and much-needed second life as L.A.M.F. Revisited. The same label later paired the remixed record with the Speakeasy live album, dubbing this maximum punk package D.T.K L.A.M.F.

The Heartbreakers played a reunion show in New York in late '90; Thunders died in April 1991. [jw/i]

See also Richard Hell, New York Dolls, Sex Pistols, Television, Johnny Thunders.

HEART THROBS

Cleopatra Grip (Elektra) 1990 •

Playing gutsy girls'n'guitars rock-pop, the Heart Throbs—a quintet from Reading, England—have a nifty melodic sound that ages the Primitives from adolescence into young-adulthood. The Heart Throbs win brownie points by resisting the temptation to add what would be trendy but superfluous J&M Chain-styled noise. Guitarist Rose Carlotti (augmented by her bass-playing sister, Rachel) gives the songs a strong vocal personality; the band's three male members underpin the dynamic, full-bodied arrangements with a mid-Atlantic stylistic accent that occasionally recalls Holly and the Italians. Richly produced by Gil Norton, about half of Cleopatra Grip is as good as any likeminded group around (we're talking total decimation of Transvision Vamp, Voice of the Beehive, Darling Buds, etc.). "Tossed Away," "Dreamtime" and "Here I Hide" all show a real intuitive sense for what makes a good pop tune memorable. But not all of the songs hit the same sublime nirvana; while the band puts on a bold face for this debut album, too often they sound like they haven't got a clue what to do. And someone really needs to help these guys with lyrics, which run from fine to completely awful. [i]

HEAVEN 17

Penthouse and Pavement (nr/B.E.F.-Virgin) 1981 •

Heaven 17 (Arista) 1982

The Luxury Gap (Virgin-Arista) 1983 •

How Men Are (Virgin-Arista) 1984 •

Endless (nr/Virgin) 1986 ◊

Pleasure One (Virgin) 1986 •

Teddy Bear, Duke & Psycho (nr/Virgin) 1988

(Virgin-Caroline) 1989 •

After disproving all accusations of synthesizers as limited vehicles of expression, the British Electric Foundation—a multifarious offshoot of the Human League—got their Heaven 17 alter-ego underway with Penthouse and Pavement. Lyrically, the album ranges from silly to exciting; musically, it's an almost flawless blend of funk and electronics, highlighted by the pressurized new-dance fever of "(We Don't Need This) Fascist Groove Thang."

The American Heaven 17 release deletes three tracks from Penthouse and Pavement and replaces them with the top-notch pop soul of "Let Me Go" and "Who Will Stop the Rain," both from the UK edition of The Luxury Gap. (The American release of that album swapped them for two of the three tracks omitted from Heaven 17.) In all of its incarnations, The Luxury Gap contains "Crushed by the Wheels of Industry," "Temptation" and "We Live So Fast," all stellar examples of Heaven 17's chartbound craftsmanship: catchy, toe-tapping dance-pop with horns, guitars and an orchestra providing musical depth behind Ian Craig Marsh and Martyn Ware's synthesizers. Glenn Gregory's gruff vocals aren't immediately mellifluous, but they suit the material and ambience perfectly.

With B.E.F. the Concept falling onto the scrapheap of progress, Heaven 17 (named for an LP cover pictured in A Clockwork Orange) made a third album, graced with another awful cover painting. How Men Are features an expanding cast of musicians and concomitant sprawl—"And That's No Lie" runs over ten tedious minutes! The LP has a few lively cuts—"This Is Mine" and "Sunset Now" in particular—but is otherwise overblown, indulgent and excessive.

Endless is a poshly packaged, limited-edition, career-spanning retrospective issued originally on cassette but later offered on CD. Besides such essentials as "(We Don't Need This) Fascist Groove Thang," "Crushed by the Wheels of Industry," "Let Me Go" and "We Live So Fast," the collection includes a "Heaven 17 Megamix" medley and an alternate version of "Let's All Make a Bomb" (from either the first or second album, depending on your national orientation). The tape has four additional selections, including "Play to Win" and a new recording of "Song with No Name."

Pleasure One, recorded in various studios over a seventeen-month (hmmm . . .) span, uses scads of guest musicians and vocalists to flesh out an accessible collection of upbeat dance numbers held to almost reasonable song lengths. (Interestingly, at this juncture, the stylistic gap between Heaven 17 and the Human League has never been narrower.) "Contenders," "Trouble" and "Free" are the strongest tracks.

Incapable of any further innovation, and with the novelty of soul-styled electronic dance music having long since worn off, Heaven 17 (like their former mates in Human League) reached the late '80s lacking a strong identity: too many bands sound like this now. Despite the trio's efforts to tart things up with incongruity (heavy rock guitar, Barry White mush, pseudo-jazz, wailing blues harp), Teddy Bear, Duke & Psycho keeps returning to the chattering funky bounce and schmaltzy strings of every other H17 record. When Gregory isn't crooning arch love songs, the lyrics moralize about television, self-reliance, personal freedom and war. Hey everybody, let's party like it's 1984! [sg/i]

See also British Electric Foundation, Human League.

HECTOR

See Flying Color.

RICHARD HELL & THE VOIDOIDS

Richard Hell EP (Ork) 1976

Blank Generation (Sire) 1977 + 1990 •

Richard Hell/Neon Boys EP (Shake) 1980

Destiny Street (Red Star) 1982 (nr/ID) 1988 •

Funhunt [tape] (ROIR) 1990

RICHARD HELL

R.I.P. [tape] (ROIR) 1984 [CD] (ROIR-Important) 1990 φ

With his fierce poetic nihilism, Richard Hell embodied and helped set the initial style for '70s punk rock. He founded the Neon Boys with Tom Verlaine in 1971; several years later, they changed the name to Television. He co-founded the Heartbreakers with Johnny Thunders, thereby injecting a poetic intelligence into mindless self-destruction, and went solo as a venerable figure before most future new wave stars had even formed a band. Malcolm McLaren used Hell's mode of dress as the prototype for punk style.

Employing the double guitar threat of Ivan Julian and Robert Quine (later a Lou Reed sideman) and drummer Marc Bell (a former member of the horrifying Dust who departed to become Marky Ramone for several years), Hell formed the Voidoids, whose unwavering individualism kept the group out of the big time while producing a demanding and impressive corpus of work. "I was saying let me out of here before I was even born," opens Hell's masterpiece, "(I Belong to the) Blank Generation," on the 7-inch Richard Hell EP, which also includes "Another World" and "You Gotta Lose."

That lyric sums up Hell's attitude, which he expanded and perfected on Blank Generation with a new version of the title track and such powerful statements as "Love Comes in Spurts" (an old tune the Heartbreakers recycled into "One Track Mind") and "New Pleasure." The album combines manic William Burroughs-influenced poetry and raw-edged music for the best rock presentation of nihilism and existential angst ever. Hell's voice, fluctuating from groan to shriek, is more impassioned and expressive than a legion of Top 40 singers. (Besides solid liner notes, the 1990 CD adds two tracks—"I'm Your Man," a non-LP B-side from '79, and "All the Way," a Sinatra cover done for the Smithereens soundtrack—and substitutes an inferior alternate version of "Down at the Rock and Roll Club.")

After a gap of three years (during which Hell issued only one single, produced by Nick Lowe), the 7-inch Richard Hell/Neon Boys appeared, featuring grimly touching songs by the modern Voidoids on one side and old demos by the Neon Boys on the other.

Destiny Street shows a more contemplative Hell, with even sharper imagery and guitar work (again courtesy of the stunning and underrated Robert Quine) and expressively painted poetry. Supported by Fred Maher's crisp drumming and produced with little fanfare by Alan Betrock, Hell offers a second version of "The Kid with the Replaceable Head" (first heard on the '78 Low-helmed single), "Destiny Street" and covers of Them's "I Can Only Give You Everything" (okay), the Kinks' "I Gotta Move" (good) and Dylan's "Going Going Gone" (great). Ruthless yet touchingly romantic, Richard Hell may be rock's last real visionary.

A résumé of Hell's post-Television decade, from his 1975 days with the Heartbreakers through 1984 sessions in New Orleans, R.I.P. is inevitably his least polished and most inconsistent work, which may be why it sums up his style so well. Neither as mannered as his first LP nor as professional as his second, this collection showcases his most uninhibited singing on retreads, live takes and previously unissued material. The liner notes (signed with the artist's real name—Lester Meyers) describe the tape as Richard Hell's swansong, but he did begin playing out again, with a short-lived new band, a few months after its release.

Despite shitty sound quality, the live performances (from '78, '79 and '85) on Funhunt are totally worth hearing and occasionally extraordinary. Three different sets of Voidoids (including an otherwise undocumented lineup with Jody Harris and Anton Fier) follow Hell through enthusiastic renditions of his own best tunes and such surprising borrowings as the Stones' "I'm Free" and Jimi Hendrix's "Crosstown Traffic." [sg/mf/i]

See also Heartbreakers, Robert Quine, Ramones, Lou Reed, Television.

HELLMENN

Herbal Lunacy EP (Aus. Waterfront) 1987

Bastard Sons of 10,000 Maniacs EP (Aus. Waterfront) 1988

Mourning of the Earth (Aus. Waterfront) 1990

Early on, these representatives of the rowdy Sydney surf-punk crowd showed only glimmerings of ability that might lift them above the garage-grunge mass—and oh, those inane lyrics! On the LP, a lot of the audible words are still dopey (one decent set are borrowed from someone else's poem). Yet the band also shows some real melodic strength as they add folk-rock and other musical elements to their now-potent noise-rock. Too bad screamer Ben Brown can't sing; the more demanding the song, the worse he sounds. [jg]

HELMET

See Band of Susans.

NONA HENDRYX

Nona (RCA) 1983

The Art of Defense (RCA) 1984

The Heat (RCA) 1985

Female Trouble (EMI America) 1987 •

SkinDiver (Private Music) 1989 •

Following a mainstream hard-rock solo album in the '70s, ex-Labelle singer Hendryx upped her hipness quotient considerably in the '80s. Co-produced by Material, Nona features an all-star cast of Talking Heads and Go-Go's, as well as Laurie Anderson, Nile Rodgers, Jamaaladeen Tacuma and Sly Dunbar. The dance-funk is, unfortunately, more stimulating on paper than disc; Hendryx is a powerful singer and there are some slick production moves, but the tunes (with the exception of the memorable "Keep It Confidential") are too shapeless to be gripping.

On The Art of Defense, again teamed with Material (as well as much of the preceding LP's cast, plus Afrika Bambaataa and Eddie Martinez), Hendryx sings seven long songs about passion with passion, obliterating any possible emotional impact with numbing one-note, one-beat repetition. Technically excellent and funky as hell, the album is also boring beyond words.

Produced in large part by Bernard Edwards and Arthur Baker, The Heat is a lot better. The songs—more melody, less bombast—take maximum advantage of the musical interplay possible with electronic percussion and studio wizardry. Hendryx evidently still believes that any line worth singing is worth singing half a dozen times, but the well-arranged, muscular backing tracks keep moving, so things don't wind down—even when she drills a lyric into the ground. "If Looks Could Kill (D.O.A.)" is a return to her soul roots; Keith Richards guests on "Rock This House," providing trademark rhythm riffing that fits just right.

Sounding in spots very much like Peter Gabriel's So album, Female Trouble—dedicated to Winnie Mandela—is another unpredictable jumble of styles (synth-dance, rock, Prince-like funk, etc.), songwriters, producers (mainly Hendryx, Dan Hartman and the System) and guest musicians. Hendryx's irrepressible full-throttle approach makes this an invigorating blast, a tough-minded party record about sex and sexual politics.

After four studio free-for-alls, Hendryx finally grabbed the reins of creative responsibility on SkinDiver, making a concerted effort to focus her music in one direction for a change. Co-producing with Private Music boss (and Tangerine Dream-er) Peter Baumann, Hendryx wrote the material, played synthesizer and did all the drum programs. Following the Gabrielesque path introduced on Female Trouble, the songs on this restrained, atmospheric and frequently alluring album float along as if in a dream state; dispensing with the kinetic power and diversity of Hendryx's previous LPs, the masterful SkinDiver reveals substantially more personal artistry. [i]

JOE HENRY

Talk of Heaven (Profile) 1986

Murder of Crows (Coyote-A&M) 1989 •

Shuffletown (Coyote-A&M) 1990 ◊

While there has been substantial support for modern folk music at the grass-roots level, singer/songwriters who aren't folkies and don't play any identifiable brand of rock or pop are still something of an anomaly in the post-punk world. Produced by Anton Fier and backed by a bunch of old-time rock stars (ex-Rolling Stone Mick Taylor, ex-Allman Brother Chuck Leavell), singer/guitarist Henry makes an intelligent but characterless showing on Murder of Crows, a record whose solid material and styleless performances are as unsailable as they are unmemorable.

Produced by T-Bone Burnett and recorded live-to-two-track in a brief studio session with more sympathetic players, the acoustic Shuffletown is immeasurably better, a poetic statement whose evocative power and casual instrumental excellence recalls prime Van Morrison. Henry proves himself here to be a real singer, filling his plain voice with confident power and conveying the haunted power of someone who truly feels his lyrics. [i]

HENRY COW

Legend (Virgin) 1973 (Red) 1979 [CD] (East Side Digital) 1991 •

Unrest (nr/Virgin) 1974 (Red) 1974 [CD] (East Side Digital) 1991 •

Concerts (nr/Caroline) 1976

Western Culture (nr/Broadcast) 1979 (nr/Recommended) 1980 •

SLAPP HAPPY/HENRY COW

Desperate Straights (nr/Virgin) 1975 (nr/Recommended) 1982

In Praise of Learning (nr/Virgin) 1975 (Red) 1979 [CD] (East Side Digital) 1991 •

ART BEARS

Hopes and Fears (Random Radar) 1978

Winter Songs (Ralph) 1979

The World as It Is Today (nr/Re) 1981

Winter Songs/The World as It Is Today [CD] (nr/Recommended) 1987 •

FRED FRITH/CHRIS CUTLER

Live in Prague and Washington (nr/Re) 1983

Live in Moscow, Prague and Washington [CD] (nr/Recommended) 1990 •

NEWS FROM BABEL

Sirens and Silences/Work Resumed on the Tower (nr/Re) 1984 •

Letters Home (nr/Re) 1986 •

DAGMAR KRAUSE

Supply & Demand (Hannibal) 1986 •

Tank Battles (nr/Antilles New Directions) 1988 •

Lumpy Gravy-era Zappa, free jazz, early King Crimson, serial music—Henry Cow (the group's name is a truncation of American composer Henry Cowell) brought all of these influences to bear on its early music. Coming together at Cambridge University, these talented British composers/multi-instrumentalists (foremost among them guitarist/violinist Fred Frith, who has since become a new music capro in New York, and drummer/noisemaker Chris Cutler, who has a sound like no other percussionist in rock) could seem at times less a rock band than a contemporary chamber ensemble.

The group's first LP, known as Legend in the UK and just Henry Cow in the States, is an admirable if somewhat impersonal and occasionally thin statement of purpose. Skillfully arranged and very well played, it nevertheless at times displays an awkward rigidity when it means to be bitingly austere. Humor, such as it is, shows up only in the titles ("Teenbeat" and "Nirvana for Mice"). And Geoff Leigh's anemic sax playing—when he tries to really "blow," you feel like calling an ambulance—gives the record an overly attenuated feel. (The ESD CD of Legend has two extra tracks.)

The first side of Unrest, where Leigh is replaced by bassoon/oboe player Lindsay Cooper, is a substantial improvement, and contains some of the most full-bodied music Cow ever put on record. Cooper's sound steers the group away from the American jazz influence and grounds it more solidly in European art music, where a better time is had by all. The band's unique wit and invention are on full display here, from the audacious Yardbirds deconstruction ("Bittern Storm Over Ulm") to the somber starkness of "Ruins." Side Two presents the band's first (unfortunate) foray into the realm of musique concrète and, while not entirely worthless, isn't nearly as compelling as the three superior compositions that comprise Side One. (The ESD CD adds two bonus outtakes from the same sessions.)

While Henry Cow really had nothing in common with Slapp Happy (other than an utter lack of commercial recognition and some related hipness in certain circles), the two bands—both then signed to Virgin—joined forces. Dialectical Marxists that they were, the Cow people figured that a merger with their dissimilar labelmates would create a unique synthesis. (Or so they told the music press at the time—insiders suggest that the band really just wanted to poach vocalist Dagmar Krause). The union's first fruit, the predominantly Happy Desperate Straights, is a hit-and-miss affair that boasts some really stunning high points, including the brooding "Bad Alchemy" (the first collaboration between Slapp Happy guitarist Peter Blegvad and then-Cow bassist John Greaves; their subsequent work together has also been outstanding).

Cow dominated In Praise of Learning, which initially seems like another great A-side/lousy B-side deal, but proves far more problematic than that. The first side contains just two cuts: Anthony Moore/Peter Blegvad's "War," which melds music worthy of Kurt Weill to some witty, bitter Blegvad mythologizing, and Cow keyboardist Tim Hodgkinson's "Living in the Heart of the Beast," a musical magnificence nearly sunk by its lyrics. It's not that the political analysis is way off base, but concepts this cerebral defy the anthemic spirit the band so clearly wants to evoke. Nice try, but basically a longwinded preach to the most likely converted. The otherwise excellent "Beautiful as the Moon—Terrible as an Army with Banners" (sandwiched between two dull "free" pieces) suffers from pretty much the same problem. (The ESD CD has an added track.)

That much-vaunted Marxist synthesis failed to materialize; instead, the tensions among the various players broke up Slapp Happy, and Henry Cow ended up with Krause after all. This Cow lineup would not endure, but survived long enough to perform the gigs that make up the Concerts double LP. Side One is a beautifully rendered song cycle, framed by "Beautiful as the Moon" and featuring a couple of previously unrecorded numbers; Side Two features Robert Wyatt dueting with Krause on "Bad Alchemy" and his own "Little Red Riding Hood Hits the Road," as well as an unessential rendition of Unrest's "Ruins"; the second disc contains group improvs of varying success. This was effectively the last of Henry Cow; while the band regrouped in 1978 (sans Dagmar) to record the superb Western Culture—its most chamber-like effort ever, comprising two side-long instrumental compositions by Cooper and Hodgkinson—the band's days as a performing unit were through.

Cutler, Frith and Krause continued to record as the Art Bears. More song-based than Henry Cow ever was, the Art Bears melded Cow's leftist politics with a personal sense of despair that deepened over the span of three albums—pretty impressive considering that Hopes and Fears' first song is Brecht/Eisler's "On Suicide." All three records are bracing, involving, original works; Frith's composing is trenchant in any number of song idioms, and lyricist Cutler is equally effective at oblique poeticizing (many of Winter Songs' lyrics are allego-ries based on friezes in the Amiens Cathedral) and direct observation (The World as It Is Today is a plainspoken depiction of the nightmare of capitalism). The instrumentation and production—often involving backwards and off-speed recording, both Frith and Cutler intent on exploiting the possibilities of the studio as a compositional tool—are first rate.

When Frith (by this point residing in New York) decided to concentrate on his Stateside musical activities, Cutler and Krause enlisted two instrumentalists—Lindsay Cooper (who also took over composing chores) and harpist/accordionist Zeena Parkins—to form News from Babel. Even more introspective than the Art Bears, News from Babel's songs tackled modern alienation from a dour, skewed angle but occasionally let in a glimmer of hope; witness Work Resumed on the Tower's "Anno Mirabilis." Robert Wyatt's vocals dominate the band's second album, Letters Home. Both records are worthy efforts, but since Cooper isn't as much of a sonic adventurer as Frith, they lack the edgy daring of the Art Bears' best.

In the mid-to-late '80s, Krause recorded albums of songs by two composers some believe she was born to sing—Brecht/Weill (Supply & Demand) and Hanns Eisler (Tank Battles). Hodgkinson and Cooper have released solo LPs (much of the latter's work has been in film soundtracks), and Cooper and Cutler spent time in David Thomas' band. The seemingly inexhaustible Cutler has also been running the exemplary, adventurous Recommended label (which put out a nifty, noisy set of Frith/Cutler improvs in 1983, later reissuing it on CD with a lengthy 1989 performance recorded in the Soviet Union) since the late '70s; he wound up in Pere Ubu when that band relaunched itself in 1987. [gk]

See also Peter Blegvad, Fred Frith, John Greaves, Material, Anthony More, Skeleton Crew, David Thomas.

HERRERA & THE HANDOUTS

See Cheepskates.

HE SAID

See Dome.

HETCH HETCHY

See Oh-OK.

BOO HEWERDINE AND DARDEN SMITH

See Bible.

HEX

Hex (First Warning) 1989 (First Warning-Rykodisc) 1990 •

Vast Halos (First Warning-Rykodisc) 1990 •

JACK FROST

Jack Frost (Arista) 1991 •

Evidently unable to sate his creative impulses with the Church and his solo career, the multi-talented Steve Kilbey formed a side group with Donnette Thayer, late of Game Theory. On Hex, he uses modest portions of guitar, keyboards and percussion to sketch out light, ambient backing for her airy vocal excursions. Poised dangerously close to the brink of arty/poetic vagueness, the duo manages to stay on terra firma for most of the record, holding track lengths to sustainable limits and structuring material so that it flows rather than drifts.

Recorded with a drummer, Vast Halos takes an entirely different approach: full-bodied arrangements of clear-cut songs with layers of Thayer's multi-tracked harmonies. More accessible but less distinctive than the first album, Vast Halos resembles a toned-down Church record with a different singer as well as a suave (post-paisley?) successor to California flower-pop.

With one side group underway, Kilbey launched another, with Grant McLennan, late of the Go-Betweens. Joined by a drummer and string and horn players, the two share vocals, guitar and bass (overachiever Kilbey also plays keyboards and drums) on Jack Frost, a fine collection of collaborative originals that don't so much add their individual styles as cross them in various ways, from acoustic duo folk ("Civil War Lament," "Thought That I Was Over You") to suave and moody electro-pop ("Threshold") to noise-flecked rock ("Every Hour God Sends") to eerie atmospherics ("Number Eleven"). The CD adds a song. [1]

See also Church, Game Theory, Go-Betweens.

RICHARD X. HEYMAN

Actual Size EP (N.R. World) 1986

Living Room!! (N.R. World) 1988 (Cypress) 1990 •

Hey Man! (Sire-Warner Bros.) 1991 ♠

With some minor assistance, multi-talented New York power-popper Heyman does it all—vocals, guitars, keyboards, drums, etc.—on his six-song EP and sparkling debut album (an impressive 8-track homebrew job which was remixed and slightly resequenced for reissue with a new cover). Despite the closeted solo environment, Heyman's music—a smoothly accomplished and undated collection of tuneful styles—is warmly realized in well-written songs filled with subtlety (like the typewriter on "Local Paper") rather than eccentricity. [1]

NICK HEYWARD

See Haircut One Hundred.

JOHN HIATT

Hangin' Around the Observatory (Epic) 1974 •

Overcoats (Epic) 1975

Slug Line (MCA) 1979

Two Bit Monsters (MCA) 1980

All of a Sudden (Geffen) 1982

Riding with the King (Geffen) 1983 + 1989

Warming Up to the Ice Age (Geffen) 1985 + 1989

Bring the Family (A&M) 1987 •

Slow Turning (A&M) 1988 •

Y'All Caught? The Ones That Got Away 1979–1985 (Geffen) 1989 •

Stolen Moments (A&M) 1990 •

After recording an unnoticed pair of promising but stylistically confused Nashville country-soul-rock-gospel-singer-songwriter albums—Hangin' Around the Observatory (really good) and Overcoats (a bit bland), which tip a hat to everyone from Bob Dylan to Al Green, Leon Russell to Billy Joel—Indiana's John Hiatt exploded onto the new wave scene in 1979, a fiercely original soul-inflected rock character likened to Elvis Costello, Graham Parker and Joe Jackson, but wholly his own man. Despite their underwhelming commercial success, all of his albums testify to an exceptional talent, both as a much-covered songwriter and as an intense, emotional performer.

Slug Line is Hiatt's rawest and most powerful LP, with appropriately rudimentary production highlighting dynamic playing on a full set of angry songs. Drawing with genuine conviction on both reggae and fiery R&B styles, Hiatt invests "Madonna Road," "You're My Love Interest," "The Negroes Were Dancing" and other tracks with bitterness, insightful intelligence and occasional tenderness, making it a stunning work by an exciting artist.

Two Bit Monsters essentially repeats Slug Line's style, but with less bite. Several tunes ("Back to Normal," "Good Girl, Bad World," "String Pull Job") are comparably impressive, but the album is less focused and nearly haphazard. Hiatt's venom sears through, but it's not his best work.

Tony Visconti produced All of a Sudden, sympathetically if incongruously displaying the songs in a complex, highly arranged setting that works to good advantage most of the time. Amid a nod to rockabilly ("Doll Hospital") and a dose of Motown ("Getting Excited"), excellent songs like "Something Happens" and "I Look for Love" get filtered once through Hiatt's expanding musical sensibilities and then through Visconti's synth-rocking Bowieness, making it a strange collision of seemingly irreconcilable styles.

Hiatt's bumpy career subsequently brought him into contact with Nick Lowe and Lowe's manager, Jake Riviera. The former produced and led the backing band on one side of Riding with the King; the latter loaned an eye-popping motorcycle for the front cover photo. The record's other side was produced by Scott Matthews and Ron Nagle; Matthews and Hiatt are the only musicians on those tracks. Although it may be down to the allotment of material, Lowe comes up the loser; on his side, Hiatt affects a languid swamp sound that doesn't convey much excitement. He comes alive only for such Matthews/Nagle-produced tracks as "Death by Misadventure," "Say It with Flowers" and "I Don't Even Try," prime songs given modest but appealing treatment.

Veteran mush-rock producer Norbert Putnam got the nod for Warming Up to the Ice Age. On the first track, "The Usual," he smothers Hiatt in raucous heavy metal guitars and arena-scale drums; fortunately, that's not the only sound on this weird record, which also contains a great soul duet with Elvis Costello ("Living a Little, Laughing a Little"), an emotion-laden ballad ("When We Ran") and other typically on-the-mark slices of Hiatt's cynical viewpoint ("She Said the Same Things to Me," "Number One Honest Game"). The mix is consistently too rock-oriented—these aren't dance tracks, for crying out loud!—but Hiatt's subtle vocals keep things in balance. (Footnote: "The Usual" resurfaced a few years later, sung by Bob Dylan and rocker Fiona in the movie Hearts of Fire.)

Hiatt's career was going nowhere fast and his personal life was no picnic, either. Luckily, for his next outing (and label), Hiatt hit on a far more rewarding format. Alone in an LA studio for four days with just Lowe, guitarist Ry Cooder (with whom Hiatt has often played), veteran session drummer Jim Keltner and a hands-off producer, he cut an extraordinary album of uncommon simplicity and candor. Ruggedly real and honest in extremis, Bring the Family has bottomless emotional depth and sonic spaces the size of sinkholes. The well-played music only serves to focus attention on that gritty, passionate voice, serving up new melodies and words reflecting the maturation and authority Hiatt's hard travelling has earned him.

An attempt to recapture that magic with the same four collaborators ran aground over business deals, and the album was instead recorded with David Lindley, Dave Mattacks and John Doe. Upon completion, however, that record was scrapped and the process recommenced with producer Glyn Johns and Hiatt's road band, the Goners, plus some guests. The rustic Slow Turning has some of Family's sonic attributes (if not its exciting immediacy), with the bonus of Hiatt's increasingly confident and optimistic outlook. The parental warmth of "Georgia Rae" and "Slow Turning" offsets the lonely uncertainty of the gospellish "Is Anybody There?" and the stormy love in "Feels Like Rain," while the joyous liberation of "Drive South" is tempered by the suicidal mundanity of "Ride Along." Utterly likable but lacking emotional starch, Slow Turning is an uneven ride that could use more gas and colorful scenery.

Again produced by Johns, Stolen Moments electrifies Hiatt in more ways than one. Tastefully fired-up arrangements match Hiatt's exuberance, the perfect complement to his articulate songs' deepening insights about such familiar topics as faith, family and self-awareness. Finally accepting peace and happiness as a wonderful gift, Hiatt puts on a powerfully melodic variety show here, sending pop songs ("Child of the Wild Blue Yonder," "Real Fine Love") soaring, gently wah-wahing life into a romantic Philly soul tune ("Bring Back Your Love to Me"), rocking out (the riff in "The Rest of the Dream" is lifted from AC/DC's "You Shook Me All Night Long") and, surprisingly, paying repeated homage to Bob Dylan. Rewriting "Every Grain of Sand" in the haunting "Through Your Hands" and echoing "Girl from the North Country" in the somber "Thirty Years of Tears," Hiatt makes fine and fair use of a few pages from the Dylan's songbook.

Released four years after his departure from Geffen Records, Y'All Caught reviews Hiatt's work on that label as well as his earlier two-album MCA career. A concise refresher course for those arriving late in the story, Y'All Caught is organized stylistically in a partially successful bid to downplay the lurching album-to-album inconsistency. [i]

SARA HICKMAN

Equal Scary People (Four Dots) 1989 (Elektra) 1989 •
Shortstop (Elektra) 1990 •

An endless stream of competent singer/songwriters have emerged in the acoustic-guitar backwash of Suzanne Vega and Tracy Chapman, but very few have the versatile artistry of Sara Hickman. This North Carolina-born Texan has a marvelous voice—at once sweet and sexy—that can gently croon a folk lullaby and hold its own in a polite rock'n'roll arrangement. With winning songs that are emotionally resonant and a little loopy, Equal Scary People (initially issued by a Texas indie) is an album that easily stands out in a soundalike crowd. Cool enough to make peace with James Brown in a solemn, bluesy upended version of "This Is a Man's World" and unselfconscious enough to write a soppy "Song for My Father," Hickman takes some chances on her first LP and comes through with the warm intimacy of an old friend.

David Kershenbaum's overzealous adult-contemporary production on Shortstop seems designed to cast Hickman as a young Joni Mitchell. (Denny Fongheiser's big-beat drumming and Larry Klein's fretless bass clichés are particularly annoying.) Hickman's willing participation, especially on the jazzy "I Couldn't Help Myself," in this sleek commercial effort is disappointing in light of her first album's easygoing openness, but she rises to the challenge with exquisite vocal control and clever, inventive songs on such diverse topics as Salvador Dali, American hostages, sisterly love and the foibles of male sexuality. [i]

HICKOIDS

We're in It for the Corn (Toxic Shock) 1987 + 1988

Hard Corn EP (Toxic Shock) 1988

Waltz a Crossdress Texas (Toxic Shock) 1989

Cure the Butthole Surfers' hallucinatory madness but not their Texas junk-culture mentality or careening noise. Add country-western rhythms and some revved-up guitar licks, and that pretty much describes Austin's zealous Hickoids, America's only hard-corn (white thrash?) band. Whether they're adding lyrics to a familiar TV theme ("Williamanza") or delivering a cruel ode to one-armed farmers ("O.A.F. Anthem"), the band's colorful guitar work, four-on-the-floor punk overdrive and depraved sense of humor ("Animal Husbandry" mates man and cow) make We're in It for the Corn a raucous and funny souvenir of the Lone Star state. (The cassette adds four bonus cuts.)

Following the 7-inch Hard Corn EP (two originals and two freewheeling covers: "Corn Foo Fighting" and Jackson Browne's "Take It Easy"), the Hickoids ease up on the punk for more of a Tex-Mex/country flavor on the relatively slick second album, Waltz a Crossdress Texas. Using steel guitar, piano, trumpet and (yes!) flugelhorn, well-played jokes about transvestites, beer, sex and trucks are loaded with local color and the Hickoids' winningly sociopathic outlook. [i]

HIGH

Somewhere Soon (London) 1990 ♪

Formed by ex-Stone Roses guitarist Andy Couzens and drummer Chris Goodwin (both ex-Flag of Convenience), this Manchester-area quartet plays effortlessly appealing modern atmos-pop (y'know—ringing guitars, acoustic piano, breathy vocals and a little bit of cello when it fits the mood) of no great consequence. Signed after one gig, the High don't do anything wrong on their relaxed and pleasant album, but that's about the strongest praise they deserve. [i]

See also Flag of Convenience.

KENNE HIGHLAND CLAN

See Gizmos.

HOLGER HILLER

A Bunch of Foulness in the Pit (nr/Cherry Red) 1984

Hyperprism (Jap. Wave) 1985

Oben im Eck (nr/Mute) 1986 •

Virtually the only English on Hiller's first album (released originally by the German Ata Tak label) is the translated title; otherwise, you're on your linguistic own. Hardly the horrorshow the billing might have you imagine, the former Palais Schaumburg member conveys bemusement and tension rather than squalor or desperation, using overlaid (and not always musically related) instrumental lines (mostly keyboards and, if my dictionary guessed correctly, percussion), detached vocals, plus found sounds and assorted blips and squeaks. While the effect is not exactly pleasant—although a few songs, notably “Jonny (du Lump),” are—it is riveting, and Hiller is masterly at aurally painting a scene in living color.

Hiller's collaborators on Oben im Eck, a revised version of Hyperprism (retitled for a track which appears on it in two versions), include keyboardist Izumi Kobayashi and vocalist Kaori Kano, as well as Billy Mackenzie (Associates). Sampling keyboards have opened new creative worlds for sonic experimentalists like Hiller, allowing him to electronically manipulate sounds that were not so long ago uncontrollable and available only on tape. Although parts of the LP have an offbeat Japanese flavor, sections that are noisy or child-like take a much more neo-European approach, suggesting such sonic adventurers as Foetus or Renaldo and the Loaf. Ostensibly a set of songs, the album's rambling and colorful collections of sounds have little cohesion; even the multilingual lyrics (one song's written by Tom Verlaine) add scant structure to this dadaist picnic. [i]

HILT

See Skinny Puppy.

PETER HIMMELMAN

This Father's Day (Orange) 1986 (Island) 1986

Gematría (Island) 1987 •

Synesthesia (Island) 1989 •

From Strength to Strength (Epic) 1991 •

SUSSMAN LAWRENCE

Hail to the Modern Herol (Bigger Than Life) 1980

(Regency) 1980

Pop City (Orange) 1984

Minneapolis quintet Sussman Lawrence works very hard to sound like early Elvis Costello on their first outing, although singer/guitarist Peter Himmelman's vocals tend to favor Phil Lynott more. The songs, which are clearly derivative of Costello and Joe Jackson, are still sharp enough to be entertaining. Absurdist pop culture lyrics add some originality; smart playing and solid production also give this dubious venture its limited validity.

Pop City—a double-album with 21 songs in a number of styles—is far less imitative and proves this likable band to be highly skilled and creative, smoothly skipping across genres (often several times per song) to play everything—jazz-R&B-rock-pop—with abundant good spirits and a commitment to nothing but making simply enjoyable music. (Only reservation: some of the lyrics are clumsy and/or trite.)

Sussman Lawrence vanished when Himmelman opted to continue his career under his own name—remarkably, the other four band members remained as his sidemen. This Father's Day, a doleful and sensitive singer/songwriter record (with some polite rock arrangements) dedicated to Himmelman's late father, was originally released on the band's label. After a video (for “Eleventh Confession”) became an MTV hit, Island reissued it. Free of the imitative amateurism of early efforts, Himmelman's love, passion and intelligence come to the fore in a strong display of craft and talent.

Gematría, recorded in just three days, is an uplifting explosion of joyful ensemble playing that shows how tight and sympathetic these guys are. Himmelman's lower-case lyrics are fairly meaningless (and worse, pretentious in spots) but his music has spirit, power and clarity that far outweigh such concerns.

Himmelman's religious orthodoxy doesn't intrude on Synesthesia, but a growing resemblance to Billy Joel (plus frequently colorless songwriting and production) is more than enough to curdle the album. Between dull electric raveups and oh-so-sensitive semi-acoustic efforts, only such tastefully full-bodied ensemble efforts as “A Million Sides” and “Surrender” have the right type and amount of starch to endow the songs with melodic power. (The CD and cassette have three bonus tracks.) [i]

HINDU LOVE GODS

See R.E.M.

HIS NAME IS ALIVE

Livonia (4AD) 1990 •

Having successfully tested its American scouting skills on Boston (home of Throwing Muses and the Pixies), London's 4AD label ventured to Michigan and signed this curious studio creation, whose album is named for its hometown. Crystal-voiced singers Karin Oliver and Angie Carozzo deliver the lyrics over Warren Defever's simple and semi-formed constructs of guitar, bass and noises that owe debts to Fripp/Eno drones and anyone that ever fooled around with a reel-to-reel tape deck. Somewhere between Hugo Largo's stately restraint and rankly amateurish diddlings (frequently a mix of the two, occasionally just the latter), Livonia is an artistic mountain that didn't need climbing. The women's voices are far more attractive than anything in Defever's small bag of tricks, but neither side of this equation would stand on its own. If the two pieces don't really go together in any organic way, each at least offers the other an uncommon way to make an impression. Making this whole thing seem just a bit weirder, Defever is a member of Elvis Hitler's raunchy rock band, the drummer of which guests here. [i]

See also Elvis Hitler.

ROBYN HITCHCOCK

Black Snake Diamond Rôle (nr/Armageddon) 1981

(Glass Fish-Relativity) 1986 •

Groovy Decay (nr/Albion) 1982 •

I Often Dream of Trains (nr/Midnight Music) 1984 (Glass Fish-Relativity) 1986 •

Exploding in Silence EP (Relativity) 1986

Groovy Decoy (Glass Fish-Relativity) 1986 •

Invisible Hitchcock (Glass Fish-Relativity) 1986 •

Eye (Twin/Tone) 1990 •

ROBYN HITCHCOCK AND THE EGYPTIANS

Fegmania! (Slash) 1985 •

Gotta Let This Hen Out! (Relativity) 1985 •

Element of Light (Glass Fish-Relativity) 1986 •

Globe of Frogs (A&M) 1988 •

Queen Elvis (A&M) 1989 •

Robyn Hitchcock's entire body of work—both as leader of the Soft Boys and as a solo performer—remains one of the great undiscovered treasures of modern pop music. Psychedelic pop of the '60s provides the touchstone for his melodic, emotional compositions, but Hitchcock blends his own ideas with those of John Lennon, Syd Barrett, Captain Beefheart, the Doors and Byrds to create music that advances the tradition rather than merely recapitulating it.

Black Snake Diamond Rôle, his first solo salvo, opens with two jaunty music-hall ditties but quickly descends to Hitchcock's typical deranged concerns. He offers a sardonic knock at authority in "Do Policemen Sing?" (which features a chorus like a frenzied hail of blows) and a melodic, cracked-crystal ballad, "Acid Bird," whose mood and production could stand proud next to "Eight Miles High." Alternate takes on emotion—"Meat" (all brash) and "Love" (all heart)—finish off each side.

Groovy Decay, produced by Steve Hillage, has a smoother sound that somewhat undermines the dark emotion and irony that are Hitchcock's greatest strengths. Still, great songs gleam through the mix. "Fifty Two Stations" stunningly captures the alternation of rage, resignation and hope that follows the failure of love, while "St. Petersburg" views only the black side. "Grooving on an Inner Plane" blends an arch rap-styled vocal into a fluid groove (Sara Lee is the album's bassist) with stirring results. In a surprising move four years later, Hitchcock did it his way by putting out the revisionist Groovy Decoy. With almost an identical set of songs, the entirely reordered Decoy uses only four of Decay's recordings, substituting simple but effective demos produced (and played on) by onetime Soft Boys bassist Matthew Seligman for the rest. The results are a bit rudimentary next to the original release, but Hitchcock fans will want to hear both.

After nearly two years of self-imposed retirement, Hitchcock returned in 1984 with a surprising, mostly acoustic album, I Often Dream of Trains. Performing nearly all the instruments and vocals himself, he echoed the solo work of his models—Barrett in the amiably slapdash production and Lennon on an aching ballad, "Flavour of Night." The album features Hitchcock's usual balance of bitterness and weirdness in unusual settings, rounded off with piano nocturnes at the start and finish. Two bizarre a cappella close-harmony essays—"Uncorrected Personality Traits" (about difficult children when they grow up) and "Furry Green Atom Bowl" (about life's biological processes)—make this one of the stranger outings in a career dedicated to strangeness.

Fegmania!, which features several old Soft Boy cronies in a new band, the Egyptians, shows Hitchcock polishing the best aspects of his craft to a new sheen, achieving a mature merger of lyric with melody (particularly on the morbidly catchy "My Wife & My Dead Wife" and the beautiful emotional study, "Glass") which sacrifices none of the urgency that brings his best songs to life. He has also continued to hone his sound, adding instruments to create a rich, ringing production that highlights his superb guitar textures and Andy Metcalfe's moody bass lines amid a variety of settings.

Gotta Let This Hen Out! is an essential live album recorded April '85 at London's Marquee. Sampling all of his prior albums for items like "Brenda's Iron Sledge," "Heaven," "My Wife and My Dead Wife," and tossing in the acerbic "Listening to the Higsons" (a non-LP single that contains the live album's title, borrowed from a Higsons song), Hitchcock and the three Egyptians—Metcalfe, Morris Windsor and Roger Jackson—do a fine job of putting the songs across in crisp, energetic fashion. A great introduction for neophytes and a treat for fans. (Exploding in Silence, available on picture disc, contains six live cuts, only half of them from the album.)

Except for a creeping trace of self-conscious weirdness-for-its-own-sake in the lyrics, the exceptionally melodic Element of Light is another terrific addition to Hitchcock's oeuvre. The descending drama of "If You Were a Priest," the arcing delicacy of "Winchester" and "Airscape," as well as the moody restraint of "Raymond Chandler Evening" put the well-rehearsed Egyptians (especially Metcalfe on fretless bass) to fine use, while still leaving Hitchcock's plain but appealing voice a clear field in which to operate. Most of the record is unmistakably Hitchcock, although it does include two eerie Lennon re-creations: "Somewhere Apart" and "Ted, Woody and Junior."

Recycling a Soft Boys LP title, Invisible Hitchcock is a compilation of assorted outtakes dating from 1981-'85. A few songs (like "Grooving on an Inner Plane") had previously surfaced in different versions, but most are heard here for the first time. The simple recording quality and mostly non-electric performances with various assortments of sidemen are entirely adequate, if not strictly consistent. Invisible may not be crucial but it is certainly illuminating, and a handful of rough gems ("All I Wanna Do Is Fall in Love," "Trash," "Give Me a Spanner, Ralph," "I Got a Message for You") make it a worthwhile purchase.

Thanks to the power of college radio and the music press, Hitchcock's growing popularity brought him a contract with A&M, which released his American major-label debut. Unfortunately, Hitchcock's ob-scurely lucid liner notes on Globe of Frogs are more fascinating than the album, which neglects tuneful song-writing in favor of big beat exercises that would mask insubstantial content with busy production. "Flesh Number One (Beatle Dennis)" and "Chinese Bones"—beautiful pop confections featuring R.E.M. guitarist Pete Buck—keep things from sinking, but "Balloon Man" and the title track, while both likably silly, underscore Hitchcock's annoying tendency to be self-consciously absurdist.

Queen Elvis is the nadir of Hitchcock's by now substantial body of work. The song structures are overly familiar, the weirdness seems forced and, worst of all, the emotions don't seem real. He seems to have tapped out the veins he'd mined so rewardingly for more than a decade.

Eye is Hitchcock's finest release since the first explosion of his post-Soft Boys career. Like I Often Dream of Trains, this is a predominantly acoustic solo effort on which he casts off the influence of bandmates and producers to create a work of astonishing delicacy, beauty, honesty and power. As if to underscore the improvement, "Queen Elvis" is easily superior to anything on the LP with which it shares only a title. "Linctus House" is a gorgeous meditation on flagging love with the achingly drawn-out chorus "I don't care anymore." "Executioner" teases the entrails of another failed romance ("I know how Judas felt/But he got paid"). But the record opens with the jaunty proclamation "I'm in love with a beautiful girl," so maybe things aren't so bad after all. In any case, Eye finds Hitchcock still playing complex guitar figures, bending song structures and laying bare his emotions as no one has since Barrett recorded his dementia-in-progress. [mp/i]

See also Soft Boys.

ELVIS HITLER

Disgraceland (Wanghead) 1987 (Restless) 1988 •
Hellbilly (Restless) 1989 •

As any good marketing executive will tell you, one key to successfully introducing a new product is an effectively descriptive name. So when a young singer/guitarist decides to call himself Elvis Hitler, he'd better not be counting on a career in new age harpsichord music, knowwhutmean? Fortunately, this fiery Michigan 'billyrocker can handle the handle, as he and three rugged sidemen (one of whom moonlights as His Name Is Alive) roar through familiar-sounding originals that cross the Cramps, Mojo Nixon and the Stray Cats. Disgraceland has such convincingly obvious anthems to delinquency as "Hot Rod to Hell" and "Live Fast, Die Young" as well as the dubiously topical "Rocking Over Russia" and a few numbers about another feller named Elvis. But the album's ingenious highlight is "Green Haze (Pt. I & II)," a demento hybrid in which EH sings the Green Acres theme over "Purple Haze."

Hellbilly is louder and harder, a less stylized but still exciting dish of overamped guitars, raw vocals and drummer Damian Lang's swampy backbeat. Besides covering "Ballad of the Green Berets" and borrowing "(Ghost) Riders in the Sky" (for "Showdown"), little Elvis pokes fun at glam-rockers ("Hang 'Em High"), car-nuts ("Gear Jammin' Hero" and "Crush, Kill, Destroy"), saving his least judgmental sentiments for vampires and other horror-movie monsters. [i]

See also His Name Is Alive.

HITMEN

Aim for the Feet (Columbia) 1980
Torn Together (Columbia) 1981

London's Hitmen—not the unrelated Australian group, a contemporaneous outgrowth of Radio Birdman—debuted with a DIY debut single ("She's All Mine" b/w "Slay Me with Your 45") of razor-sharp rhythm'n'pop which meshed terse but tasty guitar and keyboards over snappy bass and drums, topped by Ben Watkins' Graham Parker-cum-David Bowie vocals. Yet on Aim for the Feet, re-recorded versions of those songs fall flat; it takes repeated listenings to discover that they—along with a passel of other tunes as good and better—have fallen victim to colorless, punchless production.

With producer Rhett Davies at the helm on Torn Together, the quartet fares far better, crafting a succession of cleverly arranged and smartly played hooks that grow more impressive (not to mention catchier) with each hearing. The format incorporates more modern, Ultravoxian elements while avoiding the inherent pitfalls—until Side Two, that is, which is alternately arty and bathetic instead of hewing to the earlier, earthier approach.

Ex-Hitmen guitarist Pete Glenister later turned up recording and touring with Bojangles, Terence Trent D'Arby's band. [jg]

See also Youth & Ben Watkins.

SUSANNA HOFFS

See Bangles.

MYRA HOLDER

Four Mile Road (Coyote) 1989 •

One of the few expatriates of the late-'70s Winston-Salem, North Carolina pop scene who never played in or produced the dB's or Let's Active, New York singer/guitarist Myra Holder got help from some of her old crowd on this Chris Stamey-produced solo debut. (Faye Hunter, Mitch Easter and brother Gene Holder all put in brief appearances.) Other than one spunky track recorded in 1981, Four Mile Road offers nicely sung adult pop and rock—folky enough in spots to resemble 10,000 Maniacs a bit—that avoids obvious stylization in favor of unadorned purity and easy allure. Besides such creditable originals as "Rosa" and "Billy," Holder includes reverent covers of Roy Orbison ("It's Over") and Alex Chilton ("Blue Moon"). [i]

HOLIDAY

See Oh-OK.

JOOLS HOLLAND

Jools Holland and His Millionaires (IRS) 1981
Jools Holland Meets Rock'a'Boogie Billy (IRS) 1984
World of His Own (IRS) 1990 •

This flamboyant pianist—a cigar-chomping hustler able to energize even the most blasé audience—provided much of the zest on Squeeze's first three albums. For his solo debut, Jools adopted a less contemporary stance, playing old-fashioned bar-room romps with energy and panache. Produced by Glyn Johns, the record contains one classic oldie ("Bumble Boogie") and rollicking originals, some co-written with Chris Difford.

Leaving his Millionaires behind, Rock'a'Boogie Billy reunites Holland with once-and-future Squeeze drummer Gilson Lavis; otherwise, the self-produced album was recorded solo "at the back room of Holland's home (which accounts for the authentic sound)." The eight tracks, including four Difford collaborations and the old "Flip, Flop & Fly," offer more rustic uptempo friskiness soaked with American barrelhouse and ragtime atmosphere—imagine a young Jerry Lee Lewis in prime condition with no religious hangups. Turn it up and hoist a few!

When Squeeze reformed in 1985, Holland was back in the piano seat, and stayed through the group's '89 tour documented on A Round and a Bout. With instrumental assists from his ex-bandmates and numerous other artisans, World of His Own provides an impressive sampling of Holland's various talents. There's Squeezy synth-pop, plenty of boogie-woogie, some horn-fed R&B, even a New Orleans-cum-ska version of the Lee Dorsey-Allen Toussaint classic "Holy Cow." To top it off, Holland throws in a bizarre but captivating modern instrumental number featuring keyboards, pedal steel and harp (the stringed kind). Really wild, Jools! Unlike Holland's past albums, which always had something of a novelty feel, World of His Own is serious fun, and by far his best solo record yet. [i/ds]

See also Squeeze.

HOLLY AND THE ITALIANS

The Right to Be Italian (Virgin-Epic) 1981

HOLLY BETH VINCENT

Holly and the Italians (Virgin-Epic) 1982

Chicago-born singer/guitarist Holly B. Vincent formed her band in Los Angeles, but it took a 1979 move to England to secure a recording deal. An early single released there ("Tell That Girl to Shut Up") established her tough pop-rock style and briefly captured the full attention of the British press and public. The band's sole album was hindered by numerous problems (like firing the producer halfway through and starting from scratch with another, losing the drummer in midstream and having to find a replacement) and wasn't finished until over a year later, but it was well worth the wait. Richard Gottehrer's production fits the melodic rock songs perfectly, melding the hybrid LA/London sound—with glimpses of the Ramones, Blondie and Cheap Trick—into a powerful and original creation. The songs (mostly Vincent's) concern troubled romance, successful romance, teenage rebellion and kitsch culture; her convincing delivery gives them import, and the catchy phrases and solid rock foundation make it a masterful record by an important young talent.

The Right to Be Italian wasn't a commercial success and Holly broke up the band, opting instead for a solo career. Her stunning LP, produced by Mike Thorne, has a misleading title and bears little resemblance to its predecessor. Holly and the Italians plays up her voice and songs, providing ample room for far-reaching emotional expression; the striking, atmospheric music is based on violin and keyboards as much as guitar. (The American release has one different cut and much better sequencing.) Although Vincent took some flak for recording a totally overhauled version of the Buffalo Springfield's "For What It's Worth," she does manage to make something new and different out of the well-known tune. Elsewhere, sensitive, moody originals like "Samurai and Courtesan" and "Uptown" contrast with upbeat rockers like "We Danced" and "Honalu," all displaying a unique viewpoint in subtly evocative lyrics. Even more than its predecessor, this is an incredible album by an enormously gifted singer, writer and performer.

Vincent has not made a record under her own name since, although she did duet with Joey Ramone on a 45 of "I Got You Babe" and served a brief, unrecorded stint in the Waitresses. In 1988, Britain's Transvision Vamp made a run at international stardom with "Tell That Girl to Shut Up." [i]

See also Eastern Bloc.

ROBERT HOLMES

See Red Guitars.

PETER HOLSAPPLE & CHRIS STAMEY

See dB's.

HOLY COW

Call It What You Will (Head Chunk) 1986

Suggested Reading/Apocalypse Cow (Head Chunk) 1988

New England's Holy Cow are merchants of the macabre, partaking equally of the dark intensity of Bauhaus and the bleak, forceful pound of the Swans. Though mohawked lead vocalist Chris Means occasionally sounds a bit too much like Peter Murphy for comfort, he is able to conjure up a seething well of rage, nausea and utter dislocation, rendered with such authority that it can't help but work. The band takes the best elements of the gothic and industrial-noise genres, yet belongs wholly to neither—theirs is an older, weirder tradition harking back to prime local/literary inspiration H.P. Lovecraft.

Call It What You Will is a patchwork affair, jumping from an avant-garde experiment to the Christian Death-like crawl of "Ichorous Pus" and metal-machine mantra of "Work" to the punkishly brisk "Black & White" and the gruesomely catchy "Lady Cadava." On "Noises," a pulsing, strumming, neo-acoustic gloom-pop number, all the vocals save for the chorus are backwards.

By its sophomore effort, Holy Cow had turned meaner and harder, grabbing onto a pretty original (but definitely not pretty) and far more unified sound. The record is broken up into thematic halves. Each of the four songs (not counting a closing instrumental) on the Suggested Reading side puts a favorite horror short story to hyper-distorted bass riffs. The results: frighteningly good songs like the ferocious, bone-chilling "Rep Fuck" (inspired by Stephen King's Gamma). The album's slightly less gripping flipside, Apocalypse Cow, is a live document, highlighted by an intense medley of their own "God" and "39 Lashes" (from Jesus Christ Superstar). [gef]

HOLY ROLLERS

The Origami Sessions EP (Dischord) 1990
As Is (Dischord) 1990

There may be an awful record on the Dischord label, but I've yet to hear it. Like such labelmates as Fugazi, Washington DC's Holy Rollers combine the hardness of punk with the melodicism of pop to create sparkingly listenable songs that pound and pummel while making you feel good, too.

Besides bassist Joe Aronstam and guitarist Marc Lambiotte, Maria Jones rounds out the trio with loud, clear drumming that can be fast and hard, or click and clatter in palpitating textures (as in "Freedom Asking" or the percussion-dominated "Head On"). Throughout As Is she shifts seamlessly from one feeling and intensity to another; she's not just adequate, she's good. (Like her bandmates, she sings lead and backup.)

Most of the songs on the loud and crisp As Is are full-speed ahead, but the band's not above a little acoustic country style balladeering in "Johnny Greed." Like the poppier side of the Seattle bands, they play with dynamics; even when things ease down, high-energy intensity is never more than a few seconds away. Just when you think "Greed" is gonna wimp away like a Simon & Garfunkel oldie, it bursts into a screaming shriek of guitar fury. "Ode to Sabine County," meanwhile, could be the political side of the Minutemen reincarnated, with its chanted vocals and alternately pulsing and racing guitars. (The Origami Sessions is a four-track LP preview.) [e]

HONEYMOON KILLERS

Honeymoon Killers from Mars (Fur) 1984
Love American Style (Fur) 1985
Let It Breed (Fur) 1986
Turn Me On EP (Buy Our) 1988
Take It Off EP (Buy Our) 1989 •

Calling the Honeymoon Killers' debut disc a bad album is about as informative as calling Catch a Fire a reggae record: it's just a generic description. This New York four-piece (not to be confused with a Belgian band named after the same 1970 psychotronic cinema classic) is firmly rooted in the aesthetics of the splatter drive-in, where badness is just the starting point. The fake voodoo music, recorded in "four track horror fidelity," is abrasive and primitive—like the Cramps with less-commercial instincts and an even sicker sense of humor. More a curio than anything anyone would ever want to listen to, Honeymoon Killers from Mars is at least an entertaining curio. Think of it as aural pain in the service of black humor. Or think of it as obnoxious incompetence—you'll be neither alone nor unjustified. But miss it, and you'll never get to hear the world's worst version of "Who Do You Love."

After half of the band split, guitarist Jerry Teel and bassist Lisa recruited drummer Sally for Love American Style, another crunching descent into lighthearted sonic warfare, recorded at CBGB in such a way as to suggest the sound of a bottomless pit. The squeals, screams, beats and roars hung on vari-speed rockabilly that strolls around like a dissipated hog caller don't always engage, but it's perfect accompaniment for late-night movie viewing with the TV sound off. And miss the ultimate garage grunge version of "Batman" at your peril.

Let It Breed ends with a version of the Blue Öyster Cult's "Godzilla" that falls right in with the album's horror motif. "Day of the Dead" eulogizes that classic cinematic series; "Brain Dead Bird Brain" suggests a future project for some current film student to contemplate. Trimming the musical insanity a tad without giving up any of their intensity, the Killers try a few numbers that are relatively straightforward. Investing more in vocals, the women chime in with Jerry for a neat X/Cramps-like effect; they also exchange bass and drum chores on the brief "Zoo Train."

The Killers expanded to a quartet with the addition of guitarist Cristina (ex-Pussy Galore) and became an even noisier proposition, as evidenced on Turn Me On. Songs like "Choppin' Mall" (basically a reworking of the pre-Who High Numbers' already derivative "I'm the Face"), "Octopusy," "Flophausen" and "Fingerlickin' Spring Chicken" demonstrate abundant junk-cinema wit; the music shows continued development and structural strength.

Within Take It Off's day-glo sleeve (in itself a radical time-frame jolt for these orthodox back-to-the-stone-agers), the Killers dole out six more glistening slabs from their well-stocked abattoir. Back to being a trio (those members do seem to disappear rather quickly), the group struts its primordial stuff on "I'm Glad My Baby's Gone" and six tantalizingly trashy minutes of "The Sexorcist." Talk about your drive-in massacres! [l/i/dss]

See also Pussy Galore.

HOODOO GURUS

Stoneage Romeos (Big Time-A&M) 1983 •
Mars Needs Guitars! (Big Time-Elektra) 1985 •
Blow Your Cool! (Big Time-Elektra) 1987 •
Magnum Cum Louder (RCA) 1989 •
Kinky (RCA) 1991 •

Australia has produced few bands as crazily entertaining as Sydney's Hoodoo Gurus, whose roots intersect with the early Scientists. Who else would dedicate their debut album to, among other pop culture giants, American TV sitcom stars Larry Storch and Arnold Ziffel? That their music is an invigorating combination of cow-punk, garage-rock and demi-psychedelia only makes it better fun. "(Let's All) Turn On" is as good as any Lyres song; "In the Echo Chamber" has the mad abandon of prime Cramps; "I Want You Back" is winsome teen-angst power pop with a deadly hook; "I Was a Kamikaze Pilot" resembles the Fleshtones and displays a brilliant sense of absurd humor. (Think about that title again . . .) Stoneage Romeos is a great record.

Mars Needs Guitars! boasts a hip title, spiffy cover art, characteristically kitschy thank-you and a top-notch opening tune in "Bittersweet." But while the band's spirit is as willing as ever, an ill-considered mix and several clumsy arrangements hamper the rough'n'ready delivery, losing the melodies in the impressive raveup playing. Such promising numbers as the title track, "Like Wow-Wipeout" and the countryfied "Hayride to Hell" don't come off the way they should; the Gurus can definitely make better albums than this.

The improved Blow Your Cool! still isn't quite it, despite lively electric sound, plenty of offhand wit, crisp, energetic playing and hardy melodies. Increased emphasis on vocal harmonies distinguishes Side One; backup by the Bangles, blending nicely with songwriter Dave Faulkner's appealing voice on "What's My Scene" and "Good Times," helps put those tunes over the top. The fine "I Was the One" takes a similar tack without them. Lest anyone misjudge the Gurus' intentions, the record quickly turns (and stays) a lot tougher. Wild geographically minded cave stompers like "Where Nowhere Is," "Hell for Leather," "In the Middle of the Land" and "On My Street" are happily hard-nosed and noisy; "Party Machine," which closes the LP, is virtually a tribute to the Fleshtones.

Patient fans were finally rewarded bigtime with the spiffy Magnum Cum Louder, a confident, catchy collection that cuts the stylistic affectations to focus all of the group's strengths on songs that stick. The classic power-pop trick of mixing acoustic and electric rhythm guitars enlivens the album, especially "Come Anytime," an unbelievably catchy blast of layered vocals, guitars and handclaps that springs from the same well as "I Want You Back." Elsewhere, Brad Shepherd unleashes a firestorm of raucous guitar energy, slamming out AC/DC riffrock in "Axegrinder," raving up "I Don't Know Anything" and, for contrast, adding atmospheric, barely controlled feedback to the haunting, stately "Shadow Me." [i]

See also Scientists.

PETER HOPE & RICHARD KIRK

See Cabaret Voltaire.

BRENT HOSIER

See Plan 9.

HOTHOUSE FLOWERS

People (London) 1988 ●

Home (London) 1990 ◊

How one feels about Hothouse Flowers depends very much on one's attitude towards (and tolerance for) bombast. The five members of this Dublin group are all talented musicians; vocalist/keyboardist Liam Ó Maonlai has a fine voice and sings from the heart. But there's a tendency to bludgeon virtually every song to death, slowly building each up to a gut-wrenching climax, with Ó Maonlai singing for his life as the piano pounds and the backing voices wail. To some listeners this may spell S-O-U-L, but others will beg for R-E-L-I-E-F. That said, many Bruce Springsteen and Joe Cocker fans (to name just two popular bombast-kings) will probably find this just what the doctor ordered.

People is the shorter of the two albums, and earns some additional points for the songs "I'm Sorry," (which contains a rare bit of humor) and "Don't Go." Home features guest appearances by Steve Nieve and

Daniel Lanois, and contains a version of Johnny Nash's pop-reggae classic "I Can See Clearly Now" that'll blow your socks off. [ds]

HOUSEMARTINS

Flag Day EP (nr/Go! Discs) 1985

Sheep EP (nr/Go! Discs) 1986

Happy Hour EP (nr/Go! Discs) 1986

London 0 Hull 4 (Go! Discs-Elektra) 1986 ●

Think for a Minute EP (nr/Go! Discs) 1986

Caravan of Love EP (nr/Go! Discs) 1986

The People Who Grinned Themselves to Death (Go! Discs-Elektra) 1987 ●

There Is Always Something There to Remind Me EP (nr/Go! Discs) 1988 ●

Now That's What I Call Quite Good! (nr/Go! Discs) 1988 ●

As the cover of their first EP boasts, this quartet from Hull (actually, only drummer Hugh Whittaker's from the city; the rest wound up there for various reasons) are quite good, creating distinctive, finely crafted pop songs. Flag Day is an outstanding debut, four polished tunes that are memorable and intelligent. No fey pop wimps here. The melancholy title track laments the economic deterioration of Great Britain; the punchy and percussive "Stand at Ease" offers an unusual view of militarism. "You" is bright, bouncy pop with spectacular harmonies; "Coal Train to Hatfield Main" is a country stomp. Paul Heaton's vocals shine throughout, providing an integral part of the Housemartins' overall charm.

They followed with Sheep: three fine pop songs plus an extraordinary a cappella cover of Curtis Mayfield's uplifting "People Get Ready" and a choir-filled gospel song. As the sleeve states, "The Housemartins are my bestest band." Happy Hour propelled the Housemartins headfirst into the top of the UK charts (no mean feat for a band on an independent label) and earned them an American record contract. Exuberant guitar pop at its best, the title song is a humorous dig at the yuppie lifestyle.

After Happy Hour came a brilliant debut album, London 0 Hull 4 (a play on an age-old soccer rivalry), a dozen perfect pop jewels (including "Sheep" and "Flag Day"), firmly established the band's position as crown princes of the three-minute pop classic. From the lusty bounce of "Happy Hour" to the gospel tones of "Lean on Me," the Housemartins are lyrically literate and musically precise.

Think for a Minute continues the band's ascent to stardom. Five flawless tracks, including the title song (remixed from London 0 Hull 4) and a delightful excursion into rap music entitled "Rap Around the Clock."

Caravan of Love (the title track is an Isley/Jasper/Isley song) confirms the quartet's spiritual side and aptitude for gospel stylings with five songs of praise done a cappella. Considering Heaton's voice, this is as natural and comfortable an inclination as their usual pop trappings.

Personnel and musical changes marred the band's second album, The People Who Grinned Themselves to Death. Heaton's lyrics, once pointed and exact, have become obtuse and, in some instances ("Me and the Farmer." "I Can't Put My Finger on It"), downright inane. The title track, "You Better Be Doubtful" and the solemn "Johannesburg" provide some good moments, but the majority of songs lack the immediate impact of previous Housemartins records. (The LP's US version contains a bonus 45 of "Caravan of Love" b/w "The Day I Met Jesus.") It's clear from this album the band's pop throne might be in jeopardy—a supposition turned fact when they disbanded months after its release.

The Housemartins' final UK single, "There Is Always Something There to Remind Me" (not the Bacharach/David tune), is included on Now That's What I Call Quite Good!, a posthumous double album whose 24 tracks—hits, album material, B-sides, radio sessions and unreleased songs—span the band's entire career. Though London 0 Hull 4 remains the essential Housemartins disc to own, Now That's What I Call Quite Good offers a fine overview. [ag/hd]

See also Beats International, Beautiful South.

HOUSE OF FREAKS

Monkey on a Chain Gang (Rhino) 1987 •

Tantilla (Rhino) 1989 •

All My Friends EP (Rhino) 1989 •

Anyone skeptical of a two-piece rock'n'roll band should immediately check out Virginia-to-California transplants Bryan Harvey and Johnny Hott. What makes House of Freaks work is not the novelty of the guitar 'n'drums lineup, but Harvey's guitar and vocals, which jump out at you with all urgency and stripped-down emotionalism. Furthermore, Hott's industrial-strength drumming and Harvey's terrific songs that draw on American folklore and mythology from the days of the slave trade up through the atomic era make for a winning combination of punch and intelligence. The Monkey on a Chain Gang CD adds two bonus tracks.

Produced by John Leckie, the masterful Tantilla is liberally sprinkled with lyrical expressions of the Freaks' Southern (and religious) heritage. Over memorably original music that smolders with repressed passion and explodes in gloriously liberated choruses, Harvey castigates the memory of Jim Crow racism ("White Folk's Blood"), summons up the Civil War ("Big Houses"), questions religious faith ("The Righteous Will Fall," "I Want Answers") and ruminates on his roots ("Family Tree"). The duo's unabashed rock edge invests the catchy folk melodies with sturdy power; a piano/organ-playing guest adds a bit of subtle texture to the band's ample resources. Absolutely first-rate.

Little on the six-song All My Friends, however, comes close. Guest horns (a nice touch) don't make up for the listless material's tossed-off melodies or stylistic dilettantism; the lyrics (about pop star reality and armageddon) have scant cultural resonance. "Pass Me the Gun," a dissonant and downcast effort that sounds like a Tantilla outtake is the record's only bright spot.

[ds/i]

HOUSE OF LOVE

The House of Love (Creation-Relativity) 1988 •

The House of Love (Ger. Creation-Rough Trade) 1988 •

The House of Love (Fontana-PolyGram) 1990 •

A Spy in the House of Love (nr/Fontana) 1990 (Fontana) 1991 •

The Smiths' massive success rewrote the rules for British indie bands, laying a perilous path for artists whose non-mainstream musical ideas masked serious commercial aspirations. For a group like London's House of Love, the realities of building substantial popularity on the Creation label into full-fledged pop stardom proved disastrous, and nearly ended its career after one album.

Originally a quintet with three guitarists, House of Love caught England's attention with its third single, the insidious Jesus & Mary Chain-meets-the-Left Banke three-chord pop of "Christine," later the leadoff track of the quartet's (typically) untitled debut album (the cover pictures two band members). While the self-produced music on this effectively uncomplicated LP explores some of the same stately and weird '60s elevations as the psychedelic Rolling Stones and the Bunynymen, singer/guitarist Guy Chadwick's reasuring deadpan also conjures up Velvet Underground tension and occasionally dips into a quixotic Robyn Hitchcock drone. "Road" accentuates a nifty up-and-down guitar line; the vacuous "Love in a Car" echoes away into oblivion with grace and beauty.

After The House of Love became a sizable UK hit, the band signed to PolyGram and spent the better part of two years making a follow-up. The second untitled album (generally known abroad as Fontana) was recorded, scrapped and redone, ultimately employing four different producers in four separate bouts of recording. Lead guitarist Terry Bickers quit amid the turmoil in early '90, and hasn't been adequately replaced since. Despite its painful creation, the album (butterfly cover) proves to be surprisingly well crafted and consistently great, easily bettering the debut.

Built around a sharp new version of "Shine On" (the band's first single, from 1987), The House of Love has a placid atmosphere that keeps the songs' edgy mood from being immediately apparent. Having endured artistic crisis, the House of Love now has the dexterity to bring off the crackling "Hannah" and "I Don't Know Why I Love You" as well as the temerity to attempt the quiet tribute of "Beatles and the Stones." Meanwhile, "In a Room" and "32nd Floor" slither menacingly, little eruptions shimmering up from the depths.

The German compilation collects up early singles, offering a primitive but more exciting view of the band's beginnings than the debut album. If nothing else, it's worth owning for two fantastic (and otherwise rare) B-sides: "Plastic" and the ebullient "Nothing to Me."

Far less compelling is the later compilation, known as A Spy in the House of Love because of the Anais Nin novel prominently displayed on the cover. A fourteen-track patchwork of three unreleased leftovers from the abandoned second album and outtakes that were subsequently used as B-sides, it's not hard to understand why these efforts were deemed inadequate or relegated to supporting roles. Nevertheless, it is an economical purchase for fans who may have missed some of the preceding year's multi-format singles. [jr]

HOUSE OF SHOCK

See Go-Go's.

CHRIS HOUSTON AND THE SEX MACHINE

See Forgotten Rebels.

PENELOPE HOUSTON

See Avengers.

ROWLAND S. HOWARD

See Barracudas, Birthday Party, Crime and the City Solution, Lydia Lunch, Nikki Sudden, These Immortal Souls.

HOWARD & TIM'S PAID VACATION

See Windbreakers.

H.P. ZINKER

... And There Was Light EP (Matador) 1989

Beyond It All (Roughneck-Fire) 1990 ☐

The Sunshine (Roughneck-Fire) 1991 ●

Raised and originally based in Innsbruck, Austria, Hans Platzgumer and Frank Puempel had toured Europe with several bands (and managed prolific recording careers as precocious teens) before relocating to New York in mid-'89 as H.P. Zinker. Produced by Wharton Tiers and recorded with a drum machine, . . . And There Was Light opens with a cover of Led Zeppelin's "Dancing Days"; from there, the weird original material fuses metal with classical, punk, jazz, folk and noise. The rumblin' rockers and intricate, intriguing soundscapes would be a lot easier to take seriously in a voice that didn't so unmistakably recall Elmer Fudd; still, the songwriting and imagination resonate long after the initial laughter.

Beyond It All adds drummer Dave Wasik and shows dramatic improvement on all fronts. The power-trio format enables Zinker to create looming, pristine riffs (not unlike Dinosaur Jr.) amid the neo-classicism, shades of Sabbath and balls-out rock. Lengthy instrumental passages make for some startling updates on early-'70s progressive but, unlike the icons of that genre, Zinker seldom wanders into excess or incoherence. Platzgumer no longer sounds even remotely like a cartoon, and the lyrics ("Some of the triangles have four sides/And some have five/And some of them have five raised to the fifth power of sides") are likewise no joke. [ja]

H.R.

See Bad Brains.

HUANG CHUNG

See Wang Chung.

HUDSON-STYRENE

See Paul Marotta.

HUGO LARGO

Drum (Relativity) 1987 (Opal-Warner Bros.) 1988 ●

Mettle (Opal-Warner Bros.) 1989 ●

Responding to the predominance of noisemongers on the New York downtown hipster scene, rock critic-turned-Glenn Branca sideman Tim Sommer took a turn for the ethereally haunting and formed Hugo Largo: two bassists, an electric violinist and indescribable vocalist Mimi Goese. Drum, a sublime seven-song mini-album produced in part by Michael Stipe, builds a remarkable bridge between new age airiness and sturdy new wave experimentation. While Goese's voice dives and glides as if airborne, the three instruments (plus a touch of guitar) play at a measured tempo that belies their power; lyrics are diverted into evocative, mesmerizing sounds. Although the originals are substantially engaging, an almost unrecognizable rendition of Ray Davies' "Fancy" provides a beautiful highlight. (The 1988 re-issue on Brian Eno's label is remixed and contains two additional tracks.)

With violinist Hahn Rowe stepping forward as chief producer, Mettle has a clearer, more vibrant sound. As the group serves up memorable melodies on pieces like "Turtle Song" and "Hot Day," Goese executes daring vocal feats. Like the debut, Mettle builds to a dramatic climax near the end with "Nevermind." After Hugo Largo played its last gig in the summer of 1989, the foursome scattered into assorted projects and careers, although a new incarnation of the group surfaced two years later. [i/ws]

HULA

Cut from Inside (nr/Red Rhino) 1983

Murmur (nr/Red Rhino) 1984

1,000 Hours (nr/Red Rhino) 1986

Shadowland (nr/Red Rhino) 1986

Voice (nr/Red Rhino) 1986

Cut Me Loose EP (nr/Red Rhino) 1987

Threshold (Red Rhino-Fundamental) 1987 ●

VCI EP (Wax Trax!) 1988

JOHN AVERY

Jessica in the Room of Lights (nr/Technical) 1986

Formed in Sheffield by guitarist/tape manipulator Ron Wright, Hula furrowed a techno-industrial-multi-media path unmistakably influenced by Cabaret Voltaire (whose Stephen Mallinder produced their first single), yet fused with their own esoteric impulses into a unique strain of future-shock rock. Hula undercut its cluttered rhythms and flanged, ranting vocals with seriously funky bass and a disorienting melodic undertow; the media-overload of their live shows (employing at least a dozen film projectors) combined with the pulverizing music to build a mindbomb of epic proportions. Throughout its career, Hula released its best work on 45s, keeping LPs more deliberately experimental.

Cut from Inside and Murmur veer between funk, tribal, jazz-ish territory and noise; although the band's fascination with media sometimes led it down aural blind alleys of tape-loops and grating noise, the hypno-ambient grooves of "Tear-Up" and "Mother Courage" are both timely and prescient.

By 1985, however, serious self-indulgence began to creep in. The two-record 1,000 Hours combines a thin-sounding live LP with a side each of more singles-oriented material and ominous, ambient drone. Likewise, Shadowland—a mostly improvised soundtrack to an art exhibit—is meandering and badly recorded drivel. Voice, which includes three songs produced by Mute supremo Daniel Miller, is relatively coherent and accessible, yet ironically less interesting. It does, however, contain one ace dance track ("Poison").

The excellent Threshold singles compilation is by far Hula's best release; it's also the only one that consists predominantly of the throbbing, brutal techno-funk upon which the band built its reputation. The CD and cassette tack on three extra cuts.

Following the 1988 demise of Red Rhino, Hula (by then just Wright and bassist John Avery) disappeared from view. The band's last release (its first on Wax Trax!) was a dreary "dance" version of Hendrix's "Voodoo Chile," aptly subtitled "Very slight return."

Avery's LP contains quiet, ambient instrumentals in an Eno/Bowie/Sylvian vein—hypnotic, cold atmospheres that would have made an excellent soundtrack to a Wim Wenders film. [ja]

HUMAN HANDS

Hereafter (Nate Starkman & Son) 1988

This turn-of-the-decade LA quintet featured such future stars of the California underground as drummer Dennis Duck (Dream Syndicate), guitarist Juan Gomez (Romans) and keyboardist Bill Noland (Wall of Voodoo). Although Human Hands never recorded an album proper, a limited-edition (and now hopelessly rare) two-disc demos/live compilation was issued by Independent Projects in 1982, later followed by a posthumous retrospective. Assembling Human Hands' few singles, compilation contributions and a few items from the first LP, Hereafter is an intriguing document of an ambitious outfit with lots of good ideas and uncommon influences. Pleasantly comparable in spots to pop groups like the Monochrome Set or Yachts, but also capable of disturbing art/jazz angles and fringe experiments (like Duck's percussion/found-sound/tape manipulation piece, "In the Heart of China"), Human Hands are not the missing link or anything. But Hereafter does add a neat paragraph to West Coast rock history. [i]

See also Dream Syndicate, Wall of Voodoo.

HUMAN LEAGUE

Dignity of Labour Pts. 1–4 EP (nr/Fast Product) 1979

Reproduction (nr/Virgin) 1979 (Virgin) 1988 •

Travelogue (Virgin Int'l) 1980 (Virgin) 1988 •

Dare (A&M) 1981 •

Fascination! EP (A&M) 1983

Hysteria (A&M) 1984 •

Crash (Virgin-A&M) 1986 •

Greatest Hits (Virgin-A&M) 1988 •

Romantic? (Virgin-A&M) 1990 •

LEAGUE UNLIMITED ORCHESTRA

Love and Dancing (A&M) 1982 •

PHILIP OAKEY & GIORGIO

MORODER

Philip Oakey & Giorgio Moroder (Virgin-A&M) 1985 •

LOOT!

Loot! (nr/Homa) 1990

It took a near-fatal lineup overhaul, two developmental albums and a fortuitous partnership with the right producer to put the Human League in a position to create the record that would make them, for a time, the unchallenged world champs of synthesizer pop. Interestingly, the group that topped the charts in 1982 with "Don't You Want Me" bears almost no resemblance to the dour trio that recorded "Being Boiled" for Fast Product in 1978.

The first two albums were the work of Sheffield's Phil Oakey, Ian Craig Marsh, Martyn Ware (all synth/vocals) and Philip Adrian Wright, who handled visual chores. Reproduction suffers from a simplistic approach—high-tech primitivism—given added monotony by Oakey's frequently deadpan vocals. Amid all the glum sonic novelties (like "You've Lost That Loving Feeling"), the atmospheric "Morale" and the surprisingly poppy "Empire State Human" indicated promise for the future and brought the League—at a time when such a notion seemed farfetched—some success on the British charts.

Travelogue is much better, broadening the palette to include a wide variety of subtle synthesizer shadings, from the arcane to the sublime, and introducing vastly improved material. Lyrical subjects concern science-fiction and kitsch culture. Although still emotionally ambivalent, Travelogue is warmer and more fun than its predecessor, and suggested a direction for the band to pursue.

And pursue it they did. After a schism sent Marsh and Ware off as the British Electric Foundation, Oakey and Wright revamped the Human League with four new members (Ian Burden, Susanne Sulley, Joanne Catherall and ex-Rezillo guitarist Jo Callis) and a rededication to danceable pop music. That intent, along with producer Martin Rushent—whose skills dovetailed with almost all of the band's shortcomings (almost all—there's no cure for Oakey's crooning)—ultimately led to such interplanetary hits as "Don't You Want Me" and "Love Action (I Believe in Love)." The irresistible mix of state-of-the-art technology and old-fashioned pop-single formulae set millions of toes tapping, although the Dare LP contains much headier and heavier stuff as well. With incredible ambience and subtle tension, "Seconds"—about the Kennedy assassination—is, in fact, the LP's unheralded best track. A great record, and not just for its popular songs.

The trailblazing (for white rockers, that is) remix album, Love and Dancing, pays titular homage of sorts to Barry White and contains Rushent's revamped versions of seven cuts from Dare, plus one extra tune. Some of the record bears listening to; other parts, however, are either repetitively dull or noisily annoying.

Subsequently proven incapable of delivering a timely follow-up to sustain their new-found megastardom, the Human League had to make do with stop-gap singles, two of which were compiled on the Fascination! EP. "Mirror Man" is pedestrian but catchy; "(Keep Feeling) Fascination" (which appears here in its original form and an extended remix), however, is ruined by awful sick-cow vibrato on the synthetic horns.

Three years after Dare, following a pitched battle with their commercial insecurities, the League finally came up with Hysteria. Following a traumatic split with Rushent, the band itself produced the LP with Chris Thomas and Hugh Padgham, wisely omitting the prior 45s in favor of new songs, some of which are quite good. Stretching styles to encompass a subtler, tender side, the ballads (“Louise,” “Life on Your Own”) provide the record’s most engaging moments, although they exacerbate Oakey’s vocal limitations. Taking an ill-advised political turn, “The Lebanon” offers simple-minded drama with a pop hook; “Don’t You Know I Want You” is an almost-clever attempt to acknowledge and recycle the sound (and title) of their biggest hit.

During another Human League hibernation, Oakey collaborated with Giorgio Moroder, first on a song for the Electric Dreams film soundtrack, then continued the partnership for a joint album. Giorgio wrote the music and produced; Phil added lyrics and sang; Arthur Barrow and Richie Zito provided the backing tracks on, respectively, synth and guitar. With a bouncy, upbeat sound, it’s an unchallenging bit of fun that could easily be mistaken for a jollified League record were it not for Moroder’s lighthanded, deft arrangements and percolating tunes. “Good-bye Bad Times” and a reprise of “Together in Electric Dreams” stand out, but the rest is almost as immediately enjoyable.

In a desperate maneuver to locate a functional musical personality, the Human League enlisted the stunningly successful pop-funk team of Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis to produce and co-write the absurdly misbegotten Crash. The imprudent collaboration produced a collection of musical nightmares: preening soul ballads (“Human,” “Love Is All That Matters”) that Oakey isn’t up to singing, fraudulent funk workouts (“Swang,” “Jam,” “I Need Your Loving”) that only underscore the band’s emotional sterility and inadequate dance-rock (“Money,” “Love on the Run”) that trails the field’s cutting edge by a few years. Like the cover’s intentionally out-of-focus photograph, this halfhearted effort falls well short of nominal quality standards.

When another couple of years had passed without productive noise from the League’s camp, Greatest Hits arrived to keep the band’s name in circulation. This non-chronological assembly of a dozen singles, from 1978’s “Being Boiled” through 1986’s “Human,” is not a very compelling reminder of why anyone ever took this music seriously. Although bits and pieces stand up to the test of a few years’ time, the cream of this crop is more like crap. (The American edition deletes “Together in Electric Dreams.”)

Disproving rumors of non-existence, a five-piece Human League (Oakey, Catherall and Sulley, joined by recent arrivals on guitar and keyboards) resurfaced with the labored and dull Romantic? in 1990. Half a dozen producers (including the long-missing Martin Rushent) vainly try to breathe life into the weak songs, even adding a few house elements in hopes of helping the once-futurist group catch up with the present.

After leaving the League, Callis formed a group called SWALK; Loot! is Ian Burden’s new band. [j]

See also British Electric Foundation, Heaven 17, Shake.

HUMAN SEXUAL RESPONSE

Figure 14 (Eat-Passport) 1980

In a Roman Mood (Passport) 1981

A most promising (but ultimately unsuccessful) band from Boston, the seven-person HSR (including four vocalists!) explored sexual identities, both physical and mental, on Figure 14, as on the wonderful “What Does Sex Mean to Me?” Elsewhere, there’s a healthy irreverence towards the famous and the neurotic, with sex never quite out of the picture. Leanings in the direction of art rock, led by singer Larry Bangor’s Tom Verlaine-style vocals, occasionally get HSR in trouble, coming off too cute.

In a Roman Mood is darker and more oblique than Figure 14, showcasing the band’s growing lyrical complexity regarding human beings and what they expect from each other. Again their nervous rhythms—over an entire LP—don’t produce anything outstanding. Human Sexual Response makes background music for difficult relationships.

The band broke up in 1982 and spawned several offshoots. A reunion show took place on Halloween 1984. [gk]

See also Zulus.

HUMAN SWITCHBOARD

The Human Switchboard EP (Under the Rug) 1977

Human Switchboard Live (no label) 1980

Who’s Landing in My Hangar? (Faulty Products) 1981

Coffee Break [tape] (ROIR) 1982

BOB PFEIFER

After Words (Passport) 1987 •

MYRNA

Human Touch EP (OKra) 1989

Transplant the early Velvet Underground to the late ’70s, trade that band’s kinkier concerns for conventional male-female issues, and you’ve got Kent, Ohio’s Human Switchboard in a nutshell. Repeated disclaimers aside, leader Bob Pfeifer sings in a dry, ironic style suggestive of young Lou Reed, and Myrna Marcarian’s wobbly organ-playing adds an amateurish tint that evokes White Light/White Heat.

The Human Switchboard debuted with a junky-sounding 7-inch (mixed by Pere Ubu’s David Thomas) whose four songs clearly (if ineptly) demonstrate the two sides of the trio’s sound. “Distemper” and “Shake It, Boys” are straight garage rock, while “San Francisco Nights” is a total Lou Reed imitation.

On the Switchboard’s sole studio album, Who’s Landing in My Hangar?, Pfeifer creates a neurotic, high-strung persona that makes for gripping listening. Two uptempo cuts (“Book on Looks” and “(I Used to) Believe in You”) celebrate the ups and downs of romance, while the LP’s high point, “Refrigerator Door,” carefully weaves an intriguing web of personal details. It all seems embarrassingly confessional, which is a pretty neat trick.

The Switchboard’s other two releases are live recordings that overlap material extensively with Hangar; both are interesting, if redundant. The 1980 disc, an authorized bootleg, features Marcarian’s haunting rendition of “Downtown.” Coffee Break is from a November 1981 Cleveland radio broadcast.

Time mellows even a sourpuss like Pfeifer, it seems. Without the Switchboard behind him (though ex-members of the defunct group appear on After Words), he's looser, more willing to play off the rhythms, which themselves are less constricted than before. Pfeifer's still got an obvious affinity for Lou Reed's plain-spoken approach to interpersonal tales, offering diary-like accounts in "She Always Smiled" and "I'm Better for You." In "Knock-Knock," he finally succumbs to the urge to do a straight Reed imitation. Otherwise, worthwhile.

Myrna Marcarian's solo EP may leave folks wishing she'd stepped out sooner. Apart from a track in a Switchboard vein that finds her sounding unpleasantly like Stevie Nicks, she successfully tackles some tough, driving rockers here, assisted by nimble guitarist Jack Johnson and ex-Switchboard drummer Ron Metz.

[i/jy]

HUMMINGBIRDS

loveBUZZ (rooArt-PolyGram) 1990 ◊

Australia's Hummingbirds play an agreeable form of brisk guitar-band pop that's hypnotic in small doses, but soporific at full-CD (55 minutes) length. With classicist Mitch Easter producing, the Sydney quartet's debut emphasizes a ringing blend of male and female three-part harmonies, generating a sweet, airy vibe with unabashed guitar energy. While toned-down efforts like "Everything You Said" (which resembles a juiceless Primitives) occasionally threaten preciousness, the rhythm section kicks hard enough in songs like "Blush," "Word Gets Around" and "Get on Down" to keep the record in a good gear.

[jy]

IAN HUNTER

Short Back n' Sides (Chrysalis) 1981

Ian Hunter emerged as an early patron saint of punk—quite a feat considering that the movement was allegedly based on the rejection of his generation of old wave musicians. Hunter's popularity with the young rebels stemmed primarily from his salad years as leader of Mott the Hoople and was based on attitude as much as music. In the late '60s and early '70s, Hunter and band were down-to-earth, streetwise blokes who voiced a sense of disillusionment and failure instead of indulging in the fantasy and self-aggrandizement typical of so many big-league rockers. Punks of the later '70s saw themselves as fighting against the same climate of unreality and vanity.

Specifics: Beginning with Mott's debut, Mott the Hoople, you can hear the tight, driving guitar of Mick Ralphs, later appropriated in whole by the Clash, Pistols and, most pointedly, Generation X. Mott's "Violence" and The Hoople's "Crash Street Kids" both forecast with uncanny accuracy the emergence of a new generation of disaffected, angry kids. Hunter produced Gen X's second LP, Valley of the Dolls. The late Guy Stevens, who pulled Mott together and produced their first four LPs, produced the Clash's London Calling.

Mick Jones joined with long-time Hunter-mate Mick Ronson to produce Ian's sixth solo effort, Short Back n' Sides, an ambitious, unfocused LP with a Clash-family guest list that covers more styles than a single record should. Still, Hunter continues to be the straight-shooter that originally endeared him to his "kids."

[jy]

HUNTERS & COLLECTORS

Hunters & Collectors (Aus. White Label) 1982

Hunters & Collectors (Oz-A&M) 1983

Fireman's Curse (nr/Virgin) 1983

The Jaws of Life (Slash) 1984

Way to Go Out (Aus. White Label) 1985

Human Frailty (IRS) 1986 ●

Living Daylight EP (IRS) 1987 ●

What's a Few Men (Aus. White Label) 1987 ●

Fate (IRS) 1988 ●

Ghost Nation (Atlantic) 1990 ●

Collected Works (IRS) 1990 ◊

At the outset, Melbourne's Hunters & Collectors offered an Australian response to the Fall: an unremittingly bleak and powerful ensemble capable of horrendous noise, gripping drama and slithery funk. They do all three on both eponymous albums, which are almost entirely different records. The Australian release is a self-produced double-album with only three tracks common to the UK/US single disc of the same name, which Mike Howlett produced. (And remixed "Talking to a Stranger.") Utterly oblique lyrics (and a credit to the band as a whole for "lyrics, music, artwork, management") typify this enigmatic album. Fans of challenging, noisy rock and rhythm should enjoy, if not understand, this; real enthusiasts would do well to seek out both versions.

It took a while to locate another American label courageous enough to take the band on, but eventually Slash saw their way clear to releasing The Jaws of Life, recorded in Germany with Conny Plank. Thanks to normal cover info, it becomes possible to compliment bassist John Archer and drummer Doug Falconer for their dominant rhythm work, suggest that guitarist Mark Seymour let someone else attempt to sing next time and praise keyboard player Geoff Crosby for the nifty cover assemblage. Way to Go Out is a live album recorded in Melbourne in the summer of '84.

Human Frailty was the band's long-delayed IRS debut (a 1983 deal with the label had fallen through at the eleventh hour). One immediately notices the more mainstream sound—or at least as close as they can get to one and still retain some of their trademarks. The unorthodox horn section (trumpet, trombone and French horn) plays conventional parts, and there's a lot more in the way of background vocals. Fans of the band's early work simply won't believe that several cuts, especially the Top 40-flavored "Throw Your Arms Around Me," are actually the work of the band credited on the album cover. While Human Frailty doesn't lack in quality per se, Hunters & Collectors have certainly done more interesting music than this.

"Inside a Fireball," which opens the five-track Living Daylight EP (a three-songer back home), indicates that all is well; while not as art-noisy as early work, the record at least has the punch and bite its predecessor lacks. It also contains remixed versions of "The Slab" and "Carry Me" from The Jaws of Life. (The entire EP is appended to the American Human Frailty CD.)

Fate (originally released in Australia as What's a Few Men) is accessible, has a nice clear, guitar-driven sound and its share of catchy hooks; nothing to alienate the casual listener. What sets the group apart here is Seymour's vivid word pictures and urgent delivery. His vocals have improved a lot over the years; on Fate he sounds like he's wound pretty tight, but never resorts to histrionics. Highlights: the semi-hit "Back on the Breadline" and the haunting, anti-militaristic CD-only "What's a Few Men?," an account of an Aussie fighting for the British army. Although almost undetectable, there are thirteen (!) guest artists augmenting the seven-piece band.

Ghost Nation is more relaxed; acoustic and slide guitars figure prominently and several tracks feature somewhat awkward background vocals (some supplied by Crowded House leader Neil Finn). But with only a few exceptions (the plaintive "Lazy Summer Day," "The Way You Live"), no songs really stand out. "Running Water," a fearful view of the environmental future, sounds an awful lot like Midnight Oil, and this band has never had to imitate anyone before. Hunters & Collectors just don't stand out the way they once did.

Barring the obligatory "Talking to a Stranger," Collected Works only acknowledges material recorded during the band's IRS era. Considering how much their sound has changed, the sixteen-track collection doesn't serve any valuable purpose. A real Hunters & Collectors compilation would have to go back further than this.

See also Deadly Hume. [i/dgs]

BILL HURLEY WITH JOHNNY GUITAR

See Inmates.

HÜSKER DÜ

Land Speed Record (New Alliance) 1981 (SST) 1987 •
Everything Falls Apart (Reflex) 1982
Metal Circus (Reflex-SST) 1983 •
Zen Arcade (SST) 1984 •
New Day Rising (SST) 1985 •
Flip Your Wig (SST) 1985 •
Candy Apple Grey (Warner Bros.) 1986 •
Sorry Somehow EP (nr/Warner Bros.) 1986
Warehouse: Songs and Stories (Warner Bros.) 1987 •

Hüsker Dü emerged from the punk rock scene; vast improvements in songwriting over the years may have changed the shape of their music, but they never lost their firm attachment to bracing, loud guitar rock. Although failing to achieve the mainstream success of R.E.M. or even the Replacements, the often exhilarating Minneapolis trio was hugely popular and influential (and has grown legendary) in certain circles, maintaining its vision, integrity and dedication to independent music to the end. With Bob Mould's impassioned talk-shout-singing and masterful guitar overlaid with feedback and amplifier distortion, Greg Norton's straight-ahead driving bass and Grant Hart's only slightly less demented singing and excessive drumming, the Hüskers piled on the pop hooks in their songs to the point of explosion, creating a startling rush of momentum.

The live Land Speed Record is basically a tour document from a year in which they covered a lot of land and took a lot of speed—a cheap recording that only hints at any juice the performance may have contained. In those days, the group was naturally sloppy, and this disc captures the mess but not the overkill power.

Everything Falls Apart, in fact, puts everything back together. While the band hadn't totally mastered the studio, this is a great improvement over the live record. And it offers the first taste of pop-oriented things to come: a cover of Donovan's "Sunshine Superman."

Metal Circus marks a giant leap forward. With this brief seven-song disc, Hüsker Dü began to reach for a broader audience. The often misconstrued title refers not to heavy metal (an area of exploration for many hardcore bands), but to the flat gray solidity of alloys, which fairly describes the record. Metal Circus is a collection of anthems, slow and fast, with twisted, abrasive guitar licks and twisted lyrics. The rousing Mission of Burma-ish "It's Not Funny Anymore" is the most potent track, but "Diane" is the most haunting, a Hart-penned power dirge about rape and murder. When he screams the title over and over, it sounds like "dying." A monster song from a heavy record.

After Metal Circus, Hüsker Dü released a 7-inch statement of purpose, the totally gonzo cover of "Eight Miles High." The single brings together Mould's love of jangly '60s pop with the band's adrenaline charge. Punk covers of '60s songs generally devolve into camp, but this one retains the flavor of the original without compromising the sonic blitz.

Zen Arcade, an ambitious double-record concept album about the strange adventures of a kid leaving home, covers more ground than Greyhound and is successful a surprisingly high percentage of the time. The band plays acoustic, psychedelic and unabashedly poppy songs; when it's good, the material is among their best. A straight rocker, "Turn on the News," deserves to be a classic. Unfortunately, there's also some over-reaching and self-indulgent dross, possibly related to the one-take production technique. As on Sandinista!, it isn't really filler; still, backwards tape loops and extended drones dilute the effect.

By contrast, New Day Rising is as tight as a duck's behind, and that's waterproof. The band flails the hell out of the kind of loping melodies currently ringing out of the New South. The album is LOUD, intense, funny, accessible and downright catchy. From the opening cut, in which Mould just screams "new day rising" over and over above a rising tide of triumphant sound, to the elliptical closer, "Plans I Make," they do the Dü with nary a false step. Seldom have hooks been this powerful, nor full-throttle punk this melodic.

The Hüskers' final SST release, Flip Your Wig, is positively brilliant—fourteen unforgettable pop tunes played like armageddon were nigh. The production is taut and claustrophobic, pushing the busy, anechoic drums right into your head, competing with Mould's precise stun-assault guitar wash and vocals. Besides the compressed, efficient Top 40 sound of "Makes No Sense at All" (one of 1985's best 45s), the LP boasts such classic fare as the loving, fragile "Green Eyes," the boppy, bubblegummy "Hate Paper Doll" and the somberly psychedelic (complete with backwards guitar) of "Don't Know Yet," which closes things out in appropriately enigmatic fashion.

Following the Replacements to Warner Bros., Husker Dü self-produced Candy Apple Grey with an equally unselfconscious lack of commercial consideration, sacrificing nary a drop of energy nor an ounce of spirit. (They did, however, cut back to a mere ten songs.) Too many cuts start with the same brief Hart-beat, but the charged, varied music and never-better reflective, adult lyrics on Mould's six compositions provide a seductive wallop. "Sorry Somehow" (with surprising Deep Purple organ), "Don't Want to Know If You Are Lonely" and "Dead Set on Destruction" are typically staggering rock numbers; "I Don't Know for Sure" sounds good but resembles "Makes No Sense at All" a tad too much. Two all-acoustic numbers ("Too Far Down" and "Hardly Getting Over It") demonstrate the band's flexibility and a casual disregard for punk convention. While more diverse, Candy Apple Grey ultimately falls a bit short of Flip Your Wig in intensity and impact.

The British Sorry Somehow 12-inch contains "All This I've Done for You" (also from Candy Apple Grey), acoustic live versions of one track each from the previous two albums and "Fattie," an all-noise studio recording. The same year, American Warners issued a 12-inch of "Don't Want to Know if You Are Lonely" with a terrible live "Helter Skelter" and a numbingly repetitive eight-minute studio track ("All Work and No Play") on the flipside.

It took wrangling with (and concessions to) Warner Bros., but the group was able to prevail and release the ambitious two-disc Warehouse: Songs and Stories, on which Hart and Mould co-produced and evenly split the songwriting. Neither sprawling nor start-to-finish essential, this twenty-song collection breaks no new ground and is short on variety but still quite enjoyable—the thick sound is in itself sensually satisfying. With fine tracks strewn randomly throughout, the album's strongest side is its third (with the hypnotically swirling "It's Not Peculiar," the folksy "No Reservations" and the late-'60sish "Tell You Why Tomorrow"); other notable cuts are "She Floated Away," a rocking sea chantey, "Standing in the Rain" and "Ice Cold Ice."

Hart quit or was fired in December 1987, and Husker Dü broke up shortly thereafter. [j/i]

See also Grant Hart, Bob Mould.

PARTHENON HUXLEY

Sunny Nights (Columbia) 1988 •

Not his real name; the Parthenon bit may be a tip of the hat to his high school days in Greece. On this debut LP, Huxley engages in thoughtful whimsy ("Between the sacred and the profane/Runs a crooked yellow line/you dance around from lane to lane . . ."). The music is power pop that's equally skewed, though not equally effective; its cleverness tends to overpower melodies that seem to deserve better. (He co-produced with David Kahne.) Promising all the same. [j/g]

HUXTON CREEPERS

12 Days to Paris (Big Time) 1986

Keep to the Beat (Big Time-Polydor) 1988 •

This quartet from Melbourne, Australia, plays gritty Stonesish rock and harmony-laden Byrdsy folk-rock on their first American LP, which might easily be mistaken for the work of an American "heartland" band. The Huxton Creepers could use a more mellifluous singer than Rob Crow—gruffness when he strains is a problem—but his guitar interplay with Paul Thomas, supported by a fluid, strong rhythm section, makes 12 Days an unfailingly engaging record. Guest Hammond work (on one song—a second, indicated on the back cover, was somehow omitted from the US LP!) by ex-Procol Harum organist Chris Copping is more eyebrow-raising than ear-opening.

The follow-up is an equally inoffensive collection, highlighted by the high-spirited and eminently catchy "Rack My Brains" and "Visually." Crow's vocals tend to venture into perilous adenoidalism, but the rest of the band is still sharp, the material fresh. Though these two albums are hardly essential, Huxton Creepers traffic in the kind of commercial rock that has made stars out of lesser (and less-talented) mortals. [i/db]

HYBRID KIDS

Hybrid Kids (nr/Cherry Red) 1979

Claws (nr/Cherry Red) 1980

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Miniatures (nr/Pipe-Cherry Red) 1980

MORGAN FISHER

Ivories (nr/Strike Back) 1985

What happens when Jah Wobble meets country clods the Wurzels for a raveup on Kate Bush's greatest hit? You get Jah Wurzel's version of "Wuthering Heights," zonked-out reggae with quizzical vocals in a back-country accent, that's what. Actually, this is Morgan Fisher, ex-Mott the Hoople keyboardist, pretending (with a dab of help from uncredited friends—he himself is billed as "producer/director") to be a baker's dozen different acts having a go at their fave tunes. What purports to be British Standard Unit takes a pretty amusing off-the-wall industrial-synth whack at "D'Ya Think I'm Sexy," but most of the rest of Hybrid Kids tends to be gratuitously high in the ozone, or tediously puerile (or both). Nice version of Sun Ra's "Enlightment" [sic], allegedly by Combo Satori, all the same.

Miniatures, conceived, compiled and edited by Fisher, is a widely variegated collection: 51 tracks (of no more than a minute apiece) by just as many artists. (No relation to the Residents' Commercial Album of the same year, which Fisher first learned of when he invited the Residents to chip in a track; they medley "We're a Happy Family" with "Bali Ha'i.") Fred Frith encapsulates the history of Henry Cow in one minute; Andy Partridge encapsulates the history of rock'n'roll in twenty seconds; Neil Innes strums as his five-year-old son sings and drums "Cum on Feel the Noize"; Quentin Crisp rants about the evils of music; artist Ralph Steadman (also responsible for the LP cover) plaintively sings John Donne. Trivial, indulgent, amusing and educational. [j/g]

PAUL HYDE AND THE PAYOLAS

See Payolas.

HYPNOLOVEWHEEL

Turn! Turn! Burn! (Fabian Aural Products) 1988

Candy Mantra (Fabian Aural Products) 1990 ●

Space Mountain (Alias) 1991 ●

A fine quartet originally from Long Island, Hypnolovewheel carry a kinda avant-garage ethos into all sorts of unexpected places. Refusing to be pinned down to any one stylistic board, the group wiggles around through a wide array of psychedelic pop, punk and garage-mush puddles. That they're able to do so without seeming like a bunch of lost ponies is testament to their ability to create a genuinely cordial mix of low-ball guitar-rant and tossed-off melodic hooks. (Hypnolove-wheel's music bears textural similarities to the Embar-rassment.) When they come up with something that's potentially too catchy, Dave Ramirez and Steve Hunkins bury it under a small load of six-string noise.

As a tendency to write funny lyrics has been tempered with age, all of the band's records are easily commendable to hepsters and squares alike. Nice, a-generic, non-flash all-purpose pop-noise is a too rare commodity these days. [bc]

HYPNOTICS

See Thee Hypnotics.

HYPSTRZ

Hypstrz Live EP (Bogus-Twin/Tone) 1979

Hypstrization! (Vox) 1980

MIGHTY MOFOS

The Mighty E.P. (Midnight) 1986

Sho' Hard! (Treehouse) 1988

Although barely considered worth a footnote today (cross-reference under "singleminded" and "energy OD"), the Hypstrz were nevertheless radical in their own special time and place, blasting through '60s garagemania in late-'70s Minneapolis, purposefully stamping their frantic rifferama into countless pubescent brains, personalizing punk in a subversively idiosyncratic (and decidedly song-oriented) manner, thereby paving the way for the Twin City sound of the early '80s.

Vox quickly followed up the manic four-song 7-inch debut on Bogus with a full album of live Hypstrz (fifteen stripped-down classics: "96 Tears," "Slow Death," "Midnight Hour," "Riot on Sunset Strip," etc.). That no-studios policy was wisely upheld on Midnight's live EP six years later but sadly ignored by Treehouse, which plopped the retitled band of Batsons (Ernie and Billy; guitars and vocals respectively) plus new rhythm section in a salon de recording with brand-name indie producer Lou Giordano to "polish" their now (nominally) original songs. Onstage, the Mofos roared as unrestrainedly as their predecessors, but on Sho' Hard!, the fury is reeled in to showcase mediocre song-writing and recycled formulaic garage pop. Tellingly, the standout track is an MC5 cover. (The cassette contains extra tracks.) [ab]

ICE CUBE

See N.W.A.

ICEHOUSE

- Icehouse (Chrysalis) 1981 •
- Primitive Man (Chrysalis) 1982 •
- Fresco EP (Chrysalis) 1983
- Sidewalk (Chrysalis) 1984 •
- Measure for Measure (Chrysalis) 1986 •
- Man of Colours (Chrysalis) 1987 •
- Great Southern Land (Chrysalis) 1989 •

FLOWERS

Icehouse (Aus. Regular) 1980

For the record, Icehouse began as Flowers. For its first US/UK album, the Sydney, Australia band renamed itself after the title of the Flowers LP, subtracted one cut, remixed and resequenced it. Icehouse's debut LP effectively mates emotional tension with the streamlined efficiency of modern synthesizer outfits. "Icehouse" and "Can't Help Myself," in particular, exploit the contrast between smooth surfaces and frontman Iva Davies' anxious singing. Despite inconsistent material, this is a promising start.

Unfortunately, Davies let it all go to his head on Primitive Man, hiding the underrated band and declaring allegiance to empty stylishness. By emphasizing the elegance in his artful compositions and restricting his passions to poses, Davies ends up with slick, pretty product that neither demands nor encourages listener involvement. (It does, however, contain the global hit single, "Hey Little Girl," a remarkable Roxy Music simulation.)

That song, two others from Primitive Man, plus two new tracks of forgettable roaring rock comprise the Fresco EP, evidently issued to capitalize on the band's sudden commercial emergence.

Sidewalk is a tedious two-voiced exercise: fake Bryan Ferry (hey—doing it once may be cute, but two albums in a row is lame!) and histrionic guitar rock; occasionally the two are blended together in a misbegotten vision of Roxy Metal. Melt this sucker down.

While retaining the mannered Ferry imitation in spots, Measure for Measure adds an equally artificial version of David Bowie (circa Lodger) and drops Sidewalk's over-energized sandtrap. "No Promises" is the atmospheric pop hit (one of three cuts on which ex-Japan drummer Steve Jansen plays; Eno receives an all-LP credit for backing vocals, treated piano and keyboards), but other songs are more memorable. (Most are less.) Smooth, crafty and pointless.

The unfocused but blatantly commercial Man of Colours tries a little of this (ersatz Roxy, imitation Bowie) and a little of that (semi-fake Hall and Oates, a halfhearted stab at Billy Idol's neighborhood). Davies' voice briefly resembles Barry Manilow's on the mega-hit single, "Crazy" (which also appears in two needless bonus remixes on the CD), a hollow slab of romantic melodrama. Oates co-wrote and sings on "Electric Blue," which sounds like an INXS discard.

Great Southern Land is a ten-song compilation named for the song Icehouse contributed to the Young Einstein soundtrack; the CD and cassette add a dance mix of "No Promises." [jy/i]

ICE-T

- Rhyme Pays (Sire) 1987 •
- Power (Sire) 1988 •
- The Iceberg/Freedom of Speech ... Just Watch What You Say (Sire) 1989 •
- O.G. Original Gangster (Sire-Warner Bros.) 1991 ◊

One of the earliest and most convincing indications that Los Angeles wasn't going to sit out the East Coast hip-hop revolution, rapper Ice-T quickly proved the equal of any New York MC. On Rhyme Pays, working over energetic tracks programmed and produced by Afrika Islam, Ice (who had already made his film debut in 1984's Breakin') puts a little flair into the presentation, using a toaster singsong, other vocal styles and assorted theatrical gimmicks to make detailed tales of sex, parties, wealth, criminal activity and jail more absorbing and distinguished than they might otherwise be. A strong debut but, in retrospect, hardly the peak of his career. (And the mix stinks: his voice is way too low.)

Ice-T made great strides on Power, a dynamic and confident shift into solidly delivered ambivalently positive messages built on his unassailable street cred. (Acknowledging mixed loyalties, Ice-T allows "I'm not here to tell ya right or wrong/I don't know which side of the law you belong.") So if there's no clear-cut moral in the violent first-person criminality of "Drama" or "High Rollers," Ice-T does stop short of endorsing the gangster life. His sex rap ("Girls L.G.B.N.A.F.") pulls no punches but doesn't get abusive and does recommend safe sex; the anti-dope "I'm Your Pusher" proffers music in place of drugs, folding in Curtis Mayfield's original "Pusher Man" for added impact.

Responding to the climate of censorship by attacking it and defying it, Ice-T made the hard and intense Iceberg, a great-sounding but disturbingly confused mixture of right-on politics and repulsive vulgarity. "I'm a pimp and a player and a hustler and kinda a mack and a poet," he raps in "The Iceberg," the crude spew that follows the amazing "Shut Up, Be Happy," in which Jello Biafra declaims martial law edicts over the ominous toll of "Black Sabbath." Similarly, while Ice-T attacks ignorance, sexism and drug addiction (in the powerfully atmospheric "You Played Yourself") and attacks the narrowmindedness of radio programmers and governmental complicity in narcotics ("This One's for Me"), the amoral gangster rap of “Peel Their Caps Back” and the grisly sonic joke of “Black’n’Decker”—overtly posed as an ironic comment about the violence in Ice’s lyrics—take the opposite stance. [i]

See also Jello Biafra.

ICICLE WORKS

Ice Works (Arista) 1984 •

The Small Price of a Bicycle (Chrysalis) 1985 •

Seven Singles Deep (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1986 •

Understanding Jane (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1986

Who Do You Want for Your Love? EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1986

Up Here in the North of England EP (nr/Situation Two) 1986

If You Want to Defeat Your Enemy Sing His Song (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1987 •

Numb EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1988 •

Blind (Beggars Banquet-RCA) 1988 •

Little Girl Lost EP (nr/Beggars Banquet) 1988 •

Motorcycle Rider EP (nr/Works-Epic) 1990 •

Permanent Damage (nr/Epic) 1990 •

Melanie Still Hurts EP (nr/Epic) 1990 •

“Whisper to a Scream (Birds Fly),” which leads off this Liverpool trio’s debut album, is a brilliant pop single filled with sparkling guitars, a hook-laden chorus and Chris Sharrock’s surprisingly powerful, creative drumming. Unfortunately, nothing else on the LP is nearly as good. It’s typical. Icicle Works’ prolific career has been extremely inconsistent, with only brief flashes of similar inspired creativity.

The Small Price of a Bicycle has its moments of listenable (if ponderous) guitar-pop, but is marred by singer/guitarist Robert Ian McNabb’s self-important lyrics and weak melodies.

As six of its seven songs also appear on the band’s first two albums, Seven Singles Deep is an unessential compilation of two years’ worth of A-sides. (The cassette, however, adds seven bonus tracks.)

In a pivotal year for the group, Icicle Works issued three new singles: “Understanding Jane” is the band’s best-ever song, a terse and spunky piece of singalong rock. “Who Do You Want for Your Love?” is fine, unassuming pop, but “Up Here in the North of England,” McNabb’s verbose contemplation on the cultural gaps between English regions, is bad, verbose pomp. While all three songs turned up on the next album, the 12-inch EPs are worth investigating for their non-LP tracks. Understanding Jane has three live versions of Bicycle songs; Who Do You Want for Your Love? has a good live “Understanding Jane” and not-so-good live covers of the Clash (“Should I Stay or Should I Go”) and the Doors (“Roadhouse Blues”); Up Here in the North of England has stately, occasionally handsome studio covers (with clarinet and saxophone) of songs by Robert Wyatt, the Band and Spirit.

His regrettable vocal resemblance to Neil Diamond and Anthony Newley notwithstanding, McNabb sounds confident and mature on If You Want to Defeat Your Enemy, an album of increased sophistication and ambition, skillfully produced by Ian Broudie. The quality of “Understanding Jane” and “Who Do You Want for Your Love?” is made even more conspicuous by the leaden tracks which surround them. (For casual sleeve scanners who may recognize the titles, “When You Were Mine” and “Walking with a Mountain” are not covers.) The tape adds two; the CD four.

All but one-quarter (“Whipping Boy”) of the 12-inch/CD Numb EP turned up on the terrible Blind, a mixed-up mainstream mush of loud rock, quiet soul and gutless funk. If there were any worthwhile songs, the stylistic blur wouldn’t be a problem, but the variety does nothing to sell the weak material. (The only semi-good song, “High Time,” is also on Numb.) The Little Girl Lost EP adds a second album track and two new items, only one of which (the folksy “One Time”) is noteworthy. [i]

BILLY IDOL

Don’t Stop EP (Chrysalis) 1981 •

Billy Idol (Chrysalis) 1982 •

Rebel Yell (Chrysalis) 1983 •

Whiplash Smile (Chrysalis) 1986 •

Vital Idol (nr/Chrysalis) 1986 (Chrysalis) 1987 •

Idol Songs: 11 of the Best (nr/Chrysalis) 1988 •

Charmed Life (Chrysalis) 1990 •

STEVE STEVENS ATOMIC PLAYBOYS

Steve Stevens Atomic Playboys (Warner Bros.) 1989 •

After Generation X’s demise, Billy Idol packed his bags and moved to New York, got himself managed by former Kiss svengali Bill Aucoin and began recording with local players and producer/drummer Keith Forsey (Giorgio Moroder’s protégé). The first results of that union—a four-song EP—had only an awkward but entertaining cover of “Mony Mony” and a phenomenal five-minute edit of Gen X’s “Dancing with Myself” to recommend it. (Interestingly, the belated CD credits the track to “Billy Idol with Generation X.”)

Billy Idol and a series of generally noxious videos made the former William Broad a huge star while providing erstwhile fans of his original band with an ideological dilemma: was he new wave’s ultimate Frankenstein mutation or an arena-metal fraud trading on his now-dubious punk roots? In any case, the record—a marriage of Moroder’s trademark Midnight Express sequencer sound and a throbbing rock beat—proved to be a lode of memorable hits (“White Wedding,” “Hot in the City,” “Love Calling”). Steve Stevens’ caricatured Ronson/Thunders guitar wildness noisily matches Idol’s macho postures and sneering vocals; the powerfully built modern rock band has subtlety and near-metal strength. An album to despise while you hum along.

With only writing partner Stevens held over from the first record, Idol kept the same producer and formula on Rebel Yell, another collection of hits that run hot (“Rebel Yell,” “Blue Highway”), cool (“Eyes Without a Face,” “Catch My Fall”) and both (“Flesh for Fantasy”). Refined and carefully groomed for platinum success, it’s an undeniably good rock’n’roll record that is also reprehensible for its phoniness and calculation.

Whiplash Smile repeats the recipe: Forsey, Stevens and a duotone program of hard/soft songs. Characteristically, the staggering guitar riffarola of “Worlds Forgotten Boy” runs directly into the engagingly modest, sweet-voiced technobilly of “To Be a Lover.” The problem here is that there's no wind in Idol's sails: he takes it easy and relies too heavily on his partner's pyrotechnics. Unlike Idol's previous records, his vocals here lack the gism that made his hits soar with enthusiasm and energy. With second-rate material (the notable "To Be a Lover" is a non-original) and Idol out of contention, Stevens easily steals the spotlight; all of the record's best moments are his.

Naturally, that was a cue the partnership was over. The guitarist went off and eventually made a terrible every-style-imaginable solo album with a shrill metal singer. Except for a shallow interest in the blues, Stevens' axework here reveals nothing new; a carbon-copy rendition of the Sweet's "Action" is about as clever as Atomic Playboys gets.

The release of Charmed Life was delayed and nearly overshadowed by Idol's serious motorcycle crash in February 1990. Haunted by the ghost of Jim Morrison (a crummy version of "L.A. Woman" is only the most overt evidence of Idol's interest in the Doors), the Forsey-produced record has less blazing guitar than usual, reaching for a charged atmosphere rather than hooks and explosive rock power. But since the songs are deadly dull, the absence of instrumental diversion makes them seem endless. Even Billy's 'billy cover—Jody Reynolds 1958 "Endless Sleep"—sacrifices momentum for mood and winds up flat. The only tunes that work are an unpretentious three-chord singalong ("Love Unchained") and "Cradle of Love," a simple, restrained rock'n'roll single that seethes with echo and passion.

Available in the UK for two years before its American release, Vital Idol is a remixed greatest hits LP: extended versions of such Idolisms as "White Wedding," "Mony Mony," "Catch My Fall," "Dancing with Myself" and "Flesh for Fantasy." With a lot of material overlap, Idol Songs is simply a collection of hit singles in their original versions. [i]

See also Generation X.

IGGY AND THE STOOGES

See Stooges.

ILLUSTRATED MAN

Illustrated Man EP (Capitol) 1984

I'm not sure if I-Man's brief and miserable existence quite qualified it as a supergroup: Hugo Burnham (ex-Gang of Four), Roger Mason (a Gary Numan sideman), Rob Dean (ex-Japan) and Australian singer/bassist Philip Foxman. I hope not, because this overbearing, overproduced, soul-free dance-funk hardly reflects well on any of the participants. Actually, if they had lost Foxman—his voice was the band's worst feature—Illustrated Man might have had a future. Instead, this is just corporate bandwagon-jumping of no merit. [i]

See also Gang of Four, Japan.

INCA BABIES

The Big Jugular EP (nr/Black Lagoon) 1984

Rumble (nr/Black Lagoon) 1985

Surfin' in Locustland EP (nr/Black Lagoon) 1985

This Train (nr/Black Lagoon) 1986

Opium Den (Black Lagoon-Fundamental) 1987

Evil Hour (Communion) 1988 •

There's not much to say about early releases by Manchester's Inca Babies beyond noting that the band makes every conceivable effort to be the Birthday Party. Each member emulates his BP counterpart, but the Inca Babies lack the original's power and completely miss the dark humor. Even the song titles on the early records have a familiar ring: "16 Tons of Fink," "Cactus Mouth Informer," "Luectotomy Meat Boss." Real tribute-band stuff.

Adding a member for Opium Den, Inca Babies toned down the Birthday Party-isms and enhanced their presentation with raw psychedelia and some dirty (if dilettantish) country-blues. Lead singer Harry S combines his Nick Cave imitation with a gratuitous and phony Southern accent (the American South, that is). Still, Opium Den shows that the band is capable of producing work with their own signature on it, or at least drawing from more than one influence. (But the inclusion of lyrics is an ill-advised move.)

The next year, the Babies came up with Evil Hour, a solid piece of work following in its predecessor's style. They're not re-inventing the wheel here, but they have developed into their own band. Although tempos occasionally approach hardcore velocity on Side Two (usually at the expense of hooks), there are actually melodies you might find yourself humming later on, lots of nifty organ washes (courtesy of Clint Boon of Inspiral Carpets) and really nice clear-but-raw sound. And by now I believe that Harry just happens to sound like Nick Cave. [dgs]

INCORPORATED THANG BAND

See George Clinton.

INDIGO GIRLS

Indigo Girls EP (Indigo) 1986

Strange Fire (Indigo) 1987 (Epic) 1989 •

Indigo Girls (Epic) 1989 •

Nomads-Indians-Saints (Epic) 1990 •

Graduates of Atlanta's folk scene, Indigo Girls' basic formula is simple: two women, two voices, two guitars. With strong harmonies that mix folk influences and church choir cadences, the duo's albums build from the contrasting sensibilities of Amy Ray, whose lyrics and delivery have a jagged rock-conscious emotional edge, and the more sweet-toned and sentimental Emily Saliers. The songs are non-narratives that use religious and naturalist metaphors to describe personal struggle; beneath the language and shirt-sleeve sincerity (both of which have taken flak for being overly precious), the Girls are about the strain of self-understanding and the yearning for love as an absolute.

Although it sounds like it was recorded in a closet, the debut EP has some bright moments, such as "Lifeblood," with its rich pop melody and boost of percussion, and "Finlandia," an a cappella hymn with flawlessly pitched vocals. Strange Fire is also spotty: the slow ballads just sound sleepy, and moments of crucial intensity come off more like Judy Blume novels. But the title track shows just how much Ray and Saliers can accomplish on their own: a single strum of Ray's guitar feels as big as a decade, and the interplay of voices and guitars creates rhythmic balance and a beautiful dynamic. "Crazy Game," "Make It Easier" and the mandolin-accompanied "I Don't Wanna Know" are also standouts.

Despite the move to a major label, the differences between Strange Fire and Indigo Girls are subtle. Together with producer Scott Litt, Ray and Saliers take a few more chances with embellishments—members of Hothouse Flowers help out on two tracks (including the single "Closer to Fine"), and a Michael Stipe-less R.E.M. backs Ray on the country-rockish "Tried to Be True." Stipe delivers a beautiful backing vocal on "Kid Fears," a cutting chronicle of lost innocence. But the pair's indelible harmonies remain at the forefront; having learned to better manipulate and regulate their emotionalism, Saliers and Ray make Indigo Girls their most consistent work.

By Nomads-Indians-Saints, the Girls are getting too good at their own formula. Instead of strategic dynamics, they settle for straightforward folk-rock, and about half the album feels redundant. However, Ray's "Welcome Me" is as lonely as a walk down a deserted street, while Saliers' melody in "Watershed" offers a more cheerful antidote. [kss]

INDIVIDUALS

Aquamarine EP (Infidelity) 1981

Fields (Plexus) 1982

This New York quartet bears some resemblance to bands like the (early) dB's, whose Gene Holder produced both records; musically, however, the Individuals' arty pretentiousness makes them sound like a poor copy of the Cure or a less aggressive Gang of Four.

Aquamarine's five numbers are spartan in both arrangement and melody. Despite characteristically sprightly guitars and simple drum figures, style supplants substance, and there's nothing much lurking behind the hip artifice.

Fields has more fully realized sound, with good vocal harmonies and studio effects; still, the songs are unmemorable and the performances rather tepid. The one number that does stand out, "Dancing with My Eighty Wives," is rather senseless, but mixes real songwriting acumen with an interesting arrangement—and a definite group identity for a change.

Individuals guitarist/singer Glenn Morrow followed his muse into Rage to Live; Janet (bass/vocals) and Doug (drums) Wygal formed a band that bears their surname; guitarist Jon Klages went on to play solo and with Richard Lloyd. [i]

See also Rage to Live, Wygals.

IN EXCELSIS

See U.K. Decay.

INFORMATION SOCIETY

Information Society (Tommy Boy-Reprise) 1988 •

Hack (Tommy Boy-Reprise) 1990 •

A chilling illustration of the danger of technology falling into the wrong hands, the Minneapolis-bred Information Society dresses up inane techno-disco tunes in post-industrialist clichés, funk/hip-hop pretensions and found-sound actualities. On the Fred Maher-produced first album, the quartet plays shallow and poorly sung electro-pop—a lighter variation on Ministry's early records—that takes its cues from Kraftwerk, OMD, Giorgio Moroder and the Human League. (The CD is graphics-encoded.)

With Amanda Kramer gone from the group, the remaining three—Kurt Valaquen, Paul Robb and James Cassidy—go seriously over the top on Hack, a sonic collage that attempts to make some statement about modern techno-culture by surrounding (and invades) ten remarkably stupid (and melodically similar) songs with scratched-in cut-ups, TV bites, phone calls, instrumentals and other trivia. As the cover art warns, Hack isn't art—merely the noise of boys with toys. [i]

See also Golden Palominos.

INMATES

First Offence (Radar-Polydor) 1979

Shot in the Dark (Polydor) 1980

True Live Stories (Fr. Lolita) 1984

Five (Fr. Lolita) 1984

Fast Forward (nr/Sonet) 1989 •

BILL HURLEY WITH JOHNNY GUITAR

Double Agent (nr/Demon) 1985

Britain's Inmates had a big American radio hit in 1979 with a cover of the Standells' "Dirty Water"; overall, their records sound like a cross between early Stones and early Dave Edmunds. Drawing on realistic-sounding originals plus well-chosen oldies, the Inmates don't offer anything new, but make good, primal rock-'n'-roll. First Offence contains "Dirty Water" as well as Jimmy McCracklin's "The Walk" and Don Covay's "Three Time Loser" (one of several tracks employing the Rumour brass section). Thanks, no doubt, to common icons, there are audible similarities to everyone from Creedence Clearwater to Robert Gordon.

Adding a permanent drummer to the lineup, the Inmates made Shot in the Dark, dredging up the old Jagger/Richards gem, "So Much in Love," the Music Machine's "Talk Talk" and some real obscurities. Fun, but too faceless to make any difference.

Singer Bill Hurley went off to form a group called the Big Heat, and the Inmates pressed on for a while with original Eddie and the Hot Rods vocalist Barrie Masters. The 1984 live album reprises both the Inmates' best-known tracks ("Dirty Water," "The Walk") and the early Hot Rods' (Bob Seger's "Get Out of Denver"), adding the Doors' "Love Me Two Times" and some originals.

After the Big Heat cooled down, Hurley made a solo album in collaboration with ex-Count Bishops axeman Johnny Guitar. A little of this (R&B, soul) and that (sentimental country), the solid but plain Double Agent features contributions from Inmates guitarist Peter Gunn.

Hurley and the other original Inmates reconvened in the late '80s and recorded Fast Forward with the band's old producer, Vic Maile, shortly before his death. [i]

INNER CITY UNIT

Pass Out (nr/Riddle) 1980

The Maximum Effect (nr/Avatar) 1981

Punkadelic (nr/Flickknife) 1982

The Presidents Tapes (nr/Flicknife) 1985
New Anatomy (nr/Demi-Monde) 1985

If you can accept the notion that Hawkwind was the original punk-psychedelic-heavy-metal-dada fusion band, then it makes perfect sense that saxophonist Nik Turner should lead the humorous Inner City Unit, a devolving London five-piece whose music is so far over the edge that it almost defies comprehension. Taking mind-expanding drugs is theoretically essential to appreciation here, but the frantic and funny rock-with-horns of "Watching the Grass Grow," "Space Invaders" and "Cars Eat with Autoface" (all on Pass Out and, in alternate versions, on Punkadelic) update the Hawkwind legend with style and energy that anyone can enjoy. Had the Bonzo Dog Band spent the '70s attending muddy rock festivals, this might have been the outcome.

The first side of Punkadelic dredges up different takes of four Pass Out songs; the album (subtitled "Re-vaulting from the volts") also contains five previously unreleased compositions, including the band's earliest explorations, the wacky "God Disco" and "Disco Tango." In a gambit truly worthy of old hippies, "Bildeborg" has two bandmembers singing different lyrics and melodies in the left and right channels.

ICU pokes gentle fun at Turner's back pages on The Presidents Tapes, an amusing but somewhat disappointing album. Singing topical songs like "World of LSD," "Big Foot" and "Stonehenge Who Knows?" the group uses organ, flute and production effects to evoke the period. Despite the flashes of satirical inspiration, too many normal-sounding tracks and a shortage of left-field sax noise keep The Presidents Tapes from being a revelation. [i]

See also Hawkwind.

INNOCENCE MISSION

The Innocence Mission (A&M) 1989 •

On paper, this tasteful Pennsylvania quartet has it all: a distinctive singer in keyboardist Karen Peris, well-crafted arty folk-pop songs with intelligent, substantial lyrics, delicately skillful musicianship. On record, however, the Innocence Mission sounds like a once-sprightly group that's had the life washed out of it. Lacking the resonant eccentricities of 10,000 Maniacs or the artistic depth of the Cocteau Twins, this polished veneer of adult refinement is much easier to admire than enjoy. [i]

INSPIRAL CARPETS

Plane Crash EP (nr/Playtime) 1988

Trainsurfing EP (nr/Cow) 1989

Joe EP (nr/Cow) 1989

The Peel Sessions EP (nr/Strange Fruit) 1989 (Strange Fruit-Dutch East India) 1991 •

Cool as * EP (Cow-Rough Trade) 1990 ♪

Life (Cow-Mute-Elektra) 1990 •

Island Head EP (nr/Cow-Mute) 1990 •

She Comes in the Fall EP (nr/Cow-Mute) 1990 •

The Beast Inside (Cow-Mute-Elektra) 1991 ♪

Emerging on the Manchester scene alongside Happy Mondays and Stone Roses, Inspiral Carpets' notable innovation in the retro-groove psychedelipop stakes is Clint Boon's vintage organ sound. Ironically, an all-American idiom that wouldn't get any likeminded State-side band out of the garage has made the Inspirals a major chart attraction in contemporary England. The quintet goes so far as to pay its respects with a brisk cover of "'96 Tears" on the five-song Plane Crash EP (produced by ex-Chameleon Dave Fielding), otherwise relying on its own simple creations, which are precisely tailored for the Inspirals' thickly surging rock.

The four new tunes on Trainsurfing hint at the band's biggest shortcoming: shallow and ineffectual songwriting (by Boon and guitarist Graham Lambert). "Butterfly" and "Causeway" are adequate fodder for the band's narrow range of sensuous textures but are way too flimsy to hold up on their own merits. Although the title track of Joe (by which time Tom Hingley had taken over the vocals from original singer Stephen Holt; bassist Martin Walsh had replaced David Swift) is forgettably lame, the flipside of the EP introduces two of the band's few good songs: the Doors meet the Electric Prunes in the drone "Directing Traffic," while San Francisco acid-rock gets a colorful revisit in "Commercial Rain." Recorded immediately after the Joe sessions, the four-track Peel EP includes "Directing Traffic" and a terrible organ-colored rendition of the Stones' "Gimme Shelter," as well as Hingley's first recorded swipe at Plane Crash's "Keep the Circle Around."

Cool as * (the title is a sanitization of the Cow label's T-shirt parody on a British milk-ad slogan) weakly introduced Inspiral Carpets to America with a compilation of "Joe," a subsequent B-side and all three tracks from the "Find Out Why" single, including the numbing sixteen-minute "Plane Crash" jam (not to be found on the EP of the same name). Wow, man—this shit is groovy!

By the time Inspiral Carpets got around to recording a full album, their international discography was hopelessly out of synch. As a result, the American version of Life omits "Besides Me" to add an overzealous remake of "Commercial Rain," two items from the three-song Island Head EP and another song from those sessions. The resulting sixteen-track extravaganza is way too much of an occasionally good thing, surrounding appealing songs like the sturdily melodic "This Is How It Feels," the Stranglersish "Song for a Family," the poppy "Move" and a new unimproved version of "Directing Traffic" with far too many inferior soundalikes. [i]

INTELLIGENT HOODLUM

The Intelligent Hoodlum (A&M) 1990 •

On the best moments of his debut album, the Intelligent Hoodlum (aka Tragedy aka Percy Chapman) raps passionately about the lousy state of the world. Backed by hard, unadorned beats from ace producer Marley Marl, he leads a furious chant against racism in "No Justice, No Peace" and bristles with righteous anger on "Black and Proud." He still sounds like a kid, which gives even venomous diatribes like "Arrest the President" an appealing fresh edge. Elsewhere, though the man resorts to predictable bragging and party-down topics, the aggressive tracks continue to crackle. [jy]

INTERSTELLAR VILLAINS

See Scientists.

IN THE NURSERY

Temper EP (nr/Sweatbox) 1985

Twins (nr/Sweatbox) 1986 •

Kōda (Wax Trax!) 1988 •

Counterpoint (Wax Trax!) 1989 •

L'esprit (Wax Trax!) 1990 •

Originally a fraternal duo of Klive and Nigel Humberstone, Sheffield's In the Nursery added a drummer and a female singer to further explore its bizarre brief: complex military-industrial music with classical pretensions. The band's early efforts—a number of 12-inch singles, EPs and the Twins album, all of which are represented on the Counterpoint compilation—range from restrained atmospheric (the breaking waves and gothic organ of 1985's "Arm Me Audacity" resemble soundtrack music for Dark Shadows) to brutal assemblies of martial beats, obscure vocals, synthesized accents and strings (as on Temper's shrieking "Breach Birth" and Twins' title track). Meanwhile, bowed electric bass provides striking counterpoint to the tingly strings in 1987's "Blind Me," an unsettling mix of cries and spoken dialogue. (The Counterpoint CD adds an alternate mix of "Breach Birth" and two more tantrums from Temper.)

Except for the scarcity of vocals, the ambitious Kōda would be best described as operatic. Mainly using classical instrumental sounds and percussion, the stirring record glides smoothly from moody film music to marchable stridency, all of it seemingly designed to accompany—or evoke—theatrical action. If Art of Noise scored a German war epic, this might be the result.

Lifting Kōda's portentous military cloud, the Humberstones turned over a romantic leaf on L'esprit, a graceful album of surprising gentleness that conjures up balletic images. Vocals play a significant role for the first time: "Sesudient," "Retaliation" and "The Pearl" all float on Dolores Marguerite C.'s whispery French crooning; "To the Faithful" opens the record with the brothers' surprisingly pleasant pop tones. Besides occasional somber passages, L'esprit does roll out the timpani and rat-a-tat-tat snare drum in "Träumerei," but the dramatic intrusion only serves to heighten the album's serene impact. [i]

INXS

INXS (Aus. Deluxe) 1980 (Atco) 1984 •

Underneath the Colours (Aus. Deluxe) 1981 (Atco) 1984 •

Shaboo Shoobah (Atco) 1982 •

Inxsive (Aus. Deluxe) 1982 •

Dekadance EP (Atco) 1983

The Swing (Atco) 1984 •

Listen Like Thieves (Atlantic) 1985 •

Kick (Atlantic) 1987 •

X (Atlantic) 1990 •

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Dogs in Space (Atlantic) 1987

MAX Q

Max Q (Atlantic) 1989 •

It took these six Australians (three of them brothers) from Sydney a long time to develop into something America wanted to hear; INXS is dull rock that sounds like a less musical Joe Jackson or a no-soul Graham Parker. Underneath the Colours—like its predecessor, issued in the US only after the band had become successful—has much better audio quality (although no one bothered to integrate the drums into the mix) and shifts the focus among keyboards, sax and guitar in a vain effort to vitalize the underwhelming songs.

Shaboo Shoobah, with good loud production by Mark Opitz (and one Farriss brother mysteriously missing from the credits), was the first INXS album to be released in the US and UK. Despite major strides in several areas, on the whole it's still not a happening record. A few outstanding numbers do display growth in personality and style: "The One Thing" sews a bunch of riffs together into an energetic, dense fabric, while "Soul Mistake" generates a foreboding mood and "Don't Change" gets up a good head of textured rock steam.

Following an Australian label change, the group's previous record company issued Inxsive, a compilation that includes outtakes and obscurities as well as hits.

Four songs from Shaboo Shoobah (three extended remixes plus a wholly new version of a fourth) comprise the club-oriented Dekadance EP. If not specifically better, the six-minute edit of "The One Thing" is certainly longer.

The Swing proved to be the first INXS LP of any real significance, moving the group clearly into the mainstream of modern dance-rock with the inclusion of the suavely insistent "Original Sin," produced by Nile Rodgers. (The record was otherwise done under the direction of Nick Launay.) "Burn for You" is another highlight, using a female backing chorus to affect an amusing resemblance to Roxy Music. On the other hand, "I Send a Message" finally reveals INXS' enormous potential to annoy: a basically tuneless song syn-funked into repetitive and grating obnoxiousness. Elsewhere, The Swing offers strong beats, mannered vocals and a unified, au courant sound.

Produced by Chris Thomas, Listen Like Thieves is crisp, lively rock with as little vocal posturing as Michael Hutchence seems capable of, and substantial aggressive guitar work where required. The title tune, "What You Need" and "This Time" all have solid melodies, strong rhythms and decisive hooks. "Shine Like It Does" attempts to generate a folk-rock sensibility with moderate success; other tracks are, at worst, negligible.

With Hutchence launching an acting career (in Dogs in Space) and emerging as a pin-up sex god for teenagers, INXS made the completely vapid Kick, again using Thomas to dress up the mediocre material. (Needless to add, it became their biggest seller, shifting upwards of four million copies.) The inappropriate and unconvincing meta-political consciousness of a few lyrics doesn't improve what is essentially tuneless video-dance-rock; the contrived poses on the sleeve indicate what really makes INXS run. Ludicrous soul pretensions only underscore just how phony INXS is. Kick does contain one consolation: a plodding version of the Aussie-punk classic, "The Loved One," originally recorded in the late '60s by Melbourne's groovy Loved Ones and first covered by INXS on a 1981 single.

While the band took a three-year break from recording, Hutchence did a side project, singing, co-writing and co-producing an album with Ollie Olsen (ex-Whirlywird), a patron saint of Australia's rock underground. Their joint approach gives Max Q a bit of a Midnight Oil feel, with more politics and a rougher rock sound than INXS. The use of synthesizers and strings keeps Max Q from being exactly earthy, but the record's got a certain energy and forthrightness that makes it an intriguing superstar aside.

That indulgence over, Hutchence got down to platinum tacks with his usual crew and made the dire X (no, it's not their tenth album). Weak hooks jammed roughly into weaker (and obviously self-derivative) songs, melodies that go absolutely nowhere, well-intentioned lyrics of stunning vacuity and an absurd funk-groove-and-harmonica single ("Suicide Blonde") that crosses U2 and Blondie—those are X's good points. The only member of the group who comes off well here is bassist Garry Gary Beers, and he's stuck on the same old riffs. Compared to this halfbaked exercise, INXS's previous records now seem more like profound artistic achievements. [i]

See also Whirlywird.

IPPU-DO

Normal (Jap. Epic-Sony) 1979

Real (Jap. Epic-Sony) 1980

Radio Fantasy (nr/Epic) 1981

Lunatic Menu (nr/Epic) 1982

Some-Times (Jap. Epic-Sony) 1982

Live and Zen (Jap. Epic-Sony) 1985

MASAMI TSUCHIYA

Rice Music (nr/Epic) 1982

Led by androgynous, Bowiesque guitarist Masami Tsuchiya, this Japanese trio stepped into the commercial void created by Yellow Magic Orchestra's decreased group activity. It's hard to make out what the songs are really about since most have only a chorus or bridge in English, but the lyrics seem simpleminded enough—themes of romantic fantasy, travel and technology evidently dominate. Tsuchiya's voice is high but gutsy and always in control (even when yelling)—he's got his shtick down pat, and his guitar playing fits. Ippu-Do alternates between modernized arrangements of '50s and early '60s vocal pop-rock melodies and steaming, heart-pounding rock'n'roll, sometimes in the same song. They also use reggae syncopation and synthesizers, so all bases are covered—except originality. (Lunatic Menu and Some-Times are anthologies of the other LPs.)

It sounds like these fellas, especially Tsuchiya, possess the ability to go further but just aren't sure how. Tsuchiya gives it a try on his solo LP with lots of help from YMO's Ryuichi Sakamoto, though several tracks include members of Japan (the band) and Bill Nelson on e-bow guitar. Most successful when he tries to mildly funky Japanese music, with further cross-fertilization, Tsuchiya could be a real innovator.

By 1985's live album, Ippu-Do was just a duo, aided by two ex-members of Japan (with whom Tsuchiya toured and recorded) plus English bass ace Percy Jones.

Despite its recent vintage, the album portrays the band treading musical water with jagged, arty treatments of old material (the group's and Tsuchiya's), plus a version of the Zombies' "Time of the Season." Despite stylistic growth, Ippu-Do needs new—not old—content to make it meaningful. [jg]

See also Japan.

GREGORY ISAACS

In Person (nr/Trojan) 1975 + 1983

All I Have Is Love (nr/Trojan) 1976 (nr/Tad's) 1983

The Best of Gregory Isaacs Vol. 1 (Jam. GG) 1977

Cool Ruler (nr/Front Line) 1978

Soon Forward (nr/Front Line) 1979

Showcase EP (Jam. Taxi) 1980

The Lonely Lover (nr/Pre) 1980 •

Extra Classic (Shanachie) 1981

The Best of Gregory Isaacs Vol. 2 (Jam. GG) 1981

The Early Years (nr/Trojan) 1981 •

More Gregory (Mango) 1981 •

The Sensational Gregory Isaacs (nr/Vista) 1982

Lover's Rock (nr/Pre) 1982

Mr. Isaacs (Shanachie) 1982 •

Night Nurse (Mango) 1982 •

Crucial Cuts (nr/Virgin) 1983

Out Dehl! (Mango) 1983 •

Reggae Greats (Live) (Mango) 1984 •

Live at the Academy Brixton (nr/Rough Trade) 1984 •

Private Beach Party (RAS) 1985 •

Easy (nr/Tad's) 1985

Watchman of the City (Rohit) 1987 •

Victim (nr/C&E) 1987 •

Sly and Robbie Presents Gregory Isaacs (RAS) 1988 •

Red Rose for Gregory (RAS) 1988 •

I.O.U. (RAS) 1989 •

Slum (In Dub) (nr/Burning Sounds) 1989

My Number One (Heartbeat) 1990 •

Call Me Collect (RAS) 1990 •

Cool Ruler/Soon Forward (Front Line) 1990 •

Once Ago (Front Line) 1990 •

Dancing Floor (Heartbeat) 1990 •

Come Again Dub [tape] (ROIR) 1991

Love Is Overdue (nr/Network) 1991 •

GREGORY ISAACS AND DENNIS BROWN

Two Bad Superstars (nr/Burning Sounds) 1984

Judge Not (Greensleeves) 1984 •

No Contest (Music Works) 1989 •

The Cool Ruler, Gregory Isaacs, is one of the best-loved and most durable reggae singers. Highly prolific (he writes nearly all his material) and business-savvy (he runs his own Jamaican label, African Museum), Isaacs' voice is still the key to his success. His delivery is marked by a combination of ice and fire rare even among soul singers—an urgent longing, tempered with cool control. Although comparable to a Jamaican Al Green or Marvin Gaye, Isaacs is a completely unique stylist. His repertoire is equal parts lovers rock and Rasta protest; the link is his seductive delivery. Whether he's urging romance or reform, the call to action will give you goosebumps.

Like many popular reggae performers, however,

Isaacs' recording career is a confusing jumble. His early work involved a number of producers. Sensational, for instance, has one side produced by Rupie Edwards and one by Ossie Hibbert, resulting in a mix of hits ("Black and White," "Mr. Know It All") and duds. Extra Classic compiles his work with Pete Weston and Lee Perry, as well as his first self-produced sessions. While also spotty, the record offers early proof of Isaacs' authority and strength as a songwriter.

Isaacs' career began to move under the guidance of producer Alvin Ranglin. Their collaboration is chronicled on the two excellent Best Of collections. Though available only as Jamaican imports, these consistently strong LPs are worth finding, and crucial for fans. Another Ranglin/Isaacs session, In Person (which includes the UK hit, "Love Is Overdue") is available on Trojan, along with an LP produced by Sidney Crooks, All I Have Is Love. Both are of mixed quality, but Trojan took the best from each and combined them with a third batch (produced by Winston "Ninety" Holness) for The Early Years, good all the way through.

For his next career phase, Isaacs chose to produce himself. Despite weak covers of the Temptations' "Get Ready" and Billy & Vera's "Storybook Children," Mr. Isaacs has bold, assured singing and at least one classic, "Slave Master."

Virgin's Front Line label then released two inconsistent albums, subsequently culling the best tracks for an edition of the Crucial Cuts series; still, it's pretty weak. The outstanding Soon Forward, however, launched his collaboration with Sly Dunbar and Robbie Shakespeare. The title song of that record also appears on the Showcase EP, released on Sly and Robbie's Taxi label, which adds a version of Bob Marley's "Slave Driver." Although tight and lively from start to finish, the record allows Isaacs' personality to be somewhat overshadowed by the duo's fine playing. Besides his work with Sly and Robbie, Isaacs began an association with Roots Radics, another fine Jamaican session band, that would last several LPs.

The Lonely Lover and More Gregory contain his finest middle-period work. Both feature excellent backing (divided between the Radics and Dunbar/Shakespeare) and a steady stream of high-quality material. Best of all, Isaacs is singing at the peak of his form. More, in particular, firmly establishes his lover-boy persona in an easygoing groove that lasts for all ten cuts. Once Ago pairs the two records on CD and cassette.

In contrast, Isaacs' work on Island is marred by inconsistency. Both Night Nurse and Out Deh! boast first-rate singing and playing (by Roots Radics), but the material is erratic, frequently weak—more a series of gestures than songs. To compensate, perhaps, two live albums were released around the same time. The song selection—an essential greatest hits—is similar on both, but the Brixton set has the edge, featuring a horn section and a more enthusiastic performance.

A short period of inactivity was broken in 1985 by the release of Private Beach Party. In a clear effort to lighten the load, Isaacs enlisted the help of an outside producer, Augustus Clarke, and several songwriters. The result is his best album in years—a fresh, diverse package.

Easy maintains his rule; the sensual crooning is as lilting and refreshing as a cold mint julep on a Caribbean beach. In "Cool Ruler Come Again," Gregory announces that "he was only taking a nap." Both the title track and "Love Is Overdue" are absolute Gregory.

Isaacs remained prolific, recording LPs of his own material with a variety of producers for a few small labels. While none of these mid-'80s releases are particularly distinct, each of them demonstrates nicely how Isaacs' smooth and sexy formula is as dependable as Smokey Robinson's, and how his professionalism and talent have withstood the test of time.

Isaacs had a big late-'80s hit with "Rumours," which then turned up on Red Rose for Gregory. This is the lonely lover of days gone by, complete with his famous sexy moans and mannerisms. From the title track to the evocative "Teacher's Plight" to "Rough Neck" (on which he's joined by the Mighty Diamonds), Gregory is in his glory.

Isaacs' next huge hit was "Big All Around," another in a series of collaborations with Dennis Brown. The pair included that song on their joint No Contest, a mixture of solo performances and duos. Their sensual voices, with rootical foundations in Gussie Clarke's state-of-the-art production, makes this album a must. "Easy Life" and "Jealousy" are crucial combination tracks. The earlier Judge Not only pairs Isaacs and Brown vinylistically: each man keeps to his own side of the platter. Lacking the collaborative fire of No Contest, it's rather boring.

My Number One is a compilation. Come Again Dub is the companion to Call Me Collect. [bk/aw]

CHRIS ISAAK

Silvertone (Warner Bros.) 1985 ●

Chris Isaak (Warner Bros.) 1987 ●

Heart Shaped World (Reprise) 1989 ●

The look of a sensitive young Elvis . . . moody, atmospheric tunes . . . sweet, brooding vocals . . . heaps of twangy guitar. Chris Isaak has his stich down cold, that's for sure. Happily, this retro package offers more than selfconscious imagery. At his best, Isaak summons up the deep hurt of classic blues or the soaring spirits of footloose rockabilly. On Silvertone, consult the swinging "Livin' for Your Lover" or "Western Stars," a lazy, loping piece of sagebrush hokum. On Chris Isaak, try the quietly menacing "You Owe Me Some Kind of Love" or "Blue Hotel," the woeful sound of a tortured soul crying for help. No wonder Isaak's been compared to Roy Orbison.

Heart Shaped World has more of the wonderful same, from the high and lonesome "I'm Not Waiting" to the slo-mo "Blue Spanish Sky" to "Wrong to Love You," a quietly driving tale of romantic woe. Upon release, this entrancing LP inspired the same chart action as its predecessors (i.e., none). But wonders never cease: After a walk-on in Jonathan Demme's Married to the Mob, Isaak contributed the gorgeously despondent "Wicked Game," one of World's finest moments, to the soundtrack of David Lynch's Wild at Heart. By early '91, the boy had himself a bona fide hit. [jy]

MARK ISHAM

See Marianne Faithfull.

ISM

A Diet for the Worms (S.I.N.) 1983

Constantinople EP (Broken) 1985

I Think I Love You (The Hits That Missed 1982–1989)

[CD] (no label) 1990 •

A Diet for the Worms is hysterically funny New York hardcore with a tasteless baby-being-delivered cover and gutbusting numbers like “Shitlist,” “Vegetarian at a Barbeque,” “Life Ain’t No Bowl of Brady Bunch” and the classic “John Hinckley Jr. (What Has Jodie Done to You?).” The band (not to be confused with a similarly named Elliott Sharp outfit) plays at easily followable speed and has a reasonably articulate bellow in Jism, who gives the longwinded lyrics (mostly his) appropriate exercise. A good, scatological laugh for the vulgar at heart.

On Constantinople, Jism and his band connect with their roots, slam-dunking songs by the Residents and the Fugs with reverent but rowdy enthusiasm. Rather than hardcore, Ism here plays restrained rock with piano and relative subtlety. Judging by this EP, Ism is developing a novel time warp, mixing various breeds of outrage into a hybrid all its own.

The post-Constantinople tracks (several of them previously unissued) on the self-issued I Think I Love You retrospective confirm Ism’s singularity, but the (intentionally) unfinished sound of the vaguely pomp-rock “Excerpt from Sermon for the Watchdog” and instrumental “Theme” cushions their force a little too much. Far better are items reclaimed from the band’s many compilation contributions (notably Jism’s ode to political activism, “Nixon Now More Than Ever”) and the long-lost first single, a Flipper-gum version of the Partridge Family “classic” that gives the collection its title—not to mention the inspiration for the jocularly offensive cover. [i/dss]

IT BITES

The Big Lad in the Windmill (Virgin-Geffen) 1986 •

Once Around the World (nr/Virgin) 1988 •

Once Around the World EP (Virgin-Geffen) 1988 •

Eat Me in St. Louis (Virgin-Geffen) 1989 •

Sister Sarah EP [CD] (nr/Virgin) 1989 •

Hailing from Cumbria, a remote northern county of England, It Bites plays energetic, carefully produced (by Alan Shacklock) chart-pop that adds considerable offbeat spunk to the easy-listening sounds of peppy outfits like Haircut One Hundred. The Big Lad in the Windmill has the merry attitude (if not the extraordinary talent) of early 10cc: unexpected styles and noises abound in a shiny rush of giddy melodicism. While hardly groundbreaking, this provincial quartet is agreeably paranormal. (In a taste of things to come, the album was resequenced for US release.)

Cutting three tracks from the Steve Hillage-produced sophomore album, It Bites’ American label issued the five-song Once Around the World, a showcase for the once-offbeat band’s new sound: blandly energetic and annoying dance-rock that apparently takes its cues from Genesis.

Eat Me in St. Louis further complicates the international discography. Rather than issue the band’s heavy and boring third album (loudly produced by Mack) intact, Geffen combined half of it with two tracks each from The Big Lad and the Once Around the World EP. Sister Sarah is a 3-inch CD of an album track with three B-sides. [i]

IT’S IMMATERIAL

It’s Immaterial EP (nr/Ark) 1985

Life’s Hard and Then You Die (Siren-Virgin-A&M) 1986 •

Song (nr/Siren-Virgin) 1990 •

More bizarreness from the Liverpool art college set. In this case, the Manchester duo of John Campbell and Jarvis Whitehead plus myriad friends (including the Christians, whose Henry Priestman was an Itsy in the group’s early days). On Life’s Hard, It’s Immaterial cooks up a fascinating musical hybrid that touches variously on synth-pop, atmospheric art-rock, recitation and a unique brand of English country music. It may remind you of early OMD, Pete Townshend, Talking Heads, even Ronnie Lane’s late-’70s gypsy-rock aggregation Slim Chance—which is to say there’s a lot going on in this mix. The only thing missing is an identity.

That identity finally turned up four years later on Song, an ironic title for an album that’s more a collection of stories put to music than actual songs. (There’s not a chorus anywhere to be found.) Whitehead’s tracks—flowing, repetitive patterns, mainly based around piano—function as a soundtrack for Campbell’s lyrics, which he both sings and speaks in a pleasant but limited voice. The effect is often hypnotic—something like Philip Glass meets Marc Almond—but unless you’re drawn in by the words, you may find the going a bit tedious. This is music best listened to when distractions are at a minimum; don’t expect to hear it in dance clubs. [ds]

See also Christians.

DEBORA IYALL

See Romeo Void.

JACK FROST

See Hex.

JACKOFFICERS

See Butthole Surfers.

JACK RUBIES

Fascinatin' Vacation (TVT) 1989 •

See the Money in My Smile (TVT) 1990 •

Everyone views romance in their own way, but Ian Wright, the singer of London's Jack Rubies, has a very strange way of expressing affection. On the first song of the quintet's debut, he offers "to be hung, drawn and quartered" to "Be with You"; in "You're So Wild," after describing the "spontaneous combustion . . . in my heart," he admits to being "overcome . . . when you stuck out your tongue at that man." The band's unassuming acoustic/electric music—a pleasant pop style of no special character—isn't nearly as colorful, but does provide a hospitable enough atmosphere for the offbeat musings.

More diverse and complex arrangements on the Pat Collier-produced follow-up decrease the prominence of Wright's frank Lloyd Cole-ish vocals in favor of raising the band's overall personality profile. A substantial and thoughtful album, with bits of western country flavor, See the Money in My Smile could be the prelude to something great. [i]

JACKS

See Beat Farmers.

JOE JACKSON

Look Sharp! (A&M) 1979 •

I'm the Man (A&M) 1979 •

The Harder They Come EP (nr/A&M) 1980

Beat Crazy (A&M) 1980 •

Jumpin' Jive (A&M) 1981 •

Night and Day (A&M) 1982 •

The Real Men EP (Hol. A&M) 1982

Mike's Murder (A&M) 1983

Body and Soul (A&M) 1984 •

Big World (A&M) 1986 •

Will Power (A&M) 1987 (A&M-Mobile Fidelity) 1988 •

Live 1980/86 (A&M) 1988 •

Tucker (A&M) 1988 •

Blaze of Glory (A&M) 1989 •

Stepping Out: The Very Best of Joe Jackson (nr/A&M) 1990 •

